On the former appeal the case was remanded for trial for the defendant and cross-complainant bank, and since the consignment and general creditors have been made parties, also for them, to establish, if they could, the allegations regarding estoppel and to disprove, modify, or explain by other evidence the above matters testified to by Mr. and Mrs. Setchel. We shall therefore direct our inquiry as to whether the finding that the agreement alleged to have been made to reimburse appellant for advances to produce the 1921 crop was never made is supported by the evidence; for, if the evidence fails to support this finding, but establishes to the contrary that appellant did advance the money to produce the 1921 crop under an agreement with W. Flanders Setchel in accordance with the provisions of the trust, the judgment must be reversed.

We have not only considered the testimony set out in the briefs of appellant, respondent bank, and the interveners and cross-complainants, but have read the entire record, and have found no evidence to rebut the testimony of W. Flanders Setchel, F. De Journel, and appellant, Minnie Helene Setchel, that the money due her as a creditor of the Setchel Fruit Company was, under an agreement between Mr. and Mrs. Setchel, used in the production of the 1921 crop and was to be repaid out of the proceeds of the crop ahead of the other creditors, and that she was to be protected by the crop mortgage and trust agreement, and the testimony of M. J. Hall, an employé of the Setchel Fruit Company, that the moneys due Mrs. Setchel, entered on the books of the company as "Carmelita Account," were expended in the care and cultivation of the Carmelita ranch during 1921.

[2] Respondent urges in support of the finding that the contract between Mr. and Mrs. Setchel was not entered into; that the Carmelita Vineyard was cared for as a unit by Mr. Setchel; that no segregation either of receipts or expenses was made, and was to all intents and purposes a community proposition; that Mrs. Setchel failed to mention her claim for advances in the fall of 1921, when she made a claim to the bank for her prunes taken under the crop mortgage; and that the contemporaneous acts of the parties show an utter absence of any intention to claim that Mrs. Setchel was in any way interested in the advances.

Of the numerous authorities cited in support of the first contention that no segregation of either receipts or expenses was made with respect to the raising of crops and therefore the two tracts of land farmed together were so farmed as a community proposition, wherein the facts are at all analagous, is Dean v. Bailey, 50 Ill. 484, 99 Am. Dec. 533, wherein the court says: "Where the husband and wife live upon a farm, which, together with the stock and implements upon it, * * * have been bought with the money of the wife, the husband may exercise the same care and control over such personal property as he would over his own, and, in the eyes of the public, have the same freedom in its use, without its thereby becoming liable to the payment of his debts, * * * but it does not follow, because the wife merely allows her husband to have a general use and control over her personal property, such use and control being of a character consistent with their common interests, and the proper enjoyment of it by both, that it should thereby become liable to the payment of his debts." In this state by a long line of authorities it is held that the profits of separate property are by law expressly declared to be the separate property of the owner of the land or personalty whence they are derived (5 Cal. Jur. 300, and cases cited).

[3] As to respondents' next contention, that appellant failed to notify the bank of her advances to her husband, it may be said the testimony shows that appellant consented to be charged and there was charged against her share of the credits of the Carmelita Vineyard account the expense of raising the 1921 crop, and the fact that her money was actually so used is in no way rebutted. She had a right to assume that the trustor Setchel, then her husband, did not entertain any intention to defraud her by failing to give sufficient and proper notices to the bank trustee, which was set forth as his duty in the declaration of trust. When her relations with her husband became strained and there arose some misgivings on or before October 18, 1921, she did notify the trustee, and such notice was given before any distribution of the funds were made. At the trial the trust officer of the bank testified that he still held the funds intact and to the amount on hand.

The crop mortgage provides: "Also to secure the repayment of all advances made by any corporation, individual, or party, or their assigns, to the mortgagor not exceeding for such advances the sum of Thirty Thousand ($30,000.00) Dollars." As a part of the mortgage transaction, a declaration of trust was executed by Setchel to the bank in which the crop mortgage is referred to, and which provides: "That any corporation, individual or party, may at any time during the life of this agreement, advance to W. Flanders Setchel for the purpose of producing, harvesting, packing and marketing the crops described in said mortgage a sum or sums not to exceed $30,000.00, as specified in said mortgage, and the said W. Flanders Setchel shall, after receiving said loan, notify in writing the trustee herein of the corporation, individual or party making said loan * * * and thereafter said corporation, individual or party shall be constituted the first beneficiary under this trust for the amount loaned not to exceed $30,000.00, and said sum or sums so advanced or loaned shall be repaid to the said corporation or individual or party out of the first proceeds of said crop."

Neither the trustee nor the creditors were in any way injured by Setchel's failure to notify the trustee of the money advanced by Mrs. Setchel, or that he did not mention Mrs. Setchel because he was trying to get the advance money back for the Setchel Fruit Company, as he testified:

"Q. Why didn't you tell him then Mrs. Setchel was the one who had advanced the money and not the Setchel Fruit Company? A. I told him it was advanced for the Setchel Fruit Company. * * * At that time there were domestic affairs which prompted me to take on the attitude of looking after my own interest rather than Mrs. Setchel's. * * * And from that time on, a little before that, my attitude was rather to look after the Setchel Fruit Company and let the rest be subordinated to it.

"Q. In other words, you were trying to get the money back for the Setchel Fruit Company instead of for Mrs. Setchel? A. That is probably the interpretation of it."

[4] Equity looks beyond the form of a transaction and shapes its judgments in such a way as to carry out the purposes of the parties, dealing with the substance of transactions and treats their forms as of secondary importance. Campbell v. Freeman, 99 Cal. 548, 34 P. 113; Vance v. Anderson, 113 Cal. 538, 45 P. 816. Since under the contract the notices were to be given by Setchel and not by Mrs. Setchel, and since the failure to give them neither prejudiced the trustee nor the creditors, the maxim applies—"equity will consider as done that which ought to have been done." 1 Pomeroy, Equity Juris., §§ 365, 370, 373; Poultry Producers, etc., v. Nilsson, 197 Cal. 245, 239 P. 1086.

[5, 6] As to the charge of concealment, it may be said that there was no concealment that amounts to fraud or deceit for the reason that the trustee, as well as all of the creditors, knew that by the terms of the mortgage and declaration of trust their interest, rights, or claims did not come into existence until the necessary moneys borrowed to produce the crop had been repaid. "The 'concealment' of facts by a party to a contract, which amounts to fraud, implies design or purpose, and mere silence is not itself concealment." Barrett v. Lewiston, B. & B. St. R. Co., 110 Me. 24, 85 A. 306. "We do not" generally "speak of a person concealing a thing, unless he is in some way called upon to produce it." Watertown Sav. Bank v. Mattoon, 78 Conn. 393, 62 A. 624. So, also, in estoppel, there must be something willful and culpable in the silence which allows another to place himself in an unfavorable position on the faith or understanding of a fact which the person remaining silent can contradict. Eltinge v. Santos, 171 Cal. 278, 152 P. 915, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 1143; Stern v. Sunset Road Oil Co., 47 Cal. App. 334, 190 P. 651.

The following language of the court on the former appeal is apropos here: "So far as the record shows, the creditors of the Setchel Fruit Company had no claim upon the proceeds of the crop to be raised on Mrs. Setchel's land in 1921, but her husband's credit was seriously involved, and she not only consented to the mortgage of her future crop, but also to pay the expenses of raising the same out of moneys due her, provided only that this expense should be repaid to her out of the crop before the money was turned over to the creditors. The fairness of this demand is obvious, and it appears in the record that if the crop had not been a failure, it would have paid the expense of its production and furnished ample money to satisfy all creditors. Th. incidental unfortunate circumstance that the crop was a failure does not change the equity of allowing the expense of its production to be paid first out of its proceeds."

We have examined the authorities cited by respondents and question not the principles they enunciate, but merely their application to the situation presented here.

As the evidence without conflict establishes the fact that appellant advanced funds to produce the crop of 1921, as provided for in the crop mortgage and declaration of trust, and is therefore entitled to be repaid such funds in advance of other creditors, the judgment must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

DE LONG v. MISSION MARBLE WORKS et al. (Civ. 6543.) ★

Rehearing Denied Jan. 23, 1929.

1. Novation ⟹12—Evidence held to show new contract supported by consideration was made for installing marble, after plaintiff refused to proceed on discovering plans bid on were admittedly not in accordance with official plan required to be completed.

In action for labor in installing marble for defendants, evidence that plan furnished by contractor on which plaintiff's bid was based did not correspond to official plan, that contractor admitted plans furnished were wrong, and that, after plaintiff refused to proceed on ground that work bid on was not work called for by official plans, plaintiff was requested to proceed according to latter plans and render account for labor required to complete work, and that plaintiff completed work under new arrangement, showed that new contract supported by sufficient consideration was made.

2. Novation ⟹1—Whether new agreement amounts to novation is question of intention.

Whether new agreement amounts to novation is question of intention.

3. Novation ⟹4—Novation is effected when new contract has been entered into without fraud and as substitute for previous contract.

When it is clear that new contract has been entered into without fraud and with understanding that it shall be substituted for previous contract, novation is effected and former agreement extinguished.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by C. A. De Long against the Mission Marble Works, a corporation, and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Geo. Clark Sargent, of San Francisco, for appellant Marble Works.

Louis Ferrari and J. J. Posner, both of San Francisco (Aaron M. Sargent, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant Bank of Italy.

Whitehurst & Logan, of Newman, and H. K. Eells, of San Francisco, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. Defendant Mission Marble Works, a corporation, on March 29, 1923, entered into a contract with the Bank of Italy to manufacture and install the marble work in a bank building, which was being erected by the latter at Visalia, Cal. The work was to be done according to certain plans and specifications which were referred to in the contract. The plans were prepared by the architect employed by the bank, and the specifications provided that the contractor should prepare and furnish shop drawings of the marble work, and that these should be checked by the architect and returned to the contractor with his approval or corrections. The contractor prepared a set of shop drawings, but the evidence shows that only one of these, called the typical floor plan, and upon which were shown the marble tiled floor, the border and wainscoting of the second, fourth, and fifth floors of the building, was submitted to the architect. The latter drawing as shown was a blueprint, and on May 3, 1923, before the plaintiff had any connection with the work, the same was returned by the architect to the contractor with a number of corrections made thereon. The evidence further shows that after the latter date and before May 28, 1923, the contractor, in order to enable the plaintiff to submit a bid for setting the marble, delivered to him the shop plans, including a copy of the typical floor plan mentioned, but without the architect's corrections being shown thereon. On May 31, 1923, the plaintiff entered into a contract with the defendant contractor whereby he agreed, for the sum of $4,500, to install the marble in the building as called for by the specifications and shown on the plans, all to the satisfaction of the architect. In this connection it was alleged by the plaintiff, and the court found, "that prior to the execution of said contract of May 31, 1923, defendant, Mission Marble Works, furnished the plaintiff certain plans prepared by said defendant, which said plans purported to show in detail the dimensions, character and location of all marble to be installed in said building, and that said defendant, for the purpose of inducing plaintiff to enter into a contract for installing said marble at as low a price as possible, then and there stated to plaintiff that said plans so furnished him by it were in all respects true and accurate and corresponded exactly with the official plans of said building." It was further alleged and found that the plaintiff, believing and in reliance upon the representations that the plans furnished him were correct, entered into the contract for the price mentioned, and that the latter was the lowest possible cost of doing the work had the representations been true. It was also found that plaintiff entered upon the performance of the contract, but that the plans furnished by said defendant did not correspond with the official plans of the building, and the marble furnished by the defendant—and which was cut in accordance with the plans furnished to the plaintiff—could not be installed therein; that because of this impossibility the original contract between plaintiff and defendant contractor was abandoned, and a new agreement entered into between them by which the plaintiff was to be paid the value of his work and labor in installing the marble in accordance with the official plans of the building. The court found that the plaintiff was compelled to recut and repolish a large part of the marble furnished by the defendant contractor; that much was furnished only after long delay; that the value of the work done by plaintiff was $6,769.94, of which the sum of $4,100 had been paid; and also that the bank, which was served with a verified notice of the claim, was indebted to defendant contractor under its contract in a sum more than sufficient to pay the balance unpaid to the plaintiff. Judgment was entered accordingly against the contractor and also against the bank, which was joined as a defendant, and both defendants have appealed.

As grounds for reversal it is claimed that the evidence was insufficient to support the conclusion that a new contract was made between the parties, and that any recovery for extra work should be based not upon its reasonable value but upon the original contract price.

[1] The evidence adduced in support of plaintiff's claim that the plan furnished by the contractor, and upon which the bid was based, did not correspond with the so-called official plans, is not contradicted. Furthermore, there was no denial of his testimony that the president and general manager of the contractor admitted that the plans furnished were wrong, and that after the plaintiff had refused to proceed under his contract upon the ground that the work bid upon was not the work which the official plans called for, he was requested by that officer to proceed according to the latter plans and render an account of the labor required to complete the job. The facts justified the plaintiff's refusal to proceed further under his contract, and it was not only to the interest of the defendant contractor, which was at fault, that the work should proceed, but, in view of the circumstances, it was manifestly the intention that the plaintiff should continue under a new arrangement.

[2, 3] Whether a new agreement amounts to a novation is a question of intention (Parkside Realty Co. v. MacDonald, 166 Cal. 426, 137 P. 21; Dyer Bros. Iron Works v. Central Iron Works, 182 Cal. 588, 189 P. 445); and when it is clear that a new contract has been entered into without fraud, and with the understanding that it shall be substituted for a previous one, a novation is effected and the former agreement extinguished (Beckwith v. Sheldon, 165 Cal. 319, 131 P. 1049; Utah Construction Co. v. Western Pacific Ry. Co., 174 Cal. 156, 162 P. 631; Simmons v. Sweeney, 13 Cal. App. 283, 109 P. 265; Thomas v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 16 Cal. App. 407, 117 P. 1041, 1046; Hieatt v. Gassen, 41 Cal. App. 620, 183 P. 227; Harpold v. Slocum, 46 Cal. App. 51, 188 P. 824).

It is our conclusion that a new contract supported by a sufficient consideration (Credit Clearance Bureau v. Geo. A. Hochbann, etc., Co., 25 Cal. App. 546, 144 P. 315) was made in the present case, and the judgment is accordingly affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 24, 1928.

1. Constitutional law ⚷188—Legislature may change law of succession, and make it applicable to previously acquired property.

The Legislature may at any time change the law of succession, and may make the changed law applicable to previously acquired property.

2. Wills ⚷3—Statute authorizing testamentary disposition by either spouse of half of community property held applicable only to after-acquired property, as respects testamentary disposition by wife (Civ. Code, § 1401, amended in 1923).

Amendment of Civ. Code, § 1401, in 1923, to provide that on death of either spouse one-half of community property belongs to surviving spouse, and that other half is subject to testamentary disposition of decedent, authorizes either spouse to make testamentary disposition of one-half of community property, not merely part thereof remaining undisposed of at death of the other, and court will therefore presume that it was intended to be applicable only to after-acquired property, as respects testamentary disposition of community property by wife, who previous to amendment had a mere expectancy in community property.

3. Wills ⚷6—Will bequeathing all property of which wife died possessed did not dispose of community property wherein testatrix had mere expectancy as heir (Civ. Code, § 1401, amended in 1923).

Wife's will, bequeathing to named children all her property of which she died possessed, executed before 1923 amendment of Civ. Code, § 1401, providing that, on death of either spouse, one half of community property belongs to surviving spouse, and that other half is subject to testamentary disposition of decedent, held not intended to dispose of any part of community property in which, prior to amendment, testatrix had a mere expectancy as heir.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Henry Sexton against Alba Daly and others. From an adverse judgment, certain defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Joseph Scott and A. G. Ritter, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Verge, Cooney, Davin & Kearney, Arthur C. Verge, and A. H. De Tremaudan, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff, who is the surviving husband of Mary Sexton, deceased, was given judgment quieting his title to several parcels of real property which, during the lifetime of his wife, had been a part of their community property. The appellants are the children of Mrs. Sexton by a previous marriage, and they are beneficiaries under her last will, which was upheld in Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 251 P. 778. The will was executed July 12, 1921. The dispositive clause thereof reads as follows:

"I give, bequeath and devise to my children (naming them), share and share alike, all property, both real and person(al), of which I may die possessed."

Mrs. Sexton died September 25, 1924. The Legislature of 1923 amended section 1401 of the Civil Code to read as follows:

"Upon the death of either husband or wife, one-half of the community property belongs to the surviving spouse; the other half is subject to the testamentary disposition of the decedent, and in the absence thereof goes to the surviving spouse, subject to the provisions of section one thousand four hundred two of this Code."

The property in controversy was acquired prior to 1923. Appellants concede that at and prior to the death of Mrs. Sexton a wife's interest in community property was a mere expectancy. A mere expectancy "is not to be deemed an interest of any kind." Civ. Code, § 700. In Stewart v. Stewart (Cal.) 269 P. 439, it is held that, as to all community property acquired prior to the enactment of section 161a of the Civil Code in 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 484), "during the marriage the husband is the sole and exclusive owner of all the community property, and the wife has no title thereto, nor interest or estate therein, other than a mere expectancy as heir, if she survive him." In appellant's reply brief it is said:

"Appellants' contention is * * * that upon the death of Henry Sexton they, as children of Mary Sexton, are entitled by reason of being legatees and devisees of their mother's will, to share in any property of Henry Sexton's estate which was community property of Henry Sexton and Mary Sexton during her lifetime. * * * Appellants do not seek to interfere with or molest the right of Henry Sexton to handle and deal with the community property, but claim that upon his death they have the right to succeed to a portion of what remains by reason of the existence of Mary Sexton's will. They claim that by reason of said will and said sections 1401 and 1402 they have been awarded a right of succession in whatever remains of said community property, and that sections 1401 and 1402 are in effect statutes of succession or inheritance for their benefit rather than statutes to disturb any vested interest of the estate."

[1, 2] Undoubtedly the Legislature may at any time change the law of succession, and may make the changed law applicable to previously acquired property; but to authorize one who has no "interest nor estate therein, other than a mere expectancy as heir," to determine who shall succeed to such property, is an entirely different proposition. The language of section 1401 shows a clear intent to authorize either spouse to make testamentary disposition of one-half of the community property, not merely such part thereof as may remain undisposed of at the death of the other. It is to be presumed, therefore, that it was the intention to make the provisions of that section applicable only to after-acquired property, in so far as concerns the testamentary disposition of community property by the wife, rather than to interfere with the husband's vested right to the ownership and control of the whole of such property during his lifetime, or to provide a new rule of succession.

[3] The will was executed prior to the amendment on which the appellants rely and, therefore, the testatrix could not have had the provisions of that amendment in mind when she made her will. If she was attempting to dispose of any part of the community property, singularly inappropriate language was employed to accomplish her purpose. "All property * * * of which I may die possessed" could not have been intended to designate property in which the testatrix had "a mere expectancy as heir." Appellants' position appears to be so clearly untenable that further discussion or citation of authorities is deemed unnecessary.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. LEDDY. (Cr. 1506.)★

Rehearing Denied Jan. 5, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 17, 1929.

1. Homicide 🔑250—Evidence held to support conviction of murder as against claim of mutual combat.

Evidence held to support conviction of murder as against claim that parties were engaged in mutual combat and that crime was manslaughter only.

2. Homicide 🔑145—It is natural inference that vicious attack with club is with intent to inflict great bodily injury.

Where men are suddenly and viciously attacked, one of the assailants having a small club, it is a natural inference that great bodily injury was intended.

3. Criminal law 🔑823(17)—Instruction that killing with specific intent to take life would be first degree murder held not erroneous, in view of other instructions, because omitting deliberation and premeditation.

Where court charged that if killing was done under specified circumstances it was murder in the second degree, unless evidence proved specific intent to take life, further statement that if such specific intent existed the offense would be murder in the first degree, held not erroneous as ignoring premeditation and deliberation, where other instructions fully defined murder in both degrees and manslaughter and their elements.

4. Criminal law 🔑810—Instructions on murder in the second degree held not in conflict.

Instruction that if unlawful killing was done under specified circumstances it was murder in the second degree, unless evidence proved specific intent to take life, in which case it was murder in the first degree, held not in conflict with instruction that in second degree murder there might be formed design and purpose to kill, but that killing was not deliberated and premeditated.

5. Criminal law 🔑823(9)—Instruction as to burden being on defendant to show mitigating circumstances, justification, or excuse held not erroneous, when jury was instructed on reasonable doubt and burden of proof (Pen. Code, § 1105).

Instruction based on Pen. Code, § 1105, that burden of proving circumstances of mitigation or that justified or excused killing devolved on defendant unless proof by prosecution tended to show crime was manslaughter or that defendant was justifiable or excusable, but that defendant was only bound to create a reasonable doubt, held not erroneous, where jury were also instructed on subjects of reasonable doubt and burden of proof.

6. Homicide 🔑286(3)—Where evidence warranted conviction of murder in the first degree, instruction on deliberation and premeditation was not error.

Where evidence justified a verdict of murder in the first degree, it was not error to give instructions as to what would constitute premeditation and deliberation.

7. Criminal law 🔑1172(1)—Instruction that act might be done deliberately and intentionally from moment's reflection, if invading jury's province, held not injurious.

On trial for murder, instruction that a man might do a thing willfully, deliberately, and intentionally from a moment's reflection, as well as after pondering it for a month or a year, stated a mere commonplace which could not prejudice defendant, conceding it to be an attempt to state a psychological fact, which was exclusively for the jury.

8. Criminal law 🔑823(9)—Instruction as to presumption of intent to do that done willfully and voluntarily held not erroneous in connection with other instructions.

On trial for murder, instruction that person was presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully did, and that presumption must prevail in absence of evidence to contrary, held not erroneous in connection with all the instructions because not adding that presumption was subject to be repudiated by evidence.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

9. Criminal law 🔑815(4)—Instruction that intent was manifested by circumstances of homicide held not erroneous as excluding defendant's testimony.

On trial for homicide, instruction that intent is manifested by circumstances connected with the homicide held not erroneous as excluding defendant's testimony as to his intent from jury's consideration, particularly when considered with the instructions as a whole.

10. Homicide 🔑309(1)—Instruction on murder in the second degree held not erroneous because not stating that absence of either deliberation or premeditation would be sufficient (Pen. Code, § 189).

Instruction defining murder in the second degree in accordance with Pen. Code, § 189, was not erroneous because not stating that if either premeditation or deliberation was absent, the homicide was murder in the second degree.

11. Homicide 🔑286(2)—Instructions on malice were properly given when evidence made jury question as to murder (Pen. Code, § 188).

Where evidence was sufficient to make jury question as to whether homicide was murder rather than killing in mutual combat, instruction defining malice as defined in Pen. Code, § 188, and instruction amplifying such definition, were properly given.

12. Homicide 🔑309(4)—Instruction as to adequate provocation to reduce homicide to manslaughter held warranted by evidence.

Under the evidence, instruction as to what constituted adequate provocation by which unlawful homicide would be reduced from murder to manslaughter held properly given.

13. Homicide 🔑233—In murder prosecution, motive need not be proved when inferable from evidence.

On trial for murder, it is unnecessary that prosecution prove motive where it may be inferred from the evidence.

14. Homicide 🔑230—Jury held entitled to infer intent to commit felony by persons making attack.

Where on trial for murder there was evidence that witness and another were suddenly attacked by defendant and another, and that during ensuing struggle deceased was killed, jury were entitled to make any reasonable inference which facts warranted, one of which was intent to commit a felony.

15. Criminal law 🔑824(2)—Instruction defining "absolutely necessary" as used in instruction on self-defense should be offered if definition is desired.

Where court charged that to justify or excuse killing it must have appeared to defendant as reasonable man that killing was absolutely necessary, if defendant desired meaning of phrase "absolutely necessary" to be explained to the jury, he should have offered an instruction to that effect.

16. Criminal law 🔑811(2)—Repetition of statement as to necessity for killing to support claim of self-defense held not erroneous.

Where court several times charged that defendant was not entitled to claim self-defense unless killing was actually or apparently necessary, repetition was not erroneous as impressing jury with idea that court did not believe such necessity existed, where instruction stated law of self-defense in various forms which necessitated such repetition.

17. Criminal law 🔑763, 764(8)—Instruction stating testimony and then stating law, if jury found certain facts from such testimony and all the evidence, was not a charge respecting matters of fact (Const. art. 6, § 19).

Instruction that named witness had testified to certain facts and that if jury found from that evidence and all the evidence in the case that fatal blow was struck by defendant, when he was not in real or apparent danger of being killed or seriously injured, then blow was not excusable or justifiable, did not violate Const. art. 6, § 19, prohibiting charge with respect to matters of fact.

18. Criminal law 🔑761(12)—Instruction as to self-defense held not erroneous as telling jury defendant had intentionally taken deceased's life.

On trial for murder, instruction that law would not allow man to constitute himself a judge to declare that another's life was forfeited and execute such judgment, unless there was real or apparent necessity for such action, held not erroneous as in effect telling jury that defendant intentionally took deceased's life.

19. Criminal law 🔑829(9)—Instruction as to presumption that defendant spoke the truth as a witness held sufficiently covered by one given.

Instruction that defendant was entitled to presumption of law that he spoke the truth and that jury had no right to disregard his testimony, but that his testimony was entitled to same consideration as that of any other witness, was sufficiently covered by instruction that witness called by people or by defendant, and defendant himself, was presumed to speak the truth.

20. Homicide 🔑300(3)—Instruction on self-defense held not erroneous because not repeating right to use force appearing necessary to defendant as a reasonable man.

Where court charged as requested by defendant that if one attacked on his own premises as a reasonable man believed and had cause to believe that his assailant intended to kill him or to do him great bodily harm, he was not obliged to retreat, etc., it was not error to add that the person assailed must not use more force or violence than was necessary, without also adding that defendant had right to use such force or violence as appeared to him as a reasonable man to be reasonably necessary.

21. Criminal law 🔑785(3), 789(2)—No instruction other than giving of statute is necessary on subject of reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence (Pen. Code, § 1096, as amended, and § 1096a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Under the express provisions of Pen. Code, § 1096a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039, where the court gave to the jury section 1096, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039, no other instruction on subject of reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence was required.

22. Criminal law 🔑829(18)—Instruction that juror having reasonable doubt should not vote for verdict because majority were in its favor held sufficiently covered by instruction given.

Instruction that juror entertaining a reasonable doubt should not vote for verdict of guilty because majority were in favor of such verdict was sufficiently covered by instruction that it was jurors' duty to maintain their individual opinions so long as they thought they were right, and to act in accordance with their honest belief and according to the law and the evidence.

23. Criminal law 🔑763, 764(5)—Instruction stating there was evidence tending to show certain facts was properly refused as invading jury's province (Const. art. 6, § 19).

Instruction which contained a statement that there was evidence tending to show certain facts was properly refused as trenching on the province of the jury and violating Const. art. 6, § 19, prohibiting charges with respect to matters of fact.

24. Criminal law 🔑781(4)—Instruction as to consideration with caution of statements of defendant while in custody held properly refused.

Instruction that there was evidence tending to show admissions of defendant while in custody and that statements made under such circumstances were to be received with caution held properly refused.

25. Criminal law 🔑761(1)—Instruction to consider intoxication or degree of intoxication of witnesses held properly refused as assuming disputed fact.

Where there was evidence that some witnesses had been drinking, but their condition as to sobriety or being drunk was a question of fact, instruction that jury should consider intoxication or degree of intoxication of witnesses or any of them at time of homicide, in determining weight to be given their testimony, was properly refused, as assuming that some witnesses were intoxicated.

26. Criminal law 🔑1173(1)—Instruction as to effect of intoxication held to state mere commonplace, and its refusal was harmless.

Where there was evidence that some witnesses had been drinking at time of homicide, instruction that intoxication involved numbness of faculties so as to affect capacity to observe, recollect, or communicate stated a commonplace that needed no exposition, and its refusal was not injurious.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; J. R. Welch, Judge.

Clarence A. Leddy was convicted of murder in the first degree and sentenced to life imprisonment, and, from the judgment and an order denying a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

John O'Gara, of San Francisco, E. M. Rea, of San Jose, and George T. Kerr, of San Francisco, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURROUGHS, Justice pro tem. The defendant was accused by an information filed in the superior court of Santa Clara county with the crime of murder. He entered a plea of not guilty, and upon a trial of the issue thus raised the jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder of the first degree and fixed his punishment at life imprisonment. He made a motion for a new trial, which was denied. The court thereupon sentenced him to life imprisonment in the state prison at San Quentin. From said order and judgment he appeals. He contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, and, further, that the trial court committed prejudicial error in giving certain instructions to the jury, and also in refusing to give certain instructions proposed by him. We will first consider the question of the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict.

[1] The transcript of the evidence reveals that two distinct versions of the affray which led to the killing are given by the witnesses, one version being given by the witnesses for the prosecution, and which it is claimed by respondent amply sustains the verdict, and the other by the witnesses for the defendant, and from which it is claimed by appellant it was a case of justifiable homicide. Further, even though this theory is untenable, it is claimed that, giving to the testimony of the prosecution its full weight, the offense amounted to no more than voluntary manslaughter. It is uncontradicted that this appellant kept a "bootleg joint" on the Almaden road, just outside the city limits of San Jose. About 4:30 a. m. on Saturday, May 26, 1928, an automobile arrived at appellant's resort. Robert F. Hill, Jr., Fred Jenny, and Alfred H. Webb were the occupants of the car. An altercation ensued. Webb, Hill, Jenny, appellant, and Fred True, appellant's barkeeper, were participants. Hill was hit on the head with a hoe. Appellant was the man who hit him. Hill is dead, and it is with his death appellant is charged. Bearing in mind the well-settled rule of law that appellate tribunals will not pass upon the credibility of witnesses, or weigh their evidence, the question to determine is this, Is there substantial evidence in the record to sustain the verdict of the jury? If so, the verdict may not be disturbed on appeal.

The story of the tragedy, as told by the witnesses for the prosecution, is concisely stated in respondent's brief as follows: "The testimony shows: Alfred H. Webb testifying:

"That Webb, Jenny and Hill arrived at the place of appellant at about 4:30 a. m. on the twenty-sixth day of May, 1928; that Hill and Webb left the car together and started toward the new building; that when they reached the corner of the garage walking side by side, someone rushed them. That Webb was thrown to the ground, and Hill was thrown on top of him.

"That Jenny, who had remained in the car, was called while both Webb and Hill were on the ground. That Jenny arrived before Webb and Hill got up; that Hill and Webb got on their feet.

"That thereupon Fred True, the bartender 'came' at Webb with an indoor baseball bat, and appellant was following Hill 'over toward the steps.'

"That Jenny said to appellant 'Put that down or you will kill somebody;' that this was followed by mumbling, and then Jenny said 'Will you promise to throw that away if I let you up.'

"That 'Leddy got up.' While Webb and Hill were brushing off their clothes, Jenny walked back toward the car.

"Webb heard: 'Let's finish the sons of bitches,' and then True came at Webb with the baseball bat again. While Webb was protecting his head by raising his arm, he looked under it and saw Leddy hit Mr. Hill.

"That Leddy hit Hill with a 'long blunt instrument' resembling People's Exhibit A. That appellant struck Hill on the head. That at the time Webb saw Hill struck on the head by appellant, Hill was lying on the ground.

"The witness Fred Jenny testified:

"That Webb, Jenny and Hill arrived at the place of appellant at about 4:30 a. m. on the morning of May 26, 1928. That he was asleep in the car when it arrived. That Webb spoke to him upon arrival, asking him to come in the resort, but that he declined to do so and that about three minutes passed when he heard Hill and Webb shout, 'Help, Fred,' and awakening he got out of the car and saw there was a fight, that one man was standing and three were on the ground.

"Leddy was 'on top of the two boys' and True was holding an indoor baseball bat above them, trying to hit someone.

"Jenny said : 'I don't know what this fight is all about or who started this fight. At any rate, you (speaking to True) put the bat away or you will kill somebody.' That he 'got underneath the baseball bat and held True.'

"True said 'they are trying to rob you, and we are helping you,' to which Jenny replied 'If these boys are trying to rob me, I will take care of myself.'

"Leddy got up, with that statement and started toward the garage. Just a moment or two passed, and Leddy came back to the place where they had struggled. Hill was sitting and Webb was on his knees.

"Leddy 'had a grub hoe,' and Jenny 'met him about half way to where the boys were on the ground.' The struggle for possession of the hoe ended by Jenny and Leddy falling to or hitting the ground. After hitting the ground, it appears Jenny was on top of appellant like 'riding a horse.'

"Jenny remonstrated with Leddy to 'put the hoe down or you will kill somebody.' Leddy stated 'I know when I am licked. * * * I will promise to be good,' whereupon Jenny let appellant up, and Jenny started for his car.

"Reaching his car, Jenny called to Hill and Webb 'Let's get out of here, let's go home.' Hill was brushing off his clothes and Webb was leaning on the tree.

"About this time appellant hollered 'Let's finish the sons of bitches, now. With that he made a run for Mr. Hill; and Mr. True made a run for Webb.' On cross-examination Jenny testified he saw appellant run fifteen or twenty feet with the hoe before striking Hill.

"Jenny called to Hill to look out, whereupon Hill raised his hand. Appellant hit Hill three times, the third time after he had fallen to the ground.

"Jenny, by that time, reached and grabbed appellant, saying 'You have killed him.' With that Leddy threw the hoe away.

"Jenny positively identified the hoe (People's Exhibit A.)

"Hill never recovered and died the next day.

"J. T. Maguire, a witness for the prosecution, was not a member of the Hill, Webb and Jenny party. He occupied a good position with a public service corporation in California. He was in the place conducted by appellant on the evening of the tragedy. He had had three drinks. He testified he did not see either Webb or Jenny in the place, and that he did not witness any trouble inside the place. That appellant and True left the place together, and that he remained talking with a girl in the place for five or ten minutes thereafter. Seeing no one, he imagined there must be some trouble, and walked toward the door. The first thing he saw was some skirmishing and fist fighting over near the steps. Then, as he said: 'My attention was centered on Mr. Leddy, who had a hoe in his hand and walking toward another gentleman, and he struck this man, I could not say where, but it appeared to me that he struck him on the head. Twice.'

"At the time he was struck Hill was backing up and the witness did not see anything in his hands. The witness later stated Hill might have had something in his hands, that he was not testifying positively that he did not. Still later, that Hill did not have his hands up.

"After Hill was struck Mr. Maguire left immediately.

"The witness, William Condon, a deputy sheriff, testified to an admission of the appellant that 'Those fellows were never in the joint.'

"To the same effect is the testimony of L. T. Torres, another deputy sheriff.

"Doctor Sullivan, the physician that attended Hill prior to his death and who performed the autopsy, stated that death resulted from a considerable hemorrhage secondary to extensive fracture of the skull. That the cause of the fracture was the application of considerable force."

Contradicting the foregoing, we have the following statement of the substance of the evidence given by the defendant and his witnesses as set forth in the appellant's opening brief, which is as favorable to appellant as the evidence will warrant:

"According to the testimony of defendant and his witnesses, Webb knocked at the door of the saloon and was admitted by Machado. Webb asked True for three drinks of whisky. True inquired why he wanted three, and was told that he had two friends outside. True refused to give Webb any liquor, saying that he appeared to have sufficient already. Then, Webb appealed to Leddy, who replied that he was not the bartender. Again denied a drink by True, Webb walked out.

"Leddy looked through a small window in the saloon door and saw Hill reaching into the pocket of Jenny, apparently asleep in the parked machine, and a moment later saw Hill with a pocket-book in his hand, evidently taken from Jenny's pocket. Leaving the machine, Hill came toward the door of the saloon, but turned and walked down by the side of the building. Leddy came out of the saloon and catching up with Hill told him not to hide that there. Hill said: 'Who are you?' Leddy replied that he was the boss of the place. At once Hill struck Leddy a blow with his fist. An exchange of blows followed. Hill backed over to the machine, and Leddy spoke to Jenny and asked if the purse was his and Jenny clapped his hand on his breast and said: 'It is mine.'

"Thereupon, Hill struck Leddy again, and they clinched. Webb went to the aid of Hill, and the two of them threw Leddy on the ground and piled on top of him.

"At this point Machado heard the uproar and came out from the saloon, bearing in his hand a toy bat which had been hanging above the bar. Machado approached the three fighting men, but took no part except to stand near them with the bat in his hand. While Machado stood there, True, the bartender, also came from the saloon into the yard and went at once to Leddy's aid, seizing Webb and taking him off. Leddy and Hill continued to scuffle.

"Then, Jenny joined in the contest by trying to take the bat away from Machado. Failing to get the bat, Jenny seized a hoe which was lying near, having been left there by a workman the day before. When Jenny came up with the hoe in his hands Leddy turned away from Hill and sought to take the hoe from Jenny. A struggle for possession of the hoe ensued. Finally, Jenny loosened his hold on the hoe in trying to jump and butt Leddy, and Leddy wrenched the hoe from him. Leddy warned Jenny, and Jenny ran out of the yard.

"Thereupon Leddy saw that Hill had joined Webb in an attack on True. Leddy threw the hoe aside, and walking over engaged with Hill, leaving Webb to fight with True. Hill and Leddy fought with each other, and finally Hill, backing up, seized an ax which was standing in its usual place, near the cellar door of the old residence across the yard from the saloon. Leddy tried to take the ax from Hill, and a struggle for the possession of the ax followed. While they were struggling, Otto, the piano player, ran over and got the hoe and came up with it by the side of Leddy and Hill. Leddy seized the hoe from Otto's hand, and raising it, warned Hill to stand back, but Hill, who now had the ax in his hand, crouched as if he would strike Leddy with it. When Hill disregarded the warning and started toward him Leddy struck Hill twice with the hoe, the first blow upon the shoulder and the second blow on the side of the head. Hill fell, and his head struck the curve. Immediately Leddy put down the hoe and went to Hill's aid, placing him in an easier position, bathing his head and trying to bring him back to consciousness. The fight between True and Webb, which was still going on, came to a sudden stop when Webb said to True: 'Fred, somebody is hurt.' Their efforts to restore Hill failing, Leddy, True and Webb placed Hill in Jenny's car and he was taken to the hospital, where he died the next day."

There is also evidence that Hill, Webb, and Jenny had visited other resorts that night and had been drinking.

Under this state of the record there can be no question but that the jury believed the account of the affray given by the prosecution witnesses and disbelieved that given for the defense. But it is contended by the defendant that, disregarding the theory of self-defense, there is no evidence of any more serious crime than voluntary manslaughter. In support of this view it is said that the parties were engaged in a mutual combat, and that under that doctrine the crime could amount to manslaughter only. He cites Clark and Marshall's Law of Crimes (2d Ed.) pp. 358, 359, § 260, where it is said: "If two persons meet, not intending to quarrel, and angry words suddenly arise, and a conflict springs up, in which blows are given on both sides, without much regard to who is the assailant, it is a mutual combat; and if no unfair advantage is taken at the outset, and the occasion was not sought for the purpose of gratifying malice, and one of them seizes a weapon and strikes a fatal blow, it is regarded as homicide in the heat of blood, and manslaughter." Other authorities are cited dealing with the law of mutual combat, but as we view the evidence in this case such doctrine is inapplicable. The witness Webb testified that after he and Hill got out of the car, and approached the appellant's saloon, they were suddenly rushed by appellant and True. Webb thereupon called upon Jenny for help and when Jenny arrived the fight was in progress. If the jury believed the story of Webb and Jenny then it was not a case of "mutual combat" as defined by the law writers and decisions, but was clearly a case of assault by the appellant and his barkeeper, in which Hill, Webb, and Jenny were exercising the right of self-defense, and we are at a loss to find any place in the evidence where it appears that it ever became a "mutual combat," which would relieve the appellant from the charge of murder.

[2] What motive may have actuated the appellant and True in attacking Webb and Hill does not appear in the record except by inference, but where men are suddenly viciously attacked, one of the assailants having a small club, it is a natural inference great bodily injury was intended.

[3] The appellant claims that the court should not have given any instructions upon the subject of murder; that the evidence in the case established that the defendant in any event had committed no offense higher than voluntary manslaughter. We have already held that under the evidence adduced at the trial the crime of murder was involved, and therefore such conclusion disposes of this objection made by the appellant. The court instructed the jury: "If the unlawful killing is done without the provocation and sudden passion which reduces the offense to manslaughter, or is done in the commission of an unlawful act, the natural consequences of which are dangerous to life, or is committed in the attempt to perpetrate a felony other than those mentioned in the description of murder in the first degree, or the circumstances of the killing show an abandoned heart, this is murder of the second degree, unless the evidence proves the existence in the mind of the slayer of the specific intent to take life. If such specific intent exists at the time of such unlawful killing, the offense committed would, of course, be murder of the first degree." It is claimed that this instruction is erroneous because it tells the jury that if there existed in the mind of appellant a specific intent to take life it constituted murder of the first degree, and that the instruction ignores the necessary elements of premeditation and deliberation, which are necessary elements of murder of the first degree. It will be noted that the instruction states that if the unlawful killing is done without the provocation and sudden passion, which reduces the offense to manslaughter, or is done in the commission of an unlawful act, the natural consequences of which are dangerous to life, or is committed in the attempt to perpetrate a felony other than those mentioned in murder of the first degree, or the circumstances of the killing show an abandoned heart, that is murder of the second degree. The court in its other instructions fully defines murder of the first and second degree, and manslaughter, and the elements constituting those offenses. Therefore, read in connection with the other instructions, the instruction complained of constituted a correct statement of the law.

[4] Appellant further contends that the instruction is in conflict with the following one given by the court: "In murder of the second degree there may be a formed design and purpose to kill, but it is followed immediately by the act, and is not deliberated and premeditated." Counsel does not point out wherein this instruction conflicts, but the latter instruction states elements of murder of the second degree and read in conjunction with the other instructions it could not be interpreted as contradictory of the first instruction of which complaint is made.

[5] The court further instructed the jury: "The court also instructs you that upon this trial for murder, the commission of the homicide, that is the killing of Robert F. Hill, Jr., by the defendant, being proved or admitted, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation or that justify or excuse such killing devolves upon him, the defendant, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable." It is contended by appellant that the giving of the foregoing instruction was erroneous, first, because the proof on the part of the prosecution did tend to show that the crime committed only amounted to manslaughter; second, because section 1105 of the Penal Code which this instruction attempts to have the jury apply was intended as a direction or guide to the court to enable the court to determine when the prosecution had made out a prima facie case in a murder trial and was never intended to be applied by the jury. In addition to the portion of the instruction above set forth the court annexed to said instruction the following: "But the defendant is only bound under this rule to produce such evidence as will create in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt of his guilt of the offense charged; it can make no difference whether such reasonable doubt is the result of evidence on the part of the defendant tending to show circumstances of mitigation or that justify or excuse the killing, or from other evidence coming from him or the prosecution."

In support of his contention counsel cites the case of the People v. Durand, 307 Ill. 611, 139 N. E. 78. In that case the instruction complained of was a copy of section 155 of the Criminal Code of Illinois and which was similar to section 1105 of the Penal Code of this state. The court said: "This is purely an abstract proposition of law, which gives the jury no correct idea of the law of the case or as to how much proof on the question of self-defense is necessary to entitle the defendant to a verdict of not guilty. The law clearly is that the burden of proof never shifts to the defendant no matter what his defense may be, and where the defense is self-defense, it is sufficient if his evidence on self-defense, together with all the other evidence in the case, creates in the minds of the jury a reasonable doubt of his guilt, and there was no instruction given for the people that recognizes this as the law."

In the case at bar the jury were fully instructed upon the subject of reasonable doubt and the burden of proof being upon the people. The giving of section 1105, Penal Code, has been approved by the Supreme Court of this state in the cases of People v. McClure, 148 Cal. 418, 83 P. 437; People v. Grill, 151 Cal. 592, 91 P. 515, and in People v. Richards, 1 Cal. App. 566, 82 P. 691. The objection is therefore not well taken.

[6, 7] The court further instructed the jury that there need be no appreciable length of time between the intention to kill and the act of killing; that they may be as instantaneous as successive thoughts of the mind; it was only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by concurrence of the will, premeditation, and deliberation. The court gave an additional instruction that a man may do a thing willfully, deliberately, and intentionally from a moment's reflection as well as after pondering over the subject for a month or for a year. Both of these instructions are couched in appropriate language and are what the trial courts usually term "stock instructions." It is claimed in support of the objection to these particular instructions that the evidence does not justify a reasonable inference that the defendant acted with premeditation, but we have already held that the jury were justified in a verdict of murder of the first degree, therefore this objection is not well taken. It is also claimed that the second instruction is an attempt to state a psychological fact which is exclusively for the jury. Conceding this to be the fact, it was the statement of a mere commonplace which could not have in any manner prejudiced the rights of the defendant.

[8] Further objection is made to two instructions dealing with the question of intent. The court in said instructions stated that a person is presumed to intend to do that which he voluntarily and willfully does in fact do, and that in the absence of evidence to the contrary said presumption must prevail. These instructions are also stock instructions and couched in appropriate language. It is claimed that their vice lies in the fact that the court told the jury that the presumption specified must prevail in the absence of evidence to the contrary without adding that the presumption was subject to being repudiated by evidence. We do not consider said instructions subject to the criticism made. It is expressly stated in the instructions that said presumption must prevail in the absence of evidence to the contrary, and in connection with all of the other instructions of the court the jury could not have misunderstood their meaning.

[9] Another instruction given by the court tells the jury that the intent is manifested by the circumstances connected with the homicide. This instruction is attacked upon the ground that the phrase, "the circumstances connected with the homicide," implied that the jury should consider the circumstances and nothing else, thereby excluding from their consideration the defendant's testimony as to his intent or intention. But we cannot conceive that the jury as reasonable men could take such an extreme view of this instruction and particularly when considered with the instructions as a whole.

[10] Criticism is also directed to the instruction which defines murder of the second degree, it being the claim of appellant that the instruction told the jury that in murder of the second degree both premeditation and deliberation are absent. and does not state that if either of these elements is absent the homicide is still murder of the second degree. The instruction as given by the court is in accordance with section 189 of the Penal Code and is correct.

[11] It is further claimed that the trial court erred in improperly defining the word "malice" as the term is used in the law of homicide. The instruction complained of is an amplification of section 188 of the Penal Code defining "malice." The court also in its instructions gave the Code definition of "malice" as contained in section 188 of said Code. As we understand, counsel contends that in this particular case the killing was the result of violent passion engendered in a mutual combat, but, as we have already held that the evidence was sufficient to leave the consideration of murder to the jury, the instruction was properly given.

[12] It is next claimed that the trial court erred in giving an instruction as to what constituted adequate provocation by which an unlawful homicide will be reduced from murder to manslaughter, but we are of the opinion that under the evidence adduced the instruction was properly given.

[13, 14] It is claimed that the trial court committed prejudicial error in instructing the jury as to the law of self-defense. It is admitted by appellant that the instructions are a correct statement of law, but he claims that they are not applicable to the facts of this case. His argument in support of his objection is practically to the effect that no motive was shown for the killing of Hill by Leddy; but it is unnecessary that the prosecution prove motive where it may be inferred from the evidence. In this case we have the evidence of Webb that he and Jenny were suddenly attacked by the defendant and True, and that during the struggle that ensued Hill was killed. From this evidence the jury were entitled to any reasonable inference which the facts might warrant, one of which as heretofore pointed out, on an examination of the evidence in this case, might have been the commission of a felony.

[15] It is next contended that in two of the instructions relating to the law of self-defense the court told the jury that in order to justify or excuse the slaying it must have appeared to the defendant as a reasonable man that the killing of the deceased was absolutely necessary. It is claimed that the jury should have been told the legal meaning of the phrase "absolutely necessary," and that, failing to explain the phrase, the jury were misled. We are of the opinion that the jury as reasonable men would understand that whenever an innocent person is placed in sudden jeopardy of life or limb the absolute necessity referred to in the instructions complained of exists. However, had the appellant desired the matter to be further explained he should have offered such an instruction to the trial court.

[16] It is claimed that during the course of its instructions the court told the jury ten times that the defendant was not entitled to claim self-defense unless the slaying was actually or apparently necessary to save him from loss of life or great bodily injury. It is contended that this repetition had the effect of impressing the minds of the jury with the idea that the court did not believe that the defendant slew deceased under such necessity. A careful reading of the instructions does not impress us as having such an effect. The instructions given stated the law of self-defense in various forms, all of which in our opinion were correct statements of the law and necessitated a repetition of the language complained of. Furthermore, the jury were sworn to determine the facts of the case upon their own judgment and not that of the court's, and the presumption is that they so acted.

[17] It is next claimed that the trial court erred in charging the jury as to matters of fact. The court instructed the jury as follows: "Witness Maguire testified that Hill was backing up and Leddy was following; that he saw no ax in Hill's hands; that he saw Leddy strike Hill twice with the grubbing hoe here in evidence; that Hill fell to the ground. If you find from this evidence, and from all the evidence in the case, that the fatal blow was struck by the defendant when he was not in any real or apparent danger of being killed by Hill or seriously injured in body by him, the blow was not excusable or justifiable." It is claimed that by this instruction the court pointed out to the jury that the testimony of witness Maguire was entitled to full credit and should be accepted by them as correctly presenting the facts upon which the prosecution and defense were in conflict. Section 19 of article 6 of the Constitution reads as follows: "Judges shall not charge juries with respect to matters of fact, but may state the testimony and declare the law." An analysis of the instruction given by the court will show that it is not within the prohibition of the section of the Constitution just cited. The court states that Maguire testified to certain things, and the jury are then told: "If you find from this evidence and from all the evidence in the case certain facts then the blow was not excusable or justifiable." The court does not say that the evidence of Maguire is true, nor does he confine the consideration of the jury to that evidence alone. But he says: "If you find from this evidence and all the evidence in the case, then the defendant is not excusable or justifiable." In the case of People v. Casey, 65 Cal. 260, 3 P. 874, the court said: "Testimony in this case shows." In the case of People v. Matthai, 135 Cal. 446, 67 P. 694, the court said: "The deceased was unarmed." In People v. Gordon, 88 Cal. 422, 26 P. 502, the court told the jury: "The testimony is corroborated." In these cases it is clear that the court invaded the province of the jury and did not state the testimony and declare the law, but told the jury that certain facts had been proven. In People v. Richards, 81 Cal. App. 30, 253 P. 162, the court stated the testimony of the defendant on the one hand and that of the prosecuting witness and other witnesses, followed by this statement to the jury: "Now it is for the jury to determine from all the facts whether the defendant committed the act by force or not or by threats of great bodily harm." The appellate court held that this was not error, stating that "it nowhere appears that the court indicated a belief as to the truth or falsity of any witness' testimony, or that the jury should believe the facts to be true as had been testified, or find for or against the defendant if they believed them." In the instruction complained of the court does not indicate its own belief as to the testimony of Maguire or any of the other testimony. It follows that the point is not well taken.

[18] In concluding his instructions, the court said: "The court submits the case to you expecting you to apply and administer the law given you." The instruction given preceding these words reads as follows: "The law is careful and jealous of the life of a citizen. The law, in effect, says: You must not take from your fellowman the life which God has given him; you shall not constitute yourself the judge to declare that a life is forfeited, and execute such judgment, unless there is a necessity, real or apparent, for such action on your part." It is claimed that this instruction told the jury in effect that the defendant constituted himself a judge, declared the life of the deceased forfeited, that is, intentionally took the other man's life. We do not so read this statement. As we understand its meaning, and the only meaning which the jury as reasonable men could have legitimately placed on this instruction as applied to the facts of this case, was that there must be a necessity, real or apparent, to justify the taking of human life, which is a correct statement of the law.

[19] The defendant offered and the court refused an instruction that the defendant is entitled to the presumption of law that he speaks the truth, which instruction also cautioned the jury that they have no right to disregard his testimony merely because he is the defendant, but that his testimony is entitled to the same consideration as that of any other witness. The court gave the jury an instruction that: "A witness, whether called by the People, or by the defendant, and the defendant himself, is presumed to speak the truth." We are of the opinion that this instruction covers all that the defendant was entitled to in this behalf.

[20] The appellant also proposed the following instruction: "A person who is upon his own premises where he has a right to be, is not obliged to leave said premises or to flee therefrom in order to avoid an adversary, and in this regard I charge you that a man who is where he has a right to be, is not bound to retreat from any aggressor who there seeks a quarrel with him, but may stand his ground and repel any attack that may be made upon him there, and may meet force with force; and if, as a reasonable able man he believes and has cause to believe that his assailant intends to kill him or do him great bodily harm, he is not obliged to retreat but may kill his adversary and may even pursue his adversary and kill him if such standing his ground or such pursuit appears to be reasonably necessary in order to protect his life or to protect his body from great bodily injury." The court gave the instruction with the following modification: "But under such circumstances the person assailed, if you should find in this case that Leddy was assailed, must not use more force or violence than is necessary to avoid being killed himself or seriously injured." It is claimed that this modification is incorrect because it omits the element that the defendant had a right to use such force or violence as appeared to him as a reasonable man to be reasonably necessary under the circumstances, a consideration which it is claimed is omitted by the modification. We are of the opinion that the claim is without merit. The court told the jury that if as a reasonable man the defendant believed and had cause to believe that his assailant intended to kill him or do him great bodily harm, he need not retreat but may pursue his assailant if pursuit appears to be reasonably necessary in order to protect his life or limb. The modification is that under such circumstances no more force than necessary may be used to avoid being killed himself or seriously injured. The modification concerns the amount of force which may be used and could not have been otherwise understood by the jury.

[21] The defendant offered and the court refused to give several instructions bearing upon the question of the presumption of innocence and the term "reasonable doubt." The court did give to the jury section 1096 of the Penal Code enacted by the Legislature in 1927. St. 1927, p. 1039. It is stated in section 1096a of said Code that the instruction given in said section 1096 on the subject of reasonable doubt and presumption of innocence is all that it is necessary that the court should give and, we believe, is a sufficient answer to defendant's objection.

[22] It is further claimed by appellant that the trial court erred in refusing an instruction offered by him on the duty of individual jurors, to the effect that any juror entertaining a reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the defendant should not vote for a verdict of guilty for the single reason that a majority of the jury are in favor of a verdict of guilty. Among the instructions given by the court appears an instruction upon this subject in which it is said: "It is your duty as jurors to maintain your individual opinion so long as you think you are right. It is your duty to act in accordance with your honest belief and according to the law and the evidence in the case." We are of the opinion that the foregoing admonition to the jury as given by the court is sufficient and in substance covers the ground of the instruction offered by the defendant.

[23, 24] Complaint is also made that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction as to defendant's alleged admissions: "There is evidence before you tending to show that the defendant after the homicide and while in the custody of the officers of the law made certain statements with respect to the affray. I instruct you that such statements when made by a defendant under such circumstances are to be received with caution and I further instruct you that you are entitled to take into account the mental attitude of the defendant at the time such statements were made and his condition of responsibility or irresponsibility as you may find his condition from the evidence." This is not a correct statement of the law. The expression, "tending to show," trenches on the province of the jury and would be violative of section 19 of article 6 of the Constitution. In People v. Casey, supra, the court condemned the expression of the trial court that the "testimony in the case shows" as being an instruction upon a question of fact. The further expression used in the instruction, "under such circumstances" can only refer to statements made by the defendant "while in the custody of the officers of the law," should be received with caution. The instruction not being a proper exposition of the law, the court was justified in refusing to give it to the jury.

[25, 26] Appellant also offered an instruction that the jury were entitled to consider and should consider the intoxication or the degree of intoxication of the witnesses or any of the witnesses in the case at the time of the homicide; that intoxication involves a numbness of the faculties so as to affect the capacity to observe, or to recollect, or to communicate, and should be taken into consideration by the jury in determining the weight to be given to the testimony of the witnesses so affected. The vice of the foregoing instruction is that it assumes that the witnesses or some of them were in fact intoxicated. While there is evidence that some of the witnesses had been drinking, their condition as to sobriety or being drunk was one of the questions of fact involved in the case. The latter part of the instruction undertaking to define the effect of intoxication is a commonplace that needs no exposition and there could have been no injury resulting to the appellant by the court's failure to so instruct the jury. The jury were fully and fairly instructed.

We have gone over the entire record in the case, and have considered each one of the points raised by appellant, and we find no prejudicial error.

The judgment and the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

We concur: NOURSE, Acting P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

ISAACSON v. UNION TRUST CO. OF SAN DIEGO et al. (Civ. 3646.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 20, 1928.

Rehearing Granted.

1. Pleading 🔑237(3)—In trustee's action to establish trust in stock for bankrupt, trial amendment, conforming to proof alleging fraudulent pledge and sale to pledgee, was properly allowed.

In action by trustee of bankrupt to establish secret trust for benefit of bankrupt and to have title to stock vested in trustee, amendment to complaint to conform to proof, alleging execution of promissory note by bankrupt to defendant, fraudulent pledge of stock, and pretended sale to pledgee, was properly allowed as not altering essential characteristics of action, where pledgee stated he did not wish continuance when matter was suggested.

2. Pleading 🔑236(3)—Allowance of trial amendment to pleadings is within court's discretion, not to be disturbed without showing of prejudice.

Allowance of trial amendments to pleadings rests in sound discretion of court, and ruling should not be disturbed on appeal in absence of showing that prejudice resulted therefrom to extent that party aggrieved was deprived of substantial right or deprived of fair trial.

3. Bankruptcy 🔑279—Trustee in bankruptcy may pursue bankrupt's property held by third persons in fraud of creditors.

Trustee in bankruptcy has right to pursue property of bankrupt claimed to be held by third persons in fraud of creditors.

4. Limitation of actions 🔑103(2)—Limitation of action to recover stock held in trust did not commence until repudiation of trust.

Action by trustee in bankruptcy to establish title to stock held by third person under agreement to hold stock in trust for bankrupt held based on express trust, and against which statute of limitations did not commence to run until trust was repudiated.

5. Limitation of actions 🔑103(3)—Trust in stock held by pledgee in trust for bankrupt held not repudiated until pledgee's answer to action by trustee in bankruptcy to recover stock.

In action by trustee in bankruptcy to establish title to stock pledged to defendant and sold to pledgee under agreement that pledgee was to hold stock in trust for bankrupt, repudiation of trust first took place when pledgee filed answer denying allegations of complaint and alleging limitations, and hence action was not barred by statute of limitations commencing on repudiation of trust.

6. Judgment 🔑256(2)—Judgment restoring stock to trustee in bankruptcy held too broad, under findings that pledge by bankrupt was bona fide and should be modified to prohibit recovery until debt was paid.

In action by trustee in bankruptcy to establish express trust in stock for bankrupt and recover stock, judgment restoring stock to trustee absolutely held too far-reaching under findings that transaction for pledge and sale of stock up to time of sale was bona fide, but that sale was made with secret agreement that pledgee was to hold stock in trust for bankrupt, and hence judgment must be modified to deny recovery of possession of stock until debt was paid.

7. Limitation of actions 🔑167(1)—Pledgee can retain property until debt is paid, though debt is barred by limitations.

Pledgee has right to retain possession of pledged property until debt for which it was given as security is paid, and pledgee cannot be required to surrender property, though debt is barred by statute of limitations and no affirmative action can be taken to enforce it.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Action by J. A. Isaacson, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of J. C. Rice, a bankrupt debtor, against the Union Trust Company of San Diego and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed as modified.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Curtis Hillyer and Rolland C. Springer, both of San Diego, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by plaintiff, as trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of J. C. Rice, a bankrupt, to secure an adjudication of the ownership and title to certain property, and to establish the interest of plaintiff, as trustee, in the same, and for an accounting and recovery of money. Judgment went for plaintiff, and defendants J. C. Rice Company and M. Y. Wolf now appeal from the same, and also from the order denying motion for new trial and the order denying the motion to vacate and set aside the judgment and render judgment in favor of defendants.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is the trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of J. C. Rice, a bankrupt debtor; that at the time of the filing of the petition in bankruptcy said J. C. Rice was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in certain lands situate in the county of San Diego, known as the "Lincoln Acres"; that heretofore the said J. C. Rice, acting in the name of the defendant J. C. Rice Company, entered into an agreement with defendant Rae Investment Company whereby said defendant and said Rice became owners in common of the tract of land hereinbefore described, taking the title thereto in the name of defendant Rae Investment Company; that subsequent thereto said Rice and said defendant Rae Investment Company entered into an agreement with said defendant R. E. Harrison Company under and by virtue of the terms of which said R. E. Harrison Company became the selling agents for the defendants Rae Investment Company and the said J. C. Rice in the sale of said tracts of land hereinbefore described; that a large number of parcels of land have been sold and the contracts for the purchase of the same have been placed with the defendant Union Trust Company for the purpose of collection; that the defendant Union Trust Company has collected a large amount of money upon said contracts, as plaintiff is informed and believes, one-half of which is the property of the said bankrupt; that the said R. E. Harrison Company has entered into said contracts under its own name, but in fact as and for the defendants Rae Investment Company and the said J. C. Rice; that the plaintiff is informed and believes, and on such information and belief alleges, that said J. C. Rice Company, a corporation, was organized by the said J. C. Rice as a vehicle through which to transact business and conceal his assets from his creditors, and that ever since its organization said J. C. Rice has used said corporation for that purpose, and that ever since its organization said J. C. Rice has been and now is the sole owner of the said J. C. Rice Company and all of its assets, and that the said J. C. Rice Company is in fact and always has been J. C. Rice, the bankrupt debtor; that prior to the commencement of this action the said court of bankruptcy duly made and filed its order in said bankruptcy proceedings, authorizing and directing plaintiff to commence and prosecute this action. On information and belief plaintiff alleges that said defendant M. Y. Wolf claims to own 247 shares of the capital stock of said J. C. Rice Company, being all of the capital stock of said company except 3 shares, and that the claim of the said M. Y. Wolf to said stock is without any right whatever, and that in truth and in fact the said J. C. Rice, the bankrupt debtor, was the owner of all of the capital stock of the said J. C. Rice Company at the time of the filing of his petition in bankruptcy.

At the trial of the action an amended complaint, to conform to the proof, was filed under order of court. The allegations of this amended complaint are similar to those in the original, except that certain other lands are added. The following additional allegations appear: That certain other parcels of real property stand on the records in the name of defendant J. C. Rice Company, but that they were, at the time the bankruptcy petition was filed, owned by said J. C. Rice; that on November 21, 1918, and at a time when J. C Rice was insolvent, he was the owner of all the stock of defendant J. C. Rice Company, to wit, 250 shares; that for the purpose of hindering, defrauding, and delaying his creditors, he (J. C. Rice) executed and delivered to defendant Wolf a promissory note for $21,458.79, and as security therefor pretended to pledge to said Wolf 247 shares of said stock; that on September 9, 1919, said Wolf made a pretended sale of said stock to himself, and credited a payment of $15,000 on said note; that prior to said sale a creditor of said Rice levied an execution on said stock, and that said pretended sale was made to assist said Rice in concealing his assets from his creditors, and that said sale was made with the secret understanding that it was to be held in trust by said Wolf, and that said Wolf now holds the same in trust for plaintiff as trustee in bankruptcy.

Appellants each filed separate answers, which are practically the same. They deny the essential allegations of the complaint. In addition, the statute of limitations is pleaded.

As the entire appeal revolves around the sale of said stock, we quote, in part, the finding of the court upon this issue: "That on the 21st day of November, 1918, the said J. C. Rice was indebted to defendant M. Y. Wolf in the sum of $21,458.79, and that on said 21st day of November, 1918, the said J. C. Rice did in consideration of said indebtedness sign, execute, and deliver to said defendant M. Y. Wolf his certain promissory note for the sum of $21,458.79, payable to the order of defendant M. Y. Wolf, five years after its date, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. (7%) per annum, payable at maturity, and said J. C. Rice did at said time pledge and deliver to said M. Y. Wolf 247 shares of the capital stock of said J. C. Rice Company, and also stock in other companies; among the stock so pledged being stock of the Central Mortgage & Investment Company, as collateral security for the payment of said note; that said note so signed, executed and delivered by said J. C. Rice to M. Y. Wolf, and delivery of the said 247 shares of the capital stock of said J. C. Rice Company and stock of the other corporations to said M. Y. Wolf, as security for the payment of said $21,458.79 note, was a bona fide transaction and made in good faith on the part of said J. C. Rice and M. Y. Wolf, and for valuable consideration. That the value of said stock so pledged was fixed in said note by said J. C. Rice and said Wolf in said note at the sum of $75,000.00. That said alleged pledgee's sale of said 247 shares of the stock of said J. C. Rice Company by the said M. Y. Wolf to himself on said 9th day of September, 1919, was made with the secret understanding and agreement between said J. C. Rice and said M. Y. Wolf that said M. Y. Wolf would hold said stock in trust for said J. C. Rice, and that said M. Y. Wolf does now hold said stock in trust for said plaintiff as trustee in bankruptcy of said J. C. Rice and that the claim of said M. Y. Wolf to said stock of said J. C. Rice Company is without any right whatever as against this plaintiff." The judgment does not mention the stock, but it is decreed that "plaintiff, as such trustee in bankruptcy, is the owner of said J. C. Rice Company, a corporation, and all its assets and property of every kind and nature." This is treated and construed by all the parties as an adjudication that plaintiff, as trustee, is the owner of said shares of stock, and we will follow that construction.

[1-3] It is contended by appellants that the court erred in allowing said trial amendment to the complaint, for the reason that said amendment changes the cause of action. When the case was called for trial, respondent admitted that no cause of action was stated against defendant M. Y. Wolf, and that he was only referred to in the caption and prayer of the complaint. Thereafter, and during the trial, permission was granted to file the amended complaint to conform to proof, referred to, supra. It is the position of appellant, with reference to said stock, that the amended complaint states a cause of action to set aside the sale of said stock. If this were true, it would no doubt be the addition of a new cause of action. As we view the pleading, the action was commenced by the trustee to establish a secret trust for the benefit of the bankrupt, and to have the title to said stock vested in said trustee. If, in fact, Rice and Wolf had a secret understanding that the latter was to hold the stock as his own, the effect of this was to work a deception upon the creditors, and this would be true whether a deception was intended or not. The pleading of fraud, therefore, does not alter the essential characteristics of the action, which was, in effect, for the purpose of impressing a trust upon the stock in the hands of Wolf. This precise point was before the court in the case of Ury v. Van Every, 181 Cal. 604, 188 P. 985, and it was there so held. The matter of the allowance of trial amendment to the pleadings rests in the sound discretion of the court, and such ruling should not be disturbed upon appeal in the absence of a showing that prejudice resulted therefrom to the extent that the party aggrieved was deprived of a substantial right or placed in a position where it may be said that he was deprived of a fair trial. No such showing is here made. If defendants were faced with a new issue upon which they were unprepared, they had the right to move for a continuance upon that ground. Having made no such motion, they are in no position to complain. The record shows that the attorney for defendant stated in open court he did not wish a continuance when the matter was suggested. For these reasons we hold that the point is without merit. It is claimed that the trustee in bankruptcy had no authority to bring such an action. There is no merit in this contention. Ury v. Van Every, supra. The right of a trustee, under such circumstances, to pursue the property of the bankrupt is unquestioned. 7 Cal. Juris. 118.

[4, 5] The next question raised by appellants is that of the statute of limitations. It is claimed that the action is one to set aside the sale upon the ground of fraud; that the three-year limitation applies. We have pointed out that the cause of action is one to establish a trust, so far as the stock is concerned. The court found that the stock was sold under an agreement that defendant was to hold the same in trust for the bankrupt, Rice. This was an express trust, and the statute of limitations did not commence to run until the same was repudiated by the trustee. Lezinsky v. Mason Malt Co., 185 Cal. 240, 196 P. 884. The repudiation first took place in the instant case when defendant Wolf filed his answer. The action, therefore, was commenced within the time provided by law.

It is contended that the findings upon the issues relating to the execution of the note, the pledging of the stock, and the sale of said stock are in favor of appellants, and that they should have judgment upon such findings. This question presents some unique features. It will be observed that the court found that the whole transaction up to the time of the sale under the pledge was bona fide, but that the sale was made with the secret understanding that Wolf was to hold the stock in trust for the bankrupt, Rice. The argument of appellants is that the court having found that the steps leading up to the sale were valid, it must necessarily follow that the sale was in good faith, and that the finding that the sale was made with a secret understanding, creating a trust, must be disregarded. As authority, they refer to the case of Pierce v. Pierce, 16 Cal. App. 375, 117 P. 580. In that case the trial court upheld a mortgage as executed in good faith, but set aside a foreclosure sale upon the ground of fraud. The judgment was reversed upon the ground that there was no evidence to show any attempt to conceal property, and no agreement between the parties to that effect, and no evidence that any creditor of the mortgagor was making any demands upon him at the time of said sale. The case turned upon the sufficiency of evidence, and not upon the doctrine that a sale under such circumstances cannot be annulled upon sufficient evidence.

[6, 7] A more serious question arises in this case as to the extent that a judgment can go under these findings. The judgment, in effect, restores the stock to the trustee, absolutely, and yet it is found that the execution of the note and the pledge were proceedings in good faith; hence, the pledge was valid. The effect of the findings is to leave the stock in the hands of the pledgee, while the trustee in bankruptcy is the legal owner thereof. It is at once apparent that the judgment is too far-reaching in its terms, and should be modified to conform to the findings. No recovery of possession of the said shares of stock could be had until the debt was paid. "Unless otherwise agreed, a pledgee has a right to retain possession of pledged property until the debt or obligation for which it was given as security is paid. He is precisely in the position occupied by a mortgagee in possession, and cannot be required to surrender the property until the debt is satisfied, even though it is barred by the statute of limitations, and no affirmative action can be taken to enforce it." 21 Cal. Juris. 330.

The sufficiency of the findings is attacked in many particulars. The "business" ventures of the bankrupt are spread over hundreds of pages of the transcript. His schedule of indebtedness was about $360,000. His assets were listed at $125, but claimed as exempt. At the time of the execution of said note to Wolf, his creditors were legion. Many of these were judgment creditors. Numerous corporations were organized by him, and the stock was traded back and forth. His gyrations in a corporate way are almost impossible to follow. Always, however, he was the whole corporation; the matter of control by a directorate being but a fiction. After the "sale" of said stock under the pledge, he continued just as he always did in the conduct of the corporation. The purported owner of the stock, for a period of some five years, shows by his testimony that he did not know what was going on, so far as the affairs of the corporation in which he held all the stock were concerned. We are satisfied that there is ample evidence in the record to support the findings.

The judgment is modified so that paragraph 4 thereof will read as follows: "4. That plaintiff as such trustee in bankruptcy is the owner of said J. C. Rice Company, a corporation, and of all of its assets and property of every kind and nature whatsoever, provided, however, that it is hereby adjudged that the said 247 shares of stock are subject to a pledge as security for the payment of the promissory note for $21,458.79, executed by J. C. Rice to defendant M. Y. Wolf."

As so modified, the judgment is affirmed; appellants to recover their costs herein.

FRANKEL v. ROSENFIELD. (Civ. 6278.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 21, 1928.

1. Guaranty 🔑64, 65—Where plaintiff as seller, by terminating conditional sales contract on buyer's default, released buyer, guarantor was released.

Where plaintiff as seller, by terminating contract and taking constructive possession of property and entering into new conditional sales contract with buyer, released buyer from further obligation on original contract, plaintiff's acts operated as release of defendant as guarantor of buyer's contract, since guarantor's liability cannot extend beyond that of buyer whose contract is guaranteed.

2. Sales 🔑479(1)—Plaintiff as seller could not terminate conditional sales contract on buyer's default and also treat transaction as sale and sue buyer's guarantor.

Where plaintiff as seller under conditional sales contract terminated contract on buyer's default and took constructive possession of property, but caused purported sale to be made at public auction he could not treat transaction as sale and sue guarantor of buyer's contract.

3. Judicial sales ⚷1—Purported sale, on default of buyer under conditional sales contract, was not "judicial sale," where no action was instituted, but plaintiff merely posted notices and held sale.

Purported sale by plaintiff as seller, under conditional sales contract on buyer's default, was not a "judicial sale," where no action of any kind was instituted by plaintiff against buyer or guarantor or the property and such sale was not authorized by any agreement of the parties, but plaintiff merely had notices posted in three public places stating that he as seller had elected to terminate contract and stand upon default and held sale at which no bidders were present and bid in property himself.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Carlos S. Hardy, Judge.

Action for money by Julius Frankel against Louis Rosenfield. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Herbert R. Macmillan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bailie, Turner & Lake and Norman A. Bailie, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KNIGHT, J. Plaintiff, Julius Frankel, brought this action to recover a money judgment against defendant, as the alleged guarantor of a conditional sales contract, and to obtain an order directing a bank to deliver to the sheriff certain corporate stock belonging to defendant and claimed by plaintiff to have been deposited with said bank as collateral security, so that the same could be sold in liquidation of the judgment which plaintiff sought to obtain. Judgment was given in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Assuming that the agreements of the parties hereinafter set forth legally established a contract of guaranty, the determinative issue in the case was and is whether, as defendant claims and as the trial court found, plaintiff released the original debtor, for if he did his act in so doing released the guarantor also, and it would follow that the judgment was properly entered in defendant's favor. The material facts surrounding the transaction, which are without substantial dispute, may be stated as follows: Plaintiff and his son, George Frankel, and a party named Miller, whose rights are not here involved, were stockholders and directors in a corporation named the M. C. Hat & Cap Manufacturing Company, against which plaintiff held a promissory note for $5,000. Defendant Louis Rosenfield and one Fisher desired to purchase the interests of the Frankels in said company and to succeed them on the board of directors, and to that end all parties entered into a written agreement dated October 20, 1923, which provided in part for the sale to defendant and Fisher of 50 shares of said stock of the par value of $100 each, standing in the name of George Frankel; and, continuing, said agreement read as follows: "Said Julius Frankel does hereby agree to cancel and surrender a certain note for the principal sum of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00) of the M. C. Hat and Cap Manufacturing Company held by him, and, in lieu thereof, said Louis Rosenfield does hereby assign, transfer and set over to said Julius Frankel a certain contract made the 15th day of September, 1923, between said Louis Rosenfield and Luella Payne of Long Beach, California, for the sale of a certain apartment lease and furnishings on the west side of Rose Avenue of Long Beach, California, on which there is unpaid the sum of Forty-eight Hundred Seventy-five Dollars ($4875.00) and said Louis Rosenfield and said Stern Fisher do hereby agree to deposit with the California Bank (Hibernian Branch), at Fourth and Spring Streets, Los Angeles, California, stock of the M. C. Hat and Cap Manufacturing Company of the par value of Five Thousand Dollars ($5,000.00), transferred to them under this agreement, to be held by said bank in escrow until such time as said contract shall have been paid in full, at which time said fifty (50) shares of stock shall be returned to said Louis Rosenfield and said Stern Fisher." To make up the balance of the $5,000 defendant paid plaintiff $125 in cash.

Thereafter, in conformity with the foregoing clause of the agreement, and on October 29, 1923, two certificates of stock, indorsed in blank by defendant and Fisher, representing a total of 50 shares which then stood in their names, were deposited in said bank by defendant, accompanied by written instructions, signed by defendant, to "hold (said stock) in escrow an indefinite period or until there is handed you due notice that a certain contract in the amount of $4875.00 on a chattel between Luella Payne and Louis Rosenfield has been paid in full. Said notice will be handed you [by] Julius Frankel or his nominee, at some later date and you will be governed accordingly."

The Payne contract, assigned by defendant to plaintiff, was in its nature, as indicated, a conditional sales contract, wherein it was provided that title to the property agreed to be sold should remain in the vendor until all monthly payments required to be made thereunder were completed. And all of the documents relating to this transaction were also placed in escrow, including the contract itself, the lease of the premises duly assigned to Mrs. Payne, and a bill of sale to her of the personal property; and with respect thereto it was in said contract provided that "upon the final payment of the last installment price to become due hereunder the escrow holder shall deliver each of the instruments deposited herewith unto the said Luella Payne, but should she make default in any of the said terms or conditions and continue in such default for the period of ten days then the instruments deposited herewith shall be returned to the first party and all right of the second party shall thereupon terminate and end, and the first party shall retain all amounts that have theretofore been paid under this contract; first, for the use and occupation of said premises by the second party, and second, as liquidated damages for the breach of this contract, which said damages are hereby expressly agreed upon and liquidated in the amount that shall have been paid at the time that such breach occurred."

[1] Mrs. Payne defaulted in making the July, 1924, monthly payment, and thereupon plaintiff, as vendor, exercised the remedy afforded by the terms of said contract by terminating the contract and withdrawing from escrow all papers and documents relating to the transaction, and within a few days thereafter took constructive possession of the property and entered into a new conditional sales contract with Mrs. Payne for the sale of the same property. It is evident, therefore, that the foregoing acts of the plaintiff operated to release Mrs. Payne as vendee from further obligation; and, since the guarantor's liability cannot in any contingency extend beyond that of the purchaser whose contract is guaranteed, plaintiff's acts operated also as a release of defendant as guarantor. Glassell v. Coleman, 94 Cal. 260, 29 P. 508; Merrill v. Merrill, 103 Cal. 287, 35 P. 768, 37 P. 392.

The evidence further shows, however, that notwithstanding the cancellation of said contract in the manner hereinabove set forth, plaintiff, two days prior to the date of the execution of the new agreement with Mrs. Payne, caused a purported sale of the property to be made at public auction, but with respect thereto the trial court held that said purported sale was of no legal consequence, its finding thereon being as follows: That "plaintiff went through the form of selling the said property covered by said Luella Payne agreement and buying the same in himself for the sum of $1,000.00, and the court finds that said plaintiff under said contract at all times was and remained the owner of the furniture, fixtures, and lease mentioned in said contract, as well prior to, as after, said purported sale."

[2] Appellant contends that said finding is not only unsupported by the evidence, but that the trial court's conclusion as to the legal effect of said sale was erroneous, and in support of such contention calls attention to the law that where a vendee defaults in making payment under a conditional sales contract and the property is in the possession of the vendee, but title thereto remains in the vendor until he is fully paid therefor, the vendor is given an election of remedies. He may terminate the contract, retake the property, and retain the money theretofore paid, or he may treat the transaction as a sale and sue for the balance of the purchase price. There is no disputing the foregoing rule, but, as said in Holt Mfg. Co. v. Ewing, 109 Cal. 353, 42 P. 435, "These remedies being inconsistent, the plaintiff could elect which he would pursue, but he could not have both." Here, as pointed out, plaintiff elected to and did pursue the remedy provided for in the contract by terminating the contract and releasing the vendee, and, obviously, thereafter he was not permitted to pursue the alternative remedy afforded by the law.

[3] Furthermore, said purported sale was in no sense a judicial sale, no action of any kind having been instituted by plaintiff against Mrs. Payne or the defendant or the property; nor was such sale directly or indirectly authorized by any agreements of the parties. There is some suggestion made in the record about a chattel mortgage or a "chattel mortgage contract"; but the evidence clearly shows, and the court found, that no such document was ever executed by Mrs. Payne or involved in that transaction. Said sale was conducted by plaintiff's attorney, after plaintiff had caused notices thereof, signed by plaintiff, to be posted in three public places in Long Beach, in which notices it was stated, among other things, that Mrs. Payne having defaulted in making the July, 1924, payment, plaintiff as vendor had "elected to terminate the contract, and stand upon said default," etc. No bidders were present at said sale, however, and plaintiff bid in the property for $1,000, which amount he claimed to have credited on the Payne contract. It is evident from the foregoing facts and circumstances that said purported sale was fictitious in character and, therefore, as the trial court concluded, was of no legal value in determining the rights of the parties herein.

HODGES v. KAUFFMAN, City Treasurer. ★

(Civ. 6348.)

Rehearing Denied Jan. 20, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 18, 1929.

1. Mandamus 🔑109—Mandamus will not lie to compel treasurer to pay warrants issued for claim which was not legal charge against municipality.

Though generally city treasurer is vested with no discretion with respect to the payment of warrants drawn by the proper officers, nevertheless, if a claim is not a legal charge against a municipality, mandamus will not lie to compel its payment even though it has been ordered and allowed by the board charged with that duty.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑159(1)—City trustees had no discretion as to question of calling election pursuant to petition conforming substantially to law.

Where petition for election to determine whether certain members of city board of trustees should be recalled, conforming substantially to the provisions of statute, was filed and properly certified by the clerk as to the number of signatures, trustees had no discretion as to question of calling the election.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑258—Expense incurred in trustees' unsuccessful attempt to show that petition for recall election was insufficient was not proper municipal charge (St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128).

Where members of city board of trustees, required under St. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128, to call election pursuant to petition to determine whether certain members of the board should be recalled, refused to call election and unsuccessfully attempted to show that petition though sufficient in form was insufficient in fact, the expense incurred for witnesses and mileage fees did not constitute a proper municipal charge.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County.

Proceeding in mandamus by D. Hodges against E. P. Kauffman, as Treasurer of the City of South San Francisco. Judgment for defendant, and petitioner appeals. Affirmed.

Leo R. Friedman, of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. W. Coleberd, of South San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A proceeding in mandamus was commenced by appellant in the superior court of San Mateo county to compel respondent, as treasurer of the city of South San Francisco, to pay to him, as assignee thereof, three warrants which had been allowed and issued to him by a vote of the majority of the board of trustees of the city. Two of the warrants, aggregating $233, were issued in payment of claims for fees in serving subpœnas upon certain witnesses and for sums paid to them as their fees and mileage; the third, amounting to $153.22, was for the claim of an expert witness. Judgment was rendered for respondent, from which this appeal was taken.

Some time before the warrants were issued a proceeding in mandamus was commenced in the District Court of Appeal, First District, to compel the board of trustees to set a date for an election to determine whether three of the members of the board, and who constituted the majority thereof, namely, Carl Blank, Hugh McCaffrey, and Hugh Felix McNellis, should be recalled. Ratto v. Board of Trustees, 75 Cal. App. 724, 243 P. 466. In the latter proceeding it was alleged that the city clerk had attached to a recall petition, which had been duly filed, his certificate that the same was signed by the requisite number of qualified voters, but, notwithstanding, the board refused to fix a date for the election. The board of trustees, as such, was made a party respondent, and with it were joined the five individual members thereof. The three members whose recall was sought joined in an answer, which also purported to be that of the board, but the other members made no appearance. The answer alleged that the recall petition was not signed in the manner provided by law or by the requisite number of qualified electors, and that a section thereof, purporting to have been circulated by the person whose affidavit to that effect was attached, was in fact circulated by another. By order of the District Court of Appeal these questions were referred for determination to the superior court of San Mateo county, which, following a hearing, found against the contentions of the above-named trustees, and subsequently a peremptory writ of mandate as prayed was issued by the District Court of Appeal. Ratto v. Board of Trustees, 76 Cal. App. 276, 245 P. 1112. In the present proceeding the appellant alleged, and the court found, that at the above hearing it became necessary for respondents therein to present testimony, and to that end to subpœna and pay the fees and mileage of the witnesses whose names appeared as electors of the city on the petition for the recall election; that there were issued out of the superior court subpœnas directed to about 80 persons, requiring their attendance. In that connection it was further found that the allegation that Charles E. Storeck, as chief of police of the city, one of appellant's assignors, served 42 or any number of witnesses on behalf of the board of trustees, or incurred or expended in or about such service and the paying of witness and mileage fees the sum of $233, or any sum, was untrue. With respect to the claims represented by the third warrant, the court found that while it was necessary for said respondents to present testimony as to the genuineness of the signatures attached to the recall petition, it was not necessary to employ a handwriting expert, and it was not true, as alleged, that the board of trustees employed for that purpose, or in any capacity, the handwriting expert named in the petition and whose claim was assigned to the appellant. It was further found with respect to the claims that each was audited, allowed, and ordered paid by the board, but that two of the board, namely, Cunningham and Eschlebach, protested against the payment of the same. In this connection it appears from the minutes of the board that the claims were audited by the three members sought to be recalled, who constituted the finance committee of the board, and that it was by their votes alone that the same were allowed and ordered paid. It was the court's conclusion that the action of the board in ordering payment of the claims was void, and that the refusal of the treasurer to pay the same was lawful, judgment being entered accordingly.

[1-3] As claimed by appellant, no evidence was adduced which supported the findings that no subpœnas were served by Storeck, or sums expended or advanced by him, or that the employment of a handwriting expert was unnecessary; and it has been held that a determination by the board of the facts involved in a claim against the municipality is conclusive in the absence of fraud. McFarland v. McCowen, 98 Cal. 329, 33 P. 113; McConoughey v. Jackson, 101 Cal. 265, 35 P. 863, 40 Am. St. Rep. 53. While as a general rule no discretion is vested in its treasurer with respect to the payment of a warrant therefor drawn by the proper officers (McFarland v. McCowen, supra; Victors v. Kelsey, 31 Cal. App. 796, 161 P. 1006; McGowan v. Ford, 107 Cal. 186, 40 P. 231), nevertheless, if the claim is not a legal charge against the municipality, mandamus will not lie to compel its payment, even though it has been audited and allowed by the board charged with that duty (Keller v. Hyde, 20 Cal. 593; Linden v. Case, 46 Cal. 171; Walton v. McPhetridge, 120 Cal. 440, 52 P. 731; Cal. Highway Commission v. Riley, 192 Cal. 97, 218 P. 579). No discretion was vested in the trustees as to the question of calling the election when a petition conforming substantially with the provisions of the statute was filed and the same had been properly certified by the clerk as to the number of signatures. Ratto v. Board of Trustees, 75 Cal. App. 724, 243 P. 466. The municipality as such owed no duty in the premises, but this duty was imposed by statute on the trustees. Stats. 1911, Ex. Sess., p. 128. The three members thereof whose recall was sought undertook, however, to justify their refusal to call the election by attempting to show that the petition, although sufficient in form, was insufficient in fact, and in this effort failed. Under the circumstances there could be no reasonable ground for the contention that the expense incurred was a municipal charge.

The conclusion of the trial court was right, and its judgment is accordingly affirmed.

CURRAN v. PECHO RANCH & STOCK CO. et al. (Civ. 5982.)★

Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1929.

Courts ⚿93(1)—Court decision that devisee and grantee took fee established property rule, on which subsequent grantees could rely, in absence of extrinsic fraud.

District court decision, affirmed by Supreme Court, that devisee and grantee took estate in fee simple absolute, not mere life estate, under will and deed, established a rule of property, on which her subsequent grantees had right to rely in partition suit many years later, in absence of extrinsic fraud in procuring judgment, where all parties interested, including parties not in being when former action was instituted, were properly represented.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; T. A. Norton, Judge.

Action by Ramona Frances Curran, formerly Ramona Frances Hillard, against the Pecho Ranch & Stock Company, a corporation, Maria Ygnacia Roberson, and others, in which defendants Roberson and others filed cross-complaints against defendants stock company and another. From a judgment for the latter defendants, plaintiff and cross-complainants appeal. Affirmed.

Stoney, Rouleau, Stoney & Palmer, of San Francisco, for appellant Ramona Frances Curran.

Orville C. Pratt, Jr., of San Francisco, for appellants Maria Ygnacia Roberson and Frederick Wilson Hillard.

Dockweiler & Dockweiler & Finch, of Los Angeles, for respondent Luigi Marre Land & Cattle Company.

Albert Nelson, of San Luis Obispo, for respondent Pecho Ranch & Stock Company.

NOURSE, J. This is an action for partition of a ranch of about 9,000 acres in San Luis Obispo county. Plaintiff, Ramona Frances Curran, claiming to own an equitable estate in fee simple in one-quarter of said ranch, filed her complaint against the present owners of the legal title thereof, Pecho Ranch & Stock Company and Luigi Marre Land & Cattle Company, and also against certain mortgagees and trustees under a deed of trust; but as to said mortgagees and trustees the action was dismissed on stipulation. Plaintiff alleged that the defendants Maria Ygnacia Roberson, Frederick Wilson Hillard, and Adelaida Hillard were equitable co-owners with her of said ranch. The latter three equitable co-owners came in by cross-complaint, asserting their equitable title in fee simple to three-quarters of the land involved, admitting that one-quarter of the same belonged to the plaintiff and denying that the other defendants, respondents herein, had any right, title, or interest except a present possession and a bare legal title subject to the beneficial interests of plaintiff and of themselves.

The action was tried upon the complaint and cross-complaint and upon the respective answers of respondents thereto, and thereafter judgment was ordered for the respondents. An appeal was taken by plaintiff, Maria Ygnacia Roberson, Frederick Wilson Hillard, and Maria Ygnacia Roberson, as administratrix of the estate of Adelaida Hillard, deceased; Adelaida Hillard having died while the cause was pending and Maria Ygnacia Roberson, as her administratrix, having been substituted in her place.

It has been stipulated that the two separate appeals may be heard and determined together. They are presented upon the judgment roll alone, and the sole questions for the court are questions of law. It is argued by the appellants that the findings do not support the judgment and under this head four points are argued. The facts are most complicated and the events narrated in the findings extend over a long period of time. Substantially, they are as follows:

That prior to and up to the time of his death John Wilson was the owner, seized in fee, and in the actual and peaceable possession of the land involved in this action; that said John Wilson died in the county of San Luis Obispo on October 13, 1861; that subsequently, to wit, on the 18th day of December, 1861, the last will and testament of said John Wilson, deceased, was duly admitted to probate and Mariano Pacheco and Romualdo Pacheco were appointed executors thereof; that in and by said last will and testament of said John Wilson, deceased, the land hereinabove described was devised and bequeathed as follows, to wit: "Sixth: I do give, devise and bequeath all that certain rancho or tract of land situate, lying and being in the county of San Luis Obispo and State of California known and called 'Pecho y Islay' together with the appurtenances thereunto belonging, * * * to my executors hereinafter named, and to the survivor of them and the heirs of such survivor in trust for the sole and separate use, benefit and behoof of my daughter, Ramona (wife of Frederick Hillard) for and during her natural life, only, and on her decease to the sole use, benefit and behoof of the heirs of her own body living at the time of her said decease to whom the said executors and survivors or survivor of them, or the heirs of such survivor shall convey in fee simple absolute on the said decease of said Ramona and failing such heirs of her body, then, on her decease to the sole use, benefit and behoof of my son John Wilson, my stepsons Mariano Pacheco and Romualdo Pacheco, and to my daughters Maria Ygnacia and Juana Castor, and to their heirs forever, share and share alike, to whom, except the said Juana, on the decease of said Ramona, without heirs of her body living at the time of her decease, the said executors and the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor shall convey in fee simple absolute, and on the happening of the death of the said Juana leaving heirs of her body the said executors shall convey their mother's share in fee simple absolute to her said heirs."

On April 28, 1912, Ramona Hillard died leaving her surviving as the only heirs of her body her children, Maria Ygnacia Roberson, Frederick Wilson Hillard, and Adelaida Hillard, and her granddaughter, Ramona Frances Hillard, now Ramona Frances Curran, plaintiff herein (the daughter of John Hillard, deceased, son of Ramona Hillard).

The trial court also found that the plaintiff and cross-complainants did not become vested with the equitable title to said property upon the death of Ramona Hillard, in accordance with the said devise in the said will of John Wilson, deceased, or otherwise or at all, and that no right, title, interest, or estate whatsoever in said property vested in said plaintiff and cross-complainants or either of them under the terms of said will or at all; that Mariano Pacheco, one of the executors of the said will of John Wilson, died on or about the 15th day of January, 1865; and that Romualdo Pacheco, the other executor of said will, continued to act as such executor until the 18th day of February, 1891, when he resigned as such executor and was discharged by order of court.

The trial court also made elaborate findings against the allegations in the complaint and cross-complaint to the effect that there had existed a conspiracy between Ramona Hillard, her attorneys, and the executors of the will of John Wilson, deceased, to have the property distributed to said Ramona Hillard in fee. These allegations and the findings upon them take up considerable space in the record, and it is unnecessary to set them forth herein, for the court found against them all, and this is an appeal upon the judgment roll alone. As appellants have admitted in their briefs, that matter is concluded upon appeal.

It also appears that in 1870 Ramona Hillard commenced an action in the district court of the first judicial district of the state of California, in and for the county of San Luis Obispo, to quiet her title in fee simple to the property involved here; that at the time of the commencement of said action, and at the time of obtaining a decree therein, the cross-complainant Maria Ygnacia Hillard (now Maria Ygnacia Roberson) and Adelaida Hillard were minors, and were of the ages of three and four years, respectively; that one Walter Murray was appointed by said court as guardian ad litem for said minors; that the said district court entered the defaults of said Romualdo Pacheco, surviving executor, and of Walter Murray as such guardian ad litem, and on the 20th day of January, 1871, filed its written decision in said action, finding the facts alleged in the complaint as true and ordering judgment for the plaintiff as prayed; that the said Maria Ygnacia Roberson, Frederick Wilson Hillard, Adelaida Hillard, and Ramona Frances Curran never had, nor did any or either of them ever have, any interest in said real property, or any part thereof; that everything required by law or necessary to represent and protect any interest or rights that the said plaintiff Ramona Frances Curran or the said defendants and cross-complainants, Maria Ygnacia Roberson, Frederick Wilson Hillard, and Adelaida Hillard, or either or any of them, might have had in or to said real property and in and to said proceedings was duly had, taken, done, and performed; that said action and the said proceeding just mentioned were brought and prosecuted by the said Ramona Hillard for the purpose of obtaining from the district court and from the Supreme Court of the state of California, which afterwards affirmed the judgment of said district court, a true and correct construction of the will of said John Wilson and of correctly and properly ascertaining the rights of the said Ramona Hillard and the rights of the said plaintiff herein, Ramona Frances Curran, and of the said cross-complainants. Though the said defendant and cross-complainant Frederick Wilson Hillard was not born until October 16, 1875, or four years after the obtaining of the decree in said action, and could not be a party to said action, his rights and interests, if any, in said action, were duly and regularly represented and protected. John Hillard, a brother of the cross-complainants, and the father of the plaintiff herein, was born on the 25th day of January, 1874, and was not a party defendant to the said action, but his interests were duly and regularly represented and protected.

It also appears that on April 18, 1891, a decree of final distribution in the matter of the estate of John Wilson, deceased, was entered, whereby and wherein the real property involved here was distributed to Ramona Hillard in fee simple absolute; that said distribution of said real property was not in contravention of the terms of said will of said John Wilson; and that said distribution was in accordance with the construction placed upon said will by the Supreme Court of the State of California in the action of Hillard v. Pacheco et al. The facts with reference to this decree of distribution were found to be as follows:

That A. M. Graves did petition for letters of administration with the will annexed of the estate of John Wilson on the 9th day of February, 1891, and that letters of administration with the will annexed, etc., were issued to said petitioner on March 2, 1891; that on April 6, 1891, an order of court was made appointing Louis Lamy to represent all the minors and absent heirs interested in the said estate, all of whom, excepting one Charles Hillard, now deceased, whose rights are not involved in this proceeding, were present in the state of California; and that no actual notice of said appointment or of the pending proceeding for distribution in said estate was ever communicated to any of said minors, or absent heirs. That at the time of the filing of the petition for distribution, notice of the hearing of said petition was duly and regularly given in the manner and for the time directed by the court and in the manner and for the time provided by law.

There are other matters set forth in the findings regarding mortgages and sales of the property, all tracing originally from the title of Ramona Hillard; but we need not discuss these matters in detail, for the one question which is decisive of these rights is whether or not Ramona Hillard took a fee simple under the will of John Wilson, deceased, and under the proceedings to quiet her title and the probate proceedings, ending in the decree of distribution decreeing that she was the fee simple owner.

The judgment herein proceeds upon the theory that the devise in question in the will of John Wilson, deceased, was within the rule in Shelley's Case, which, though now abolished in this state, was in effect at the time said will took effect, 1861. Ramona Hillard also took a portion of the land involved here by deed from her mother, Ramona Wilson, and that grant had the same language as contained in the will, so we shall refer to but one instrument, as both are governed by the same rule.

In brief, appellants contend that the judgment in Hillard v. Pacheco, heretofore referred to, was erroneous; their position being that although the rule in Shelley's Case was the law of this state at the time the instruments involved here became effective, the devise in the will of John Wilson and the grant in the same words in the deed from Ramona Wilson to her daughter, Ramona Hillard, come within the ruling in Gordon v. Cadwalader, 164 Cal. 509, 130 P. 18, in which it was said: "The grant as a whole must be understood as if it read: 'to John, for and during his natural life, and after his death to the children or other lawful heirs of his body who may survive him.' * * * The use of the expression 'who may survive him' or similar terms, shows that the mind of the grantor was directed to the particular persons surviving at the death of John and not to his posterity generally." It is urged that the language of the instruments involved in the instant case, "to the sole use, benefit and behoof of the heirs of her own body living at the time of her [Ramona Hillard's] decease," makes the last-cited case applicable. The difficulty is that the case of Gordon v. Cadwalader was decided years after the case of Hillard v. Pacheco, and the latter case settled the law with reference to this property and built up a rule of property upon which subsequent purchasers had a right to rely. That decision was affirmed by the Supreme Court in September, 1878, upon the authority of Norris v. Hensley, 27 Cal. 439. The opinion of the district court contained the following language: "It is now ordered, adjudged and decreed that by the devise to plaintiff (Ramona Hillard) in the will of her father John Wilson, deceased, * * * she took an estate in fee simple absolute and not a mere life estate, in and to the undivided one-half of the Rancho Pecho y Islay and in and to the undivided one-half of the tract called 'Santa Fe' and that by the deed from her mother, Ramona de Wilson, * * * she took an estate in fee simple absolute and not a mere life estate in and to the other undivided one-half of said tracts of land."

A fee simple absolute estate being the largest estate known to the law is all-inclusive, and all-exclusive and if Ramona Hillard took such an estate from her mother and father, there is no one who could hold any part or parcel of this property except through and by deraignment of title through her. Appellants have presented very interesting briefs and have argued learnedly as to the nature of grants and devises which would be subject to the operation of the artificial rule in Shelley's Case. That problem may demand our attention on some other occasion, but in the instant case we are disposed to hold that the judgment in the case of Hillard v. Pacheco defining the estate taken by Ramona Hillard under the will of John Wilson, and designating that estate as one which must necessarily exclude any and all other interests, has become a rule of property under which the subsequent grantees of Ramona Hillard have acquired their rights and upon which they had a right to rely.

The trial court has found that all parties interested were duly and properly represented. It is true that some of the parties hereto were not in being at the time the other action was instituted, but they were represented by others in the same class and with the same interests. In the case of County of Los Angeles v. Winans, 13 Cal. App. 234, 109 P. 640, it was said: "The rule and its reason are declared in Sweet v. Parker, 22 N. J. Eq. 455, as follows: 'Many exceptions exist to the general rule that in equity all must be parties who have an interest in the object of the suit.' The reason or principle of such exceptions is stated as follows in Calvert on Parties, section 2, page 20: 'If they are required to be parties merely as the owners and protectors of a certain interest, then the proceedings may take place with an equal prospect of justice if that interest receives an effective protection from others. It is the interest which the court is considering, and the owner merely as the guardian of that interest; if, then, some other persons are present, who, with reference to that interest, are equally certain to bring forward the entire merits of the question, the object is satisfied for which the presence of the actual owner would be so required, and the court may, without putting any right in jeopardy, take its usual course and make a complete decree.' The rule is made applicable to representation of persons living, as well as those unborn. * * * The protection of a person whose property is brought into court by such representation is to be found in his right to attack the decree on the ground of fraud or collusion in its procurement. In the absence of such attack, the decree is final and conclusive as to the status of the property"—citing numerous cases.

No showing was made by the appellants here of extrinsic fraud in procuring the judgment in Hillard v. Pacheco et al. The trial court has found that no fraud existed, and no extrinsic fraud was pleaded. The judgment in Hillard v. Pacheco et al. is unimpeachable unless obtained by extrinsic fraud. People v. Mooney, 178 Cal. 525, 174 P. 325; Huffaker v. Gray, 38 Cal. App. 605, 177 P. 183; Del Campo v. Camarillo, 154 Cal. 647, 98 P. 1049. Extrinsic fraud is clearly defined in the case of Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 P. 970, 27 P. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159, and nothing in the pleadings or findings brings the instant case within the rule of that decision.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re MORSE'S ESTATE.★

WELLS FARGO BANK & UNION TRUST CO. et al. v. MILLS COLLEGE.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 19, 1929.

Wills ⟹840—Debt secured by mortgage on property specifically devised held payable from residuary estate (Civ. Code, § 1359; Code Civ. Proc. § 1563).

Where debt secured by mortgage on property specifically devised to trustees of college was one for which testator was personally liable, held that it was payable from residuary estate under Civ. Code, § 1359 and Code Civ. Proc. § 1563, though devise was not specifically made free from incumbrances as was another devise.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Proceedings for distribution of the estate of Isaac H. Morse, etc., deceased. From a portion of final decree directing final distribution favorable to Mills College, the Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company and another, as executors and individually, appeal. Affirmed.

Edgar C. Chapman, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Harrison S. Robinson, Harry L. Price, and R. W. Macdonald, all of Oakland, for respondent.

CASHIN, J. An appeal from a portion of a final decree of distribution entered in the matter of the estate of Isaac H. Morse, deceased. The appeal was taken by Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company and Fremont Morse, executors of the last will and testament of the deceased; Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company, trustee under the will, and Fremont Morse, individually, as heir, legatee, and devisee of the deceased.

The last will of the deceased, which was executed on October 15, 1923, contained the following devise to respondent college: "If at the time of my death I am the owner of the real property situate at the northeast corner of Lombard and Montgomery streets, San Francisco, my said wife having predeceased me, I give, devise, and bequeath the same unto the trustees of Mills College, now located in Oakland, California, and I request that said trustees shall hold such real property until the amount which can be realized from the sale thereof, plus the net income therefrom, shall equal the sum of one hundred and fifty thousand ($150,000.00) dollars, to be then used by said trustees for the erection of a Residence Hall at Mills College which shall accommodate one hundred women, to be known as 'The Mary E. Morse Memorial', or for some other hall or building at Mills College in the discretion of said trustees, to be known as 'The Mary E. Morse Memorial.'" At the time of the death of the deceased the property devised was subject to a mortgage in the sum of $20,000, held by the Hibernia Savings and Loan Society. The decree distributed the property to the college, and also provided that the latter should be paid out of the residue of the estate the sum of $20,000, together with interest thereon from and after April 14, 1927, with which to satisfy and discharge the mortgage. The decree further provided (this being the portion appealed from): "That the residue of said estate be and is hereby distributed to the said Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company, trustee as aforesaid, subject to a lien in favor of Mills College in the sum of $20,000 with interest thereon at the rate of six per cent. per annum from and after the 14th day of April, 1927."

It appears that the testator acquired the property on December 8, 1919, from Albers Bros. Milling Company, a corporation, for $100,000, the sum of $60,000 being paid in cash and the balance secured by a mortgage thereon to the grantor in the sum of $40,000. Thereafter payments were made on the mortgage, $20,000 being paid in December, 1919, and $5,000 in August 1920. On October 7, 1920, the present mortgage was executed by the testator and Mary E. Morse, his wife, who predeceased him and from this sum the balance of the indebtedness to the milling company was paid and its mortgage satisfied. The appraised value of this property was $75,000, the total appraised value of the estate being $454,795.50. In addition to the devise to the college the will devised two lots in Monterey county to Annie H. Morgan if she should survive the testator, the will providing that she should take the same "free of incumbrances excepting only the equity of Mary L. Morgan in said property over and above the amount charged against the property on my books at the time of my death." The will also contained several specific bequests aggregating the sum of $92,000. The residue of the estate, consisting of real and personal property, was devised and bequeathed to appellant Wells Fargo Bank & Union Trust Company, in trust for the purpose of paying the net income therefrom during his lifetime to appellant Fremont Morse, a brother of the testator, it being also provided that upon his death the corpus of the trust shall vest in and be paid to his three children, named in the will, or their heirs.

As stated by appellants, the only question presented by the appeal is whether it was the intention of the testator to devise the property to the college free and clear of the existing incumbrance.

Section 1359 of the Civil Code provides that the property of a testator, except as otherwise specially provided in that code and the Code of Civil Procedure, shall be resorted to for the payment of debts in the following order, viz., after property appropriated for that purpose by the will and property not disposed of, first, "property which is devised or bequeathed to a residuary legatee"; second, "property which is not specifically devised or bequeathed," and third, "all other property ratably." It is provided by section 1563 of the Code of Civil Procedure that "the estate, real and personal, given by will to legatees or devisees, is liable for the debts, expenses of administration, and family expenses, in proportion to the value or amount of the several devises or legacies, but specific devises or legacies are exempt from such liability if it appears to the court necessary to carry into effect the intention of the testator, and there is other sufficient estate."

Both the original mortgage and that now a lien on the property devised to respondent were executed by the testator previous to the execution of his will. The amount secured thereby was a debt within the meaning of the probate statutes for which the testator was personally liable. As the court said, in Estate of De Bernal, 165 Cal. 223, 234, 131 P. 375, 380 (Ann. Cas. 1914D, 26), with respect to the payment of such debts: "We find no dissent in the authorities on the proposition that where the mortgage lien was created by the testator himself to secure his own debt, and at the time of his death the mortgage is simply collateral security for the personal obligation, it is to be paid, as between executors, devisees, legatees, and heirs, in the same manner as the general unsecured debts of the deceased, in so far as the question from what property of deceased it is to be paid is concerned, unless the will discloses a different intent on the part of the testator."

Appellants argue that the devise to Annie H. Morgan having specifically stated that that property was to be taken free of incumbrances, while that to the college contained no such provision, an intention was thereby indicated that the latter should take subject to the mortgage, citing Estate of Porter, 138 Cal. 618, 72 P. 173. Whatever conclusion might be drawn from that circumstance, had the devise been solely for the benefit of the college, we need not consider, as it is clear that the principal, if not the only, object of the testator in making the devise was to perpetuate the memory of his wife, and for this purpose the property was to be held until the sum of $150,000 could be realized therefrom. The value of the property at the time the will was executed had not increased, but rather had decreased, and this fact was doubtless known to the testator. It was thus apparent that several years would probably elapse before the sum necessary for the erection of the memorial would be available. When the value of the property is considered, together with the fact that the testator made ample provision for his brother and the latter's children, an intention to burden the property in an amount which of necessity would long delay, if not wholly defeat, the primary purpose of the devise, is in the highest degree improbable. We are satisfied that the conclusion of the trial court to the contrary was fully supported, and the portion of the decree appealed from is accordingly affirmed.

LOS ANGELES COUNTY v. MARBLEHEAD LAND CO. et al. (Civ. 5774.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1928.

1. Eminent domain 🔑9—Statute held to authorize counties to acquire rights of way for state highways subsequently authorized, as by constitutional amendment (St. 1913, p. 445; State Highways Act; Const. art. 16, § 2).

St. 1913, p. 445, being general in its terms, authorizes counties to acquire rights of way for state highways subsequently authorized, as by Const. art. 16, § 2, adopted July 1, 1919, as well as those provided for by State Highways Act 1909 (St. 1909, p. 647).

2. Eminent domain 🔑8—Act authorizing counties to acquire rights of way for state highways held not impliedly repealed by constitutional amendment (Const. art. 16, § 2; St. 1915, p. 650; St. 1913, p. 445).

Const. art. 16, § 2, relieving counties from further co-operation in acquisition and construction of state highways under State Highways Act 1915 (St. 1915, p. 650), but providing that "nothing herein shall prevent any county from contributing towards the cost of said extensions or of any other state highways * * * under the provisions of any existing laws," did not impliedly repeal, but directly recognized, existence of St. 1913, p. 445, authorizing counties to acquire rights of way for state highways within their limits.

3. Eminent domain 🔑8—Constitutional amendment held not to render it unnecessary for county to condemn land for state highway (Const. art. 16, § 2; St. 1915, p. 650; St. 1913, p. 445).

Adoption of Const. art. 16, § 2, relieving counties from further co-operation in acquisition and construction of state highways described in St. 1915, p. 650, did not render it unnecessary for county to condemn land for state highway under St. 1913, p. 445, authorizing board of supervisors to "proceed if necessary to condemn" any right of way recommended, state having right to make county its agent for such purpose.

4. Eminent domain 🔑195—County seeking to condemn right of way for state highway need not allege or prove failure of other methods of acquisition (St. 1913, p. 445).

In county's action to condemn right of way for state highway under St. 1913, p. 445, authorizing supervisors to "proceed if necessary to condemn" any right of way recommended, it was not necessary for plaintiff to allege or prove that other methods of acquisition had been attempted and failed, in view of provision that board of supervisors' order shall be only preliminary procedure required.

5. Eminent domain 🔑59—County held not estopped to condemn right of way for state highway, including and parallel with county road (St. 1913, p. 445; Const. art. 16, § 2; Code Civ. Proc. § 1241).

County establishing and condemning right of way for county highway held not estopped to condemn right of way, under St. 1913, p. 445, for much wider state highway, including all or parts of county road in some places and paralleling it at varying distances in other places, though entering and leaving certain ranch at same points; such statute not being impliedly repealed by Const. art. 16, § 2, and supervisor's resolution being conclusive evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 1241, that property was necessary for improvement and that latter was planned or located in manner most compatible with greatest public good and least private injury.

6. Eminent domain 🔑205—Evidence held to support valuation of railroad embankment and structures on land condemned at $1,000 (St. 1913, p. 445).

In county's action to condemn right of way for part of state highway under St. 1913, p. 445, evidence held sufficient to support court's valuation of railroad embankment and structures on land taken at $1,000, not $49,660, testified to by one witness.

7. Eminent domain 🔑205—Evidence held to sustain findings of $8,666 damages and benefits to portion of ranch not condemned for state highway (St. 1913, p. 445).

In county's action to condemn right of way for state highway under St. 1913, p. 445, testimony of several apparently competent and well-informed witnesses that damage to portion of ranch not condemned by severance from portion condemned was less and benefits thereto by construction of improvement much more than $8,666, which court found to be amount of both damage and benefits, held sufficient to sustain such findings.

8. Eminent domain 🔑146—"General benefits" to land not condemned consist in increased value common to community generally, while "special benefits" are those peculiar to land reasonably certain to result from improvement.

General benefits from public improvement to portion of land not condemned consist in resulting increase in value thereof common to community generally, while special benefits are such as are reasonably certain to result from mere construction of improvement and are peculiar to land in question.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, General Benefits; Special Benefits.]

9. Eminent domain 🔑205—Evidence held to show special benefits to portion of ranch not condemned for state highway (St. 1913, p. 445; Const. art. 1, § 14).

In county's action to condemn right of way for state highway under St. 1913, p. 445, evidence held to establish benefits, special and peculiar to portion of ranch not taken, as result of access to highway, transportation facilities, and increased market value of land fronting thereon, to be set off against damages to such portion, under Const. art. 1, § 14.

10. Eminent domain 🔑262(5)—Condemnation judgment on findings as to compensation and damages, sustained by evidence and made after fair and complete presentation of case, will not be reversed for occasional comparatively unimportant erroneous rulings on evidence.

Judgment of condemnation on findings as to compensation and damages, sustained by evidence and made after fair and complete presentation of case and personal examination of property by judge, will not be reversed because of few comparatively unimportant erroneous rulings admitting and excluding evidence of market value of property taken and damages to that not taken, where court was liberal as whole in admitting evidence and did not lose sight of correct rules governing standards of value.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by the County of Los Angeles against the Marblehead Land Company and others to condemn a right of way for part of a state highway. From a judgment of condemnation, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 273 P. 138.

Richard Hartley and William J. Clark, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Mortimer A. Kline and Hill, Morgan & Bledsoe, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. This is an action brought by the county of Los Angeles to condemn a right of way for a portion of the state highway running between Oxnard in Ventura county and San Juan Capistrano in Orange county. After an extended trial the court made findings of fact, upon which an interlocutory decree was entered, directing payment to the defendants of specified sums in accordance with their several interests in the land as determined by the court, and providing that upon payment of said sums the lands sought to be taken be condemned and taken by the plaintiff for the purposes of said highway. The defendants appeal from the judgment.

In the year 1913 the Legislature enacted a law entitled "An act to permit counties to acquire rights of way for state highways and to pay part of the expense of constructing state highways and bridges within their limits and authorizing the state to accept the same." Stats. of 1913, p. 445; Henning's Gen. Laws, p. 994.

Section 1 of that act reads as follows:

"Whenever it is determined by a four-fifths vote of the board of supervisors of any county that the interests of the county would be promoted thereby, the board of supervisors, upon the recommendation of the advisory board of the department of engineering of the state of California, may, by resolution passed by a four-fifths vote of said county board, determine to acquire by purchase, donation or dedication, or lease any right of way, rock quarry or land needed for state highway purposes and described in such recommendation, and shall proceed, if necessary, to condemn under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to such proceedings any right of way, rock quarry or land recommended to be acquired as aforesaid. The title to such property may be taken in the name of the state or the county. The order of the board of supervisors shall be the only preliminary procedure required prior to the acquisition of such property or the commencement of such condemnation action or actions."

Section 2 provides a similar procedure under which a county whose interests would be promoted thereby is authorized to contribute money toward the expenses of construction of state highways within their limits.

The present action was brought under and in accordance with the above-mentioned statute of 1913. It was preceded by the recommendation of the California highway commission, which is the successor of the advisory board of the department of engineering. It is not claimed that there has been any failure to conform with the procedure required by the terms of said statute. While there has been no direct repeal of the statute of 1913, it is contended by appellants that there is an implied repeal of said statute by reason of an amendment to the Constitution of the state, which amendment was accomplished by the adoption of section 2 of article 16 of the Constitution, on the 1st day of July, 1919. At this point it will be useful to have in mind some of the legal history connected with the development of the present system of state highways:

"The provisions of law relating to the powers and duties of the Highway Commission are to be found in various places. The first 'State Highways Act' was adopted in 1909 (Stats. 1909, p. 647) and amended in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 686). The second 'State Highways Act' was adopted in 1915 (Stats. 1915, p. 650), and it, among other things, adopted by reference various provisions of the first State Highways Act. The third state highways measure was adopted in 1919 and 1920 in the form of amendments to the Constitution (Const., art. XVI, secs. 2, 3), and it, in turn, adopted by specific reference certain provisions of the State Highways Act of 1915, and by general reference various other provisions thereof. * * * Section 363f of the Political Code, adopted in 1921, created the present California Highway Commission, as the successor to the duties, powers, purposes, responsibilities, and jurisdiction theretofore vested in the appointed members of the advisory board to the department of engineering, who formerly composed a subdivision of the department of engineering designated as the California State Highway Commission. The statutory provisions prescribing the powers, duties and responsibilities of the department of engineering are to be found in the Statutes of 1907, page 215; Statutes of 1909, page 558; Statutes of 1911, page 823; Statutes of 1915, pages 630 and 898, and Statutes of 1917, pages 541 and 690. By section 8 thereof it is provided that 'all public work done by the state, except as otherwise provided by law, shall be under the full control of said department.' By section 9 thereof it is provided that 'the department of engineering shall take and have full possession and control of all roads and highways which have been declared and adopted state roads and state highways, and all state roads and state highways which may hereafter be acquired and constructed.'" Cal. Highway Com. v. Riley, 192 Cal. 97, 103, 218 P. 579, 582.

The State Highways Act of 1915 was a statute approved May 20, 1915, and was designed to authorize the acquisition, construction, improvement, maintenance and control of the uncompleted portions of the system of state highways prescribed and contemplated by the State Highways Act of 1909. The State Highways Act of 1915 provided for payments to be made by counties to the state treasury as compensation for interest paid upon moneys expended within such counties from the proceeds of the state bonds; and provided for additional state bonds to be issued and sold to create a fund for completing the acquisition of such highway system. Stats. 1915, p. 650.

Another aspect of the series of legislative acts now under consideration is indicated in the reply brief of appellants, where they say: "In 1909 the state approved an issue of bonds in the sum of eighteen million dollars for the construction of a system of highways. In 1915 an additional fifteen million dollars was authorized and expended. In 1919 a further bond issue of forty million dollars was authorized by the constitutional amendment under consideration."

Section 2 of article 16 of the Constitution, adopted as hereinbefore stated, provided for the preparation and issuance of the bonds thereby authorized, and created certain funds corresponding to those provided for in the state highways act of 1915. Said funds were described respectively as "third state highway fund," "third state highway interest and sinking fund," "third state highway revolving fund," and "third state highway sinking fund." It was directed that the moneys in said "third state highway fund" shall be used by the state department of engineering for the acquisition of rights of ways for and the acquisition, construction, and improvement of uncompleted portions of the system of state highways prescribed by the "state highways act" of 1909, and the "state highways act of 1915," and certain extensions thereof described in said last-named act, "and also for the acquisition of the rights of way for and the acquisition, construction, and improvement of the following additional highways as state highways. * * * Oxnard to San Juan Capistrano. * * * Said additional highways to be located on the most direct and practical route."

After providing for certain expenditures of money for the previously planned but not completed highways, said section 2 provides: "The cost of acquisition and construction of the several extensions described in said 'state highways act of 1915' shall hereafter be entirely borne by the state of California, it being the intention hereof to relieve the several counties from any further co-operation as contemplated by said 'state highways act of 1915,' but nothing herein shall prevent any county from contributing towards the cost of said extensions or of any other state highways at its option to such extent as it may desire under the provisions of any existing laws."

Section 3 of article 16 of the Constitution, adopted at the general election of November 2, 1920, creates a state highway finance board, and contains sundry regulations relating to the various described bond issues.

Appellants contend, first, that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, upon the ground that the county was without authority to maintain the action, and that for the same reason the objections of defendants to the introduction of evidence should have been sustained. Counsel for appellants take the position that, under the act of 1913 to which we have referred, the power thereby conferred upon the board of supervisors was limited to those state highways which had been designated in previous acts of legislation, and therefore did not include the highway between Oxnard and San Juan Capistrano, which was only authorized by the constitutional amendment of July 1, 1919. They say that it cannot be assumed that the Legislature intended to bestow upon the board of supervisors authority to condemn land "for the purpose of a state highway which the state itself had not, at that time, power to construct." They further contend that, because the constitutional amendment empowers and directs the state itself to use funds provided thereby for the acquisition of the rights of way for this highway, and because the intention of the amendment was to relieve the counties from any further co-operation in respect to the described highways, it follows that any law which might prevent the state itself from acquiring such highways would be unconstitutional. They further say that since the statute of 1913, in its provisions relating to the condemnation of rights of way, only authorized the board of supervisors to "proceed, if necessary, to condemn" any right of way recommended, it follows that this action is unauthorized. Counsel say: "All necessity for the county to condemn land for this highway was entirely at an end upon the adoption of section 2 of article 16 of the Constitution. It was not necessary for the county to do so, because the state was obliged to do so and had made provision for the necessary funds and all of the means of carrying out the determination of the state of acquiring the land into execution."

[1, 2] Our own reading of these statutes and constitutional enactments leads us to a different conclusion. Said statute of 1913 is general in its terms. It does not require any special rules of interpretation to make its provisions applicable to a highway originating at a later date, as well as to such highways as had been provided for by the "State Highways Act" of 1909. It is not true that in 1913 "the state itself had not at that time power to construct" any highway for which the Legislature had not yet provided. The power existed, although it had not yet been exercised. It was in recognition of such existing power and of its possibility of future exercise that said statute of 1913 was enacted in the terms there used. Moreover, the provisions of section 2 of article 16 of the Constitution, which we have quoted, directly recognized the existence of the statute of 1913 when, after relieving the counties from the obligation to co-operate in the acquisition and construction of these state highways, it was further provided that: "Nothing herein shall prevent any county from contributing towards the cost of said extensions or of any other state highways at its option to such extent as it may desire under the provisions of any existing laws." Since the statute of 1913 contains the authorization under which such contributions were permitted to be made by the counties, it seems clear that the clause, "under the provisions of any existing laws," was intended to include said statute of 1913.

[3, 4] The claim of counsel for appellant that upon adoption of said section 2 of article 16 of the state Constitution it was unnecessary for the county to condemn land for this highway, because the state was obliged to do so, is unsound. The state had a right to choose its agents for the accomplishment of its purpose to construct a system of highways. The statute of 1913 made the county, through its board of supervisors, under the conditions therein described, the agent of the state for the purpose of acquiring any right of way or land recommended to be acquired. It was particularly provided that the title to the property might be taken in the name of the state or of the county. The clause, "shall proceed if necessary to condemn," when read in the light of its context, seems to refer only to that necessity which would arise when, after determining to acquire the land, the board of supervisors found, in any given case, that the land could not be obtained by purchase, donation or dedication. But it was not necessary for the plaintiff to allege or prove that these methods of acquisition other than condemnation had been attempted and had failed. For the statute says: "The order of the board of supervisors shall be the only preliminary procedure required prior to the acquisition of such property or the commencement of such condemnation action or actions." This provision was in accordance with the rule that, in the absence of contrary evidence, official duty is presumed to have been regularly performed.

[5] This action was commenced by complaint filed on the 15th of January, 1924. The right of way sought to be taken is 80 feet in width, with an extra width at certain described places where such additional width is required in order to provide for cuts or fills. Prior to the commencement of this action, and prior to any proceedings by the state looking to the construction of the state highway on account of which the present action was brought, the county of Los Angeles, by proceedings conducted under the general highway laws of the state, had condemned and taken, for public highway purposes, a strip of land 40 feet in width with sufficient land along the sides thereof to provide for fills and other work. County of Los Angeles v. Rindge Co., 53 Cal. App. 166, 200 P. 27; Rindge Co. v. Los Angeles Co., 262 U. S. 700, 43 S. Ct. 689, 67 L. Ed. 1186; Co. of Los Angeles v. Rindge Co., 69 Cal. App. 72, 230 P. 468. Said county highway commenced at the easterly boundary of the Malibu ranch (the property now owned by defendant Marblehead Land Company) at the point where that portion of the proposed state highway herein sought to be acquired and condemned begins and followed a general westerly course through said ranch, ending at the Ventura county line at the westerly end of said ranch, at the point where the proposed state highway crosses said county line. Said county road in some places lies wholly, and in other places partly, within the right of way now sought to be condemned. At some places the county road parallels the right of way herein sought to be condemned, being but a short distance removed therefrom; while at other places the two rights of way are separated from each other by distances of "from one-half to three-quarters of a mile or more."

It is contended by appellants, and was pleaded by them as a defense to this action, that by reason of the prior establishment of said county highway, and the condemnation of a right of way therefor at the suit of the county of Los Angeles, said county is now estopped from seeking to take by condemnation the right of way described in the complaint. The argument presented in support of this contention rests principally upon the prior contention that said statute of 1913 was by necessary implication repealed by the adoption of section 2 of article 16 of the Constitution. As we have concluded that there was no such repeal, this part of the argument need not be followed any further.

In the establishment of the county road, the purposes in view were comparatively limited in respect to territory to be served. The width of the road, and the particulars of the route thereof, were determined with reference to those local conditions. The present proposed highway, on the contrary, is to be part of a state highway system, through many counties and extending to great distances. The proceedings for obtaining the right of way through appellants' land were initiated by the state highway commission, and the board of supervisors of Los Angeles county is merely the agency through which the state has chosen to proceed in obtaining the right of way. It cannot be said that the county highway, and a state highway thus proposed to be established for more general purposes of the state than the county highway, and of much greater width than the county highway, should necessarily pass through this ranch along an identical route, even though the two roads do enter the ranch at the same point and leave it at the same point. Under these circumstances there is no conflict between the resolution of the board of supervisors, which, prior to the former action, declared that the route chosen for that highway was the route most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury, and the resolution of the same board, adopted at the request of the state highway commission, in which resolution the supervisors declared that in this case also the route proposed is the route most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury. Under the conditions which attended the former action, and having in view the purpose of the county highway, it might be that the route which would provide for the greatest public good and the least private injury in relation to that highway would be different from the route required by the greatest public good and least private injury in establishing the state highway. The statute of 1913 provided that, under the stated conditions described in that act, the county may proceed to condemn, under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure relating to such proceedings. Section 1241 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that in such a proceeding for condemnation of property within the county, the adoption of the resolution or ordinance declaring that the property sought to be condemned is necessary for the proposed public improvement, and that the proposed improvement is planned or located in the manner which will be most compatible with the greatest public good and the least private injury, shall be conclusive evidence of those facts. Since, in our opinion, the estoppel which has been invoked by appellants is not applicable to the facts of the case, there remains no objection sufficient to prevent the county of Los Angeles from condemning the property sought to be taken in this action.

[6] Finding X reads as follows: "The court further finds that the market value of the property owned by the defendant Marblehead Land Company, herein sought to be condemned by the plaintiff for the purposes herein mentioned, was, on the 15th day of January, 1924, the sum of eighty-two thousand dollars ($82,000.00), and that the market value of all of the improvements thereon pertaining to said realty so owned by the said defendant, Marblehead Land Company, was, on the said 15th day of January, 1924, the sum of eight hundred dollars ($800.00)."

Appellants claim that this finding is without support in the evidence, either in relation to the market value of the land taken, or the market value of the improvements thereon owned by the Marblehead Land Company. The principal point urged in the attack upon this finding is that the valuation made by the court of the improvements "was reached by disregarding entirely the evidence which showed without contradiction or confliction that there was a valuable improvement on said land consisting of a railroad embankment of 93,000 cubic yards of dirt worth $49,660; that the court erred in refusing to award compensation to any of the appellants for said improvement and by its judgment confiscated the same without allowing the owner thereof any compensation for it whatever."

In the year 1903 the ranch owner conveyed to the Hueneme, Malibu & Port Los Angeles Railway Company an easement of 200 feet in width throughout the ranch immediately adjacent to the line of mean high tide. This company proceeded to construct over portions of the ranch a railroad, but in so doing did not follow the easement theretofore granted. Later on another railroad corporation was formed under the name of the Hueneme, Malibu & Southern Railway Company, and the then owners of the ranch conveyed to this corporation a 60-foot right of way, which followed a different course than the 200-foot easement and was so laid out as to cover the previous actual railroad construction.

In finding XIV the court found that "the market value of the improvements of all character owned by defendant Hueneme, Malibu & Port Los Angeles Railway, and herein sought to be condemned, was, on the 15th day of January, 1924, the sum of $1,000.00." The court awarded this $1,000 to the last-named company, and included in its award to the Marblehead Land Company the $800 fixed as the value of improvements on the realty owned by it, in accordance with finding X. The error claimed by appellant on this part of the case is that the court did not adopt the valuation of $49,660 which, according to the testimony of the witness Hawgood, was the amount which a person desiring to obtain a railroad grade on the stated premises and at the above stated date would have been willing to pay for the railroad grade or roadbed which was on those premises, "or a similar graded roadbed." Appellants claim that Hawgood's testimony on this point stands uncontradicted. We find, however, that there is in the record abundant evidence that the railroad, including the grades and fills, as well as the rails and ties, had been washed out in some places and had fallen into a neglected condition, and had so remained for a number of years prior to the year 1924. There is testimony which conflicts definitely with that of Mr. Hawgood. An example of this occurs in the testimony of J. A. Bell, who, like Mr. Hawgood, qualified as an engineer of experience in railroad construction. After an extended statement of facts in support of his opinion that the right of way itself was very unsuitable for a railroad, Mr. Bell said: "Basing my answer upon that which I have heretofore testified to, and my knowledge of conditions both on the ranch and elsewhere, not only the physical conditions but also the conditions I have mentioned, I can't see any conceivable use for it as a railroad right of way." Other witnesses declared that the railroad had washed away in some places, and that some of the trestles and bridges had all dropped to pieces; that there was practically no railroad that could be used for any purpose whatsoever. The witness Benedict, who was one of those who gave the railroad right of way a nominal valuation of $1, said: "I think I saw all of the mileage on the entire route that was graded but the bulk of it throughout the entire ranch was in a condition where it was of no value even though it had been useful to the grade of the highway and I gave it no value." After an extended examination of the testimony we think that, notwithstanding Mr. Hawgood's valuation of the grade and materials of the railroad structure, the testimony of these other witnesses is inconsistent with that valuation, and that the finding of the court which established the value of the railroad embankment and structures at the sum of $1,000 is adequately supported by the evidence.

[7] Appellants next contend that there is no evidence to sustain that portion of finding XI which limits to the sum of $8,666 the damage caused to that portion of the ranch not sought to be condemned, by reason of the severance thereof from the portion sought to be condemned, and that there is no evidence to sustain that portion of the same finding whereby it was determined that the benefits to that portion of the ranch not included in the condemnation amounted to the sum of $8,666. Appellants further contend that the benefits so set off against severance damages were only of a general nature, and were not of that class of special benefits which may lawfully be set off against severance damages.

[8] Examination of the testimony shows that several witnesses, who were apparently competent and well informed, were of the opinion that the severance damage amounted to sums which were less than the amount subsequently established by the findings of the court. These witnesses were quite uniform in their opinion that the benefits to the portion of the ranch not taken, by reason of the construction of improvements, were many times as much as the amount stated in the findings of the court. We think that the evidence is sufficient to sustain these findings. It follows that on this branch of the case appellants have no ground of complaint, unless it be made to appear that said benefits were only a part of the general benefits and advantages accruing to the community, and were not benefits special and peculiar to the property of defendants not included in the condemnation. Numerous authorities on the subject were cited in the briefs and in the oral argument. The law in this state covering the question here presented is definitely stated in Beveridge v. Lewis, 137 Cal. 619, 67 P. 1040, 70 P. 1083, 59 L. R. A. 581, 92 Am. St. Rep. 188. It was there pointed out that general benefits consist in an increase in the value of land, common to the community generally, and resulting from advantages which will accrue to the community from the improvement. Special benefits, on the other hand, are such as result from the mere construction of the improvement, and are peculiar to the land in question. These special benefits must be such as are reasonably certain to result from the construction of the work. So far as we are advised, the rule or principle thus announced in Beveridge v. Lewis has not been modified by later decisions.

[9] The witnesses who testified in favor of the plaintiff on this question were of the opinion that, in addition to the general benefits, there were special benefits which would result from the construction of this highway, and that these benefits were peculiar to the property of defendants. The witness Butterworth, after stating that the market value of the land taken would be greatly increased by the laying out and construction of the highway, stated that he had in mind both the benefit that would result from access and transportation facilities, and also the benefit to the frontage upon the highway and added value that would accrue to land fronting thereon if the highway was put through. He further stated that these benefits to the ranch, and this increase in market value as a result of the construction of the highway, were in his mind separate and apart from the general benefit which the entire district would receive. The testimony of the witness Benedict, and of others, is of like effect. It is not denied by appellants that under the provisions of article 1, § 14, of the Constitution of the state of California, benefits which are special and peculiar to the property affected may be set off against damages to the portion not taken, whenever the plaintiff is a municipal corporation or a county.

[10] Finally, appellants have submitted for consideration numerous assignments of error in rulings upon evidence. It is claimed that the court erred in permitting the plaintiff to introduce evidence which was incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial, and which was hearsay, and in refusing to permit defendants to introduce competent, relevant and material evidence, and in permitting improper cross-examination of appellants' witnesses. Practically all of these rulings were concerned with testimony of witnesses who were giving their opinions upon questions directed to the subject of market value of the property sought to be taken, or the question of damages to the property not taken. We have made a schedule of the pages of the transcript, referred to in the brief of counsel for appellants in their argument upon these assignments of error, and have read not only the particular folios indicated, but very much of the connecting portions of the record. Let it be assumed, without deciding the questions point by point, that there were occasional errors in these rulings. As a whole, the court was liberal in the admission of evidence offered by the defendants for the purpose of establishing their claims as to the market value of the property. The few rulings made against defendants in this respect were comparatively unimportant, and did not interfere with a full and complete presentation of the facts relied upon by appellants to establish the values claimed by them. A like liberty was allowed to the plaintiff in its reply, not only in the presentation of its own evidence, but in its cross-examination of the witnesses introduced by the defendants. It does not appear that the court lost sight of the correct rules governing the standards of value which enter into a determination of the issues upon which the court was called upon to make its findings. We have reached the conclusion that such errors as may have occurred did not perceptibly interfere with the judgment of the court, or affect the result shown by the findings and judgment. In this connection, although it may be of minor importance, we take note of the fact that the judge had not only the benefit of the testimony of the witnesses, but that he made a personal examination of the property. If this examination was made under any definite stipulation contained in the record, such stipulation has not been brought to our attention. We do find, however, a statement by one of counsel for appellants, in the course of an argument to the court, and in which he said: "I have in mind that your honor has been out there and has been over the property and that your honor's view of the property is evidence in the case."

We have formed the opinion that the findings of the court upon the questions relating to compensation and damages are sustained by the evidence. They were made after a very fair and complete presentation of the case at a trial which evidently occupied the attention of the court for many days. We have endeavored to state the contentions of appellants upon the principal questions of law in the case, with our conclusions thereon, and we find no reason which would justify a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

I concur: YORK, J.

Mr. Justice HOUSER, deeming himself disqualified, takes no part in this decision.

COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Plaintiff and Respondent, v. MARBLEHEAD LAND COMPANY (a Corporation) et al., Defendants and Appellants. (Civ. 5380.) †

Rehearing Denied Jan. 16, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 18, 1929.

Appeal by defendants from an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, K. S. Mahon, Judge, taxing costs in an action to condemn land for road purposes. Affirmed.

See, also, 273 P. 131.

Richard Hartley and William J. Clark, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Everett W. Mattoon, County Counsel, and Hill & Morgan, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The defendants having filed their bill of costs and disbursements, the court, on motion duly made, struck from the bill sundry large items, and allowed costs in a greatly reduced sum. From the order so made, the defendants appeal.

The questions of law presented on this appeal are substantially the same as those discussed in City of Los Angeles v. Vickers, 81 Cal. App. 737, 254 P. 687, where the principles which apply here are very clearly stated.

In accordance with the decision in that case, it is ordered that the order from which defendants appeal be, and the same hereby is, affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Edward I. Butler, Judge.

Action by the People of the State of California, by U. S. Webb, Attorney General, against the City of San Rafael and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Leon French, Deputy Atty. Gen. (Daniel A. Ryan, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Jordan L. Martinelli, City Atty., of San Rafael, and R. W. Palmer and Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

BARNARD, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought in the name of the people of the state of California against the city of San Rafael, a municipal corporation, the members of its city council, and the Northwestern Pacific Railroad, a corporation, seeking to set aside the action of the said city council in closing and vacating a portion of a public street within said city, as a gross abuse of discretion, and as having been taken for the purpose of transferring such portion of a public street to a private corporation. After trial, judgment was entered for the defendants, and the plaintiff has appealed. As grounds for reversal, the appellant claims that the evidence shows the sole purpose of the city council in closing said portion of a street to have been to facilitate the construction by the defendant railroad company of a new depot; that the law does not permit the granting of a street by a city to a railroad company; and that the findings of the trial court that such action was in the interest of the public safety and convenience are not sustained by the evidence, and that the facts do not warrant the conclusions drawn therefrom.

The following pertinent facts are disclosed by the evidence: The city council of the city of San Rafael on the 25th day of November, 1924, passed an ordinance vacating that portion of Ida street in said city which is crossed by the double tracks of the Northwestern Pacific Railroad. The main line tracks of this railroad, in the vicinity of the West End Station in San Rafael, run approximately east and west, being parallel to and about 400 feet to the south of Fourth street, one of the Main streets of the city. Between Fourth street and the railroad are located two streets running north and south which are only 129 feet apart. One of these known as G street, is one of the main cross streets in that part of town, extending beyond Fourth street to the northern limits of the town. The other street, known as Ida street, is but 129 feet west of G street, and runs only from Fourth street to the south line of the railroad right of way, its entire length being approximately 400 feet. To the south of, immediately adjoining, and parallel to the railroad right of way, is a street running east and west and known as West End avenue. Prior to the closing complained of in this case, both G street and Ida street extended across the railroad right of way and connected with West End avenue, which was their southern terminus. On the railroad right of way between Ida and G streets is located the West End Station, where trains stop. Ida street and G street are also connected by a paved street, 33 feet in width, immediately north of the depot and paralleling West End avenue. The part of Ida street ordered closed by the city council consists only of that portion within the railroad right of way. In other words, by the closing complained of, Ida street is made to end at the north line of the railroad right of way, whereas formerly it crossed the right of way and connected with West End avenue.

The testimony shows: That, by closing this part of Ida street, the grade crossing theretofore existing at that point was eliminated, and persons desiring to cross from this street to West End avenue must now traverse the 129-foot street north of the tracks to G street, and cross there. That this action of the city council was a part of a general plan of improving street conditions in the vicinity of West End Station. That until the year preceding this action there was no connection, fairly passable for traffic, to the south of the railroad and between the ends of G street and Ida street. But at that time, and pursuant to the general plan referred to, the city acquired certain private property and opened and paved West End avenue. That in paving West End avenue, in adhering to and meeting existing street grades, there had necessarily been created some obstruction to the entrance of Ida street into West End avenue, Ida street being on a different grade at the point of intersection. That at about the same time, the 129-foot street to the north of the depot, between Ida street and G street was paved, thus permitting traffic on Ida street to cross the railroad either on that street or by way of this 129-foot street and the G street crossing.

It further appears from the evidence: That because of these two grade crossings (G street and Ida street) only 129 feet apart, trains, when stopped at the West End Station, frequently blocked both crossings. That at conferences between members of the city council and railroad officials, looking toward a needed new depot, it was suggested that if the depot was moved west about 50 feet it would permit trains to stop without blocking the G street crossing, and in addition, through sheds and approaches thus made room for, passengers would be enabled to board and leave the trains more comfortably. Before taking the action complained of herein, the city council made the other street improvements above referred to. Petitions signed by residents in the vicinity, some favoring and some opposing the closing of the Ida street crossing, were also considered. There was evidence that in view of the improvement of West End avenue and the 129-foot street between Ida street and G. street, the Ida street crossing was no longer necessary to serve the public in that vicinity; that this closing eliminated one of two dangerous grade crossings existing within 129 feet of each other; that there was no considerable travel over Ida street; that G street was the wider and more traveled roadway, being a through street, while Ida street is only one block in length; that a crossing at G street is safer, more practicable, and more necessary than one at Ida street; and that this closing will prevent the blocking of both streets by stopped trains, and will permit one street, the main traveled one, to remain open to traffic during such times.

Among other things, the trial court found as follows:

"That the action of the City Council of said City of San Rafael in adopting said Ordinance vacating said portion of said Ida Street was required by public interest, necessity and convenience and was not directly, or at all, opposed to the public necessity, interest or convenience; that the adoption of said ordinance vacating said Ida Street was not for the purpose of surrendering or conveying to a private party, the defendant Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation, public property; that public interest and convenience required that said portion of Ida Street be closed up and abandoned. * * *

"That the action of the City Council in adopting said ordinance vacating said portion of Ida Street was not a gross or any abuse of official discretion and said action was required by public interest, necessity and convenience, and that the said public necessity, interest and convenience were considered by the members of the City Council voting in favor of said proposed vacation and the adoption of the said ordinance vacating said portion of said Ida Street was not for the purpose of surrendering or vacating to a private party, to wit: the said Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company public property, to wit: a portion of a public street, which is much, or at all, needed in said community. * * *

"That the portion of said Ida Street so ordered to be closed constituted and does constitute a railroad grade crossing the continuance of which constituted and does constitute a public menace and danger, and that the interest of public convenience and safety required and do require that said railroad grade crossing be closed;

"That there now exists at a point one hundred and twenty-nine feet easterly from said Ida Street railroad crossing another open, public street, crossing the said railroad tracks of said defendant Northwestern Pacific Railroad Company, known as the 'G' Street crossing, and that said 'G' Street crossing, is a wider, safer and better traveled crossing, than said Ida Street crossing, and that the closing of said Ida street crossing and the diverting of the traffic thereover to the 'G' street crossing will result in no inconvenience to any members of the traveling public and will, on the other hand, promote public safety and the public welfare; * * *"

"* * * That owing to said Ida street crossing and the grade of said Ida street at said crossing it is extremely difficult, unsafe and inconvenient for the traveling public to board and/or leave said trains at said Ida street crossing on either the northerly or southerly sides thereof;"

"* * * That by the closing of said portion of Ida street and the construction of said new depot and platform, the trains of said defendant railroad may be stopped at said West End Depot without blocking the traffic over said 'G' street crossing and without causing inconvenience to the traveling public and to the residents of said City of San Rafael and said vicinity, traveling over said 'G' street crossing; that owing to said Ida street crossing said defendant railroad is unable to maintain suitable platforms thereon of sufficient length to serve and accommodate the public in general with safe, adequate, and boarding facilities."

[1, 2] The principles of law relating to the power of cities in vacating and closing streets within their limits are clear and well established. It is, of course, the law, supported by every consideration of public policy, that municipal authorities may not vacate any portion of a public street for the sole benefit and use of private individuals or corporations. People v. City of Los Angeles, 62 Cal. App. 781, 218 P. 63. But, on the other hand, it cannot be questioned that in a proper case a city, through its duly constituted authorities, may close and vacate a street, or a part thereof, in the interest of the safety, convenience, and good of the general public. Nor is this power affected by the fact that, as one of the incidents to its exercise, the beneficial use or title to the land abandoned may, and usually does, revert to private parties.

[3, 4] The opening, closing, and improvement of a city's streets are of much greater concern to its inhabitants than to the people of the state at large. City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Co., 173 Cal. 323, 159 P. 1169. The closing of streets is a legislative function, and, when delegated to the city council by the Legislature, is within the discretion of the council. Polack v. Trustees of San Francisco Orphan Asylum, 48 Cal. 490. We must take judicial notice of the charter of the city of San Rafael. Const. of Cal. art. 11, § 8. Section 18 of this Charter delegates the authority to close the streets of said city to the city council thereof. This power being left by the Legislature with the city, it is then, in the first instance, a matter for the city council of the city to decide whether or not the closing of a particular street, or part of a street, is in the public interest.

[5] It has also been held that "it is essentially a judicial question whether the vacation of a street be for a public or for a private benefit," that a gross abuse of discretion may amount to legal fraud, that the decision of this question, which lies first with the city council, in cases where such legal fraud is claimed, may be reviewed by the courts, and that where such an abuse of discretion on the part of a city council has been shown in this regard, its action may be set aside. People v. City of Los Angeles, supra. But where this discretion has been soundly exercised, based upon sufficient facts, with a proper consideration of the needs of the public, with a minimum of damage to all concerned, and with the end of securing certain real benefits for the public, the courts should not and cannot interfere.

[6, 7] In the instant case the trial court found on these main issues that the city council of San Rafael had not abused its discretion in closing the portion of Ida street involved herein, but that said closing was required by the public interest, convenience, necessity, and safety. The question, then, is as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support such findings. It is, of course, true that a city cannot "barter" away its streets. And it has been held that the advantage coming to the public from vacating a street must arise from the vacation itself, and not from the future use to which the vacated property is put. Horton v. Williams, 99 Mich. 423, 58 N. W. 369. Conceding that this is the rule, and assuming, also, what is not necessary for us to decide, that a contemplated use of property for depot purposes, as suggested herein, is not such a public advantage arising from the vacation itself as would be required by the above rule, still the record here shows other advantages directly accruing to the public from the street closing in question. The evidence showing the elimination of a dangerous grade crossing, where two grade crossings are in such close proximity, and the doing away of the public inconvenience of having both crossings blocked by stopping trains are advantages directly accruing from the street closing. And that these facts were considered by the city council is of itself, irrespective of any other consideration, sufficient to support the finding of the court that the city council was not induced to this closing solely by the desire to turn the land over to the railroad company, but was actuated by considerations of the public good. This is especially true in view of the testimony showing the general plan of street improvement in that vicinity, the relation of Ida street to the other streets, the traffic conditions, and the comparison of the resulting inconvenience with the benefits to the public at large.

[8] While the action of a city council in such a case as is here considered is properly reviewable by the courts, both public interest and the law require that it be not set aside, except on a substantial showing of an abuse of discretion or of fraud. No fraud here has been claimed, and the trial court, having heard all the witnesses and being familiar with the entire situation, has found that there was no abuse of discretion. After a careful study of the record we are of the same opinion. The most that can be said of any facts called to our attention by appellant, as pointing to a contrary conclusion, is that they create some conflict in the evidence. In our opinion the evidence amply supports the findings of the trial court. The views herein expressed make it unnecessary to consider any other points urged.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by N. Cocking against Margaret Fulwider, also known as M. A. Fulwider, and another. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Charles M. Mannon, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Keith C. Eversole, of Ukiah, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to quiet title to a parcel of land containing approximately 0.83 of an acre situated in Mendocino county. For a second cause of action he sought an injunction to restrain defendants from removing a fence which he proposed to construct enclosing the parcel of land in dispute. He was denied relief upon both causes of action and has appealed upon a typewritten record.

The controversy arose over the obliteration of the original section corner of sections 7, 8, 17 and 18, which was marked by a wooden stake erected at the time of the survey in 1873. The evidence is that this corner post had rotted away many years ago, but that the corner had been recognized by the location of certain witness trees mentioned in the surveyor's field notes; that, in the year 1888, the adjoining property owners agreed upon the common boundary line with reference to these witness trees; that, for more than 30 years prior to the commencement of this action, the parties hereto and their predecessors in interest had acquiesced in this boundary line; that, for the greater portion of this period, a fence had been maintained on this boundary line and the land had been claimed and cultivated by the adjoining owners on each side of this fence; that, in the year 1906, when one of the witnesses came into possession of the land now owned by defendants herein, this boundary line was marked by "an old rail fence"; that this witness was in possession of the property in dispute for six years, during which time he maintained the fence along this line; that, some time thereafter, a new and substantial fence was erected on the same line which remained at the time of the trial; that, for more than eight years prior to the commencement of the action, the defendants' predecessors planted 85 fruit trees on the parcel in dispute which the defendants maintained and cultivated during their entire possession.

The reason for the controversy between the parties is that, in the year 1917, a new survey was made of the section lines, and, the surveyor in charge being unable to find the government corner of sections 7 and 18, reestablished this corner at a point where he estimated it should have been in relation to other known corners. This point was about 46 feet north of the fenced boundary line theretofore recognized by the adjoining owners, but, because of the survey, the plaintiff claimed that he was entitled to the strip of land lying north of this boundary line as indicated by a line drawn from the newly established corner.

[1, 2] The defendants pleaded adverse possession, statute of limitations, laches, and an agreed boundary line, and the trial court found for the defendants on all their separate pleas. It expressly found that plaintiff had not been seized or possessed of the land in dispute since 1890, and that for more than 30 years had failed to assert any claim to it. As stated by appellant, the trial court also impliedly found that the true southern boundary of section 7, is the northern boundary of the land in dispute inasmuch as it was stipulated that the plaintiff was the owner of all the SE¼ of the SE¼ of section 7, and that defendants were the owners of all the E½ of NE¼ of section 18, between which the disputed boundary line ran.

This is sufficient in itself to support the judgment, because the evidence offered to prove this disputed fact is conflicting, and sufficient evidence was offered by the respondents to support a direct finding in their favor. The appellant called a surveyor as his witness, who testified that he did not find the government monument and that he therefore "re-established" this corner by the proportional method of subdivision—by an arbitrary mathematical division of known lines and distances. He, however, testified that, when he followed the government field notes of this particular survey, he came to a point approximately where the boundary fence stood. The surveyor called by the respondents testified that he followed the government field notes strictly, found the witness trees designated, and, in projecting his line along the boundary fence, came to the original monument at the westerly corner of sections 7 and 18 exactly 80 chains distant, as called for in the original survey. Some of the sections in this township are of irregular size, and it is conceded that errors occurred in the original survey. The difference between the witnesses called by the respective parties is that the one sought to re-establish the corner at the point where he believed it should have been, while the other endeavored to place it at the point where it was actually established in the original survey. Upon the evidence we are satisfied that the trial court properly denied appellant the relief sought.

[3] In addition to this, the finding that appellant was not in possession for more than 30 years is a bar to this action under the provisions of section 318, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that no such action shall be maintained unless the plaintiff, or his predecessors, have been seized or possessed of the property within five years before the commencement of the action. The evidence was that the respondents and their predecessors were in undisputed actual possession of the land for more than 30 years and that appellant had not made any claim of right or possession during that period except the ineffectual attempt to fence the property immediately prior to the commencement of the suit. The purpose of the Code section is to prevent the prosecution of stale demands such as we have here, and for this purpose it limits the remedy of the plaintiff, even though all the elements necessary to establish adverse possession on defendant's part are not present. This distinction is emphasized in Akley v. Bassett, 189 Cal. 625, 647, 209 P. 576, and the rule of that case supports the conclusion of the trial court that appellant may not maintain his action.

Upon the second cause of action it, of course, follows that, as appellant is not entitled to possession of the premises, he may not have an injunction to enable him to inclose it. The other points raised on the appeal have all been considered, but we do not dwell upon them here, as the judgment must be affirmed for the reasons given.

Ex parte DOWNS. (Cr. 1504.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 18, 1928.

1. Habeas corpus 🔑85(1)—Presumption is that robbery prosecution before superior court was regular and within court's jurisdiction.

The superior court being a court of general jurisdiction, presumption is, record being silent upon the question, that proceedings had before that court in robbery prosecution were regular, and that court acted within its jurisdiction.

2. Habeas corpus 🔑53—Petitioner for release from prison on habeas corpus because he was not transferred to juvenile court, not showing that court was informed of age, did not show excess or lack of jurisdiction.

Petition to procure release of prisoner on habeas corpus because he was not transferred by the superior court to juvenile court, as was requested, having failed to show that it was suggested to the court that prisoner was under 18 years of age, excess or lack of court's jurisdiction is not shown.

3. Habeas corpus 🔑85(1)—Presumption is that superior court examined witnesses regarding age of prisoner seeking release on habeas corpus because not transferred to juvenile court; testimony not being shown.

Presumption is that superior court did its duty and examined witnesses regarding the age of prisoner sentenced to prison seeking release on habeas corpus because he was not transferred by superior court to juvenile court, as requested; testimony of the witnesses not being shown.

4. Habeas corpus 🔑30(1)—Court's determination that it had jurisdiction of robbery prosecution, though erroneous, is binding against collateral attack.

Superior court's determination that it had jurisdiction of prosecution for robbery, though erroneous, is binding against collateral attack on application for writ of habeas corpus to secure prisoner's release from prison.

Habeas corpus by Eddie J. Downs to secure release of petitioner from San Quentin prison on the ground of illegal detention. Writ discharged.

Nathan Merenbach, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Wm. F. Cleary, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PRESTON, Justice pro tem. This is a petition made in behalf of Eddie J. Downs to procure his release from San Quentin prison on habeas corpus.

On January 19, 1928, Eddie J. Downs pleaded guilty to the crime of robbery in the superior court of Riverside county. Judgment was thereupon pronounced, and Eddie J. Downs was sentenced to imprisonment at San Quentin for the term prescribed by law, and he is now confined in said prison pursuant to said judgment.

Petitioner contends that Eddie J. Downs should be released from state prison on habeas corpus for the following reason: "Said Eddie J. Downs at the time of his arrest and at the time of the hearing held in the Superior Court of the State of California in and for the County of Riverside informs your petitioner and your petitioner therefore alleges that he made a request in open court to be transferred to the juvenile court on the ground that he was then a minor under the age of eighteen years. That said request was then and there denied without any just cause therefor, and contrary to the laws of the State of California in such cases made and provided."

The difficulty with petitioner's contention is that there is absolutely no competent evidence of any kind presented to us from which we can find that Eddie J. Downs was under the age of 18 years at the time of his arrest, or that he or any one on his behalf ever requested the superior court of Riverside county to transfer his case to the juvenile court. Certain papers were offered in support of the petition, which will be hereafter discussed.

Upon this hearing, the court is only concerned with the question as to whether or not Eddie J. Downs is illegally detained in San Quentin. It appears that he is held there under a judgment of the superior court. The question is, therefore, did the superior court exceed its jurisdiction in rendering that judgment?

[1, 2] The superior court being a court of general jurisdiction, the presumption is, where the record is silent upon the question, as it is here, that the proceedings had before that court were regular, and that the court acted within its jurisdiction. In re Eichhoff, 101 Cal. 600, 36 P. 11; In re Tassey, 81 Cal. App. 287, 253 P. 948. It was incumbent upon petitioner, acting in behalf of Eddie J. Downs, to make it affirmatively appear to this court that Eddie J. Downs, or some one on his behalf, stated or suggested to the superior court of Riverside county during the proceedings in that court, that the prisoner was under the age of 18 years, and that his case should be transferred to the juvenile court. This the petitioner has failed to do. In the absence of such an affirmative showing, excess or lack of jurisdiction on the part of the superior court is not established.

In Re Tassey, supra, this court said: "We conclude that while it is true that the superior court has full jurisdiction to try any minor, it having full jurisdiction of the subject-matter, that, nevertheless, a defendant under eighteen years has a statutory right that he shall not be prosecuted for crime until the matter has first been submitted to the juvenile court. So far as this relates to the jurisdiction of the court, it relates to jurisdiction of the person and not of the subject-matter, and may be therefore waived. But where the defendant asserts his right by suggestion to the court, the court's first duty is then to hear and determine in what court the defendant is entitled to be tried."

[3, 4] After this matter was submitted to us for decision, the petitioner filed an affidavit to which was attached a letter from the district attorney of Riverside county and also what purports to be a copy of the minutes of the superior court of Riverside county made at the time that the case of Eddie J. Downs was before that court. No transcript of the proceedings has been produced. These purported minutes are not authenticated in any way, and not entitled to be admitted as evidence. However, waiving all these objections, and viewing all the evidence submitted in the most favorable light to Eddie J. Downs, we can infer from the so-called evidence that he did make a request to the superior court of Riverside county to be transferred to the juvenile court. Following this request, several witnesses, including Eddie J. Downs, were sworn and examined in open court. What these witnesses testified to is not shown by any of the minutes or other papers produced, but, immediately after these witnesses were sworn and examined, the superior court pronounced judgment, sentencing Eddie J. Downs to the state prison at San Quentin.

The presumption is, therefore, that the superior court did its duty and did examine these witnesses regarding the age of Eddie J. Downs, and we must conclude that the superior court determined the facts in regard to the age of Eddie J. Downs. Where the court has determined such facts in favor of the existence of jurisdiction, its determination, even though erroneous, is binding against a collateral attack. STREI et al. v. BROOKS et al. (two cases). (Civ. 5894.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 19, 1928.

1. Frauds, statute of 🔑63(2)—To relieve lessee of rent liability, surrender of lease, being within Statute of Frauds, was required to be written or established by executed oral agreement (Civ. Code, § 1624).

A surrender of a lease, being within Statute of Frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624), was required to be in writing or established by an executed oral agreement in order to relieve lessee of obligation to pay rent.

2. Landlord and tenant 🔑194(1)—Lessors' written consent to lessee's assignment of lease and acceptance of rent from assignee held not "surrender" discharging assignor's rent obligation.

Lessors' written consent to lessee's assignment of his interest in lease to his cotenant and acceptance of rent from assignee was not sufficient to constitute a "surrender" of the lease and a consequent discharge of assignor's obligation to pay rent.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Surrender.]

3. Landlord and tenant 🔑233(2)—Whether there was surrender of lease, so as to relieve lessee of rent obligation, was fact question.

Question whether there was a surrender of lease, so as to relieve lessee of obligation to pay further rent, was question of fact.

4. Landlord and tenant 🔑199—Lessor's statement that he had no objection to lessee's transfer of lease, so long as he received rent, held not promise to release lessee from further rent obligation.

Where one lessee sold his interest in business to his cotenant, lessor's statement, in answer to inquiry whether, in event of sale of such business, buyer could get sole right to lease, that lessor had no objection to any arrangement which lessees might make between themselves provided rent was paid, held not equivalent to a promise to release lessee who sold out his interest from further obligation for rent.

5. Landlord and tenant 🔑190(1)—Alterations made at request of sublessee's assignee held not "eviction" releasing assignor from rent obligation.

Where alterations in premises were made by owner at request of sublessee's assignee and for sole benefit of latter, such changes did not constitute an eviction as to assignor so as to relieve him from liability for further rent to his lessor.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Eviction (Of Tenant).]

6. Landlord and tenant 🔑195(2)—On abandonment of premises by lessee's assignee lessors held entitled to elect to leave premises vacant and recover rent as it accrued.

Where lessee's assignee abandoned premises solely because he was unable to pay rent and there was no re-entry by lessors or by owner, lessors held entitled to elect to leave premises vacant and recover rent as it became due, and were not obliged to rent premises, though they could have done so.

Appeals from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. J. Allen, Judge.

Two actions by Alice Josephine Strei, as administratrix of the estate of William Ernest Strei, deceased, and another, against C. Earl Brooks and another. From the judgments, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed in part.

John G. Robertson, of Oakland, for appellants.

Snook, Snook & Chase, of Oakland, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The above actions, which involve claims for rent under the same lease but covering different periods, were tried together, and both appeals are presented on the same record.

The deceased, W. E. Strei, and U. S. Johnson were lessees from John McCaslin of a certain store building in Oakland, Cal. On November 29, 1922, they sublet the premises by a lease in writing to defendants C. Earl Brooks and R. G. Bartlett for the term of four years and eleven months at the monthly rental of $225. The rent has been paid in full to March 1, 1926, and in addition $50 was paid on account of the rent for that month. On or about May 14, 1924, there being at that time no default in the payment of rent, Brooks sold to Bartlett his interest in the business which they were then conducting on the premises, and also assigned to him his interest in the lease. Subsequently Bartlett obtained the consent of Strei and Johnson with that of McCaslin and his wife to the assignment. Bartlett remained in possession till the month of April of 1926, when he vacated the premises. In the first cause of action plaintiffs sought to recover the rent for the months of March, April, May, and June, 1926, less the partial payment made in March, and by the second the rent for the months of August, September, and October, 1926. Defendant Bartlett failed to appear, and a judgment by default was entered against him. Defendant Brooks —who will be hereinafter referred to as the respondent—by his answer alleged, and the court found, that on May 14, 1924, and previous to the time when the rent sought to be recovered became due, the plaintiffs, in consideration of his selling his interest in the business to Bartlett, agreed to release and discharge him from further liability under the lease and to accept Bartlett as the sole tenant; that pursuant to this agreement respondent sold his interest in the business and assigned the lease to Bartlett, whereupon plaintiffs released him from further liability and accepted Bartlett as the sole tenant. It was further alleged and found that on or about March 13, 1926, the plaintiffs entered upon the premises and so changed and altered the same that they were unfit for the purposes for which they were leased, and that the lease was thereby rescinded as to respondent Brooks. From these findings the court concluded that Brooks had been released and discharged from any liability for rent and entered judgment accordingly.

Plaintiffs appeal from this portion of the judgment, claiming that the findings with respect to the agreement to discharge respondent from liability, and the conclusion that the lease was rescinded by the alterations made upon the premises, are unsupported, and, further, that the court erroneously admitted parol evidence to prove the alleged agreement of release.

[1] The terms of the lease are not disclosed by the record, but it is not claimed that they were such that an assignment by respondent would relieve him from the obligation to pay the rent; the effect of his contention that he was released from his obligation being that as between him and the plaintiffs there was a surrender of the term. A surrender, however, being within the Statute of Frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624), was required to be in writing or established by an executed oral agreement (Welcome v. Hess, 90 Cal. 507, 27 P. 369, 25 Am. St. Rep. 145; Silva v. Bair, 141 Cal. 599, 75 P. 162; Underhill Landlord and Tenant, § 704), neither of which was here shown; and unless the facts were such as to estop the plaintiffs from disputing the alleged surrender the claim of respondent cannot be sustained.

[2] Aside from plaintiffs' written consent to respondent's assignment of his interest in the lease and the acceptance of rent from Bartlett, the assignee thereof, neither of which was sufficient to constitute a surrender and a consequent discharge of the obligation of respondent (Brosnan v. Kramer, 135 Cal. 36, 66 P. 979; Samuels v. Ottinger, 169 Cal. 209, 146 P. 638, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 830; Bonetti v. Treat, 91 Cal. 223, 27 P. 612, 14 L. R. A. 151; Voss v Levi, 33 Cal. App. 671, 166 P. 359; Wellman v. Conroy, 50 Cal. App. 141, 194 P. 728), the only fact upon which the latter's contention rests is a certain conversation between him and the plaintiff Strei before the making of the sale and assignment mentioned. This conversation —the only one which preceded the sale and assignment—was testified to by respondent as follows: "* * * I told him (Strei) I was anticipating either selling or buying the sole right of the business next door that we were interested in together, and I was interested in knowing whether he would release me from the lease in case I purchased that business, and Mr. Strei's answer to me—and I told him I might buy or sell; I didn't know which at that time. We were dickering, and I did not even give Mr. Bartlett the information on that because that was my own personal information—my own personal matter; and when I saw Mr. Strei, Mr. Strei said 'Why, yes, I don't care who buys. I will release either one of you. All I am interested in is getting my money for the rent.'"

Subsequently, in response to questions by his counsel, the witness gave the following testimony regarding the conversation:

"Would you state that conversation again, just what Mr. Strei said with reference to the one who bought or the one who sold? (Answer:) Mr. Strei said—I told him I was figuring on either buying or selling the business that we were co-operating in next door. and that I was interested in knowing whether he would release me from the lease in case I purchased the business———.

"(Question:) You mean in case you purchased the business? (Answer:) In case I sold the business or in case I purchased. I was actually interested in knowing if I could get the sole right to that lease, and Mr. Strei's answer was he didn't care who purchased, that he would release either one of us, whoever purchased.

"(Question:) He would release either one, whoever purchased? (Answer:) He would release either one of us as long as he received his money for the rent; he didn't care who purchased it.

"(Question:) Well, what with regard to the one who sold? You say he would release either one who purchased? What did he say with reference to the one who sold? (Answer:) He would release either one of us from the lease so long as he received his money; that he did not care which one purchased the business.

"(Question:) And that was the extent of the conversation at that time? (Answer:) Yes."

On cross-examination the witness testified that the following was substantially the statement made by Strei: "I will release either of you from the lease so long as I get my money."

[3, 4] While the question whether there was a surrender was a question of fact (Triest v. Goldstone, 173 Cal. 240, 159 P. 715; Steel v. Thompson, 59 Cal. App. 191, 210 P. 430), here it is manifest from the conversation between respondent and Strei that the latter was not referring to the covenant to pay the rent, and that there was no promise to release either of the lessees from his obligation in this respect, whatever may have been the intention of the parties with regard to other covenants contained in the lease. As he states, respondent was interested in knowing whether, in the event of a sale, "the buyer could get the sole right to the lease," and it is equally clear from Strei's answer to the inquiry that the latter had no objection to any arrangement which the lessees might make between themselves provided the rent was paid or, as he expressed it, "so long as I receive my money" This, however, was not equivalent to a promise to release respondent from further obligation, nor was it sufficient to justify his subsequent reliance thereon as having that effect.

[5] It further appears that after the assignment Bartlett, the assignee, requested the owner McCaslin to make certain alterations in the premises. These consisted in the removal of two windows and the substitution therefor of folding doors in the front of the building. This change was for the sole benefit of the lessee; it was not made by the plaintiffs, whose only connection therewith was that they at the request of Bartlett consented thereto, and did not constitute an eviction.

[6] The evidence shows that Bartlett abandoned the premises, and appellants object to a further finding that after this occurred the premises could have been rented by the plaintiffs, but that they failed and neglected to do so. These facts, if true, were immaterial. The premises, as the evidence shows, were abandoned by Bartlett for no reason other than that he was unable to pay the rent, and there was no re-entry by the plaintiffs or by the owner. Under such circumstances the plaintiffs might elect to leave the premises vacant and recover the rent as it became due. Respini v. Porta, 89 Cal. 464, 26 P. 967, 23 Am. St. Rep. 488; Bradbury v. Higginson, 162 Cal. 602, 123 P. 797.

We are satisfied that there was no reasonable ground for the conclusion that the facts constituted a surrender or that respondent was released from liability for the rent.

The judgments appealed from, in so far as it is adjudged therein that plaintiffs take nothing as against defendant C. Earl Brooks, and that the latter is given judgment for his costs of suit, are reversed.

WYSER v. TRUITT et al. (Civ. 3654.)★

Rehearing Denied Jan. 21, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⚷719(6)—Sufficiency of evidence to sustain findings cannot be considered on appeal, where bill of exceptions does not attack findings.

Appellate court cannot consider the insufficiency of the evidence to support findings, where specifications set forth in bill of exceptions do not attack any of the findings.

2. Quieting title ⚷44(4)—That grantor was in possession, claiming ownership, held sufficient showing of source from which to deraign title.

Where grantor was in possession of premises conveyed, claiming to be owner thereof, and occupying position of an owner and grantor in possession, this was a sufficient source from which to deraign title.

3. Taxation ⚷734(9)—Tax sale held void, where notice of sale failed to state amount of penalties.

Sale of property for delinquent taxes was void, where notice of tax sale stated that land would be sold for amount due, including penalties and costs, without stating or indicating the amount due on account of penalties to be added to delinquent taxes, and without indicating that penalties were included in amount of tax.

4. Judgment ⚷691—Judgment quieting title of purchaser at tax sale against trustee in deed of trust held not binding on trustor not party to action.

Judgment quieting title of purchaser of land sold for delinquent taxes against trustee in trust deed executed by delinquent taxpayer held not binding on trustor therein not a party to the action.

5. Appeal and error ⚷499(1)—Refusing continuance because of injury to defendant's attorney held not sustained, in absence of showing by bill of exceptions of request or motion for continuance.

Contention that trial court erred in refusing continuance of trial on account of injury to defendant's attorney could not be sustained, where bill of exceptions failed to show any request for a continuance, any motion made for that purpose, that defendant sought to obtain other counsel, or whether he could or could not obtain counsel, if reasonable delay were granted, but merely contained physician's certificate that attorney had been injured.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by Marion R. Wyser against J. Truitt, William Lender, and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

Catherine A. McKenna and J. Irving McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Tanner, Odell & Taft, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. Action by the plaintiff to quiet title to lot 18, Factory Center tract, in the county of Los Angeles. The plaintiff had judgment, and the defendant William Lender appeals.

The plaintiff's title is based upon a conveyance from Alfred A. Burt, the record owner; the deed from Burt to the plaintiff being executed and delivered while the grantor Alfred

A. Burt was in possession of the lot in question. The appellant's title is founded upon a deed from the tax collector of Los Angeles county.

The complaint sets out that the plaintiff, at the time of filing the complaint, and for a long time prior thereto, had been and was the owner and in the possession of the premises referred to; that the defendants claim and assert an interest therein adverse to plaintiff; and that the claims of the defendants, and of each of them, were without right, etc. The complaint contains a prayer that the defendants be required to set forth their title, if any; that the plaintiff have judgment as prayed for, etc. The court found that all the allegations of the complaint are true and correct in so far as the same relate to lot 18 in block 5, Factory Center tract, as per map recorded in Book 22, pages 18 and 19, of Maps, in the office of the recorder of Los Angeles county, and also that all the allegations of the answer of the defendant William Lender are untrue, except that the defendant has paid taxes, including penalties and costs, on said lot 18, which with interest thereon then amounted to $45; and also that the said defendant William Lender had, in good faith, erected certain buildings partly on lot 18. The judgment required the plaintiff to pay to Lender the amount of taxes, together with interest on such amount at 7 per cent. per annum, paid by the defendant Lender, and also granted permission to the defendant Lender to remove any building that he had placed on lot 18, or partly on lot 18.

The cause is before us upon a bill of exceptions.

[1] The respondent makes the preliminary objection that the court cannot consider the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings in this cause, for the reason that the specifications set forth in the bill of exceptions do not attack any of the findings. This objection appears to be well taken. The specifications set forth, first: That the court abused its discretion in denying the defendant a continuance of the trial of the case for a week or ten days; and, second: That the evidence does not support the decision in this, that in this character of a case the plaintiff was obliged to prove title in herself from a paramount source; it having been shown that defendant Lender was in actual possession of the said lands described in the action; that plaintiff failed to establish title, and failed to show the necessary evidence to prove title in plaintiff. It was therefore error for the court to allow plaintiff to attack defendant's title; and, third, that the decision is against law, in that the court erred in overruling the defendant's objections to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence to establish title in plaintiff; fourth, that there was no evidence to show any invalidity of the defendant's title.

In Beeson v. Schloss, 183 Cal. 618, 192 P. 292, the court said: "The question of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings cannot be considered on appeal from the judgment where the bill of exceptions relied on contains no specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence"—citing Millar v. Millar, 175 Cal. 799, 167 P. 394, L. R. A. 1918B, 415, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 184; Carter v. McCanty, 181 Cal. 749, 186 P. 346. "Consequently, we are unable to consider the point that the evidence in the case does not sustain the findings." The same ruling was held in the case of Schultz v. City of Venice, 200 Cal. 50, 251 P. 913.

[2, 3] Notwithstanding the insufficiency of the specifications in that they do not attack the findings of the court or set forth wherein the evidence is insufficient to sustain the findings, we have examined the transcript, and find that the testimony shows that at the time of the execution of the deed from Alfred A. Burt, Alfred A. Burt was in possession of the premises referred to, claiming to be the owner thereof, and occupied the position of an owner and grantor in possession. This was a sufficient source from which to deraign title by the plaintiff. Rockey v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 158 P. 712. It may be stated here that whatever title the appellant claimed is derived from the tax deed based upon an alleged assessment of lot 18 against Alfred A. Burt as the owner thereof. Thus both claimants, if title is possessed by either, deraign the same from a common source. After showing title in herself, the plaintiff introduced affidavits establishing the invalidity of the assessment constituting the basis upon which a deed was thereafter executed by and on the part of the state of California, through which source title was purported to be conveyed to the defendant William Lender. The assessment was in the following words: "No. 1590 Factory Center, as per Bk. 23, P. 1819 Maps, records of L. A. County, Lot 18, Blk. 5, assessed to Alfred A. Burt Lowest acceptable bid $1.14." The notice of sale was in the same language, and concluded with the statement that it would be sold for the amount due including penalties and costs, without stating or indicating the amount due on account of penalties to be added to the delinquent taxes, and also failed to indicate in any way that penalties were included in the amount of the tax. In the case of Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 236 P. 371, such a description of the properties sold and the amount of money to be paid therefor, as set forth in the notice in this case, has been held insufficient to sustain a tax deed. After reciting the facts in that case, which are exactly the same, relating to the assessment and published notice of sale, as the circumstances with which we are dealing, the court there said: "It thus appears that although the proposed sale was conditional upon non-payment of penalties, the delinquent list as published was defective in that it failed to state the amount of those penalties. Respondents contend, and apparently there is no answer thereto, that by reason of this defect, the subsequent sale to the State was void, and that consequently the deed relied upon by appellant was likewise void."

[4] The state of California, not having acquired a good title to the lot in question, by reason of the sale to it could not, of course, convey anything additional to what it had acquired upon such sale. The record shows that, after obtaining a deed from the state of California to lot 18, based upon the tax sale and conveyance in pursuance thereof, the defendant Lender began an action to quiet title, and obtained judgment quieting title as against two certain defendants named, respectively, Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation, and Frank W. Dishbrow. No judgment was entered against the grantor of the plaintiff in this action. The record shows that, some time prior to the beginning of the last action to quiet title, Alfred A. Burt had executed a trust deed wherein the Title Guarantee & Trust Company, a corporation, was named as trustee, and the appellant's claim now is that, by reason of the action just referred to, wherein the title of Lender was quieted as against the trustee named in the trust deed, the trustor or the person who executed the trust deed is also bound and foreclosed of any right to the lot in question by reason of the judgment quieting title as against the trustee named in the trust deed. This contention, however, is untenable. The case of MacLeod v. Moran, 153 Cal. 97, 94 P. 604, approved in the case of Hollywood Lumber Co. v. Love, 155 Cal. 270, 100 P. 698, completely answers the contention of the appellant, in that it is held in both cases that, while a deed of trust does include a power authorizing a trustee to make a conveyance in the event that the money to secure the payment of which the trust deed is executed is not repaid, a trust deed does not divest the trustor of his ownership in the property. Or, as said in the MacLeod Case, quoting from the syllabus: "The legal title in the trustees is conveyed solely for the purpose of security, and carries no other incident of ownership than the right to convey upon default, but leaves a legal estate in the trustor or his successors as against all persons other than the trustees and those lawfully claiming under them." There is no pretense that Lender claims or ever claimed under the trustee named in the trust deed executed by Alfred A. Burt. To support appellant's contention, the case of Sax v. Clark, 180 Cal. 287, 180 P. 821, is cited. The Sax Case differs from the case at bar in just the particulars we have mentioned. In the Sax Case a party was claiming as a successor to or under the trustee. The trustee being in such a case a predecessor in interest, of course his successor in interest was bound, but claiming through or under a trustee is entirely different from claiming adversely to the owner of the premises by reason of a judgment quieting title only against the trustee.

[5] The appellant also contends that the court erred in refusing a continuance of the trial of this cause on account of an injury suffered by his attorney. The bill of exceptions fails to show any request for a continuance, or any motion made for that purpose. The bill of exceptions contains only a certificate of a physician, which is in the following words: "June 1, 1926. This is to certify that Mr. J. J. McKenna, wife and daughter are confined to their home for an indefinite length of time, due to injuries received in an automobile accident. Signed: C. C. Phillips, M. D. Attending Physician." The bill of exceptions does not show that any request was made to the court for a continuance. The bill of exceptions does not show that the appellant sought to obtain other counsel, or whether he could or could not obtain counsel, if a reasonable delay were granted. Upon motion for new trial, affidavits were presented to the trial court showing that the attorneys for the defendant named had met with an automobile accident, and that certain counsel appeared for them out of courtesy. The affidavits, however, do not disclose that anything additional could be presented, save and except the matters which we have considered.

The entire case being a matter of record, and the records being before the trial court, and it not appearing that any other or different conclusion could be reached than that which had been reached, the court very properly denied the motion for new trial.

There being no merit in appellant's contentions, the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; F. B. Brown, Judge.

Mandamus by Richard F. Robertson against Arthur B. Langford, County Auditor of Santa Clara County. Writ denied, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Hearing denied by Supreme Court: SHENK, J., dissenting.

George W. Waldorf and Jones & Boalt, all of San Jose, for appellant.

Fred L. Thomas, Dist. Atty., and John P. Fitzgerald, Chief Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Jose, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from an order and judgment of the superior court of the state of California in and for the county of Santa Clara, denying plaintiff's prayer for a writ of mandate commanding defendant as county auditor to draw his warrant for the salary of plaintiff as justice of the peace of the city of San Jose. A statement of the case follows:

Pursuant to the notice of election of officers given by the proper authorities of Santa Clara county the appellant, Richard F. Robertson, became a candidate at both the primary and general elections held in the year 1926 for the office of justice of the peace of the city of San Jose. At the general election appellant, receiving the highest number of votes cast, was declared elected to said office by the board of supervisors of said county of Santa Clara, and a certificate of election to said office was issued to appellant. Thereafter appellant duly qualified as such official, giving the necessary bond, properly approved, taking the requisite oath, and filing and recording said oath and bond as required by law. Respondent does not question either the validity of plaintiff's election or his qualification to hold the office of justice of the peace of the city of San Jose if said office has a legal existence, but maintains that at the time of said election and at all times subsequent thereto said office of justice of the peace of the city of San Jose did not legally exist, for the reason that the charter of the city of San Jose makes full provision for a municipal court, clothed with all the powers and endowed with all the jurisdiction of justice of the peace, and that, therefore, under the Constitution of the state there is no room for any other inferior court. It is the further contention of respondent Auditor that, assuming the existence of said office and the right of appellant to receive salary, the liability to pay said salary is with the city of San Jose and is not a valid obligation of the county of Santa Clara.

The city of San Jose is within the territorial limits of Santa Clara county; said city is the county seat of Santa Clara county. It may be added that no question is presented concerning the salary or the amount thereof. It is conceded that the salary of the office, if such office exists, is $2,400 per annum, the city of San Jose being a city of the second and three-quarters class.

The Constitution of the state of California provides:

Article 6, § 1: "The judicial power of the state shall be vested in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a supreme court, district courts of appeal, superior courts, such municipal courts as may be established in any city or city and county, and such inferior courts as the legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county or city and county."

Article 6, § 11: "The legislature shall determine the number of each of the inferior courts in incorporated cities or towns, and in townships, counties, or cities and counties, according to the population thereof and the number of judges or justices thereof, and shall fix by law the powers, duties and responsibilities of each of such courts and of the judges or justices thereof." (Remainder of section omitted.)

Acting under the powers thus limited the Legislature enacted section 103, Code of Civil Procedure, which reads in part as follows, deleted to illustrate its application to the instant case: "In every city of second and three-fourths class there must be one justice of the peace, to be elected in like manner by the electors of such cities or towns respectively; and such justices of the peace of cities shall have the same jurisdiction, civil and criminal, as justices of the peace of townships and township justices' courts. Said justices of the peace and justices' courts shall also have jurisdiction of all proceedings for the violation of any ordinance of any city in which courts are established, both civil and criminal, and of all actions for the collection of any license required by any ordinance of any such city, and generally exercise all powers, duties and jurisdiction, civil and criminal, of police judges, judges of police courts, recorders' courts or mayor's courts, within said city."

If this were the entire law upon the subject there would be little difficulty in determining the present issue; in fact the present issue would never have arisen. However, the Constitution of this state recognized the wisdom of local government in cities of certain population. By section 8 of article 11 provision was made for local charters and the mode of framing and adopting the same. Section 8½ of article 11 sets forth what such charters may contain. To obtain a clearer understanding of the provisions of section 8½ of article 11, we will first quote the section as it stood in 1911, being the same as the previous enactment of 1896. In 1911 the section, as far as applicable, read: "It shall be competent, in all charters framed under the authority given by section 8 of article eleven of this constitution, to provide, in addition to those provisions allowable by this constitution and by the laws of the state, as follows: 1. For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of police courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the qualifications and compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attaches."

In Ex parte Dolan, 128 Cal. 460, 60 P. 1094, the Supreme Court construed this constitutional provision to mean that the police court created under the provisions of a city charter could not be given exclusive jurisdiction of crimes and misdemeanors cognizable by such a tribunal. The court says: "Under the power given by the constitutional provision, the charter may fix the jurisdiction of the police courts, but no authority is conferred upon the charter by the constitutional provision whereby it may oust any other court of jurisdiction it already had." This case was decided in 1900.

In 1907, while the constitutional provision remained as above cited, the case of Graham v. Mayor of Fresno came before the Supreme Court and the opinion is found in 151 Cal., at page 465, 91 P. 147. In this case we meet practically the same question as is presented in the instant case. The Graham Case involved the application of section 103, Code of Civil Procedure, to the city of Fresno. Concretely, the issue presented was whether the constitutional provision authorizing cities to provide by charter for police courts limited the scope or effect of section 103, Code of Civil Procedure, as far as applied to a city which had, pursuant to constitutional authority, provided by charter for the creation and organization of a police court. The court reaches a conclusion expressed as follows:

"We cannot find in subdivision 1 of section 8½ of article 11 any intention to interfere with the power of the Legislature in the matter of provision for justices of the peace for cities and towns. That subdivision is limited in terms to 'police courts,' and there is no mention whatever therein of justices of the peace or justices' courts. The term 'police court' ordinarily refers to an inferior municipal court with a limited jurisdiction in criminal cases only, a court with the power to try certain misdemeanor cases arising from the violation of state law or municipal ordinance, and with the power to conduct preliminary examinations in cases of felony and certain misdemeanors, and to hold defendants to answer for trial for the same, and does not include the justices' courts established by our law.

"The term should probably be here construed to also include such inferior courts as may properly be held to be purely municipal, though given by the state certain jurisdiction in state as distinguished from municipal matters, courts coming within the class specified in the constitution as 'such inferior courts as the legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town or city and county,' such as a city recorder's court or a mayor's court. * * * But the city justice of the peace provided for by section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure does not come within this category. * * * Justices of the peace are part of the constitutional judicial system of the state, having concurrent jurisdiction with superior courts in certain matters expressly given by the constitution (art. VI, sec. 11), and also having such jurisdiction in civil and criminal cases as is given by the general laws of the state to all justices of the peace. In this regard there is no distinction whatever between township and city justices. * * * A city justice is simply a part of this general state system, elected for a certain subdivision thereof. * * * The constitution in terms provides that the legislature shall determine the number of such justices of the peace to be elected in townships, incorporated cities and towns, or cities and counties, and shall fix by law the powers, duties, and responsibilities of such office (art. VI, sec. 11). In view of the explicit provisions of the constitution as to justices of the peace for cities and towns as well as townships and cities and counties, and the decisions of this court in regard thereto, it is inconceivable that this amendment" (referring to the then existing subdivision 1 of section 8½, article XI, state Constitution) "limited in terms to police courts, was intended to trench in the slightest degree upon the power of the legislature to provide for justices' courts in cities and towns as part of the general state system of justices' courts, and we cannot give it any such effect."

In 1914 the Constitution was amended, and paragraph 1, section 8½, article 11, was amended to read as follows: "For the constitution, regulation, government, and jurisdiction of police courts, and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the qualifications and compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attaches; and for the establishment, constitution, regulation, government and jurisdiction of municipal courts, with such civil and criminal jurisdiction as by law may be conferred upon inferior courts; and for the manner in which, the times at which, and the terms for which the judges of such courts shall be elected or appointed, and for the qualifications and compensation of said judges and of their clerks and attaches; provided, such municipal courts shall never be deprived of the jurisdiction given inferior courts created by general law. In any city or any city and county, when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court; and pending actions, trials, and all pending business of inferior courts within the territory of such city or city and county, upon the establishment of any such municipal court, shall be and become pending in such municipal court, and all records of such inferior courts shall thereupon be and become the records of such municipal court."

The charter of the city of San Jose, as adopted in the year 1915 and approved by the Legislature of the state of California in said year (Stats. 1915, p. 1897), provides as follows: "There is hereby constituted a police court in and for the city of San Jose, consisting of one police judge. * * * Said police court and police judge shall have all the powers, authority and jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, that are now or may hereafter be conferred by law upon justices of the peace in California, and in addition thereto, said police court and police judge shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all proceedings for the violation of any ordinance of the city of San Jose. In all cases in which the police judge is a party" or in which he is disqualified or unable to act, "any justice of the peace of the county of Santa Clara may, at the request of the president of the council or of said police judge, act in his place or stead."

The respondent herein concedes the force and effect of the cited case of Graham v. Mayor of Fresno, supra, as applying only to the constitutional provision as it read at the time of the decision. It is contended that under the present reading of the Constitution the Graham Case has not the slightest bearing upon the question under consideration.

[1] Prior to 1911 the judicial power of the state was vested in the Senate, in a Supreme Court, superior courts, justices of the peace, and such inferior courts as the Legislature might establish in any incorporated city or town or city and county. Article 6, § 1, Const. In that year the Constitution was amended to read: "The judicial power of the state shall be vested in the Senate, sitting as a court of impeachment, in a Supreme Court, District Courts of Appeal, superior courts and such inferior courts as the legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county, or city and county." Article 6, § 1, Const. The amendment to the section in 1924 simply added "such municipal courts as may be established in any city or city and county."

It will be thus noted that the framers of the Constitution as it now stands intended to and did oust from the judicial scheme justices courts as such, and with the exception of the courts named, with jurisdiction therein fixed, left to the Legislature complete freedom in the establishment and constitution of all other inferior courts. It seems clear, whatever may have been the view of the courts prior to 1911, that since that date the justice's court as such lost any peculiar identity it may theretofore have had as a constitutional tribunal, and became merged within the general term of inferior courts as the Legislature might see fit to establish.

It was contended, after the amendment of 1911, that the office of justice of the peace was abolished. This contention was made in a proceeding entitled, "In the Matter of Application of J. A. Woods for a writ of Habeas Corpus," reported in 161 Cal. 238, 118 P. 792 (1911). The opinion of the court says: "The recent amendment of sections 1, 11, and 15 of article VI of the Constitution does not abolish the justices courts and other inferior courts which had been previously established by acts of the legislature. They remain in existence with the jurisdiction vested in them by the acts creating them, until the legislature shall, in the exercise of the power given by the section as amended, otherwise provide."

Later, in People v. Creeks, 170 Cal. 368, 149 P. 821, the court adhered to the views expressed in the Woods Case.

Section 11 of article 6 was amended in 1911 to the same effect, namely, by the omission of all reference to justices' courts or justices of the peace as such. Likewise section 15 of article 6 carried on in its amendment the scheme and plan of dropping justices' courts and justices of the peace from express constitutional classification and authority.

With these amendments before us we conclude that since 1911 the justice court, whether in cities or cities and counties, townships or counties, has existed subject to the will of the Legislature, and that the power of the Legislature to retain that court called justice's court, or to provide other inferior courts, either supplementary to or supplanting the justice's court, is unlimited except in one particular. And that particular is that where the power of the Legislature is constitutionally limited with regard to the establishment or organization of any inferior court it is likewise so limited with regard to justice courts. In other words, we find the organic law providing specifically for courts of general jurisdiction and establishing the jurisdiction of the said courts and the qualifications of the judges thereof, and the terms, limiting the power of the Legislature over such courts. The same organic law then leaves with the Legislature the power to provide the minor tribunals to cover jurisdiction not therein fully provided for.

Thus we approach article 11 of the Constitution. The subject of this article is cities, counties and towns. Sections 8 and 8½ of article 11 were and are framed and designed upon the principle of local self-government in as far, at least, as municipal affairs might be involved. Quoting Judge Angellotti, then Chief Justice, in Ex parte Braun, 141 Cal. 209, 74 P. 782: "Whatever conflict may be found in the opinions of" the Supreme "Court as to the precise meaning of the term ["municipal affairs"], it has always been conceded by all the justices that the object" of the constitutional provision "was to secure to the municipality that had" under its provisions "adopted a charter for its own government, the maintenance of its charter provisions in municipal matters, and to deprive the Legislature of the power, by laws general in form, to interfere in the government and management of the municipality."

Section 8 of article 11 provides in detail for the framing of city charters and the approval thereof. Section 8½ then sets forth what such charters may provide in addition to the provisions allowed by the Constitution and by the laws of the state, the italicized clause being synonymous with the clause "any other or general provision of law to the contrary notwithstanding."

Section 8½ has been quoted in full hereinbefore, and we may now return to further analysis thereof with respect both to its present form and its history and the construction placed upon it in its prior form as indicative of the construction it should now receive.

As we have seen, section 8½, as it formerly stood, permitted the constitution, regulation, government and jurisdiction of police courts, with nothing further defining the term or specifying or in anywise pointing out the character of such a tribunal. Many cities under this privision attempted to vest in this court an exclusive local jurisdiction, and in some instances attempted to clothe this court with the civil jurisdiction of inferior courts. Such attempts met with the disapproval of the Supreme Court, as in the cases cited, supra. For instance, in Ex parte Dolan, 128 Cal. 460, 60 P. 1094, the holding to the effect that exclusive jurisdiction of misdemeanors was concurrently in the police court and the justice's court. Also, Graham v. Mayor of Fresno, supra, holding that the police court under the charter was purely local and in no wise a substitute for or embracing the jurisdiction of the justice's court, this latter case announcing that pursuant to constitutional provisions the justice's court was an essential and integral part of the judicial plan of the state. Then in 1911, as noted, the severing and disjoinder of justices' courts from the judicial scheme as outlined in the Constitution.

[2, 3] We assume as a matter of construction that when the organic law was amended in 1914 the framers had in mind all of these decisions and were mindful of the constitutional change of 1911. In the construction of a statute it is assumed that the Legislature knew the existing laws, and that it had knowledge of existing judicial decisions, and enacted statutes in the light of such decisions as have a direct bearing upon them. 23 Cal. Jur. 783, and cases therein cited. It is settled that the court, in order to determine correctly the construction to be placed upon constitutional provisions, has undoubted power to take into consideration the course of legislation and judicial decisions prior to the adoption of such provisions and the evils intended to be remedied. The provisions must be considered with reference to their history, the prior state of the law, the conditions existing prior to their adoption and the good to be gained. Mundell v. Lyons, 182 Cal. 292, 187 P. 950; Matter of Russell, 163 Cal. 672, 126 P. 875, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 152; 5 Cal. Jur. 592.

[4] Having these aids to construction before us, we note that in 1914 the Constitution was amended as indicated hereinbefore (sec. 8½, art. 11), and remains to date as then amended, although changed in other particulars and readopted in 1918. The amendment gave to cities, in addition to the power theretofore granted, the right to provide for the constitution, regulation, government, jurisdiction of municipal courts and judges thereof; and to make more clear the intent it was specifically provided that such municipal courts shall never be deprived of the jurisdiction given inferior courts created by law. The language thus italicized might have been more fortunately chosen. It would be unwarranted to conclude that it was intended to mean that no subsequent enactment or change in the organic law could effect that object. It is a fair and reasonable construction to interpret the meaning to be that no such municipal court shall ever be constituted or established possessing less jurisdiction than that given inferior courts under the general law; in other words, that such courts should absorb all of the jurisdiction remaining without that of courts of record. However, this construction is not essential to this decision, but, if adopted, more clearly illustrates the intent of the framers of the constitutional provision.

Going further, the Constitution then provides: "In any city * * * when such municipal court has been established, there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court." This provision by its plain words demonstrates an intent to invest in the municipal court all of the jurisdiction possible to invest in an inferior court. The framers of the provision knew that no power could be conferred on a city to establish a court exercising jurisdiction coextensive with or trenching upon that of the superior court provided for in the Constitution. And knowing this, the provision was adopted with an intent to definitely allocate all of the jurisdiction remaining to be vested in this inferior municipal court.

We conclude, therefore, that at the time of the adoption of the charter in 1915 the city of San Jose was authorized to provide in that charter for such a court as would entirely suspend and render unnecessary the provisions of section 103 of the Code of Civil Procedure in so far as it might be made applicable to a city of that class operating under its own charter.

Appellant, merely for the purpose of argument, however, is ready to concede the correctness of this conclusion. But, he urges, granting the power in the city under its charter to establish such a court, nevertheless it has not exercised that power. Appellant urges that all that the city has done is to establish a police court such as was formerly permitted under the old provisions of the Constitution, and such as referred to in the case of Graham v. Mayor of Fresno, supra, and that the municipal court permitted under the amendment has never been established.

This brings us to the city charter.

As hereinbefore outlined, the charter specifically provides: "Article XI.—There is hereby constituted a police court in and for the city of San Jose, consisting of one police judge. * * *

"Said police court and police judge shall have all the powers, authority and jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, that are now or may hereafter be conferred by law upon justices of the peace in California, and in addition thereto, said police court and police judge shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all proceedings for the violation of any ordinance of the city of San Jose." St. 1915, P. 1897.

The said charter then provides that in case of disqualification, sickness or inability to act, any justice of the peace of Santa Clara county may serve.

The jurisdiction of justices of the peace in California is set forth in the Code of Civil Procedure—sections 103 and 112, and many other sections scattered throughout the Code of Civil Procedure and Penal Code. We deem it unnecessary to cite each and every section of all of the codes having a bearing upon this question of the jurisdiction of a justice's court or justice of the peace. It will suffice to say that justices' courts have jurisdiction in all matters cognizable by inferior courts. By this it is not meant that this jurisdiction is inherent, because no jurisdiction attaches to such a tribunal unless especially conferred. But the Legislature by statute, without enumerating each specific statute or code section, has conferred upon the justice's court a jurisdiction covering all matters not vested in the courts of record, and in some instances, pursuant to constitutional freedom, it has conferred a jurisdiction concurrent with the Superior Court.

[5] Laws, whether statutory or by way of charter, may be enacted by reference. Greene v. Town of Lakeport, 74 Cal. App. 1, 239 P. 702; 23 Cal. Jur. 685, § 75 and cases cited.

[6, 7] Therefore it will be at once noted that the charter did provide for a tribunal exactly filling that classed as a municipal court as provided in the amended Constitution, section 8½, article 11.

The sole question remaining then has to deal with the name by which the court is designated, to wit, police court. Appellant's contention is that no matter what jurisdiction may be conferred, yet the name police court so distinguishes and characterizes the tribunal as to render abortive any attempt at enlargement of the jurisdiction which might have been vested in the old police court formerly provided for. The argument is neither convincing nor persuasive. The character of a court is determined not by its name but by the nature of its jurisdiction and functions. City of Colton v. Superior Court [Cal. App.] 257 P. 909; Ex parte Soto, 88 Cal. 624, 26 P. 530; Ex parte Baxter, 3 Cal. App. 720, 86 P. 998. The language found on page 720 of 3 Cal. App. (86 P. 998) in the Baxter Case is particularly applicable and is to the effect that to limit a court by name would be to grasp at form rather than substance.

We conclude that the designation of the city court as a police court is of no importance; that the character of the court is to be determined by the jurisdiction conferred. This is more apparent when we consider that when the charter conferred upon this court the jurisdiction it did, thus fulfilling the Constitution's grant of power, then, under the plain terms of the section 8½, article 11, another inferior court could not be maintained within the city.

We hold that section 8½, article 11, of the state Constitution, should be construed and is construed to give to cities coming within its scope the power to establish a court combining the jurisdiction of all inferior courts, and that the name given the court in this instance does not indicate a limitation as against the express terms of the charter. In other words, the Constitution now gives to these cities the power and right to provide for themselves such municipal courts as they may determine to be necessary, limited only to the jurisdiction of inferior courts. It does not confer power to establish a police court and then in addition thereto the municipal court referred to in section 8½ of article 11. Both cannot exist in the same city, and the determination of which is established follows from the jurisdiction which is conferred rather than the name applied. Summing it up, the power conferred by the Constitution permits the city to establish a municipal court with all the jurisdiction that may be conferred upon inferior courts. And this the city of San Jose has done. By the further provisions of the Constitution, when this has been done there shall be no other court inferior to the superior court. It is too plain for further diagram.

From what has been set forth herein it follows that plaintiff has no claim for salary by reason of his election to an office which does not exist, and therefore the defendant auditor was within his duties in refusing to issue to plaintiff the warrant sought.

Judgment affirmed.

BALDWIN et al. v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. et al.★

McGUFFIN v. SAME.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 18, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 17, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1929.

1. Railroads ⚷351(2)—Instruction it was not negligence for railway company to not have signal or light at crossing where motorists were struck held misleading, under evidence showing light maintained at crossing could be misunderstood.

Instruction, that it was not negligence of itself for railway company to not have wigwag installed or not to have crossing where motorists were struck lighted with artificial lights, held erroneous and misleading, where evidence showed that there was a gate and light at crossing, but that light was in such position that it might have been taken for tail-light of automobile.

2. Railroads ⚷307(3)—Railroad voluntarily erecting signal device at crossing must operate it so it will not become menace because of being misunderstood.

When railway company voluntarily erects and maintains signal devices, whether they consist of wigwags, lights, or gates, such instrumentalities must be operated so as to constitute warning of danger, and not a contrivance which may, from its manner of operation, become a menace by reason of its being readily misunderstood.

3. Highways ⚷197(1)—Persons using public highways may assume highway will not be obstructed by device increasing peril.

Every person using public highway has right to assume that highway will not be obstructed by any device that will lead to or increase his peril in use of highway.

4. Railroads ⚷307(4)—Railway companies maintaining gate certain height above highway at night must be held to have known law regarding automobile headlights.

Railroad in erecting and maintaining gate across highway 3½ feet above highway in nighttime must be held to have had knowledge of law regulating adjustment of automobile headlights which, if law is observed, brings rays of light from automobile to surface of highway at specified distance.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 281 P. 380

5. Appeal and error 🔑1170(9)—Railroads 🔑351(2) — Instruction on motorist's duty to have automobile under control on approaching crossing held erroneous and prejudicial, where testimony showed no knowledge of crossing (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In action for damages for death of motorists killed at crossing at nighttime by electric car, instruction that it was duty of motorist driving, in approaching crossing, to have automobile under such control that he could stop it in case crossing appeared dangerous, held erroneously given, where evidence showed no knowledge by either driver or guest in automobile of presence of crossing and error was not cured by Const. art. 6, § 4½.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1170(9)—Railroads 🔑351(2)—Instruction on motorist's duty to stop, look, etc., when approaching railroad crossing, held erroneous and prejudicial, where evidence showed no knowledge of crossing (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In actions for damages for death of motorists killed at crossing at nighttime by electric car, instruction that, if automobile driver's view of approaching car was obstructed by any objects so that he could not see car approaching, ordinary care required him to stop and look and listen, held erroneously given, where evidence showed no knowledge by either driver or guest in automobile of presence of crossing and error was not cured by Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeals from Superior Court, Orange County; Z. B. West, Judge.

Actions for damages for death by Nellie Baldwin and others, and by Mrs. James T. McGuffin, against the Pacific Electric Railway Company and others. The two cases were tried together, and from the judgments plaintiffs appeal. Reversed.

Bertrand J. Wellman, of Los Angeles, and Norval N. Edwards, of Orange, for appellants.

E. E. Morris and Frank Karr, both of Los Angeles, and S. W. Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

PLUMMER, J. By stipulation, the two cases above named were tried together before the same jury, and are before this court upon a single record. One action is based upon the death of James T. McGuffin, the husband of Mrs. Addie McGuffin, and one action is based upon the death of Elwood E. Baldwin, the husband of Mrs. Nellie Baldwin. The deaths of the respective parties were caused by a collision between an automobile driven by James T. McGuffin (in which Elwood E. Baldwin was riding as a guest), with an electric car owned and operated by the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company, a corporation.

The record shows that on or about 10:30 p. m. of the 18th day of May, 1924, James T. McGuffin and Elwood E. Baldwin were returning by automobile from the town of Santa Ana, to their homes in the town of Whittier; that they were driving northward along that certain state highway known as and called the "Fullerton State Highway"; that at a certain point on said highway, where its direction is northerly and southerly, it is intercepted by an electric railway track owned by, and upon which electric cars are operated by, the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company, a corporation, and also by a certain other railroad owned by, and upon which the Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company, a corporation, operated trains drawn by steam locomotives. The record further shows that these railroads, which run in a westerly and easterly direction, are somewhere between 100 and 200 feet apart, and that the line owned and operated by the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company lies to the south of the line owned and operated by the Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company. It appears by the record that the two defendant companies maintained and operated gates across the highway where their lines intercept the same. One gate is located a very few feet south of the line maintained by the Pacific Electric Railway Company, and one gate is maintained a few feet north of the line maintained and operated by the Los Angeles & Salt Lake Railroad Company. These gates are operated by a watchman stationed in a tower some 40 feet easterly from the east boundary line of the Fullerton highway. It appears, also, that somewhere in the neighborhood of 1,000 feet east of the Fullerton highway the two railroad lines intersect each other, and one of the duties of the towerman is to signal to the trains approaching on either railroad relative to the right of way which may belong to the trains being operated upon the respective railroads. The improved portion, or what we may call the concrete slab of the Fullerton highway was, at the time of the collision herein referred to, 18 feet in width. The gate operated by the respective companies, situate south of the Pacific Railway Company's line, was lowered from the east side of the highway. It appears that one end of the gate operates upon a pivot attached to a post east of said highway. The gate in question was in the shape of the letter "Y," having two boards which extended about halfway across the improved slab, forming a juncture there, and then continuing out over the remaining portion of the highway as one board only. On the night in question it appears that a red lantern had been suspended under the easterly portion of the gate at a point about midway of the east one-half of the concrete slab. The position of the lantern thus suspended would be about the center of the portion of the highway traversed by automobiles being driven northward. On the night mentioned. the automobile driven by McGuffin, and in which Baldwin was riding as a guest, was traveling in a northerly direction. The red lantern suspended under the gate was so constructed that the light was projected therefrom in a southerly direction, having a shield or back which prevented the rays extending in a northerly direction. It also would appear that the lantern was so constructed as not to illuminate or disclose the presence of the gate from which it was suspended.

There is testimony in the record from which the jury could conclude that the night was dark and foggy. There is also testimony in the record from which the jury might conclude that it was a light night and that the moon was shining. Testimony was introduced, which seemed to be uncontroverted, that there was a full moon on the night of the collision. This evidence appears only from the World's Almanac, which of course does not take into account either the presence or absence of fog. In their course northerly it appears that at some little distance south of the point where the collision occurred, the automobile in which the deceased parties were riding passed certain other cars traveling in the same direction, and upon coming to where the highway is intersected by the Pacific Electric Railway, apparently swerved to the left, at least was at that point driven along the westerly half of the concrete slab through the one-board portion of the gate referred to, and either was stopped or stalled upon the railroad track, or was hit by an electric car propelled by the agents of the Pacific Electric Railway Company, at the instant it came upon the line of the company. The contention of the plaintiffs was, in the court below and here, that the driver of the automobile mistook the red light suspended below the gate, as we have mentioned, for the tail-light of an automobile proceeding northerly, and turned to the left to avoid coming in contact therewith and to effect a passage by such automobile, and at that instant discovered the presence of the one-board portion of the gate, and in an attempt to avoid a collision therewith, slowed down the automobile to such a degree that it either stalled or stopped upon the railroad track and was hit or struck by the car operated by the electric company when it reached the railroad track. There is considerable testimony in the record to the effect that there was a distinct interval of time between the sound produced by breaking through the gate and the noise of the collision of the electric car with the automobile. There is also testimony in the record that it was one continuous crash; that one sound followed the other instantly. The action is primarily based upon the alleged negligent manner in which the red light was suspended beneath the gate; that it was suspended in such a manner as not to disclose the presence of the gate, but in such a manner as to be readily mistaken by an automobile driver for the tail-light of another machine traveling in a northerly direction. The allegation of the complaint in each case is substantially in these words in so far as this question is concerned: "That said defendants carelessly, negligently, and unlawfully failed and neglected to sufficiently light and illuminate said gates whereby they could not be seen or distinguished and because whereof the said automobile in which the said Elwood L. Baldwin was riding ran into and against said gates and was thereby caused to stall on the said railway tracks of the defendant Pacific Electric Railway Company, and the defendants further carelessly, negligently and unlawfully drove, maintained, and operated said electric car whereby the same struck and collided with the said stalled automobile with great force and violence whereby, and because of the negligence of the defendants in failing to light and illuminate said gates as above stated, and negligence in operating the said electric car as above stated, injuries were inflicted upon the said Elwood L. Baldwin from which he then and there died." The gate, when lowered, was about 3½ feet above the highway, and had, within a few feet of the farthest end thereof, that is, the end farthest from the base, a leg which dropped down to the pavement and rested upon a coil of springs which, for a few moments when lowered, would cause the gate to oscillate slightly and raise the red light up and down for the period of time that the gate oscillated.

The place where the collision occurred established that the automobile was traveling along the left side or left one-half thereof, which would be the westerly portion of the concrete slab. The record contains testimony to the effect that a crossing whistle was blown by the electric car, and that a bell or gong was sounded in the tower when the gate was lowered. There is also testimony in the record, of several witnesses, that they heard no whistles from the electric car until the blowing of a few short whistles immediately preceding the collision. There is further testimony in the record that the lights of the electric car were seen by occupants of other automobiles following the car driven by the deceased McGuffin. There is no testimony in the record, which we have been able to discover, which indicates that either one of the deceased was familiar with the crossing in question, or had any knowledge of its existence. The rails of the electric road were flush with the pavement, and our attention has not been called to any objects, other than those which we have mentioned, which would indicate the presence of an intersecting railroad. The record also contains evidence, from which the conclusion might properly be drawn, that for the last 150 or 200 feet traversed by the automobile before the collision, it was moving at a speed of about 25 miles per hour, and as it reached the gate suddenly slowed down and moved forward to the railroad tracks upon which it was either stopped or stalled. The distance between the gate and the nearest rail was about 8 feet.

From the foregoing statement it is readily apparent that the jury might have reached either one or the other of two conclusions, to wit: That the lantern hung beneath the gate was a like color with the tail-lights of automobiles, and was placed in such a position that an automobile driver, unfamiliar with the surroundings, might have readily mistaken the light suspended from the gate, for the tail-light of an automobile and swerved to the left in order to avoid the same, and at that instant, perceived the presence of the gate, and immediately did what he could to stop the forward progress of the machine, and in the emergency of so doing, either stopped or stalled his engine, with the automobile resting on the railroad track. Or the jury might have come to the conclusion that at least the automobile driver was driving along without taking the reasonable and necessary precautions for his own safety and the safety of his guest, which the law requires to be exercised by all automobile drivers to escape the charge of contributory negligence in the event of injury. Under these circumstances, it becomes necessary to consider the alleged errors of the court in giving instructions to the jury.

At the request of the plaintiffs, the court, among others, gave the following instructions to the jury: "While a railroad crossing is a warning of danger, if the conditions are such that it cannot be seen or known to a person exercising reasonable care, it is not a warning, and all that is said in these instructions about a railroad crossing being a warning of danger, only applies to those crossings that a reasonably careful person could see and know were there." This instruction correctly and properly called the attention of the jury to the fact, as we have hereinbefore stated, that there was nothing in the testimony indicating the presence of a railroad other than what we have herein set forth and considered. The testimony does not show that there was any railroad embankment on either side of the highway, nor does it show that there was any visible portion of the railroad on either side of the highway, and if the testimony is true that the night was dark and somewhat foggy, it is evident that the lights of the automobile in which the deceased parties were traveling would not disclose any objects save those which were immediately upon or across the highway.

[1] Following the instructions given at the request of the plaintiffs, the court, at the request of the defendant, gave three instructions alleged by the appellants to constitute reversible error. These instructions are, in the order in which we will consider them, numbered, respectively, XXIX, XVI, and X.

Instruction No. XXIX is in the following words: "You are instructed that there is no law requiring the railroad company or either of the defendants to place or maintain any wigwag signal at this crossing nor to maintain any artificial lights at said crossing, and therefore it was not negligence of itself for the railway company to not have a wigwag installed or not to have said crossing lighted with artificial lights."

Instruction No. XVI reads as follows: "It was the duty of Mr. McGuffin in approaching this crossing to approach the same with his automobile under such control that he could stop the same in case the crossing appeared dangerous, and if he failed to so approach the crossing, then he was guilty of negligence, and if such negligence contributed proximately in any decree to the happening of the accident, then Mrs. McGuffin cannot recover, and if such negligence was alone the proximate cause of the accident, neither of the plaintiffs in these cases can recover and your verdict should be for the defendants in both cases."

Instruction No. X is as follows: "In approaching this crossing if Mr. McGuffin's view of the approaching car was obstructed by any objects whatever so that he could not see the car approaching, then ordinary care for his safety and that of the safety of Mr. Baldwin, required him to stop and then to look and listen for approaching cars, and to stop at some place before reaching the tracks, in a place of safety where looking would be effective and where he would have an unobstructed view of the track, and then and there see and hear that which could have been seen or heard approaching upon the tracks with the use of ordinary care, and if he failed in this respect he was negligent, and if such negligence contributed proximately in any degree, no matter how slightly, to the happening of the accident, Mrs. McGuffin cannot recover, and if such negligence was alone the proximate cause of the accident neither of the plaintiffs can recover and your verdicts should be for the defendants in both cases."

[2, 3] As an abstract proposition of law, instruction No. XXIX is a correct statement, but as applied to the circumstances disclosed by this case, it was not only erroneous but also misleading. The law is well settled that unless there is some statute or ordinance requiring the installation of a wigwag or other signal, or the illumination by artificial lights of a railroad crossing, a railroad company is under no necessity of installing signals or lights; but it is also the law that when a railroad company voluntarily assumes the task of erecting and maintaining signal devices, whether they consist of wigwags, lights, or gates, such instrumentalities must be so operated as to constitute a warning of danger, and not a contrivance which may, from its manner of operation, become a menace by reason of its being readily misunderstood. Thus, in the present case, while a gate across a highway is not in and of itself a nuisance, it may be so operated as to become such. Every person using a public highway has a right to assume that that highway will not be obstructed by any device that will lead to, or increase, his peril in the use of such highway. The testimony in this case leads unavoidably to the conclusion that if the gate under consideration had not been there, McGuffin and Baldwin would not have met their deaths but would have passed on in safety. This raises the direct question whether the red lantern, suspended in the manner shown by the testimony, was not such as to mislead both of the deceased persons. It also presents a question of fact as to whether the gate thrown across the improved highway, lighted only by a red lantern swung beneath it, was so placed and so operated as to reasonably warn an approaching automobile driver, and so as to be perceived by him at a reasonable distance, to enable any one lawfully using the same to bring his automobile to a stop before reaching the gates. If the gate was not, under the conditions, readily perceivable by an automobile driver at such a distance therefrom as to enable him to bring his machine to a stop, then and in that case it was a menace and not a safety gate. If the gate was not so perceivable at a sufficient distance to warn one of its existence in time to stop, and this is especially true where the evidence does not show that the deceased had knowledge of the railroad, then the jury might have found that the management of the gate constituted a direct and proximate cause of the injury, for the simple reason that upon perceiving the existence of the gate, an automobile driver might very readily, in the emergency calling for sudden action in attempting to stop his machine, stall it upon the railroad track. Almost identical with the situation here presented are the circumstances disclosed in the case of Record v. Pennsylvania R. Co. et al., 76 N. J. Law, 800, 72 A. 62, where the charge was that the gateman had neglected to place warning lights upon a gate suspended across a street, and an automobile driver, failing to see the gate in time to avoid a collision therewith, turned his automobile to one side in order to avoid a collision with the gate and came in contact with a trolley pole. The writer of the opinion in that case used the following language: "By the mere erection of the safety gates the company recognized the crossing as a dangerous one. (Smith v. Atlantic City R. R. Co., 66 N. J. Law, 310, 49 A. 457; 3 Elliott, R. R. 1171.) Without proper management such a fixture, when constructed across the public thoroughfares, would become a public nuisance per se. It is the settled law that the public streets and sidewalks are presumed to be free from obstructions to the full width (Durant v. Palmer, 29 N. J. Law, 544), and an intention to obstruct the public streets by the law-making power of a municipality will not readily be inferred by the courts." It is true that in this case an ordinance required the maintenance of a safety gate and the maintenance of lights at nighttime to indicate its presence. But as we will subsequently show by the authorities, if the maintenance of safety gates is voluntarily assumed, they must be operated with the same care and prudence as though required by ordinance or statute. A case bearing the same title, to wit, Record v. Pennsylvania R. Co. et al., reported in 75 N. J. Law, 311, 67 A. 1040, in an appeal by a different defendant in the same case, it appears from the facts that the driver of the automobile, in order to avoid a collision with the gates, turned to one side and came in contact with a trolley pole. The court there held as in the former case relative to the maintenance of the gate without lights, and further said: "Nor do we think that the sudden turning of the car by the plaintiff in the face of danger showed such a want of reasonable care as to make his alleged negligence a court question." The testimony in that case showed that the automobile driver was not familiar with the railroad crossing, having only passed over it once or twice. That the duty voluntarily assumed by the railroad companies in this case is exactly the same as it would have been if required by statute is amply supported by the authorities.

[4] In the case of Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Charles E. Yingling, 148 Md. 169, 129 A. 36, 41 A. L. R. 398, involving the operation of a safety gate, we find the following statement of the law: "If the accident, however, had taken place during the period of time when the defendant had voluntarily assumed to safeguard the crossing by a watchman or gateman, through the failure of the watchman or gateman to discharge his duty by reason of his absence, failure to signal, or to lower the gates, or of any other proximate default, there can be no question that the failure thus to discharge an obligation voluntarily assumed would have been negligence on the part of the company, as is illustrated by the cases cited by the appellee. Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Wright, 120 Ill. App. 218; Lockridge v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 161 Iowa, 86, 140 N. W. 834, Ann. Cas. 1916A, 158; Roby v. Kansas City Southern R. Co., 130 La. 880, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 355, 58 So. 696; Sights v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 117 Ky. 436, 78 S. W. 172; Dolph v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 74 Conn. 538, 51 A. 525; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Blaul, 175 Ill. 183, 51 N. E. 895; McAdoo v. State, 136 Md. 452, 111 A. 476; Ernst v. Hudson River R. Co., 39 N. Y. 61, 65, 100 Am. Dec. 405." And further, in the same case, the court says: "The undertaking to perform a voluntary act renders the [defendant] liable if he performs it improperly, but not if he merely discontinues the act." Again, in the case of Gallagher v. Montpelier & W. R. R. R., 100 Vt. 299, 137 A. 207, 52 A. L. R. page

744, the Supreme Court of Vermont, in considering the maintenance of gates, adopted the rule which we have stated. We quote therefrom as follows: "While it appears to be well settled that where a railroad company maintains a flagman, gates, or other signals or warnings at a crossing, whether voluntarily (Dolph v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co., 74 Conn. 538, 51 A. 525; Martin v. Baltimore & P. R. Co., 2 Marv. [Del.] 123, 42 A. 442), or by statutory requirement, the public generally has a right to presume that such safeguards will be reasonably maintained and attended (Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Blaul, 175 Ill. 183, 51 N. E. 895), and in the absence of knowledge to the contrary (Sights v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 117 Ky. 436, 78 S. W. 173; Stegner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 94 Minn. 166, 102 N. W. 205; 17 Am. Neg. Rep. 574), the fact that the gates are open (Stegner v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., supra), or automatic bell not ringing (Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Heine, 28 Ind. App. 163, 62 N. E. 455), or that the flagman is absent from his post, or, if present, is not giving a warning of danger (Dolph v. New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. and Martin v. Baltimore & P. R. Co., supra), is an assurance of safety upon which a traveler familiar with the crossing may rely, within reasonable limits, such assurance does not excuse the traveler from using such precaution as a prudent person would use in like circumstances. 33 Cyc. 1029, 1030." Likewise, in 22 Ruling Case Law, p. 1006, § 235, we find the following: "And although a railroad company may be under no duty to construct gates at a crossing, if a company does so, it is bound to operate the same in a prudent manner and is liable for injuries due to a failure to perform its duty." In volume 3 (2d Ed.) Elliott, Railroads, § 1171, the law is thus stated: "It is the duty of a railway company to exercise ordinary care in the management of gates at crossings, and it is responsible to a traveler who is himself without fault and is injured by a negligent management of such gates." As heretofore stated, in the case at bar the lower part of the gate was 3½ feet above the improved portion of the public highway, and the defendants, in erecting and maintaining that gate and placing it across the highway at nighttime, must be held to have had knowledge of the law regulating the adjustment of headlights which, if the law is observed, brings the rays of light from an automobile to the surface of the highway at a specified distance, and so presents a fact whether, without sufficient lighting by the defendant, an approaching automobile driver, having no knowledge of the existence of the railroad, would have warning of the lowered gate, by reason of his headlights disclosing the presence thereof at a sufficient distance to enable the automobile to be brought to a stop at a safe distance from the railroad. In all these matters instruction No. XXIX was well calculated to mislead the jury.

[5, 6] We come next to a consideration of instructions numbered XVI and X. The very case relied upon by the respondents to support their request for the giving of these instructions is predicated upon an element which is entirely lacking so far as disclosed by the testimony in the case at bar. We refer to the case of Christman v. Southern Pac. Co., 38 Cal. App. 196, 175 P. 808. The court in that case used the following language, which distinguishes the circumstances there presented from those which we are considering, to wit: "With complete knowledge that he was approaching a railroad crossing which he knew to be regularly in use, he drove his auto truck at a rate of speed so great that, as he himself knew, his machine was bound to go upon the track, at all times after the moment of his first opportunity to look for the train. Having thus neglected the most obvious precautions for taking care of his own safety at a time and place where he had ample opportunity to use those precautions, the plaintiff is not entitled to recover damages for the injuries received." Had instructions XVI and X been predicated upon the knowledge of the deceased of the presence of the railroad crossing, or been predicated upon circumstances sufficient to give an approaching automobile driver reasonable notice of the presence of a railroad crossing, then and in that case the duty imposed by the instructions upon the automobile driver would have applied. However, with the testimony showing no knowledge, of either McGuffin or Baldwin, of the presence of the railroad in question, and also without any allusion to, or mention of, the presence of circumstances sufficient to warn persons of the existence of the railroad, the court charges "that it was the duty of Mr. McGuffin, in approaching this crossing, to approach the same with his automobile under such control," etc. The language is the same in both instructions, charging as a matter of fact with regard to the crossing. The law, of course, is well settled that any one approaching a railroad crossing of which he has knowledge, or of which the circumstances are such as to give him reasonable notice of the existence thereof, must stop, look, listen, etc., and exercise his faculties to safeguard himself; but to instruct the jury, without any consideration of the knowledge of the existence of the railroad, or of there being any facts and circumstances to indicate its presence, that the automobile driver was under the legal obligation to stop, look, and listen to avoid the charge of contributory negligence, is not to correctly state the law as applied to the circumstances of this case.

We do not deem it necessary to consider the refusal of the court to give certain instructions requested by the plaintiffs, as those questions may not arise on a subsequent trial.

In view of the facts of this case and the different conclusions which might properly be reached by the jury, we are of the opinion that section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution cannot be held to cure the errors of the trial court in giving the instructions requested by the respondents.

The judgments are reversed.

ENGELBERG v. SEBASTIANI. (Civ. 6565.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 21, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 18, 1929.

1. Sales 🔑3—Contract of sale of growing grapes held one of executed sale rather than one to sell.

Contract, which, in addition to using the terms of present sale and purchase of growing grapes, expressly provides that it is "the intention of this contract to constitute an absolute sale of all said grapes," held one of executed sale rather than one to sell.

2. Sales 🔑267—Contract, even if construed as executory contract to sell growing grapes, held to expressly contract against any implied warranty of soundness or merchantability (Civ. Code, § 1768).

Contract for sale of growing grapes, even if construed as one to sell rather than one of executed sale, by provision that "the buyer shall take delivery of all grapes regardless of car shortage, railroad strike, embargo, rain or any other act of any character whatsoever, whether the act of nature or within or without the control of either or both of the parties," held to expressly contract against any implied warranty of soundness or merchantability, relative to Civ. Code, § 1768, providing that one who agrees to sell merchandise not then in existence thereby warrants that it shall be sound and merchantable.

3. Sales 🔑267—Under contract of sale of growing grapes, held, seller could disregard instructions in notice from seller to pick and pack in certain manner for certain markets.

Under contract of sale of growing grapes, excluding any mildewed or sunburned or not having at least 18 per cent. sugar content, providing that they are not being sold for any particular purpose and that the contract embodied every covenant and promise on behalf of the parties, so long as seller delivered grapes of the stipulated quality and used due care in harvesting them he did all that was required and could disregard instructions in notice from buyer to pick and pack the grapes in a certain manner for certain markets.

4. Sales 🔑101—Provision of contract of sale for termination thereof if buyer failed to accept and pay for any of grapes sold held waived by the parties thereafter operating under contract.

Though contract of sale of grapes provided that, if buyer failed to accept and pay for any of them as therein provided, seller reserved the option to dispose of the grapes at best market price and charge the loss to buyer and the contract should become void thereafter, and though seller so disposed of the first lot of grapes refused by buyer, yet the parties having thereafter continued to operate under the contract, buyer thereafter accepting and paying for grapes at contract price, this constituted a waiver of the provision for termination of contract.

5. Sales 🔑101—Provision for termination of contract if buyer failed to accept and pay for any, being for seller's benefit, could be waived by him.

Provision in contract of sale of grapes that, if buyer failed to accept and pay for them, seller could dispose of them and charge loss to buyer and thereafter contract should be void, being for seller's benefit, he could waive the provision for termination, though so disposing of the first lot of grapes refused by the buyer.

6. Food 🔑2—Fresh Fruit Act as to manner of packing held not to apply to wine grapes (St. 1921, p. 1235, § 6, and section 5, as amended by St. 1923, p. 663).

Fresh Fruit Act (St. 1921, p. 1235), regulating the condition and manner in which fruit when delivered for shipment or offered for sale shall be packed, does not apply to wine or juice grapes, section 5, as amended by St. 1923, p. 663, exempting from the provision of the act all fresh fruit intended for use in manufacture of "by-products," and section 6 defining by-products as any product manufactured from fresh fruits or their juices.

7. Evidence 🔑129(1)—Rejecting evidence of condition of other grape crops in vicinity in action for price of crop sold held not error.

The testimony being very full on both sides as to the condition of the crop of grapes covered by the contract of sale, rejecting evidence, in action for price, of condition of other grape crops in the vicinity was not error.

8. Evidence 🔑318(2)—Letter from consignee offered by buyer sued for price held properly rejected as hearsay.

Letter from an eastern consignee offered by defendant in action for price of crop of grapes sold to him held properly rejected as hearsay.

9. Sales 🔑358(1)—Whether grapes picked damp would stand shipping to the east held immaterial in action for prices of grapes expressly "not sold for any specific purpose."

Under provision of contract of sale of grapes that they "are not being sold for any specific purpose," objection was properly sustained to question asked in action for price whether grapes picked in a damp condition would stand shipping to the east.

10. Judgment 🔑256(7)—Judgment cannot be entered for amount of verdict and interest (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 626, 664; Civ. Code, § 3287).

Though plaintiff suing for price of goods sold was, under Civ. Code, § 3287, entitled to recover interest as damages, and jury should have been so instructed, yet instruction not having been given and verdict having been merely for the amount prayed, judgment could not be entered for that amount and interest, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 626, providing that, when verdict is for plaintiff in action for money, the jury must find the amount of recovery, and section 664 providing that, in case of trial by jury, judgment must be entered in conformity with the verdict.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by Louis Engelberg against Sam Sebastiani. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

W. F. Cowan and A. W. Hollingsworth, both of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

Barrett & McConnell, of Santa Rosa, and Samuel M. Samter, of San Francisco, for respondent.

DOOLING, Justice pro tem. This action was brought to recover a balance due under a contract for the sale of a crop of grapes by plaintiff and respondent, Engelberg, to defendant and appellant, Sebastiani. In two counts respondent sought to recover for two lots of grapes refused by appellant and sold for his account by respondent. In a third count respondent sought to recover for certain grapes delivered to and received by appellant. Appellant by answer alleged that the grapes in question were not of the quality required by the contract, and that respondent in picking them had mingled mouldy and rotten grapes with good grapes, thereby rendering all of them unfit and unsalable, and also on those grounds cross-complained for damages alleged to have been suffered thereby. The case was tried by jury, and verdict went for respondent for the full amount prayed.

[1] The contract was construed by the court as constituting an executed sale, and the jury were so instructed. Appellant complains of this instruction and the theory on which the case was tried as a result of the court's construction of the contract. So far as it is material in the determination of this question, the contract read as follows:

"The party of the first part hereby sells to the party of the second part, and the party of the second part hereby buys and purchases of the party of the first part all grapes now growing on Madrone Vineyard in Sonoma County, California, in seller's unlidded lugs at seventy-six ($76.00) and no/100 Dollars per ton F. O. B. Platform, excluding therefrom any grapes that might show mildew or might be sunburned, and the second party agrees to accept, receive and pay for the grapes purchased hereunder when the said grapes, or any thereof, show eighteen (18%) per cent or a better percentage of sugar. * * *

"The price of said grapes shall be seventy-six ($76.00) and no/100 Dollars per ton for all varieties, F. O. B. platform Madrone, California; it being understood, however, that the said grapes are not being sold for any specific purposes and the buyer shall take delivery of all grapes regardless of car shortage, railroad strike, embargo, rain, or any other act of any character whatsoever, whether the act of nature or within or without the control of either or both of the parties hereto, it being the intention of this contract to constitute an absolute sale of all of said grapes."

This contract was executed on August 29, 1923, at which time the grapes were well formed on the vines, but not yet ripe or ready for picking, the first delivery under the contract having been made on September 15, 1923.

Relying on the familiar rule announced in Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., 76 Cal. 212, 18 P. 248, 9 Am. St. Rep. 199, that a contract, though it uses the terms of present sale, will be construed as a contract to sell rather than an executed sale where anything remains to be done to put the goods in deliverable condition, and particularly where the portion of the crop to be delivered is not yet identified, appellant insists that the contract here was an executory contract to sell and not an executed sale. The question becomes material because of appellant's insistence that, if title did not pass until appropriation and delivery, then, under section 1768 of the Civil Code, there was an implied warranty that the grapes should be sound and merchantable under the provision of that section that "one who agrees to sell merchandise not then in existence, thereby warrants that it shall be sound and merchantable."

Whether this contract constituted a present sale is to be determined by ascertaining the true intention of the parties. Thus in the leading case of Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., supra, the court said: "It seems well settled that the question as to whether the title has passed is one as to the intention of the parties. And such intention is, as a matter of course, to be gathered from the language of the parties, considered in the light of all the circumstances of the case." It is only where the language used does not clearly show an intent to pass title that the courts resort to the presumption that where something remains to be done to place the goods in condition for delivery the contract is executory. In this case the parties, in addition to the usual language of purchase and sale (which is not controlling as to their intent), have expressly provided that it is "the intention of this contract to constitute an absolute sale of all of said grapes." The use of the words "absolute sale" indicates a deliberate intent, deliberately expressed, to bring about an executed sale rather than a contract to sell. This case seems to fall within the rule announced in Hamilton v. Klinke, 42 Cal. App. 426, 183 P. 675. In that case there was a contract for the sale of a crop of beans then growing on certain described land and containing a provision that this contract "constitutes an absolute sale." The court, after quoting the language hereinabove quoted from Blackwood v. Cutting Packing Co., supra, said:

"The court [i. e., in the Blackwood Case] found that there were certain enumerated things to be done connected with the contract which had a controlling force indicating that it was not intended to mean a sale.

"In the present case we cannot discover that Klinke was to do anything which he would not naturally or ordinarily be required to do in case of a sale." (Although, we may remark, he was to grow and harvest the beans and deliver them in sacks.) "Besides, to make his intention unmistakable the following was made part of the contract: 'It is mutally understood that this contract, * * * constitutes an absolute sale.'"

Both the circumstances of the case before us (substitute crop of grapes for crop of beans) and the language used are so similar to the Klinke Case that we think that case is controlling here. It follows that the contract was one of executed sale.

[2] However, even if the contract should not be so construed, we are satisfied that the parties have expressly contracted against any implied warranty of soundness or merchantability by providing that "the buyer shall take delivery of all grapes regardless of car shortage, railroad strike, embargo, rain or any other act of any character whatsoever, whether the act of nature or within or without the control of either or both of the parties." Language more sweeping or better calculated to place all risks upon the buyer could hardly have been used.

[3] The court, on motion of respondent, struck out certain portions of the cross-complaint. These portions consisted of allegations that appellant notified respondent that he had a market for certain grapes in New York and for certain other grapes in San Francisco, and directed that the grapes be picked and packed in a certain manner for shipment to those points, and that his instructions were disregarded, whereby the grapes were rendered unfit for those markets to appellant's damage. The trial court held that the only obligation upon respondent was to deliver grapes free from mildew and sunburn and with at least 18 per cent. sugar content, and to use ordinary care in the handling and harvesting, and the portions of the cross-complaint not stricken out fully tendered the issue as to whether respondent had failed to do these things to appellant's damage. There was no error in the trial court's action. The contract expressly provides for the quality of grapes to be delivered and the manner in which they are to be delivered. It further provides that "said grapes are not being sold for any specific purposes," and that "the terms herein contained embody each and every covenant and promise on behalf of the parties hereto." So long as respondent delivered grapes of the quality provided by the contract and used due care in harvesting them, he was doing all that was required of him under the contract.

[4, 5] The contract contained the further provision that: "In the event of a failure of the second party to accept and pay for any grapes, as hereinbefore provided, the party of the first part reserves the option to immediately dispose of any grapes covered by this contract whether on the vine or not paid for as herein provided at the best market price obtainable, and charge second party with any loss that might be occasioned by such disposal, and this agreement shall become null and void thereafter." From this provision appellant argues that after respondent disposed of the first lot of grapes refused by appellant the contract was terminated, and that any delivery to appellant thereafter was not made under the contract, but must be held to have been made for the reasonable market value and not for the contract price. The parties, however, continued to operate under the contract, and appellant thereafter accepted and paid for a large quantity of grapes at the contract price. This constituted a waiver of the provision for the termination of the contract. The provision further was for the benefit of the seller and could in any event be waived by him. Of a similar provision in a contract for the sale of land, i. e., that on default of the buyer "the agreement shall be void," our Supreme Court, after reviewing many cases, said in Wilcoxson v. Stitt, 65 Cal. 596, 4 P. 629, 52 Am. Rep. 310: "In the light of these cases, and we find none to the contrary, we feel constrained to hold that the meaning of the clause under discussion in the agreement in this case is that such agreement is void only at the election of the plaintiff, who can avoid it or enforce it at his option."

[6] Appellant further complains of the action of the trial court in refusing a number of instructions based on the provisions of the California Fresh Fruit Act (Stats. 1921, p. 1235) regulating the condition and manner in which fruit when delivered for shipment or offered for sale shall be packed. However, section 5 of that act, as amended in 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 663), exempts from the provisions of the act all fresh fruits intended for use in the manufacture of by-products. Section 6 of the act (Stats. 1921, p. 1237) defines "by-products" as "any product manufactured from fresh fruits, fresh vegetables, or their juices." The transcript leaves in no doubt the fact that the grapes covered by this contract were wine or juice grapes and not table grapes.

[7-9] The court did not err in rejecting evidence of the condition of other grape crops in the vicinity. The testimony was very full on both sides as to the condition of the crop covered by the contract. Nor was it error to exclude evidence of directions given by appellant to respondent as to the manner in which grapes should be picked. Both parties in that regard were bound by the provisions of the contract. Appellant's offer of a letter from an eastern consignee was properly rejected as hearsay, and an objection was properly sustained to the question whether grapes picked in a damp condition would stand shipment to the east under the provision of the contract above noted that "said grapes are not being sold for any specific purposes."

We likewise find no error in the evidence received over appellant's objection. In fact, in view of the length of the trial (the clerk's transcript covers over 650 pages), it is remarkable that appellant has only pointed out five trivial instances in which he claims any error was committed in the admission of evidence.

Appellant complains of the giving and refusal to give a great number of instructions. For the most part, these complaints are based upon appellant's erroneous theories of the case heretofore discussed. An examination of the instructions given and refused satisfies us that the jury were fully and fairly instructed concerning rights of both parties under their contract and the law applicable thereto.

[10] One serious question remains to be considered. The court failed to give the jury any instruction concerning the allowance of interest. The jury brought in a verdict for plaintiff for $7,003.39, the full amount prayed. Thereupon the plaintiff moved the court for an order directing the clerk to add to the judgment upon the verdict interest at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum upon the various sums making up the total of the verdict from the date when each sum became due under the contract. This the court did and judgment was entered in the total sum, including such interest, of $8,122.75. Respondent was entitled to interest as a matter of law (Ryland v. Heney, 130 Cal. 426, 62 P. 616; Brazil v. Azevedo, 32 Cal. App. 364, 162 P. 1049), and the trial court should so have instructed the jury. Having failed to instruct them on this point, had the trial court any power to add the interest to the principal sum found due by the jury?

Section 664, Code of Civil Procedure, provides: "When trial by jury has been had, judgment must be entered by the clerk, in conformity to the verdict." This language is mandatory. It has always been the rule in this state that the court cannot enter a judgment different from that returned by the jury except where it would have been proper to direct a verdict or as a condition to denying a motion for new trial. City and County of San Francisco v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 271 P. 121; Slater v. Mayzie, 69 Cal. App. 87, 230 P. 453; Alpers v. Schammel, 75 Cal. 590, 594, 17 P. 708. In the last-cited case, judgment was entered by the clerk for $86 more than the verdict of the jury. Counsel for respondent argued that this represented 4 months' interest on the principal sum. Said the Supreme Court (75 Cal. 594 [17 P. 709]): "This was in excess of the authority vested in the clerk by the statute. The judgment should have been entered for the amount of the verdict, with interest at the legal rate from the day on which it was returned by the jury. The respondents' mode of accounting for the insertion of a sum greater than the verdict on the judgment is not sustained by the record, and if it was, it would not be in accordance with the mode pointed out by statute."

This is the only case in California which touches at all upon this precise question. It is, however, in keeping with section 664, Code of Civil Procedure, above pointed out, and section 626, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides: "When a verdict is found for the plaintiff in an action for the recovery of money, or for the defendant, when a counterclaim for the recovery of money is established, exceeding the amount of the plaintiff's claim as established, the jury must also find the amount of recovery." Section 3287, Civil Code, provides for interest on money judgments. It is found in the chapter of the Civil Code entitled "Damages in General" and under the article headed "Interest as Damages."

In other jurisdictions the courts are sharply divided on the subject. In the following cases the courts have held that interest cannot be added to the verdict: Meffert v. Lawson, 315 Mo. 1091, 287 S. W. 610; Shoup v. Waits (Fla.) 107 So. 769; Gillett v. Clark, 6 Mont. 190, 9 P. 823; American Soda Fountain Co. v. Shell, 160 N. C. 529, 76 S. E. 631; Wichtreet v. Fasnacht, 17 La. Ann. 166. In the following cases the court has held that interest could be added: Hack v. Lashley, 197 Ky. 117, 245 S. W. 851; Ewing v. Foley, 115 Tex. 222, 280 S. W. 499, 44 A. L. R. 627; St. Louis R. Co. v. Oliver, 17 Okl. 589, 87 P. 423, 10 Ann. Cas. 748; Alloway v. Nashville, 88 Tenn. 510, 13 S. W. 123, 8 L. R. A. 123; Marsh v. Kendall, 65 Kan. 48, 68 P. 1070; McAfee v. Dix, 101 App. Div. 69, 91 N. Y. S. 464.

In the Missouri, Florida, and North Carolina cases holding that the court had no such power, and in the Kansas case holding that it had, it appeared that there were statutes similar to one or more of our Code sections above quoted.

While the question is not free from difficulty, we have reached the conclusion that under the provisions of our Code the judgment must conform strictly to the verdict of the jury and the court had no power to add interest to the judgment. So long as the right to trial by jury is guaranteed the parties should have the right to have every issue passed upon by the jury.

The judgment is accordingly modified by reducing the amount thereof from $8,122.75 to $7,003.39, and as so modified it is affirmed, the appellant to recover his costs on appeal.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; STURTEVANT, J.

In re VISAXIS' ESTATE.★

VISAXIS v. VISAXIS et al.

(Civ. 6234.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 20, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 18, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 18, 1929.

1. Wills 🔑229—Interest of legatee under earlier will held sufficient to entitle him to institute contest of proceedings for probate of later will of testator, where earlier will was offered for probate in connection with contest. (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327).

Legatee under earlier will of deceased held to have sufficient interest to entitle him to contest the probate of a later will, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, where earlier will was offered in connection with the contest of the second one, though such legatee was not an heir at law of testator.

2. Wills 🔑263—Court held to have jurisdiction in will contest by legatee under prior will as between contestant and person served with citation, notwithstanding failure to serve all legatees under subsequent will (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1328, 1329).

Failure to serve citation in proceedings for probate of will on all legatees under prior will of testator, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1328, 1329, held not to deprive court of jurisdiction in contest proceedings, under section 1327, by legatee under subsequent will; contest being permitted to proceed as between contestant and those upon whom citation is served.

3. Wills 🔑248—Jurisdiction over will contest attaches when petition is filed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327).

Jurisdiction of court over will contest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, attaches upon filing of petition.

4. Wills 🔑264—In will contest by legatee under prior will, refusal to bring in another legatee under prior will as new party held not error (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 389, 1327).

In will contest by legatee under prior will, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, trial court's denial of motion to bring in another legatee under the prior will as a new party held not error, under section 389, since new party was not indispensable to complete determination of controversy.

5. Parties 🔑51(4)—Court has no authority to bring in new party for determination of controversy irrelevant to issues between original parties (Code Civ. Proc. § 389).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 389, requiring court to order new parties to be brought in when necessary to complete determination of controversy, court has no authority to bring in controversy with stranger which is not related to the action between the parties.

6. Witnesses 🔑211(2)—Testimony of physicians in will contest that testator had tumerous or cancerous growth on tongue and was syphilitic held privileged (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1327, 1881, subd. 4).

In will contest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, testimony of physicians that testator had a tumorous or cancerous growth on his tongue and was syphilitic and testimony as to connection of disease with mental capacity held within scope of Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4, precluding examination of physician as to information acquired in attending patient which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient.

7. Evidence 🔑16—It is matter of common knowledge that "606" is name frequently used for salvarsan, a specific for syphilis.

It is matter of common knowledge that "606" is a name frequently used for salvarsan, a specific for syphilis.

8. Witnesses 🔑219(1)—Patient, client, or parishioner may deprive himself of protection afforded by law of confidential communications if he discloses to others the identical matters disclosed to his physician, lawyer, or priest.

A patient who has consulted a physician, a client who has consulted a lawyer, or a parishioner who has confessed to a priest may deprive himself of the protection of the law of confidential communications if he discloses the same matters to others who do not come under the ban of that law.

9. Witnesses 🔑219(1)—One who has introduced evidence of facts claimed to be privileged may not object that additional testimony offered as to those facts is privileged.

One who might otherwise object to testimony on ground of privilege is estopped to do so when he has introduced evidence which discloses the facts which he claims to be privileged.

10. Trial 🔑75—One introducing evidence of certain facts waives right to object to benefits of evidence of same facts.

One who introduces evidence of certain facts waives right to object to offer of evidence of same facts on the part of his opponent.

11. Trial 🔑75—Striking physician's testimony as to testator's syphilitic condition held error notwithstanding privilege, where contestant introduced similar evidence (Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4).

In will contest, action of trial court in striking testimony of physicians as to tumorous growth on testator's tongue, and his syphilitic condition held error, though such testimony was privileged within Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 4, where contestant at whose instance the testimony was stricken out previously introduced witness who testified that testator had cancer on tongue and was taking treatments from physicians, including 606 treatment, and where contestant offered death certificate showing lues was contributory cause of death, and that treatment administered to deceased was radium and antisyphilitic.

12. Wills 🔑53(2)—Evidence of testator's mental condition before or after execution of will, in so far as it establishes testator's capacity at time of execution, is admissible in will contest (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327).

Evidence as to testator's mental condition before and after execution of will is relevant and admissible in will contest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, in so far as it tends to show testator's mental condition at time of executing will.

13. Wills 🔑330(1)—Instruction that proof of testator's subsequent insanity would not carry presumption of its past existence held properly refused (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327).

Requested instruction in will contest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, relative to presumption of sanity and concluding with statement that proof of testator's subsequent insanity would not create presumption of its past existence, held properly rejected where there was testimony to the effect that testator was of unsound mind both before and after execution of the will.

14. Trial 🔑261—Refusal of instruction containing statement which should not go to jury is proper.

Trial judge acts properly in refusing a proposed instruction if any statement contained therein is such that it could not go to the jury.

15. Wills 🔑330(3)—Refusal of requested instruction that uncle is not obliged to provide for nephews held error in contest of uncle's will by nephew as legatee under prior will (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327).

Refusal of instruction that uncle is under no obligation to provide for his nephews by will held error, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327.

16. Wills 🔑330(3)—Requested instruction that uncle need not provide for nephew by will held not covered in will contest by instruction permitting jury to consider evidence of natural objects of testator's bounty in determining his mental capacity (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327).

Instruction in will contest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, that jury had right to consider evidence of natural objects of testator's bounty in determining his mental capacity, did not cover requested instruction to the effect that uncle is under no obligation to provide for nephews by will.

17. Wills 🔑330(1)—Refusal of instruction that opinion of subscribing witnesses as to testator's mental capacity was entitled to more weight than that of merely passive witnesses held error (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327).

Law presumes that subscribing witnesses had attention directed to and noted the mental capacity of the testator, and refusal of instruction in will contest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, that opinion of subscribing witnesses was entitled to more weight on question of mental capacity than opinion of other witnesses who were merely passive, was error.

18. Appeal and error 🔑1002—Evidence will not be held insufficient to support verdict, where conflict appears from record.

Evidence cannot be held insufficient to support verdict, where record shows conflict in evidence.

19. Wills 🔑400—Error in striking evidence and refusing instructions in will contest, in which preponderance of evidence was contrary to jury's verdict, warranted reversal (Code Civ. Proc. § 1327; Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In will contest, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1327, in which undoubted preponderance of evidence showed testamentary capacity of testator, but jury found against the will, error of trial court in striking testimony of witnesses and refusing instructions was such as might have caused miscarriage of justice and therefore warranted reversal, under Const. art. 6, § 4½.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Edward T. Bishop, Judge.

Proceeding by Maria B. Visaxis and another for probate of the will of Basil Visakis, sometimes known as Basil Vitsaxes, deceased, contested by George C. Visaxis. From an order revoking the probate of the will first presented and admitting to probate an earlier will, petitioner named appeals. Judgment reversed, and contest remanded.

E. C. Pyle, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George Beebe and Lyon, Fleming & Robbins, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WORKS, P. J. This is an appeal from an order or judgment revoking the probate of a certain will and admitting to probate an earlier will made by the decedent. The will affected by the revocation was executed October 8, 1926. The earlier will was executed August 3, 1922. The testator died October 19, 1926.

[1] The contestant through whose efforts the probate of the will of 1926 was revoked, the respondent here, was not an heir at law of the testator, but he was a legatee under the will of 1922. Section 1327 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "When a will has been admitted to probate, any person interested may, * * * contest the same or the validity of the will." Appellant contends that respondent is not a "person interested" within the meaning of the section, especially as the will of 1922 had not been admitted to probate before the contest of the will of 1926 was instituted. This contention is directly nullified by what the Supreme Court said in Estate of Langley, 140 Cal. 126, 73 P. 824. In that case an earlier will had been offered for probate and the proceeding was yet pending when the contest of a later document was sustained. It was determined that, under such circumstances, the interest of a devisee under the earlier will was sufficient to entitle him to contest the later one. Here the earlier will was offered for probate in connection with the contest upon the second one, and it was admitted to probate by the judgment from which the present appeal is prosecuted. On the point here presented, see, also, Ruth v. Krone, 10 Cal. App. 770, 103 P. 960; Estate of Land, 166 Cal. 538, 137 P. 246; In re Phillips' Estate, 261 P. 709.

[2, 3] It is insisted by appellant that the trial court was without jurisdiction to proceed with a hearing of the contest for the reason that the citation mentioned in sections 1328 and 1329 of the Code of Civil Procedure was not served upon all the legatees under the will of 1926. We can see no reason why a will contest should not proceed as between the contestant and those upon whom the citation is served. It is settled that jurisdiction over a will contest attaches upon the filing of the petition (Estate of Maescher, 78 Cal. App. 189, 248 P. 537, and cases cited), and the Supreme Court has said, in language, however, apparently unnecessary to a decision of the case before it: "It is not, as we understand it, and cannot be successfully claimed that the trial court was without jurisdiction to proceed with the trial as to contestant and such defendants as had been served with citation." Estate of Land, supra. We think the point presented is not tenable.

[4, 5] At the commencement of the trial appellant moved the court, under a notice of motion previously given, for an order bringing in a new party. This party was a legatee under the will of 1922, being situated exactly as was contestant in an interest in a denial of probate to the will of 1926. The motion to bring him in as a party was denied, and appellant contends that the ruling was error. Section 389 of the Code of Civil Procedure, concerning civil actions, provides that "when a complete determination of the controversy cannot be had without the presence of other parties, the court must then order them to be brought in," and appellant argues her point upon an assumed analogy furnished by the section. The Supreme Court has thus construed the enactment: "This section does not give the court power to bring into the action for determination a controversy between a defendant and strangers to the action which is irrelevant to the action between the parties already before it, except for the purpose of making its determination of the controversy between the parties already before it complete, and without prejudice to the rights of others. A defendant cannot inject into the action a controversy between himself and an outsider, even though it affects the property to which the action relates, unless some party already before the court is interested in, or will be affected by, the determination of such controversy." Alpers v. Bliss, 145 Cal. 565, 79 P. 171. The ruling of the trial court was not error.

[6] The ground of contest of the will of 1926 was that, at the time of its execution, the testator was not of sound and disposing mind and memory. Two physicians, Dr. Hommel and Dr. Freytag, testified upon this issue. For several months preceding his death the testator had been afflicted with a tumorous or cancerous growth on his tongue and was a victim of syphilis. Dr. Hommel testified that the condition of the testator's tongue had no effect on his brain cells, and Dr. Freytag said that on the morning of October 8, the day upon which the second will was executed, the testator was of sound mind. This testimony of both witnesses, as well as other statements of a similar nature, was stricken out by the court, and it is insisted that the ruling was erroneous. Dr. Hommel treated the testator for the diseases above mentioned from June 16 to September 22. Dr. Freytag, who was Dr. Hommel's assistant, acted in a similar capacity from September 23 to October 12. Both physicians testified that syphilis, in some of its stages, may affect the mind.

Subdivision 4 of section 1881 of the Code of Civil Procedure, as it stood when the contest was tried—for it has been amended since that time in certain particulars—provided that a physician cannot, "without the consent of his patient, be examined * * * as to any information acquired in attending the paitent, which was necessary to enable him to prescribe or act for the patient." It appears to us that the testimony of the physicians which was stricken came directly within the inhibition of the statute, for it related to and was based upon information acquired during attendance upon the testator and which was necessary to enable them to treat him.

Appellant contends, however, that the right to object to the testimony of the physicians was waived by contestant, for the reason that contestant himself had introduced evidence, before Drs. Hommel and Freytag took the stand, which in effect estopped him to object to their testimony. Early in the presentation of contestant's case he offered one Xydias as a witness. This man testified that he had been a friend of the testator in his lifetime; that he and his wife, prior to the illness of testator, had been going "almost twice or three times a week" to call at the house of testator, and that during the illness they went there "almost every day, maybe miss a day or two between," and that the illness began in June or July. The witness was asked: "Did you observe the treatments he was having?" The answer: "Well, I know the treatments he was having, he has some injections with, I recollect, '606,' and he has some radium treatments about four, sixteen hours, and some X-ray treatment. * * * I was present." Xydias then testified that he accompanied testator "on the occasions that he had these treatments," and he proceeded: "Well, right on the beginning of his sickness he came to my house and he asked me to introduce him to my doctor, because he was a throat specialist, and at that time he had a cancer on the tongue and, of course, he didn't know his sickness, so he told me to bring him to my doctor. So I did, to Doctor Hommel, on Hollywood Boulevard, and the next day when we make the appointment I was pretty busy so I send my wife there to go with him and, of course, they did that. The first time the doctor saw him he said, 'I can't say the kind of disease you have, but the only thing I have to take your blood for examination and then I can tell you the correct disease.'" The witness said a little later: "He has this '606'; he has the radium treatment, and he has some X-ray treatments."

Later still the record shows this:

"Q. Well, when was he taking this '606'? A. Well that is the injections he was taking on the first part of June" (here an objection was made that the witness did not know what "606" is, but it was overruled), "and later on the doctor say, "Well, your physical condition is very strong,' and prescribed six more additional and, of course, besides some iron. Now, of course, I didn't know anything about it and the deceased told me, and the doctor, too."

Appellant also directs attention to the fact that contestant offered in evidence the certificate of the death of the testator. This paper showed the cause of death to be "Pneumonia Lobar," with the contributory causes, "Ca. of Tongue with metastases also Lues," and the treatment administered, "radium & anti-syphilitic."

[7] We think that from the quoted testimony of Xydias and the death certificate the jury could not have failed to understand the nature of one of the afflictions from which the deceased was suffering. It is a matter of common knowledge that "606" is a frequently employed name for salvarsan, a specific used in the treatment of syphilis. Xydias said that this remedy was administered to the testator by means of "injections," and it is commonly understood that syphilis is treated in that manner. The death certificate showed that one of the causes contributing to the testator's death was "lues." The meaning of this term is possibly not so well understood as is the meaning of the expression "606." The dictionary defines it as "syphilis." The showing of the certificate as to the nature of the treatment rendered the patient is particularly graphic. The character of the testator's horrible ailment was communicated to the world by the witness and by the death certificate, in an open courtroom, even if in some terms that all present did not understand. We have not quoted all of Xydias' testimony concerning the cancerous condition in the testator's mouth, for he did refer to that condition. No such quotation is necessary as the record is full of references to the condition, from the testimony adduced on both sides of the contest, and every one in the courtroom was bound to know of the existence of that affliction in the testator. Under these circumstances, is it to be said that the contestant waived the right to object to the testimony of the two physicians on the ground of privilege?

[8-11] It is to be understood that this is not a question whether the testator waived the privilege during his lifetime. Appellant does not make that point. Still, as a basis for the settlement of the point which is made it is not impertinent to observe that the books are full of cases to the effect that a patient who has consulted a physician, the client who has consulted a lawyer, or the parishioner who has confessed to a priest may deprive himself of the protection afforded by the law of confidential communications if he discloses the same matters to others who do not come under the ban of that law. The citation of authority upon this point is wholly unnecessary. We think, as the beneficiary of the privilege may thus waive his right, that there is from that circumstance reason to say that one situated like the contestant here may waive the right to object to testimony on the ground of privilege, by a disclosure in court of the privileged matter himself. The privilege exists, on grounds of public policy which are well known, for the purpose of keeping from the public those matters which come within the law of confidential communications. It would seem that one who might otherwise object on the ground of privilege is estopped to do so when he has introduced evidence which discloses the very intelligence which he claims is privileged. There appears to us to be a close analogy between this point and another which has frequently been decided. Where one introduces evidence of certain facts he waives the right to object to the offer of evidence of the same facts by his opponent. South St. Louis Ry. Co. v. Plate, 92 Mo. 614, 5 S. W. 199; Hobbs v. Board, 116 Ind. 376, 19 N. E. 186; Chicago, K. & N. Ry. Co. v. Wiebe, 25 Neb. 542, 41 N. W. 297; Carstens v. Stetson & Post Mill Co., 14 Wash. 643, 45 P. 313; Warren Live Stock Co. v. Farr (C. C. A.) 142 F. 116; Starcher v. South Penn Co., 81 W. Va. 587, 95 S. E. 28; Adams v. Ristine, 138 Va. 273, 122 S. E. 126, 31 A. L. R. 1413; Peter & Burghard Co. v. Marion Bank (Ind. App.) 149 N. E. 79; Jameson v. Tully, 178 Cal. 380, 173 P. 577. We think the trial court erred in striking out the testimony of Dr. Hommel and Dr. Freytag.

[12-14] The contest was tried by a jury. Appellant requested the trial judge to give the following instruction, but the request was refused: "The court instructs you, that the law always presumes a person to be sane, and the burden is upon the contestant of the will of the deceased to show affirmatively, and by a preponderance of the evidence, that the testator was of unsound mind at the very time he executed the will. Insanity exists as a matter of law only from the time it is shown to exist, and proof of subsequent insanity on the part of the testator will not create, nor will it carry a presumption of its past existence."

We think, because of the last sentence in this proposed instruction, the trial judge acted properly in refusing to give it. If the sentence could be construed to mean that proof of subsequent insanity alone would not have the effect stated in the latter part of the sentence, it might be proper in a case in which only that sort of proof was before the jury, but that point we are not called upon to decide. In this contest there was testimony, relating to periods both before and after the execution of the will, that the testator was of unsound mind. If the instruction had been given to the jury, we think it must have been understood by the members of that body as forbidding them to consider evidence of the testator's condition of mind after the will was executed, and as so understood the sentence in question is an incorrect statement of the law. "Evidence as to mental condition before and after the execution of the will may be relevant and admissible, but it is important only in so far as it tends to show mental condition at the time of executing the testamentary document. That is to say, facts as to mental condition, whether anterior or subsequent to the date of the execution, depend for their probative force upon the clearness and certainty with which they tend to demonstrate the condition of mind and memory at the moment the will is executed." Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 251 P. 778. Language to the same effect is to be found in Estate of Smith, 200 Cal. 152, 252 P. 325. It is true that in Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45, the court said: "Insanity exists as a matter of law only from the time it is shown to exist and proof of subsequent insanity will not create nor carry a presumption of its past existence." Immediately above this statement, however, and on the same page of the report, the court said: "Evidence as to mental condition before or after the execution of the will is important only in so far as it tends to show mental condition at the time of the execution of the will." Estate of Perkins is cited as authority for the above quotation taken from Estate of Sexton. The law is well settled that a judge properly refuses a proposed instruction if any statement contained in it should not have been given to the jury. People v. Lips, 59 Cal. App. 381, 211 P. 22.

[15, 16] The judge also refused to instruct the jury that: "An uncle is under no obligations to provide for his nephews, either when living, or by will, and failure to name them, or any of them, in the will, does not, under the law, raise the presumption that they were forgotten." This instruction was offered for the reason that respondent was a nephew of the testator.

It is said in Estate of Keegan, 139 Cal. 123, 72 P. 828, a will contest, that it was not error to give the same instruction here requested. The purpose of this instruction is partially shown by the latter portion of it, and we think that, if it was not improper to give it in the case cited for the reason indicated, there is additional reason why it should have been given here. The contestant was a nephew of the testator, and the evidence disclosed that fact to the jury. The interest which was sufficient to entitle him to file the contest, as we have above pointed it out, was unknown to the jury. It was not mentioned in the instructions. At any rate, the giving of the proposed instruction would have aided in disabusing the members of the jury of an impression they may well have had, to the effect that the contest was instituted under some right that the contestant had as a nephew. It was decided in Estate of Martin, 170 Cal. 657, 151 P. 138, that it was error to refuse to instruct the jury, the proceeding being a will contest, that "the heirs of the deceased had no vested rights in the property of their ancestor because of their relationship." As it was held necessary there to caution the jury that the "heirs" had no vested interest in the property of the testator, we think, for the reasons already stated, that it was necessary here to instruct the jury as requested. The court instructed the jury as follows: "In determining the mental condition of the deceased at the time of making the will, it is proper to take into consideration evidence surrounding those who in the absence of the Will would be the natural and legal objects of his bounty. You have a right to take into consideration the fact that he had a brother, and evidence of the relations existing between them, and in showing his state of mind, of any evidence there may be of his reasons for not providing adequately for him in his Will, and whether such reasons were based on delusions or not." This instruction did not, we think, cover the matters stated in the proffered instruction that was refused. In truth, the first sentence of the given one may possibly have confused the jury on the very point as to which it was designed to inform them by the refused one.

[17] The trial judge refused to give the following instruction, requested by appellant: "The court instructs you relative to the testimony of the subscribing witnesses to the will, that the law presumes that such subscribing witnesses had their attention directed to and noted the mental capacity of the testator, and that by reason thereof, their opinion is entitled, and you should give the same in your consideration of the evidence more weight than you would give to the opinion of a witness who was merely passive."

The substance of this proffered instruction is stated to be the law in Estate of Holloway, 195 Cal. 711, 733, 235 P. 1012, and the statement was repeated in Estate of McDonough, 200 Cal. 57, 251 P. 916. As the instruction was designed to inform the jury as to the law, it was error to refuse to give it.

[18] Appellant presents, in various forms, the point that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict. We think the record shows a conflict, and the point therefore is not well taken.

[19] The respondent, in view of the possibility that error might be found in the record, invokes the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, which is to the effect that a reversal of a judgment shall not occur "unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice." We have examined the entire cause, including the evidence, and think a miscarriage of justice may reasonably have been occasioned by the errors of the trial court. An undoubted preponderance of the evidence tended toward proof of the testamentary capacity of the testator. If we are to judge from the printed page, this is one of those will contests, so frequently mentioned by courts of review, in which juries have overturned wills upon very doubtful reason.

Judgment reversed and contest remanded for a new trial.

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 8, 1929.

1. Evidence 🔑590—Trial court should closely scrutinize testimony of interested parties offering themselves to re-establish lost contract by deceased to will property.

Trial court should closely scrutinize testimony of interested parties who offer themselves to re-establish lost or destroyed written contract or agreement by deceased person regarding disposition of his property by will, lest an irremediable wrong be done to deceased's heirs.

2. Appeal and error 🔑931(5)—Where evidence sustains judgment, appellate court must assume trial court properly scrutinized testimony of interested witnesses offering themselves to re-establish deceased's written contract to will property to plaintiff.

Where evidence was legally sufficient to sustain judgment for plaintiff, appellate court must assume that trial court scrutinized testimony of witnesses offering themselves to re-establish lost or detroyed written contract by deceased to make will leaving his property to plaintiff in light of interest which each witness may have had in result of trial.

3. Specific performance 🔑114(2)—In complaint for specific performance it was unnecessary to allege decedent received adequate consideration for contract to will property to plaintiff and that it was fair and equitable.

In complaint for specific performance, it was unnecessary to allege in specific terms that decedent received adequate consideration for contract to make will leaving all his property to plaintiff if she would perform household duties and other services for decedent, and that contract was fair and equitable as to decedent, but it was sufficient to set forth facts from which court could conclude that contract was supported by adequate consideration and was fair and just.

4. Specific performance 🔑86—Where decedent agreed to will property to plaintiff if she would perform household duties and care for decedent, and plaintiff performed, plaintiff was entitled to specific performance (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7).

Under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7, where decedent entered into contract in writing with plaintiff whereby plaintiff was to come and devote her time exclusively to household comfort of decedent and care for him so long as he lived, in consideration for which decedent agreed to will all his property to plaintiff, and plaintiff fully performed contract but decedent died without leaving will, plaintiff was entitled to specific performance of contract.

5. Appeal and error 🔑992—Appellate court will not review ruling admitting secondary evidence to prove contents of letters burned unless evidence is inherently improbable.

Appellate court will not review trial court's ruling admitting secondary evidence to prove contents of letters which plaintiff burned, in which decedent agreed to make will leaving his property to plaintiff if she would do household work and care for him until he died, unless proof is manifestly insufficient to warrant secondary evidence or unless evidence offered to establish loss is inherently improbable or incredible.

6. Evidence 🔑187—Secondary evidence to prove contents of letters burned in which decedent agreed to will property to plaintiff held properly admitted.

Admitting secondary evidence to prove contents of letters which plaintiff burned, in which decedent had agreed to make will leaving his property to plaintiff if she would perform household duties and care for decedent until he died, held not abuse of discretion.

7. Specific performance 🔑86—Equity will decree specific performance of agreement to will property (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7).

Court of equity will decree specific performance of an agreement to make particular disposition of property by last will and testament which is valid under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action upon a contract for the transfer of real and personal property by Jennie Wolf against James Donahue and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Koenig & Ramsaur and Victor H. Koenig, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Thomas A. Wood and Michael F. Shannon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. This appeal was taken from a judgment decreeing that by a contract and agreement entered into by and between Daniel Donahue and respondent, Jennie Wolf, in 1911, she was entitled to all of the real and personal property standing in the name of Daniel Donahue at the time of his decease and claimed by the administrator of his estate as property belonging to his estate and directing that conveyances of the real property be executed and delivery of the personal property be made to respondent by said administrator after the payment of all lawful subsisting claims and demands against said estate and costs of administration.

Daniel Donahue, who located in California a number of years ago, died intestate, a resident of Ocean Park, county of Los Angeles, on or about December 3, 1923, at about the age of 68 years, leaving real and personal property situate in the county of Los Angeles standing in his name aggregating about $54,000 in value. An original mortgage in the sum of $12,000 upon the real property had been reduced by the payment of $3,000, leaving an existing balance due of $9,000. Daniel Donahue left no child or children, his heirs at law being three brothers and three sisters, appellants herein, all of whom are past or well along in middle life.

Decedent and respondent, Jennie Wolf, were first cousins, their respective fathers being brothers. Before coming to the United States of America from England, respondent, who was then a small child, and her mother lived at the home of Daniel's father. Upon coming to America, respondent subsequently married and located at New Haven, Conn., where she and her husband, who was a landscape gardener, resided until the latter's death, which occurred May 11, 1911. Respondent was left a widow, with one son, aged about 17 years, and two daughters, aged about 11 and 14, respectively. A correspondence had its inception in 1910 by respondent writing a letter to Daniel Donahue's wife addressed to her residence at Ocean Park, in which she stated that her husband was thinking of coming to Ocean Park to engage in landscape gardening. No answer was received to this letter until about one year later, at which time it was answered by Daniel Donahue. In the meantime he and his wife had become divorced, and the husband of Jennie Wolf had deceased. In this letter he lamented his loneliness and ill health. He was then engaged in conducting a fish and poultry market at Ocean Park. In his letter, not being previously informed as to the death of respondent's husband, he inquired if he was still thinking of coming to California to engage in landscape gardening and wrote encouragingly of the outlook. In her return letter she informed him of her husband's death and told him that any notion she had previously entertained of coming to California would have to be abandoned because of her husband's demise. Within two weeks after writing the above information to Daniel Donahue, she received a second letter from him in which he expressed his sorrow at the death mentioned and advised her not to worry, as living troubles, doubtless having in mind his separation from his wife, were worse than death. He further suggested that as long as her husband was dead he could not see how that event should interfere with bringing her family to California and making their home with him. He said he was very ill and could not attend to both his home and business and he needed some one to look after the home, and that if she came to his home she would never be sorry for so doing; that neither she nor her children should ever be in want; and that when he should pass away he would see to it that everything he had would be hers and her children would be well cared for. She showed the letter to a neighbor, with whom she advised, who corroborated respondent on substantial matters as to the contents of said letter. Her testimony is that she replied to his letter and informed him that she was conducting a wardrobe, drycleaning, dressmaking, and remodeling business at New Haven, was among neighbors and friends and was getting along well, and that she was not inclined to break up her home and go to California without any assurance that she would improve her situation. The correspondence extended through a period of about five months, in which he repeated his promise to leave her his estate upon his death if she would come to California, do his housekeeping, and help him in his business. On October 9, 1911, he forwarded to her transportation for herself and three children and she disposed of her personal effects and went with her children to his home at Ocean Park and remained a member of his household until his death, December 3, 1923. The poultry and fish business he was conducting was of unknown value. The market was destroyed by fire in September, 1912. He owned two lots at Ocean Park valued at $700 and $4,000 respectively. Some time after the destruction of the market by fire he re-established the poultry business at his home and subsequently erected a quadruple apartment house. Her testimony as to the services she rendered during the 12 years of her residence in decedent's home, for which she received no compensation, constitutes a full chapter of long hours spent in dressing and preparing fowls of all kinds for the market, caring for and raising fowls, assisting in conducting the poultry business, cooking, washing, and doing work of a housekeeper, as well as doing menial service in keeping the apartment house in order.

[1, 2] Testimony was given by several witnesses which either directly supported or tended to support respondent's claims. Testimony, on the other hand, was offered by the brothers and sisters tending strongly to rebut the contention that decedent had agreed or contracted to leave his property by will to respondent for personal services or assistance to be rendered by her to him. In this class of cases the temptation is strong for those who are so inclined to fabricate evidence giving color to the claim that a written agreement subsequently lost or destroyed was made by a decedent to dispose of his property at death to the claimant. For this reason the trial court should closely scrutinize the testimony of interested parties who offer themselves to re-establish an alleged lost or destroyed written contract or agreement, lest an irremediable wrong be done to the heirs of a decedent whose lips cannot speak in protest against the consummation of a wicked design. But where the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain the judgment, as in the instant case, we must assume that the trial court scrutinized the testimony of the witnesses in the light of the interest which each may have had in the result of the trial.

The contract upon which the action was brought consisted of a number of letters that passed between said Daniel Donahue and respondent, Jennie Wolf, which had long since been destroyed by said respondent. The contents of said correspondence, which began in May and concluded in October, 1911, by respondent coming to Daniel Donahue's home, were re-established by parol evidence. The letters written by Jennie Wolf in reply to his, if not destroyed by him shortly after being received, were probably destroyed by a fire which consumed his place of business in 1912.

At the time respondent took her place in the Donahue household his real property was of small value, not exceeding $4,700, and there is no evidence showing that he possessed personal property of any consequence. The trial court found that on or about October 9, 1911, he entered into a contract in writing with respondent whereby the respondent was to come to Ocean Park and bring with her her children and devote her time solely and exclusively to the household comfort of Daniel Donahue, doing the household duties, cooking, mending and working for the said Daniel Donahue and to care for him during his illness and look after his general welfare and comfort so long as he should live; that in consideration of those services he agreed that upon his death he would leave a will devising and bequeathing to the said Jennie Wolf all the property of which he might die seized, real and personal; that both accepted the terms of said contract and the respondent fully and faithfully performed all of its terms and conditions on her part to be performed and that said Daniel Donahue died on December 3, 1923, leaving no will or other instrument conveying said property to said respondent. The court specifically found that respondent, in addition to doing all the household work, assisted said Donahue through a series of years in the conduct and management of his business, to wit, a fish and poultry market and grocery store, and in the preparing and dressing of poultry for market; that said Donahue in the spring of 1913 erected an apartment house upon a lot which he owned at the time he entered into said contract and for a period of nine years respondent did a large part of the general work required to keep the same in habitable condition, such as sweeping and cleaning said apartments, washing blankets and curtains, and doing the janitor work in general. The court further found that said Daniel Donahue at the time he entered into said contract with Jennie Wolf owned two lots, one situate in Ocean Park and the other situate in the city of Venice, state of California, being then of the value of $4,000 and $700, respectively, and also a fish and poultry business of unknown value; that on September 1, 1912, the building located on one of said lots and the building in which the fish and poultry business was conducted were destroyed by fire; that thereafter the poultry business for a time was conducted at the residence of said Daniel Donahue. The court found the contract was fair, just, and equitable in all respects as between the parties thereto. The court lastly found that all of the property left by said Daniel Donahue, deceased, was in the process of being probated, and that it was subject to all just claims and demands against said estate and the costs of administration, and that Jennie Wolf was entitled to a decree carrying into effect the full performance of said contract; that appellants, who are the heirs at law of said Daniel Donahue, hold the legal title to said real property of which said Daniel Donahue died possessed as trustee for the use and benefit of said Jennie Wolf. As conclusions of law from the facts found, the court concluded that Jennie Wolf is the equitable owner of all of the property of which said Daniel Donahue died seized and possessed, subject to the payment of his debts and the costs, charges and expenses of administration. Said appellants and the administrator of the estate of Daniel Donahue, deceased, were directed to execute all necessary conveyances in favor of said Jennie Wolf and to pay over to her all personal property that may have come into their possession as heirs at law or as the administrator of said estate.

[3, 4] We are of the opinion that the court did not commit reversible error in overruling appellants' general demurrer to the amended complaint on the ground that it did not contain in specific terms an allegation that the decedent received adequate consideration for the contract and that it was fair and equitable as to him. The rule is thus stated in Magee v. Magee, 174 Cal. 276, 162 P. 1023:

"It is not necessary, however, that the complaint for specific enforcement should declare, in the very words of the code, that there was 'an adequate consideration for the contract' and that it was 'just and reasonable.' These allegations, standing alone, would be objectionable as embodying the mere conclusion of the pleader. The proper mode of pleading is to set forth the facts from which the court may conclude that the contract is supported by an adequate consideration and is, as to the defendant, fair and just. Stiles v. Cain, 134 Cal. 171 [66 P. 231]; White v. Sage, 149 Cal. 613 [87 P. 193]."

The amended complaint conforms with the requirements above announced, inasmuch as the facts from which the court concluded that the contract was supported by an adequate consideration and was as to decedent fair and just are very fully set forth and from them, supported by the evidence, the court concluded that this was a proper case to enter its decree for specific performance. The motion for a nonsuit was properly denied, as we have held that the findings, which justify the conclusions, are, in turn, supported by the evidence.

[5, 6] Appellants complain that it was error for the court to admit secondary evidence to prove the contents of the letters which the respondent claims she burned. She testified that it was her habit to burn or destroy letters shortly after answering them, and as she attached no particular importance to the letters at the time, and did not suspect they would have a future value, she destroyed them. Her testimony on the subject is that she probably burned them with accumulated papers and letters the first time she cleaned house after receiving them, or at the time she was preparing to leave for California. No suspicion arises from the bare circumstance of burning the letters as related by the respondent, and, inasmuch as the trial court was satisfied that said letters contained the substance of the contract contended for and were not destroyed with the intent of accomplishing a sinister purpose, this court will not review its ruling unless the proof is manifestly insufficient to warrant the secondary evidence or unless the evidence offered to establish the loss is inherently improbable or incredible. Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 73 P. 803; King v. Samuel, 7 Cal. App. 55, 93 P. 391. It cannot be said, as a matter of law, that the trial court abused its discretion by ruling the evidence admissible.

[7] The statutes of this state provide that a person may make a valid agreement binding himself legally to make a particular disposition of his property by last will and testament. Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 7; Code Civ. Proc. § 1973, subd. 7. It is well settled in this state by numerous decisions that a court of equity will decree specific performance of such an agreement upon the recognized principles by which it is governed in the exercise of this branch of its jurisdiction. Owens v. McNally, 113 Cal. 444, 45 P. 710, 33 L. R. A. 369; Doolittle v. McConnell, 178 Cal. 697, 174 P. 305; Rogers v. Schlotterback, 167 Cal. 35, 138 P. 728; McCabe v. Healy, 138 Cal. 81, 70 P. 1008; Steinberger v. Young, 175 Cal. 81, 165 P. 432. There are cases involving questions of public policy, as, for example, the marriage of the promisor to a person other than the promisee subsequent to the time he contracted to dispose of his estate, or cases where the contract is contrary to good morals, or where the rights of intervening innocent third parties would be affected thereby, in which instances specific performance will not be decreed. None of these objections appear in the instant case.

It may be proper to state in passing that none of the brothers or sisters in the instant case were upon close or intimate terms with the decedent during the years that respondent lived in his household, and that their relations with him were not such as to indicate that their interest in his welfare was more than that of brothers and sisters who had long been separated.

GROSS v. HAZELTINE et al. (L. A. 10722.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1928.

1. New trial ⚷116(2)—Notice of intention to move for new trial, having been filed before receiving notice of entry of judgment, held timely (Code Civ. Proc. § 659).

Where defendants filed notice of intention to move for new trial before receiving notice of entry of judgment, defendants not having filed notice of appeal or taken any other step that might be construed as waiving service of notice of judgment entry, held that new trial proceedings were timely, under Code Civ. Proc. § 659.

2. New trial ⚷139—Parties by conduct cannot waive court's jurisdiction to pass on new trial dependent on notice (Code Civ. Proc. § 660).

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 660, providing that service of notice of the entry of judgment is necessary to start the time running within which a trial court may pass on new trial proceedings, the parties cannot by their conduct waive the court's jurisdiction in respect thereto.

3. Appeal and error ⚷345(1)—Appeal taken before termination of new trial proceedings, where notice of intention to move for new trial had been made, but motion never was, held timely (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 660, 939).

Defendants gave notice of intention to move for new trial before being served with notice of entry of judgment, and before they filed notice of appeal. Motion for new trial was not made, and defendants thereupon filed notice of appeal from the judgment. Held, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 660, providing that service of notice of the entry of judgment is necessary to start time running within which a trial court may pass on new trial proceedings, that appeal was timely, under section 939, providing for taking of appeal from judgment within 30 days after termination in trial court of new trial proceedings.

4. Appeal and error ⚷345(1)—Bill of exceptions on appeal, filed before termination of new trial proceedings, held timely, no way existing to determine limitation (Code Civ. Proc. § 650).

Bill of exceptions on appeal, filed before termination of new trial proceedings, held timely, under Code Civ. Proc. § 650, providing for filing bill of exceptions within 10 days after notice of decision denying motion for new trial or other termination of the new trial proceedings, for reason that there is no way to determine limit of time within which bill should have been prepared and served, in the absence of termination.

5. Appeal and error ⚷345(1)—Filing and service of notice of intention to move for new trial defers time for appeal and preparation of bill of exceptions (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 650, 939).

Filing and service of notice of intention to move for new trial defers time for appeal under Code Civ. Proc. § 939, and preparation of bill of exceptions, covering only record of trial and judgment, under section 650, until termination of new trial proceedings.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; Franklin J. Cole, Judge.

On rehearing. Former opinion (269 P. 925) adopted, and motions to dismiss the appeal and exclude the bill of exceptions from the record denied.

Surr & Hellyer, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Harry W. Horton, of El Centro, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. By reason of an oversight this cause was prematurely submitted for decision and decided, in disregard of a stipulation of the parties allowing time for the filing of further briefs. Upon petition for rehearing this fact was brought to our attention, and the decision (269 P. 925) was promptly set aside to permit of further briefing, and particularly to allow respondent to urge a point which he stated had "not been raised in California as yet." Examination of the briefs so filed and of the contention most strongly relied on by respondent, which contention will receive consideration below, has failed to convince us that the conclusion announced in our former opinion was erroneous. That opinion is hereby adopted as and for the decision of the court.

[1-3] Respondent presents a motion to dismiss the appeal herein and to exclude the appellants' bill of exceptions from the record. The action was brought to recover a money judgment and to foreclose a mechanic's lien for services performed. Judgment was entered for the plaintiff on December 18, 1926. Thereafter, and on January 3, 1927, the defendants filed their notice of intention to move for new trial, but a motion for new trial was never actually made. In passing, it might be said that the respondent failed to serve notice of the entry of judgment, and the new trial proceedings were therefore timely instituted, under the provisions of section 659 of the Code of Civil Procedure, for the appellants at the time had not filed their notice of appeal, or taken any other step that might be construed as a waiver of service of notice of the entry of judgment. The notice of appeal from the judgment was filed March 9, 1927.

Respondent now moves to dismiss the appeal, upon the ground that it was not taken within the time prescribed by law. The motion is without merit. Under the provisions of section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure service of notice of the entry of judgment is necessary to start the time running within which a trial court may pass upon new trial proceedings. The parties cannot by their conduct waive the court's jurisdiction in this respect. Strehlow v. Mothorn, 197 Cal. 112, 239 P. 850; Moore v. Strayer, 175 Cal. 171, 165 P. 530. In view of the respondent's failure to serve notice of the entry of judgment, it cannot now be said that the time within which the trial court might have passed upon the new trial proceedings has expired. This being so, the appeal is within time, for section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides for the taking of an appeal from a judgment within 30 days after termination in the trial court of new trial proceedings.

However, even if it be assumed that notice of entry of judgment had been served in the instant case on the very day judgment was entered, it would avail the movant nothing, for the trial court would have had 2 months thereafter, or until February 18, 1927, within which to dispose of the new trial proceedings. Section 660, supra. The appellants, under section 939, supra, would then have 30 days additional or until March 20, 1927, within which to prosecute their appeal. The appeal, having been taken on March 9, 1927, was, therefore, well within time, and the motion to dismiss will have to be denied.

[4] The motion to exclude the bill of exceptions from the record is grounded upon the assertion that the proposed bill was not served within time. In our opinion this motion must also be denied, for section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, among other things, for the preparation and service of a proposed bill of exceptions within 10 days after notice of decision denying motion for new trial or other termination of the new trial proceedings. If, as already shown, there has been no termination in this case of the new trial proceedings there is no way to determine the limit of time within which the proposed bill should have been prepared and served. Moreover, the respondent's motion, made under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure to vacate the settlement and allowance of the bill of exceptions was denied by the trial court, and apparently no appeal has been prosecuted from the order denying the requested relief.

[5] The contention now urged by respondent in opposition to such conclusion is that, "if a motion for a new trial is never made, it should not be the law that the mere filing and service of a notice of intention to move for a new trial should automatically defer the time for appeal or the preparation of a bill of exceptions covering only the record of the trial and judgment in the trial court. * * * To hold to the contrary is to extend the time for appeal [and for preparation of a bill of exceptions] in a manner and for purposes never contemplated by law." A most serious and fatal objection to this contention is that it has already received the attention of this court and been disposed of adversely. Estate of Bergland, 177 Cal. 227, 228, 229, 170 P. 400; Anstead v. P. G. & E., 201 Cal. 198, 199, 200, 256 P. 209.

For the foregoing reasons, the motions to dismiss and to exclude the bill of exceptions from the record are, and each is, denied.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 15, 1928.

1. Wills 🔑289—Court cannot presume testator made printed words part of holographic will without some evidence appearing on face of instrument showing such intention.

Where printed words "Oakland, California," appearing on paper, were in no way essential to validity of instrument as holographic will, court will not presume that testator made them part of instrument without some evidence appearing on face of instrument itself manifesting such an intention.

2. Wills 🔑132—Mere presence of printed matter on stationery used for holographic will does not destroy effect of instrument as holographic will.

Mere presence of printed matter on stationery used for purpose of writing holographic will, which forms no part of written instrument, and to which no reference directly or indirectly is made, will not destroy effect of such instrument as holographic will.

3. Wills 🔑132—Printed words, "Oakland, California" on stationery, followed by date written in handwriting approximately on same line, did not invalidate holographic will.

Printed words "Oakland, California," on stationery used, followed by date in testator's handwriting written approximately on same line, held not to invalidate holographic will on ground that instrument was not entirely in handwriting of deceased, where printed words formed no part of written instrument, and no reference was made to them therein.

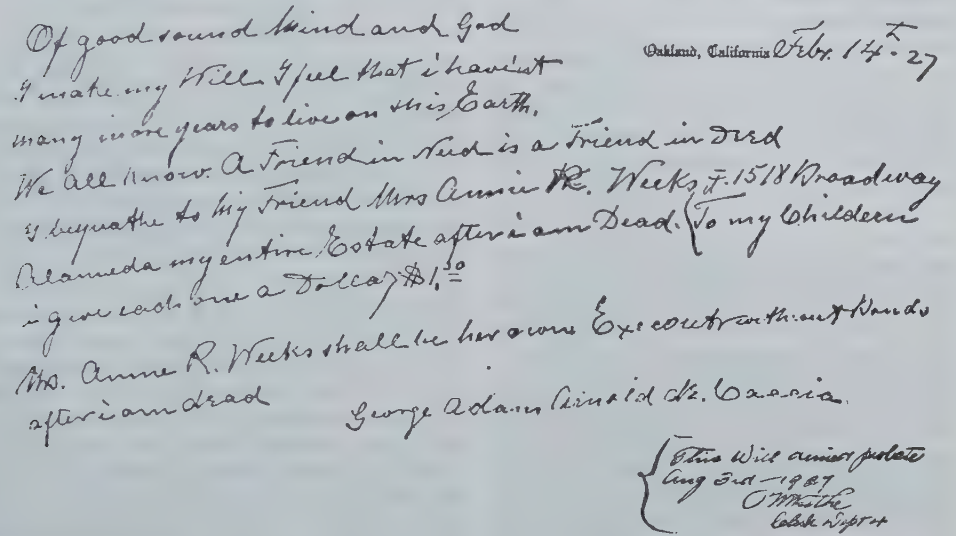
Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Lincoln S. Church, Judge.

Petition by William de Caccia for the probate of the last will and testament of George Adam Arnold de Caccia, alias, deceased, opposed by Lillian E. Barrington and others. Millard and Phillis de Caccia, minors, by and through Lucille de Caccia, their guardian, filed an answer denying the allegations of the written contest. From an order denying the probate, proponents appeal. Reversed.

Carter & Peterson, Fred C. Peterson, D. T. Gardner, and W. Reginald Jones, all of Oakland, for appellants.

Edward R. Eliassen and Walter H. Eliassen, both of Oakland, for respondents.

CURTIS, J. George Adam Arnold de Caccia, at the time of his death, was a resident of the county of Alameda. He had been a resident of Oakland, in said county, but, at the time of his death, and at the time he made and signed the document hereinafter referred to, and claimed to be his last will and testament, he was a resident of Alameda, in said county. He died on the 15th day of February, 1927, and left surviving him as his only heirs at law, Lillian E. Barrington, Arnold de Caccia, Anna Cavanagh, William de Caccia, his children, and Phillis and Millard de Caccia, minor children of a predeceased son. He left a document, which appellants claim was entirely written, dated and signed by him, and was therefore his last will and testament. By this document decedent purported to leave his entire estate, except $1 to each of his children, to Mrs. Annie R. Weeks. The said Annie R. Weeks assigned all of her interest in the estate of said deceased to the said William de Caccia, the son of said deceased, and the two grandchildren of deceased, Phillis and Millard de Caccia. Thereupon the said William de Caccia filed a petition for the probate of said instrument as the last will and testament of said deceased. His petition was opposed by the said Lillian E. Barrington, Arnold de Caccia, and Anna Cavanagh, three of the surviving children and heirs of said decedent. These three children were not mentioned in the assignment by Mrs. Annie R. Weeks of her interest in said estate to William de Caccia, the son, and Phillis and Millard de Caccia, the grandchildren of said decedent. These three children of said deceased, omitted from said assignment, filed their written contest and opposition to the probate of said document as the will of decedent. Among other grounds set forth in their written contest and opposition was that said alleged or purported will of said decedent, bearing date the 14th day of February, 1927, was not wholly written, dated, and signed by the said decedent. William de Caccia, and Phillis and Millard de Caccia, by and through Lucille de Caccia, their guardian, filed an answer in which they denied the allegations of the written contest and opposition, and particularly those referring to the failure of decedent to properly execute the document dated February 14, 1927, as an holographic testament. Before the trial, all grounds of contest except that attacking the due and legal execution of said purported will were withdrawn, and a trial was had upon the one issue as to whether the instrument in question was entirely written, dated, and signed by the hand of the testator. The said instrument, claimed by appellants to be the last will of said decedent, was written upon stationery upon which the words, "Oakland California," were printed, and the whole document containing both the printed and written matter was as follows:



Of good sound Mind and God   Oakland, California Febr. 14th 27

It was stipulated at the trial that all of the written matter appearing on said document was in the handwriting of the decedent, and that the words, "Oakland, California," were not written by the decedent, but were embossed on said paper prior to the time the decedent wrote his purported will thereon. The stationery used was a double sheet of paper, and, when folded, consisted of four pages, the first of which would be the page on which were the printed words, "Oakland, California." The two inside pages would be pages 2 and 3, and the remaining outside page would be page 4. Decedent, for the purpose of writing his will, unfolded the double sheet, and used only the two outside pages, being pages 1 and 4. In writing his will, he began the same near the upper left-hand corner of 4, and directly opposite the words, "Oakland, California," appearing on page 1. Had he continued this first line of his will in a straight line across the portion of the two pages upon which he wrote the same, the last words of said line would have been directly opposite the printed words, "Oakland, California." The decedent, however, was apparently not an experienced penman, and, as stated by counsel for one of the parties hereto, he wrote "a large, scrawling hand." In writing he did not follow a straight line, but gave his words a slightly upward slant toward the top of the page. The result of this peculiarity was that the last words in the first line of the instrument were slightly nearer the top of the page than the printed words, "Oakland, California," were. However, the line stopped over an inch to the left of these printed words. The next two lines of the writing were parallel to and approximately of the same length as the first, with the last words of the second line lower than the printed words. The fourth written line extended further across the page than the preceding lines to a point almost directly under and about one-half inch distant from the last letters of the printed word, "California." The balance of the writing extended substantially across the two pages, except two lines which contained the closing words of the two paragraphs of the instrument. The whole instrument consisted of nine lines only, including these two partial lines.

The trial court held that the words, "Oakland, California," were a part of the instrument executed and signed by the decedent, and therefore that the instrument was not entirely in the handwriting of the deceased, and for that reason could not be and was not his last will and testament. Based upon this finding, the court made its order denying the probate of said instrument as the last will and testament of decedent. From this order the proponents have appealed.

This court has frequently given consideration to instruments which were either holographic wills or which were claimed to be such. Estate of Rand, 61 Cal. 468, 44 Am. Rep. 555; Estate of Billings, 64 Cal. 427, 1 P. 701; In re Soher, 78 Cal. 477, 21 P. 8; Estate of Thorne, 183 Cal. 512, 192 P. 19; Estate of Francis, 191 Cal. 600, 217 P. 746; Estate of Bernard, 197 Cal. 36, 239 P. 404; Estate of

Oldham (Cal. Sup.) 265 P. 183. A review of all of these cases, we think, is entirely unnecessary for the purpose of considering the question arising in the present proceeding. Estate of Bernard, supra, and Estate of Oldham, supra, however, we think, have a direct bearing upon the legal status of the instrument under consideration in the estate now before us. In the former of these two cases decedent used stationery bearing the printed words, "Long Beach, California," for the purpose of drafting his will. The entire document, with the exception of these three words, was in the handwriting of the decedent. The document was held invalid as an holographic will. The decision was based, in part at least, upon the fact that immediately preceding this printed matter the testator had written certain words which were held to be a necessary part of his will, so that the caption of the instrument read: "The following 4 sheets of paper included, Long Beach, California, Oct. 12, 1918." Referring to this caption of the instrument, the court said: "It thus appears that the decedent not only wished to make the date a part of the document, but to make, also, the printed portion, designating the place of the making of the document, an essential part of the document." In Estate of Oldham, supra, the testator used his own stationery upon which were printed his name and the building in which his office was located, followed by the words, "Los Angeles, Calif.," on a separate line. After the words, "Los Angeles, Calif.,"| the testator wrote the date the document was to bear, and then proceeded to write out his will upon three sheets of paper, signing the same at its close, all in his own handwriting. In holding this to be a valid will this court said: "It will thus be seen that in the Estate of Bernard great stress was laid upon the caption or heading of the document containing the printed words, and it was expressly held that, by the use of this heading, the deceased had made not only the date, which was absolutely necessary to the validity of the document as a testamentary disposition, but also 'the printed portion, designating the place of the making of the document, an essential part of the document.' In the instrument now before us, and which, it is contended, is the last will of John Y. Oldham, deceased, we find no reference whatever to the printed words appearing upon stationery used by the deceased in the preparation of said instrument. These printed words are not expressly, by direct reference, or impliedly, by inference or otherwise, made a part of the written instrument set forth on the sheets of paper upon which they appear."

The instrument now before us resembles in many respects that held to be a valid holographic will in the Estate of Oldham, supra. The date simply follows the printed words appearing upon the instrument. The printed words are not preceded by any writing of the decedent in which a reference is made to said printed matter, as was found to be the case in Estate of Bernard, supra, indicating that it was the intention of the testator to make them a part of the instrument. It is true that decedent in the writing of the document began the same to the left and directly opposite to the printed words, and that the first line written by him ended slightly nearer the top of the page than were the words, "Oakland, California," but there was nothing in this line, or, for that matter, in any part of the instrument, referring in any manner to said printed words, much less indicating an intention to make them, as was said in Estate of Bernard, supra, "an essential part of the document." Respondents make mention of the fact that the first line of the will is slightly above the printed words, and rely upon this circumstance as indicating an intention by the testator to make the printed words a part of the will. Even if the testator intentionally wrote some part or the whole of the first line above the printed matter, but did not make any reference therein to the printed words, we hardly see how the mere fact of this relative position of the words in the instrument would indicate any intention to make the printed words a part of the will. We think it quite evident, however, from an inspection of a photostatic copy of the will contained in the record that the position of the last few words of the first line of the writing being above the printed words, or nearer the top of the page than the printed words, was due not so much to any intention of the testator to so locate them as it was to his poor penmanship, or his habit of writing, which was to give to his writing an upward slant, rather than to write horizontally across the page. Not only the first line, but the whole instrument, shares unmistakably this peculiar characteristic in decedent's writing. The fact, therefore, that a part of the first line, written by the deceased, was slightly above the printed words, does not, in our opinion, show any intention to make the printed matter upon the paper a part of the document written thereon.

It is further contended by respondents that the deceased used scrupulous care to write the date, "Feb. 14th-27," on the same line and as close as possible to the printed words, "Oakland, California," and thus manifested a clear intention to connect the printed words in the instrument with the date of its execution. The difference between the relative position of the printed words and the written date following in the instrument now before us and in that considered in Estate of Oldham, supra, is so slight as to be almost negligible. In the Oldham will the date was so nearly in line with the words, "Los Angeles, Calif.," that in deciding that case we referred to them as "being followed by the date, written approximately on the same line." We do not believe that this slight difference in the two instruments in this respect would justify a decision in one upholding it as a legal instrument and in the other a decision declaring it invalid. In other words, we are of the opinion that the two instruments in the respect just referred to are so similar that the rules governing their construction must apply alike to both documents, and that, if one was upheld as a valid will, the same ruling must apply to the other. In Estate of Oldham, supra, upon this branch of the case, the court said: "It is claimed only that these [printed] words appearing upon the first sheet, being followed by the date, written approximately on the same line, are thus made a part of the written document itself. In Estate of Bernard a similar situation was referred to, and was considered as a possible circumstance which, taken in connection with the fact that these printed words appeared in the caption of the instrument along with words written by the deceased, tended to show an intent on the part of the deceased to make the printed words a part of the instrument itself. This circumstance, standing alone, as it does in the present proceeding, is so slight that it would not warrant the conclusion that the deceased, by simply writing after the printed words the date of the document, thereby intended to make such printed words any part of the document itself."

[1-3] The foregoing excerpt from Estate of Oldham, supra, we feel is directly applicable to the facts in the present proceeding in so far as it refers to the position of the date following the printed matter in the purported will. The mere fact that the decedent placed the date immediately after and upon the exact line with the printed words in the instrument is not in itself sufficient to show that he thereby intended to make said printed words a part of said instrument. Nowhere in said instrument is there any reference made to the printed words upon the sheet of paper used by said decedent for the purpose of writing his will. The printed words are in no way essential to the validity of the instrument as an holographic will, and we are not to presume that the decedent made them a part of the instrument he executed without some evidence appearing upon the face of the instrument itself manifesting such an intention. The mere presence of printed matter upon stationery used by a person for the purpose of writing his holographic will which forms no part of the written instrument, and to which no reference directly or indirectly is made in the written instrument, will not destroy the effect of such instrument as an holographic will.

The order denying petition for the probate of said will is reversed.

OHAVER v. FENECH et al. (Sac. 4232.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1928.

1. Appeal and error 🔑460(2)—Proceedings on mandatory injunction are stayed by appeal therefrom, but not so where injunction is strictly prohibitive.

All proceedings on a mandatory injunction are stayed by an appeal therefrom, while an injunction which is strictly prohibitive in character is not stayed on appeal from order granting same.

2. Injunction 🔑205—Character of injunction is determined by nature of its provisions and effect on parties against whom issued.

Whether an injunction is prohibitive or mandatory, in its operation upon the parties whom it affects, is determined not so much by the particular designation given to it by the court directing its issuance, as by the nature of its terms and provisions, and effect on parties against whom issued.

3. Injunction 🔑4, 5—"Prohibitive injunction" merely grants preventative relief, while "mandatory injunction" directly or indirectly grants affirmative relief.

Generally, when the injunction merely grants preventative relief, it is "prohibitive," but when it directly or indirectly grants affirmative relief it is "mandatory."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Mandatory Injunction; Third Series, Prohibitory Injunction.]

4. Appeal and error 🔑460(2)—Appeal from injunction granting prohibitive and mandatory relief is stayed as to mandatory provisions, but not as to prohibitive provision.

Injunction may grant both prohibitive and mandatory relief, and, when it is of such dual character and an appeal is taken, appeal will not stay prohibitive features of injunction, but as to its mandatory provisions such injunction will be stayed.

5. Appeal and error 🔑460(2)—Injunction restraining defendants from feeding garbage to hogs at ranch held prohibitive, and operation not stayed by appeal; "prohibitive injunction."

Injunction restraining defendants from shipping garbage, and feeding same to hogs, maintained by them at a ranch, held prohibitive in character, and its operation not stayed by appeal from order directing its issuance.

6. Appeal and error 🔑477—Appellate court has inherent power to issue supersedeas to preserve litigation pending appeal.

Appellate court has inherent power to issue a writ of supersedeas so as to preserve the status quo of the subject of the litigation until final determination of appeal.

7. Appeal and error ⚿479(1)—That defendants would sustain loss by injunction did not warrant issuance of supersedeas depriving respondent of free use of his property.

That defendants in injunction, restraining them from shipping and feeding garbage to hogs maintained by them at a ranch, would sustain a loss, if the injunction was not stayed, held not to warrant appellate court in granting writ of supersedeas to preserve status quo of subject of litigation until final determination of the appeal, where effect of such action would be to deprive respondent of the free use and enjoyment of his property.

Application for writ of supersedeas by I. K. Ohaver against Philip Fenech and others to restrain further proceedings pending an appeal. Petition denied.

Grover O'Connor, of San Francisco, and Huston, Huston & Huston, of Sacramento, for appellants.

Robt. H. Schwab and John A. McGilvray, both of Sacramento, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. On the 21st day of April, 1927, the appellants Philip Fenech, Sam Borg, and Antonio Ciapparro entered into a contract with the city of Sacramento, whereby they undertook and agreed to collect all wet garbage from the hotels, restaurants, hospitals, and clubs in said city for a period of ten years, and to convey the same in sanitary steel garbage wagons under the direction of the city manager of said city to a place without said city. In this agreement said appellants obligated themselves to establish a ranch for the feeding of said garbage to hogs at a point not nearer than 10 miles to said city of Sacramento, and that they would deposit with said city a bond of a reliable surety company in the sum of $5,000 for the faithful performance of said contract. Pursuant to said contract said appellants have deposited such a bond. They thereafter assigned their said contract to a copartnership consisting of four persons—the said appellants Philip Fenech and Sam Borg and appellants Eugene Ciapparro and P. Grech. The members of said partnership will be herein referred to as the appellants. For the purpose of carrying out their said contract, said appellants leased the Borchers Bros. Company ranch for the period of 10 years at a monthly rental of $250 per month, and have established, and are now maintaining at said ranch, feeding pens and other necessary appliances for the purpose of keeping a large number of hogs, to which they are feeding the garbage collected by them from the hotels and other establishments of the city of Sacramento. The value of said hogs, it is alleged, is in excess of the sum of $30,000.

This action was instituted by respondent in the superior court of the county of Yolo, the county in which said Borchers Bros. Company ranch is situated, for an injunction restraining appellants from shipping to, or receiving at, said ranch any of said garbage, which is described to be of a putrid, fermenting, decayed, and decaying character, and from feeding the same to the hogs maintained at said ranch. Thereafter respondent moved the court, after due notice to appellants, for a temporary injunction restraining the appellants from the commission of any of the acts just enumerated, which motion was granted, and on the 25th day of July, 1928, there was issued out of said superior court, in pursuance of its order granting said motion, a writ of injunction directed to the appellants, restraining them until the further order of said court from shipping or receiving at the said Borchers Bros. Company ranch any garbage or similar material of a putrid, fermenting, decayed, or decaying character, and from feeding said or any garbage to hogs in the locality of the said ranch. On July 26, 1928, and within the time allowed by law, the appellants filed with said superior court their notice of appeal to this court from said order, and thereupon applied to the judge of said superior court for an order staying all further proceedings under said order, and injunction issued thereunder, but the judge of said court refused to order a stay of said proceedings, and stated that in his opinion said appeal did not stay said injunction or any proceedings thereunder. Appellants thereupon filed their petition herein for a writ of supersedeas directed to said superior court and the judge thereof, restraining all further proceedings under said injunction pending said appeal. In said petition the foregoing facts are set forth, and in addition thereto it is alleged therein that it is practically impossible before the trial of said action to find and prepare a proper place where the appellants may maintain said hogs and where said garbage may be disposed of by feeding the same to said hogs.

[1] It is the position of the appellants that the injunction issued herein is a mandatory injunction, and, accordingly, that all proceedings thereon are stayed on appeal. That all proceedings on a mandatory injunction are stayed by an appeal therefrom is well settled by the decisions of this court. Stewart v. Superior Court, 100 Cal. 543, 35 P. 156, 563; State Inv. & Ins. Co. v. Superior Court of City and County of San Francisco, 101 Cal. 135, 35 P. 549; Foster v. Superior Court, 172 Cal. 80, 155 P. 463. It is equally well settled that an injunction which is strictly prohibitive in character is not stayed on appeal from the order granting the same. Wolf v. Gall, 174 Cal. 140, 162 P. 115. In this case the court said: "By a line of decisions beginning with the early history of the state, the rule has been settled that an appeal does not stay the force of a prohibitive injunction, and that the lower court has full power to punish a violation of such injunction pending the appeal. (Merced Min. Co. v. Fremont, 7 Cal. 130; Heinlen v. Cross, 63 Cal. 44; United Railroads of S. F. v. Superior Court of San Francisco, 172 Cal. 80, 155 P. 463). It is otherwise where [it] is mandatory. The reason for this distinction is found in the inherent nature of an order which merely restrains or prohibits affirmative action. An appeal can operate as a supersedeas or stay only by arresting the enforcement by the court below of the judgment appealed from. (Dulin v. Pacific Wood & C. Co., 98 Cal. 304, 33 P. 123.) A prohibitive injunction requires no execution for its enforcement. It acts 'directly without process upon the defendant' (Heinlen v. Cross, 63 Cal. 44). In the case of a mandatory injunction, on the other hand, the contempt proceeding is a kind of process to carry into execution the affirmative command embodied in the judgment."

[2-4] In the present action the order granting the issuance of the injunction expressly refers to it and designates it as a mandatory injunction. The character of an injunction, however, and whether it is prohibitive or mandatory in its operation upon the parties whom it affects, is determined not so much by the particular designation given to it by the court directing its issuance, as by the nature of its terms and provisions, and the effect upon the parties against whom it is issued. Clute v. Superior Court, supra. As a general rule, we think we may say that when the injunction merely grants preventative relief it is prohibitive, but when it directly or indirectly grants affirmative relief it is mandatory. Mark v. Superior Court, supra. An injunction may grant both prohibitive and mandatory relief, and, when it is of this dual character, and an appeal is taken, such appeal will not stay the prohibitive features of the injunction, but as to its mandatory provisions said injunction will be stayed. People ex rel. Bradford v. Laine, 177 Cal. 742, 171 P. 941.

The main purpose of the present action, as shown by the petition and answer herein, is to restrain the appellants from shipping or receiving into the locality in which the respondent's property is situated the garbage from the hotels and restaurants of the city of Sacramento, and from feeding the same to hogs in said locality. This garbage when brought to said ranch and fed to said hogs, it was alleged, and the court found, so infected and polluted the atmosphere in the surrounding territory, including the premises upon which the respondent resides, as to endanger the comfort and health of respondent and his family, and to obstruct the free use and comfortable enjoyment by respondent and his family of their home situated upon said premises.

[5] It is perfectly clear from the authorities above cited that the injunction issued in this case, restraining the appellants from shipping garbage and feeding the same to the hogs maintained by them at the Borchers Bros. Company ranch, is prohibitive in character, and that its operation and effect are not stayed by the appeal taken from the order directing its issuance. It is contended by appellants that these restrictions upon the disposal of said garbage will necessarily require the removal by them of the hogs from the locality in which they are now maintained, and that the effect of said injunction will therefore be to compel them to take affirmative action in removing said hogs. This does not necessarily follow. The appellants may feed their hogs other food and maintain them in such a manner as not to render them a nuisance to their neighbors. So long as they pursue this course, the prohibitive terms of the injunction above set forth will not make it necessary for them to make any change in the locality in which their hogs are kept.

[6, 7] Appellants further contend that this court has the inherent power to issue a writ of supersedeas so as to preserve the status quo of the subject of the litigation until the final determination of the appeal. There is no question but that this court possesses such power. People v. Jackson, 190 Cal. 257, 212 P. 4; Luckenbach v. Krempel, 188 Cal. 175, 204 P. 591; Rogers v. Superior Court, 158 Cal. 467, 111 P. 357. The question is then presented whether the appellants have presented such a state of facts as will justify this court in exercising this power in their behalf. They have called to our attention the contract entered into by their assignors with the city of Sacramento, and the large outlay of time and money expended by them for the purpose of carrying this contract into effect, and the consequent hardship and loss they will sustain if the injunction is not stayed. These considerations, while important, are not sufficient to warrant this court in granting the appellants the relief prayed for when the direct effect of such action by this court would be to deprive the respondent of the free use and enjoyment of his property. "In such case it cannot be said that injury would result from an injunction, for no man can complain that he is injured by being prevented from doing to the hurt of another that which he has no right to do. Nor can it make the slightest difference that the plaintiff's property is of insignificant value to him as compared with the advantages that would accrue to the defendants from its occupation.

There can be no balancing of conveniences when such balancing involves the preservation of an established right, though possessed by a peasant only to a cottage as his home, and which will be extinguished if relief is not granted against one who would destroy it in artificially using his own land." Hulbert v. California, etc., Cement Co., 161 Cal. 239, 248, 118 P. 928, 932 [38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 436].

Let the temporary order staying the operation of the injunction be dismissed, and the petition be denied.

WHEELER v. CRAIG et al. (L. A. 9836.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 12, 1929.

1. Mortgages 🔑496—Application to set aside foreclosure judgment, not void on face, is too late 18 months after entry (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

Where judgment and decree of foreclosure is not void on its face, application to set aside judgment, not made until 18 months after entry, is too late, under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

2. Mortgages 🔑440—Sufficient foundation held laid for issuance of order for publication of summons, where process servers attempted to find defendant (Code Civ. Proc. § 473).

In foreclosure action, sufficient foundation held to have been laid for issuance of order for publication of summons, where process servers attempted to find and serve defendant at places where she had resided and was residing and at offices with which she was connected, though process was not placed in hands of sheriff for service, especially where defendant sought no relief under Code Civ. Proc. § 473.

3. Mortgages 🔑496—Foreclosure judgment held not void authorizing attack 18 months after entry because defendant was served by publication.

Foreclosure judgment held not void on its face because defendant was served by publication, so as to authorize application to set judgment aside 18 months after its entry, where failure to serve defendant personally was due to fact that she was concealing herself and summons and complaint were mailed to her.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry A. Hollzer and Reuben S. Schmidt, Judges.

Action by Helen Reehl Wheeler against Frances May Craig and others. From an order vacating judgment and decree of foreclosure, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Bicksler, Smith & Parke, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

L. E. Dadmun, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

T. E. Dadmun, amicus curiæ.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from an order made and entered by the superior court, in and for the county of Los Angeles, vacating the judgment and decree of foreclosure of a mortgage upon real estate in an action wherein the defendant and respondent was served by publication, and wherein her default and the judgment which followed it were based upon the order for and affidavits of publication as these appear in the record before us, and upon the recitals of the decree. The respondent presented no brief either before or after the issuance of an order to show cause, but her former attorney of record, upon the issuance of said order, was given leave as amicus curiæ to present a brief in support of the validity of the order appealed from. The original complaint herein was filed in said court on December 12, 1924. An amended complaint was filed on January 30, 1925. The application and affidavit for publication of summons was presented and filed on February 17, 1925, the application being based upon the showing that the defendant Frances May Craig was concealing herself for the purpose of avoiding service of summons. Both the original and amended complaint being verified, and both showing a good cause of action against said defendant, no affidavit of merits was required, although an affidavit of merits somewhat defective in form, but not fatally so, accompanied said application. The order for publication of summons was made on February 20, 1925. Thereafter several affidavits showing the due publication of the alias summons and the mailing of the same, together with a copy of the amended complaint, were presented and filed, and thereupon and on the 11th day of June, 1925, the said defendant having defaulted, the cause came on for hearing, and upon due proofs of the foregoing facts and also of the averments of the amended complaint the decree of foreclosure was duly made and entered and the property involved in said foreclosure was thereafter sold pursuant to said decree, the plaintiff becoming the purchaser thereof. The motion of the defendant and respondent was presented and filed on December 10, 1926, and was made upon the ground that the judgment was void upon its face, and was based solely upon the record in the action. The trial court on January 4, 1927, made and entered its order setting aside the judgment and decree of foreclosure, basing its order solely upon the ground specified in the defendant's motion and upon the record in the case. This appeal is from said order.

[1-3] The vital question presented upon this appeal is as to whether or not the judgment which was vacated and set aside was void upon its face, since, if it was not so, the application to set aside the judgment, not having been made until 18 months after the entry of the judgment, must be held to have been made too late, and hence to have been made at a time when it was clearly beyond the power of the court to grant said application. Consolidated Construction Co. v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 184 Cal. 246, 193 P. 238; Smith v. Jones, 174 Cal. 513, 516, 163 P. 890; section 473, C. C. P. Whether said judgment was or was not void upon its face is to be determined by the state of the record upon which the judgment was predicated, and hence depends upon the sufficiency of the substituted service of the summons and complaint upon said defendant and of the affidavits for publication of summons upon which the order therefor was made. We are satisfied from an examination of these affidavits that they constituted a sufficient showing of diligence on the part of the plaintiff in the effort of herself and her process servers to make personal service of the summons upon said defendant to support the issuance of said order upon the ground that the said defendant was concealing herself for the purpose of avoiding such personal service of process upon her. The affidavits in question were made by several agents and process servers of plaintiff, who set forth therein and with considerable of detail their unavailing efforts to find and to serve said defendant at the several places where the defendant had resided, and at one of which she was then residing, and also at the offices in the city of Los Angeles with which the defendant was connected. It is conceded that during the period when these process servers were quite persistently seeking to find and to serve the defendant at these several places she was residing at 322 North Milton street, Whittier, Cal., and was connected with the business offices of one A. A. Irish, at 605 Grosse Building, Los Angeles, but that the several visits of the aforesaid process servers were made to each of these places in vain, for the reason that they were met either with denials that the defendant was there or with refusals to permit her to be seen. When the order for publication of summons, based upon these affidavits, was made it directed that the summons and complaint in said action should be forthwith mailed to the defendant at each of these addresses by registered mail, and the affidavits of mailing show the full compliance with said order. We are satisfied from the above showing that a sufficient foundation was laid thereby for the making and issuance by the court of its order for the publication of summons, under the authority of Rue v. Quinn, 137 Cal. 651, 66 P. 216, 70 P. 732, wherein it was stated: "If the facts set forth in the affidavit have a legal tendency to show the exercise of diligence on behalf of the plaintiff in seeking to find the defendant within the state, and that after the exercise of such diligence he cannot be found, the decision of the judge that the affidavit shows the same to his satisfaction is to be regarded with the same effect as is his decision upon any other matter of fact submitted to his judicial determination." This language was quoted with approval in Clarkin v. Morris, 178 Cal. 102, 105, 172 P. 981.

The criticism which the former counsel of the respondent makes as amicus curiæ to the effect that it was not made to appear that the plaintiff had placed the process herein in the hands of the sheriff of Los Angeles county for service would not of itself militate against the sufficiency of the effort of her agents and process servers to make the service of the summons in question upon the defendant, in view of the repeated efforts made by them to gain access to the defendant for the purpose of making such service, since it does not appear that the official in question, had he been entrusted with the duty of making such service, could have done more than the plaintiff's process servers did in the premises. The respondent relied solely upon the record as the foundation of her motion to set aside said judgment and decree. In so doing, and by her silence otherwise, she admitted the truth of the facts set forth in the affidavits upon which the order for publication was based, and also admitted the due receipt of the summons and complaint herein directed to be served upon her by registered mail. She made neither effort nor showing for the seeking of relief under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure. She allowed a year and a half to expire after full knowledge imparted to her by the receipt through the mails of the summons and complaint in said action and after she must be reasonably presumed to have known that said judgment and decree of foreclosure had been made and that the property affected thereby had in due course been sold thereunder, before taking any steps to avoid the effect of such judgment. Upon her belated application to set aside said judgment and decree she made no further showing than as above set forth. We are satisfied that upon such showing the judgment was not void upon its face, and that, this being so, it was clearly beyond the power of the trial court to vacate and set aside said judgment and decree.

The order is reversed.

HARLOE v. CALIFORNIA STATE LIFE INS. CO. (Sac. 4125.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1928.

Insurance 🔑529—Death of insured from sunstroke held not effected exclusively and wholly by "external, violent and accidental means," within policy authorizing double indemnity.

Death of deceased, who was required to go outside of derrick in which he was working to repair water line when temperature was approximately 110 degrees, and who thereafter suffered sunstroke, held not caused by bodily injuries effected exclusively and wholly by "external, violent, and accidental means" within policy authorizing recovery of double indemnity.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by Margaret Harloe against the California State Life Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

John D. Harloe, of San Francisco, and Butler, Van Dyke & Desmond, of Sacramento, for appellant.

C. E. McLaughlin and McLaughlin & McLaughlin, all of Sacramento, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment against her, after a general demurrer to her complaint had been sustained without leave to amend.

The complaint seeks recovery of $4,000 upon a policy of life insurance issued upon the life of plaintiff's deceased husband. The question involved in the case is whether the defendant is liable for $2,000, the face of the policy, or for double that amount by reason of the following provision contained therein: "In the event of death caused by bodily injuries effected exclusively and wholly by external, violent and accidental means, said death occurring within ninety days after the happening of the accident, the Company will pay the sum of $4,000.00 in lieu of $2,000.00."

The complaint alleges that, while the assured was in the performance of his regular duties, it became necessary, and the assured did, with the assistance of another employee, go outside of a derrick in which he was working, to repair a water line. At the time the temperature at the place of employment was, approximately, 110 degrees. In the repairing of said water line he suffered a sunstroke, from which he subsequently died.

The case is governed by the rule announced in Rock v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 462, 156 P. 1029, L. R. A. 1916E, 1196; Olinsky v. Railway Mail Ass'n, 182 Cal. 669, 189 P. 835, 14 A. L. R. 784, and Ogilvie v. Ætna Life Ins. Co., 189 Cal. 407, 209 P. 26, 26 A. L. R. 116, which require a holding in the instant case that an effect which is the natural and probable consequence of an act or course of action cannot be said to be produced by accidental means.

HUGHES v. HARTMAN. (S. F. 12275.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 4, 1929.

Hearing Denied in Bank Jan. 31, 1929.

1. Automobiles 🔑244(32)—Evidence held sufficient to warrant finding that it was defendant's truck which crowded plaintiff's automobile from highway.

Evidence held sufficient to justify finding of jury that it was defendant's motortruck which met and crowded plaintiff's machine from highway, and was therefore cause of plaintiff's injury.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1003—Objections directed to weight of evidence or contradictions therein were solely for jury's decision, and their findings will not be disturbed on appeal.

Objections directed to weight of the evidence or to apparent contradictions therein were matters solely for decision of the jury, and their findings thereon will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1050(1)—Permitting witness to testify that defendant had been pointed out as driver of truck causing accident, though error because hearsay, held not prejudicial.

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile was crowded from highway by motortruck, in which sole issue was whether truck belonged to defendant, testimony that defendant had been pointed out to witness as driver of the truck held inadmissible as hearsay, but error in admitting it was not prejudicial, where evidence clearly showed that defendant was driver of truck involved in accident.

4. Automobiles 🔑243(5)—Testimony that another automobile had been nearly forced off road by truck held admissible.

Where there was sufficient evidence to justify jury in believing that it was defendant's truck which crowded plaintiff's automobile off highway, testimony of driver of another car that he had slowed down because he had been nearly forced off road by a truck could be considered by jury as some proof that defendant was taking more than his share of road when accident occurred.

5. Automobiles 🔑243(14)—Testimony as to automobile tracks going over highway embankment given by witness at scene 2½ hours after accident occurred held admissible.

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile was crowded from highway by motortruck, testimony respecting tracks presumably made by plaintiff's machine as they left highway, given by witness who reached scene of accident about 2½ hours after it occurred, was not rendered inadmissible because many machines had passed during intervening time, where there was no evidence that any other machine than plaintiff's went over embankment at that point.

6. Appeal and error ⚿201(2)—Objection to trial judge's improper remark cannot be raised for first time on appeal unless prejudicial effect thereof could not be cured by subsequent action of trial court.

Objection to an improper remark made by trial judge during trial, in order to avail complaining party, must have been taken by him when remark was made or before close of trial, and will not be considered when raised for first time on appeal, unless it clearly appears that its prejudicial effect could not be cured by some subsequent action of trial court.

7. Appeal and error ⚿201(2)—In action involving identity of truck causing accident, objection to trial court's remark indicating defendant was owner could not be raised for first time on appeal.

In action for injuries sustained when plaintiff's automobile was crowded from highway by motortruck, in which sole issue was whether truck belonged to defendant, remark of trial court to counsel for plaintiff, "Well, you have got the man that did it," though improper, could not be considered by appellate court on objection raised for first time on appeal, since prejudicial effect thereof could have been cured by subsequent action of trial court.

8. Appeal and error ⚿1066—Where only issue was identity of truck causing accident, instructions respecting other violations of statute, though improper, held not prejudicial.

Where only issue was whether it was defendant's truck which forced plaintiff's automobile off highway and down embankment, instructions as to requirements of Motor Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553, § 113, subd. Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Jennie Fretz Hughes against A. H. Hartman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. M. Abbott, K. W. Cannon, and J. E. Reardon, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Crawford & O'Neill, of Gilroy, and Peter F. Morettini, of San Jose (D. T. Jenkins, of San Jose, of counsel), for respondent.

CURTIS, J. The plaintiff, with her son and granddaughter, on the evening of July 16, 1925, was traveling in a machine, in an easterly direction along the Pacheco Pass highway in Santa Clara county. The son, Donald Hughes, was driving, and plaintiff, the owner of the machine, was occupying the front seat of the automobile with him. The granddaughter was in the back seat. At about 9 o'clock in the evening, the machine in which plaintiff was riding had reached a point on said highway about 12½ miles easterly from the city of Gilroy, and while so traveling on said highway, a large truck, proceeding along the highway in the opposite direction, approached plaintiff's automobile and forced it off the highway, down a slight declivity or embankment and over and against a barbed wire fence, which, besides injuring plaintiff's car, tore and lacerated her forearm so severely that her son was compelled to make a tourniquet with his handkerchief and later reinforce this with a stringent application of his belt on the upper part of her forearm until a passing automobilist arrived upon the scene of the accident, removed plaintiff and her son to his automobile, and drove them back to Gilroy. Plaintiff instituted this action against the defendant, alleging that he was the owner and driver of the autotruck which forced her machine off the highway and down the declivity and against the wire fence. The action was tried before a jury, and a verdict rendered for the plaintiff in the sum of $15,000. From this judgment the defendant has appealed.

Defendant moved for a nonsuit and also for a directed verdict, each of which was denied by the court. Upon this appeal the defendant makes the following contentions: (1) The trial court erred in denying the motion for nonsuit and in refusing to direct a verdict for defendant because the evidence was insufficient to justify or sustain the verdict. (2) The trial court erred concerning the admission of and refused to strike evidence proferred by plaintiff. (3) The trial court in its instructions confused and misled the jury concerning the only issue upon which plaintiff relied for a verdict.

[1] 1. The first point made by defendant upon this appeal is in reality that the evidence is insufficient to justify or sustain the verdict. The evidence is practically undisputed that plaintiff's machine was crowded off the highway by a passing truck, and that plaintiff, by reason thereof, sustained serious injury. No question is made that the verdict is excessive. As before stated, the accident occurred about 9 o'clock at night. Neither the plaintiff, nor any of the occupants of the machine with her, could definitely identify the driver of the truck that crowded plaintiff's machine off the highway, nor could any of them identify the truck, nor did they or either of them at the time the truck passed them ascertain or learn the license number, or any number, carried by the truck. A witness, Francis A. Berry, however, testified that he met a truck on this highway as he was traveling easterly thereon; that after meeting said truck he proceeded easterly along the highway, a distance of about 200 yards, and found plaintiff's machine off the road and down the embankment. He was not able to identify this truck, nor its driver, nor did he observe or secure its license number at that time. Upon reaching the point where he found plaintiff's machine, he turned his own machine around, assisted plaintiff to a seat in it, and with the son of the plaintiff, started back to Gilroy for the purpose of securing for the plaintiff medical attention; that after he had gone about a mile he overtook a truck traveling westerly on the highway, and secured its license number, which number it was afterwards ascertained corresponded with the license number of defendant's truck; that he saw no truck on the highway after meeting the one about 200 yards from the scene of the accident until he met the truck bearing the license number of defendant's truck. The plaintiff, her son, and granddaughter all testified that they saw no machine pass them between the time their machine was forced off the highway and the time they began their return trip to Gilroy in Berry's machine. The evidence further shows that the country through which the Pacheco Pass highway was laid was mountainous in character, and that the only lateral road leading from this highway westerly from the point of the accident was the San Filippe road, which was 1.7 miles from the point of the accident. The defendant admitted that he passed over said highway the night of the accident and at the point on said highway where said accident occurred, but contended that it was earlier in the evening. He also testified that no such accident or any accident of any kind occurred to his truck during that trip. The license number of the truck, which was overtaken about 1 mile westerly from the scene of the accident, was also observed by the son of the plaintiff and later by the granddaughter who followed in another machine, and who also overtook the truck as it traveled toward Gilroy. The evidence was sufficient to justify the jury in believing that the truck which Berry overtook and passed about one mile from the scene of the accident was the truck of the defendant, as its license number corresponded with that of defendant's truck. The plaintiff, her son, and granddaughter all positively testified that no other truck passed them after the accident and before plaintiff began her return trip to Gilroy with Mr. Berry. The evidence further shows that there was no road leading away or from said highway between the point of the accident and the point where defendant's truck was overtaken and its license number ascertained and secured. This evidence was unquestionably sufficient to justify and warrant the jury in believing and finding that it was defendant's truck which met and crowded plaintiff's machine from the highway, and was, therefore, the cause of plaintiff's injury.

[2] Defendant has advanced a number of arguments tending to discredit the evidence in behalf of plaintiff and to show that it is not of that substantial and convincing character as would justify the jury in believing and relying upon it. All of these we have duly considered. They are directed exclusively to the weight of the evidence or to apparent contradictions therein. These were matters solely for the decision of the jury, and their findings thereon will not be disturbed by this court.

[3] 2. The first error in the admission of evidence assigned by the defendant relates to the evidence of the son of the plaintiff, Donald Hughes. This witness was asked whether the defendant, Hartman, was the man who was driving the truck on that particular night. On replying that Mr. Hartman had been pointed out as the driver, he was further asked whether Mr. Hartman was in the courtroom, to which question the witness replied that, "He is sitting at the side of counsel." This evidence was clearly hearsay, and it was error to permit the witness to give evidence of facts of which he had no personal knowledge. At the same time its admission could not have seriously prejudiced the defendant in making his defense. His own testimony was that he drove his truck on the night in question. If, therefore, the truck of defendant was sufficiently identified as the truck which caused the injury to plaintiff, and we think it was, then by the defendant's own admissions he must have been the driver of "the truck on that particular night."

[4] The claim is also made that the court erred in refusing to strike out the evidence of the witness Berry to the effect that he was nearly forced off the grade by the truck he met 200 yards westerly from the place where he found the plaintiff's machine off of the highway. This witness was asked how he came to hear plaintiff's cry for help, and replied, "I had slowed down because I had been nearly forced off the road by a truck." Thereupon the defendant asked to have stricken out the words, "I had been nearly forced off the road," which motion the court denied. Defendant contends that this evidence was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, for the reason that this truck was not connected with the truck involved in the accident, and evidence that it was traveling along the center of the road when the witness Berry first passed it might be taken by the jury as some proof that the defendant at the time of the accident was also driving his truck along the center of the road. The difficulty with this argument is that it assumes that the truck mentioned by the witness Berry was not connected with the truck involved in the accident. As we have before observed there was sufficient evidence to justify the jury in believing that this truck was the one which crowded plaintiff's machine off the highway. If the jury so believed, then the evidence of the witness Berry, sought to be stricken out by defendant, might rightfully be considered by the jury as some proof that defendant was taking more than his share of the road as he passed the point on the highway where the accident happened.

[5] The further contention is made that the court erred in permitting the witness George Lorentzen to testify to certain tracks presumably made by plaintiff's machine as they appeared along the southerly edge of the highway and then "they got closer and closer until they got here (indicating) and then they dropped off and went down to the fence." This witness reached the scene of the accident about 11:30 that night, and defendant claims that, as the evidence showed that a large number of machines passed over the point in the highway where the accident happened, between the time of the accident and the time when the witness Lorentzen appeared upon the scene, the evidence of this witness as to the location of these automobile tracks was improperly admitted and prejudicially affected the rights of defendant. We think there is no merit in this condition. While there was evidence that many machines passed over this point on the highway during the time intervening between the accident and the arrival of the witness Lorentzen, there was no evidence that any machine other than plaintiff's went over the embankment at the point on the highway to which the evidence of this witness relates. The evidence of the witness Lorentzen was properly admitted.

[6, 7] Appellant complains that he was seriously prejudiced by a remark of the court, made during the trial, and when one of the respondent's counsel was interrogating the witness Donald Hughes as to whether any other truck passed the scene of the accident between the time the accident occurred and the time when they overtook defendant's machine and secured its number. The remark objected to was evidently made to counsel for respondent, and was as follows: "Well, you have got the man that did it." The court was no doubt referring to the defendant in this remark. Conceding this remark to have been improperly made, it appears from the record that no objection was taken to it at the time by defendant, nor was any request then or ever made of the court to instruct the jury to disregard the same. In other words, defendant remained silent, without objection or exception to the remark as thus made, and the complaint that he was injured and prejudiced thereby is now made for the first time in this court. An exception to an improper remark made by the trial judge during the trial of an action in order to avail the party claimed to have been injured thereby must have been taken by such party at the time the remark was made, or at some time thereafter and before the close of said trial. Compton-Gardena M. Co. v. McCartney, 69 Cal. App. 708, 231 P. 764; Franceschi v. Nardi, 77 Cal. App. 78, 246 P. 130. If thus taken, an opportunity is given to the trial judge by an instruction to the jury or otherwise to cure the injury occasioned by such remark. This rule might not apply where the remark was of such a character that its prejudicial effect could not be cured by any subsequent action by the trial court. The remark of the court in the present action, of which complaint is made, is not of such character. Defendant therefore must be held to have waived any right to except to the action of the court in making the remark attributed to it, and quoted above, by his failure to object to the same during the trial of the action.

[8] 3. The third ground upon which the defendant bases his appeal from the judgment herein concerns the instructions given by the court to the jury. It is claimed by appellant that the court confused and misled the jury concerning the only issue upon which plaintiff relied for a verdict. As already stated, the only act of negligence which the plaintiff charges against the defendant is that the latter drove his truck along said highway in such a careless and negligent manner as to force plaintiff's machine off the highway and down the declivity or embankment. There was no attempt made by plaintiff to prove any other act of negligence on the part of the defendant. The court properly instructed the jury upon the issue made by the pleadings involving this claim of negligence. The court further instructed the jury as follows:

"II. Plaintiff claims that the injuries were received and sustained by her as a result of the careless and negligent operation and driving of the truck by defendant A. H. Hartman."

"VII. I instruct you that the Motor Vehicle Act of this state [St. 1923, p. 553, § 113, subd. a] provides that 'any person driving a vehicle on the public highways of this State, shall drive the same at a careful and prudent speed, not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard for the traffic, surface and width of the highway, and no person shall drive any vehicle upon a public highway at such a speed as to endanger the life, limb or property of any person.'"

"X. The Motor Vehicle Act of this State [St. 1923, p. 562, § 139] also provides that the driver of a motor vehicle traversing defiles, canyons or mountain highways shall hold such motor vehicle under control and as near the right hand side of the highway as reasonably possible, and shall not permit such vehicle to coast, and upon approaching curves where the view is obstructed within a distance of two hundred feet along the highway shall give an audible warning with a horn or other warning device."

"XI. I instruct you that the violation of a statute or law of the State of California is negligence per se. By this is meant that that where one violates a statute or law regulating an action or course of conduct he is guilty of negligence, and if damage or injury is solely and proximately caused to another by reason of such violation of a statute or law then the violator of such statute or law is responsible for his act."

"XII. If, therefore, you find that defendant, A. H. Hartman, violated the statute of this State in relation to the operation of motor vehicles on public highways, then such violation of the statute is negligence per se, that is to say, negligence by and of itself."

"XIII. If you find the injury resulted directly and proximately to plaintiff as a result of such violation of the statute, the person violating such statute is liable for such injury as may arise from such violation of such statute, unless the person injured has been guilty of contributory negligence which was a proximate cause of such injury."

"XV. I instruct you that even if the provisions of the Motor Vehicle Act of the State of California were not violated, it is for you, under all the conditions and circumstances of the case, to say whether or not a party is negligent. But when a provision of the Motor Vehicle Act is violated, the law conclusively presumes negligence per se. It is therefore a question of fact for you to decide whether or not any provision of the Motor Vehicle Act of the State of California was violated, and if you so find that it was violated then you must find negligence as a matter of law."

It is defendant's contention that these instructions were not pertinent to any issue made by the pleadings, that it was error for the court to give them to the jury, and that by the giving of them the jury was confused and misled concerning the only issue upon which the plaintiff relied for a verdict. That the instructions as a whole were much broader than the issues embraced within the pleadings must be conceded. Plaintiff makes an attempt to show that, in addition to the specific charge of negligence, wherein it is alleged in the complaint that the defendant failed to give sufficient room on the highway for plaintiff's machine to pass, the complaint also contains a general allegation of negligence as to the manner in which the defendant drove his truck on said highway on the evening of the accident. We hardly think the complaint is susceptible of such a construction. It is quite evident that the case was tried upon the theory that the only negligence charged against the defendant was that he failed to properly give way and give one-half of the highway to the automobile approaching on his left, in which plaintiff was riding. All of the evidence tending to prove defendant's negligence was directed to this one specific charge of negligence. We must agree, therefore, with defendant in his contention that the instructions complained of were without the issues made by the pleadings, and that the court erred in giving them to the jury. We are not satisfied, however, that any material injury was sustained by the defendant by reason of the giving of these instructions. It is true that they referred to acts of negligence other than that alleged in the complaint. But the act of negligence alleged in the complaint—the failure of the driver of the truck to give to plaintiff one-half of the highway—was sustained by so clear and convincing proof that there could not have been any possible doubt in the minds of the jury as to the truth of such allegation. In fact, there was no dispute as to the claim of plaintiff that her machine was crowded off the highway by the driver of the truck. The only real controversy during the whole trial, so far as the facts of the case were concerned, was as to the identity of the driver of the truck. If the jury was satisfied that the defendant was such driver, then the only verdict it could have rendered under the evidence was one in favor of the plaintiff. The instructions complained of, therefore, could have had but little, if any, weight at all with the jury in determining any of the issues submitted to them. We do not think they could possibly have had the effect attributed to them by the defendant, that of confusing the jury concerning the specific charge of negligence made against him by the complaint, for the reason that the only element of this specific charge of negligence which was in serious controversy during the trial was whether it was defendant's truck that caused the injury to plaintiff, and these instructions did not in any manner refer to nor involve this element of the charge. They could not, therefore, have caused any confusion in the minds of the jury in determining whether or not the defendant was guilty of this specific charge of negligence made against him. The instructions, therefore, conceding the same to have been erroneously given, did not seriously or at all prejudice the rights of the defendant.

We find no error in the record that would justify a reversal of the judgment, and for that reason the judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Stanislaus County; L. W. Fulkerth, Judge.

Action by the Simon Newman Company against Geo. W. Fink and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. M. Walthall, of Modesto, for appellants.

Whitehurst & Logan, of Patterson, for respondent.

SHENK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in an action to revive and foreclose a first mortgage on personal property.

The defendant Ora T. Medlin was the owner of the personal property, which consisted of a tractor, farming implements, a harvested crop of hay, and other personal property on his ranch in Stanislaus county. The mortgage referred to was executed on September 21, 1920, by the defendant Medlin to the defendant First National Bank of Crow's Landing to secure the payment of two promissory notes aggregating the principal sum of $2,400. The defendant George W. Fink was the secretary and cashier of the defendant bank and was handling for the defendant Medlin his loan transactions with the bank. On May 18, 1921, Medlin executed and delivered to the defendant Fink, personally, a note in the sum of $2,500 and a mortgage to secure the payment thereof covering the same personal property mentioned in the first mortgage. Both mortgages were recorded. Medlin also owed other sums to the defendant Fink which were unsecured by any lien on the personal property mentioned; and also owed a small unsecured balance of a little less than $200 to the plaintiff. Medlin was unable to meet his obligations and required further funds with which to carry on his farming operations.

It is unnecessary to enter into the detail of all the conversations and negotiations had among the parties. It is undisputed that Medlin finally arranged with the plaintiff for a loan, and, with the knowledge of the defendant Fink, it was agreed that with the funds so borrowed Medlin would pay off the note and mortgage to the First National Bank of Crow's Landing and would give the plaintiff a new mortgage on the same personal property. During the negotiations the plaintiff requested of the defendant Fink a report of how Medlin "stood." To this request the defendant Fink answered by letter to the plaintiff as follows: "In accordance with your request of last evening, we are enclosing copy of Medlin chattel mortgage, and statement of amount due this bank on said mortgage. Note $2400.00 at 8 per cent from April 21st to September 12–22, $75.73, $2475.73 amount due the bank to September 12th, 22. On the old crop mortgage due me personally, are two notes, as follows: Note $400.00 with interest at 8 per cent from March 24th, 1921, $48.00, $448.00. Note $325.00 with interest $34.67, $807.67, total due me personally on old crop mortgage which is now unsecured on account of warehouse receipt not having reached far enough." The plaintiff replied to Fink by letter requesting that a release of the chattel mortgage held by the defendant bank be prepared, and stating that it was not concerned with Medlin's indebt edness to Fink personally and would not abide by his request to pay it. The plaintiff paid Medlin's debt to the defendant bank, recorded the release of the first mortgage and also the mortgage given by Medlin to secure the total amount of his indebtedness to it.

There was additional testimony in the record that Fink had shown to Louis J. Newman, one of the officers of the plaintiff, Medlin's note to him for $2,500 which stated that it was secured by chattel mortgage on the personal property mentioned. This was denied by Mr. Newman, who testified that he saw only the note and mortgage to the bank. There was testimony also that Medlin did not know that he had given a note and mortgage to Fink personally, but believed that he was dealing with him as an officer of the bank and that the second note and mortgage was a renewal of the first.

On this state of the record the defendant-appellants contend that plaintiff is not entitled to a revival of the first mortgage and to be subrogated to the rights of the defendant bank thereunder, because: (1) There is evidence that the plaintiff knew of the second mortgage and the findings of the trial court are not sufficiently supported; (2) plaintiff was a mere volunteer and not, therefore, a person in whose favor the doctrine of subrogation may be invoked; (3) plaintiff was inexcusably negligent in not informing itself by a search of the records; and (4) the doctrine does not apply to liens on personal property.

[1] Indisputably the state of the record disposes of the appellants' first contention. Without repeating the findings which appellants assert are unsupported by the evidence, it is enough to note that there is evidence in the record, including the inferences which the trial court might deduce therefrom, sufficient to support all of the court's findings.

[2] The other contentions of the appellants are likewise without merit. The general rule respecting the rights of persons who advance money to pay off incumbrances is stated in 27 American & English Encl. of Law (2d Ed.) at page 247, as follows: "One who advances money to pay off an incumbrance on realty at the instance of either the owner of the property or the holder of the incumbrance, either on the express understanding, or under circumstances from which an understanding will be implied, that the advance made is to be secured by a first lien on the property, is not a mere volunteer; and in the event the new security is for any reason not a first lien on the property, the holder of such security, if not chargeable with culpable and inexcusable neglect, will be subrogated to the rights of the prior incumbrancer under the security held by him, unless the superior or equal equities of others would be prejudiced thereby, and to this end equity will set aside a cancellation of such security, and revive the same for his benefit." See, also, Swift v. Kraemer, 13 Cal. 526, 73 Am. Dec. 603; Civ. Code, § 2903.

In support of their contention that plaintiff is a volunteer, appellants quote in substance what is also a general rule, stated in 27 American & English Encl. of Law (2d Ed.) at page 255, to be: "One who advances money to pay the debt of another, in the absence of agreement, express or implied, for subrogation, will not be entitled to succeed to the rights and remedies of the creditor so paid unless there is some obligation, interest, or right, legal or equitable, on the part of such person in respect of the matter concerning which the advance is made, as otherwise he is a stranger, a volunteer, an intermeddler, to whom the equitable right of subrogation is never accorded."

There is no conflict in these two statements, and no quarrel with the correctness of either of them. What the appellants have failed to appreciate is that one who pays off an incumbrance at the request either of the mortgagor or of the holder of the incumbrance with the understanding that he is to have a first lien as security is not a volunteer. See, also, Campbell v. Foster Home Ass'n, 163 Pa. 609, 30 A. 222, 26 L. R. A. 117, 43 Am. St. Rep. 818.

The cases cited from this jurisdiction by the appellants do not dispute, but in fact recognize, the general principles stated. In Brown v. Rouse, 125 Cal. 645, 58 P. 267, and Guy v. Du Uprey, 16 Cal. 196, 76 Am. Dec. 518, cited by the appellants, it was held that the plaintiffs were volunteers because the substituted mortgages were executed by agents of the mortgagors without authority.

[3] That a court of equity has power in a proper case to revive a discharged mortgage, even one which has been released of record, is not questioned. See 23 Cal. Jur. pp. 938, 939.

[4] Whether a failure to make a search of the records would preclude the right to subrogation which the plaintiff otherwise might have had, it is unnecessary to determine. That such a right would not be so affected in the absence of actual knowledge is intimated in the case of Darrough v. Herbert Kraft Co. Bank, 125 Cal. 272, 57 P. 983. In the present case the trial court was clearly justified in finding the equities in favor of the plaintiff in spite of plaintiff's failure to inform itself from the records. The defendant Fink should not be heard to say that plaintiff was negligent because it did not search the records, when by his own conduct in failing to disclose material facts when he was under a duty to speak he impliedly represented that no other facts existed, and thereby misled the plaintiff into changing from a position which it would not have surrendered had it known all the facts.

[5] Appellants' last contention is answered by the case of Bumiller v. Bumiller, 179 Cal. 119, 175 P. 897, where the court applied the doctrine of equitable subrogation to facts involving interests in corporate stock. The fact that the personal property has depreciated in value does not change the equities. That is a probability that the lender must be deemed to have taken into consideration at the time he took the mortgage security, and that fact alone cannot change the position in which Fink should expect to be and in which he would have been had the lien of the first mortgage continued alive.

Other points made do not require specific notice. No rights of third persons who might be injured by the revival of the first mortgage are involved; and no prejudice to the creditor under the first mortgage, who has been paid in full, is shown.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Yuba County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Alice Lee Oatman against H. A. Niemeyer, as administrator of the estate of A. N. Garrison, deceased. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

W. P. Rich, of Marysville, for appellant.

Lawrence Schillig, of Yuba City, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal from the judgment of the trial court in favor of the plaintiff granting reformation of an instrument purporting to be a deed, by inserting therein a description of certain real property which was owned by deceased, but which, it was claimed, was omitted by mistake from said instrument, and also quieting plaintiff's title to the real property after said purported deed had been reformed. The appeal was taken on the judgment roll alone.

The facts found by the court show: That on the 4th day of June, 1922, in the city of Wheatland, county of Yuba, state of California, one A. N. Garrison employed plaintiff to care for him, nurse him, and keep house for him at his residence in said city of Wheatland, county of Yuba, state of California, which service was to be continuous to the date of his death; that said A. N. Garrison was of the age of 80 years or thereabouts, at said time. In consideration of such service, said Garrison promised and agreed to and with plaintiff that he would give her all his property, both real and personal, on hand at the time of his death. In pursuance of such agreement, plaintiff, on said 4th day of June, 1922, began such service, and continued to and did render all of such service to be given by her to said A. N. Garrison to the date of his death, to wit, on the 18th day of October, 1926. On the 4th day of October, 1926, the said A. N. Garrison informed plaintiff that he wished to comply with his said agreement and execute the necessary papers giving her his property, and sent for one S. D. Hicks, who was then and there and for some time previous had been a justice of the peace of the territory in which the said city of Wheatland was situated; that thereupon the said S. D. Hicks went to the residence of said A. N. Garrison in said city of Wheatland, and the said A. N. Garrison then and there instructed the said S. D. Hicks to draw the necessary papers which would invest plaintiff with all of his property, and thereupon the said S. D. Hicks prepared a deed, and the same was signed and executed by the said A. N. Garrison, and the said A. N. Garrison requested said S. D. Hicks and one Ira Rowland to sign as witnesses thereto; that after the signing and witnessing of said deed, the same was then and there by the said A. N. Garrison delivered to said plaintiff, Alice Lee Oatman. The deed so signed and witnessed is set out in the findings. It purports to grant, bargain, and sell to the plaintiff, her heirs and assigns forever, "all the certain lot, piece or parcel of land situate, lying and being in the city of Wheatland, County of Yuba, State of California, and bounded and particularly described as follows, to-wit." No description of the property sought to be conveyed appears in the deed. The trial court found that the real property intended to be conveyed was the only real property owned by said A. N. Garrison, and the same constituted one compact piece or tract of land which was fenced and on which was a dwelling house where the said A. N. Garrison resided and where the plaintiff rendered such services. The description of the property is inserted in the findings of the court.

It was also found that through the mistake of the scrivener, the plaintiff's name was improperly spelled, and the description of the property intended to be conveyed was omitted, and that such mistake and omission was not brought to the attention of the plaintiff until after the death of A. N. Garrison on the 18th of October, 1926. It was further found that the plaintiff had not been paid by the said A. N. Garrison for her services aforesaid, nor has she been paid since his death therefor, except by the conveyance of said real property hereinbefore described and which was intended by the said A. N. Garrison to convey to said plaintiff the real property described in the findings in payment for such services. The plaintiff is now, and ever since the date of the delivery of said deed or instrument to her she has been, in the actual possession of said real property hereinbefore described, together with the dwelling house thereon and all things therein.

The trial court entered a decree reforming and correcting the said deed so that plaintiff's name would appear therein properly, and inserted the description of the property which had been omitted, and quieted plaintiff's title against the administrator of the estate of A. N. Garrison, deceased, to the property so described.

[1] Appellant contends that the lack of any description of any kind in the instrument before the court, or of any reference to the property by which it could be located, constituted a patent ambiguity, and that it was error in the trial court to hear extrinsic evidence concerning this; that the purported deed was wholly inoperative and void because of the want of any description or designation of subject-matter; and that, being void, it cannot be reformed. A deed executed in blank is, according to the great weight of authority, void. 18 C. J. 188, § 77; Boyd Lumber Co. v. Mills, 146 Ga. 794, 92 S. E. 534, L. R. A. 1918A, 1154; Robinson v. Yetter, 238 Ill. 320, 87 N. E. 363; Cooper v. Page, 62 Me. 192; Perminter v. McDaniel, 1 Hill (S. C.) 267, 26 Am. Dec. 179; Vermont Acc. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 87 Vt. 394, 89 A. 480; Barras v. Barras, 191 Mich. 473, 158 N. W. 192; Burns v. Lynde, 6 Allen (Mass.) 305; Daneri v. Gazzola, 2 Cal. App. 351, 83 P. 455; Scott v. Woodworth, 34 Cal. App. 400, 409, 167 P. 543; Redemeyer v. Cunningham, 61 Cal. App. 423, 429, 215 P. 83.

[2] Where an instrument is void for some fundamental reason, reformation would amount to the making of a new contract, and is therefore never granted. 34 Cyc. 926, 927.

[3] It would seem, therefore, that the trial court unduly extended the equitable principle of reformation in inserting in this deed a complete description of the property. The circumstances of the case appeal strongly to a court of equity, and this, doubtless, influenced the decision of the case. However, the plaintiff was not without remedy; indeed, she had several remedies at her command. She was entitled to bring an action against the estate for the value of her services to the deceased, or she had an action for the failure of the decedent to perform his contract and convey to her the property in controversy, in which equity would hold the heirs at law as trustees of the property for the plaintiff; but the court should not adopt a remedy which is not sanctioned by law because the plaintiff has misconceived her remedy.

The judgment is reversed.

Conviction of attorney for embezzlement of moneys received for client held justified, under evidence that there was no substitution of attorneys, and that defendant continued to act as attorney, though deputy district attorney in his opening statement remarked that the relation of attorney and client had terminated by client's introduction to another attorney.

In prosecution of attorney for embezzlement of client's funds, it was immaterial whether client considered that defendant had ceased to act as his attorney, and opening remarks of prosecuting attorney that the relationship of attorney and client had ceased held not prejudicial.

3. Embezzlement 🔑10—Attorney's fraudulent appropriation of moneys received for client constituted "embezzlement," even if attorney and client relationship had ceased (Pen. Code, § 503).

Attorney's fraudulent appropriation to his own use of moneys received in behalf of client constituted embezzlement, under Pen. Code, § 503, and not larceny, even if defendant had been discharged as attorney, since he acted as constructive agent in handling another's property.

Burke & Catlin, Laird L. Neal, and W. Maxwell Burke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

PRESTON, J. This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment of conviction for the crime of embezzlement. Persuasive testimony offered by the prosecution in support of the charges filed against him showed the facts to be substantially as follows:

In December, 1919, one James E. Fisher bought from Robert Marsh & Co. of Los Angeles four $1,000 bonds. In October, 1921, he made an unsuccessful attempt to collect the amount due upon them. Immediately thereafter, answering an advertisement, he called at the office of a collection agency in San Diego, where he met one Hinckley, by whom he was introduced to defendant Gordon, an occupant of the same office, who handled the legal end of the business. It was thereupon agreed that these parties should endeavor to collect the amount due upon the bonds, and that Fisher should pay court costs in any action brought against Marsh & Co., and also 10 per cent. of any sum recovered. A contract providing for said 10 per cent. fee was signed by said Fisher. About 10 days later Fisher delivered the bonds to Hinckley and Gordon, accepting in return their receipt therefor. In all five bonds were so delivered, as Fisher had theretofore accepted an additional $500 bond from Marsh & Co. in consideration of the dismissal of a prior suit against it and allowance to said company of an extension of time within which to pay the sum due.

About December, 1921, Fisher went to San Diego, where he and defendant signed a complaint prepared by defendant, as attorney, in an action filed by him in the superior court of San Diego county for the purpose of recovering upon said bonds as aforesaid. About this time Fisher paid defendant $100 on account for expenses of litigation. Thereafter, and upon motion of defendant, a change of venue was granted in said action to Los Angeles county, and on February 25, 1922, defendant furnished said Fisher with a letter of introduction to Mr. O. B. Willson of the law firm of Verge & Willson in Los Angeles. The letter requested that Willson do everything possible for Fisher looking toward a settlement of the matter, and added that, if it could not be settled, "Mr. Fisher will want you to assist me in the case." At this time, also, defendant returned the bonds to Mr. Fisher, who in turn delivered them to said law firm of Verge & Willson. Thereafter, and about November, 1923, while the action was still pending, defendant, on behalf of said Fisher, but without his knowledge and consent, entered into an agreement with Marsh & Co. for the settlement of said claim, which agreement he signed, "Joseph E. Fisher, by M. M. Gordon, his attorney."

By said contract Marsh & Co., in consideration of the dismissal of said suit, agreed to pay the sum of $250 each month upon the Fisher account until the principal indebtedness, with accrued interest, amounting in all to some $5,500, was canceled. The bonds were placed in escrow and were returned to Marsh & Co. at the time they made the final payment under said contract. The total indebtedness was paid in installments as stipulated therein, the entire transaction being conducted by Marsh & Co. through defendant, as attorney for said Fisher, and all payments were received by defendant. Eleven canceled checks were admitted in evidence, each for $250, issued by Marsh & Co., payable to said Fisher and indorsed in the handwriting of defendant, "J. E. Fisher, by M. M. Gordon, His Attorney." Memoranda were also introduced bearing notations in the handwriting of defendant, acknowledging the various payments received from said company. There was likewise admitted in evidence a twelfth check for $589.11, similarly indorsed. It appears that Fisher never received any of the money represented by said eleven checks, but that Gordon turned over to Attorney Willson, for transfer to Fisher, the greater portion of the sum represented by said twelfth check, and a new trial was granted upon the count which had for its basis the transaction surrounding said payment. Upon the other seven counts, each charging defendant with having embezzled on different dates the sum of $250, the personal property of said Fisher, a new trial was denied. Nine other checks were also admitted in evidence, each representing a $250 monthly payment, and these checks were identified as having been received from defendant by Attorney Willson, who in turn forwarded them to said Fisher, by whom they were cashed. Said Fisher then returned 10 per cent. of each remittance to Willson as his agreed fee.

Summarizing the facts as above set forth, the record shows that, of some $5,589.11 collected from Marsh & Co., said Fisher received about $2,026, or less than half thereof. The remainder was retained by defendant Gordon, in addition to the $100 paid him for costs, with the exception of the small sums remitted by Fisher to Attorney Willson. Of said sum so retained by defendant, it is claimed that $24 went to Attorney Verge and $1,739.11 to Attorney Willson. The remaining sum of about $1,800 defendant kept as his fee. Attorney Willson admitted receiving certain sums from defendant, but claimed that they were sent him in payment of his services for defendant in another case, and he so believed when he accepted the 10 per cent. fee sent him by Mr. Fisher. At any rate, it is plain that of the sum collected more than 50 per cent. went into the hands of defendant, and that said Fisher received no part thereof. When Fisher called upon defendant in 1925, not having seen him since 1922, defendant claimed that their contract was on a fifty-fifty basis; that he was not a party to the 10 per cent. agreement between Fisher and said collection agency; that he had the right to retain one-half of the sum recovered. Such claim is the basis of his defense. Fisher testified, however, that this was the first time any one had ever mentioned a fifty-fifty basis of collection to him, and that he had never discharged defendant as his attorney or rescinded said contract for a 10 per cent. collection fee.

[1-3] Appellant's first claim is that the case was not tried on the theory presented by the people, and that the confusion arising therefrom caused his conviction. In support thereof he relies upon certain testimony and a remark made during the course of the opening statement by the deputy district attorney to the effect that, at the time he gave Fisher the letter of introduction to Attorney Willson, the relation between defendant and Fisher of attorney and client was thereby terminated; that, therefore, if he was not thereafter the attorney for Fisher, and if he was without authority as such attorney to make said collections, then the crime, if any, committed by him was larceny. and not embezzlement, for embezzlement consists only of the fraudulent appropriation of property by a person to whom it has been intrusted. Pen. Code, § 503. In other words, appellant claims that the opening statement announced a theory of the trial, which would prove facts constituting larceny and not embezzlement, and his counsel accepted the issue, relying upon the technical differences between the two crimes, and was thereby led into consenting to the admission of much incriminating evidence which could otherwise have been prevented from reaching the jury.

This claim is untenable. The defendant was charged with the crime of embezzlement; the prosecution undertook to present facts which would prove the commission of said crime by him, and the jury was guided by proper instructions in its consideration of the evidence. Whether or not said Fisher considered that defendant had ceased to act as his attorney is immaterial, and the opening remarks to the jury on this subject could not have prejudiced defendant. If defendant continued as Fisher's attorney, the crime, if any, was clearly embezzlement. There is ample evidence to support this view. There was never any substitution of attorneys in the action brought by defendant; in his letter to Verge Willson, defendant spoke of their assisting him with the case; defendant signed the agreement on Fisher's behalf as his attorney, and likewise indorsed said checks as his attorney. Furthermore, Fisher testified that he never definitely discharged defendant as his attorney, although defendant had apparently ceased to be interested in the matter. On the other hand, even if Fisher did in fact discharge defendant in 1922, or if defendant in effect discharged himself, yet, in the later transactions, he acted as the constructive agent of Fisher in the handling of said property intrusted to him as such agent, in which event his crime, if any, was likewise embezzlement and not larceny. See 10 Cal. Juris. p. 252, § 15; People v. Treadwell, 69 Cal. 226, 10 P. 502; People v. Steffner, 67 Cal. App. 23, 28, 227 P. 699; People v. Main, 75 Cal. App. 471, 242 P. 1078, and cases there cited.

[4, 5] Defendant was a witness in his own behalf, and he contends that it was error for the court to admit the testimony of certain character witnesses, who stated on behalf of the prosecution that his reputation for truth, honesty, and veracity was bad, especially in view of the fact that these witnesses were residents of San Diego, and not of Los Angeles, and had not known the reputation of defendant subsequent to the year 1923. Defendant, in taking the witness stand, put in issue his character for truth, honesty, and integrity, and thereby subjected himself as a witness to the same rules for testing his credibility by impeachment as any other witness. People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 80, 45 P.

175; People v. Arnold, 116 Cal. 687, 48 P. 803; People v. Bannon, 59 Cal. App. 50, 61, 209 P. 1029. Furthermore, the knowledge of these witnesses, who knew of defendant's character up to within a few years prior to the trial, and during the time of his negotiations with said Fisher, was clearly not knowledge so remote as to make its admission an abuse of discretion by the court.

[6] Defendant claims there is no showing of fraudulent intent on his part, as his actions were unconcealed and were based upon his understanding that he was to receive half of the sum collected. In our opinion, however, the evidence was amply sufficient to establish the fraud. Defendant's testimony at most raised a conflict, which was resolved by the verdict of the jury in favor of the people. The jury was properly instructed on the subject of the element of specific intent, and its determination of the matter is final.

We have carefully examined all points raised by appellant and find no merit in them. Judgment affirmed.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1928.

Venue 🔑5(3)—Action to reform note secured by trust deed held triable in county where defendant had principal place of business, notwithstanding realty was in another county; "for the recovery of real property or an interest therein" (Const. art. 12, § 16; Code Civ. Proc. § 392).

Where note sought to be reformed was executed and made payable at principal place of business of defendant corporation, and deed of trust securing note was also executed there, but real property described in trust deed was situated in another county, proper county within which to commence action was county where corporation had principal place of business, under Const. art. 12, § 16, since action was not "for the recovery of real property or an interest therein," within Code Civ. Proc. § 392, requiring such action to be tried in county wherein property or portion thereof is situated.

Action by Henry R. Jacobs and wife against the C. H. Smith Lumber Company. From an order denying a motion for change of venue, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. Roy Smith, of Long Beach, for appellant.

A. Heber Winder, of Riverside, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal was submitted upon an order to show cause issued herein, no respondents' brief having been filed. The appeal is by the defendant from an order of the superior court in and for the county of Riverside denying the defendant's motion to change the place of trial of the action from the county of Riverside to the county of Los Angeles. The motion was based upon the notice, demand, and affidavits of the defendant filed at the time of presenting its answer herein, and based upon the ground that the residence of the defendant at the time of the commencement of the action and at all times thereafter was in Los Angeles county. The action was one wherein the plaintiffs, as the makers of a certain promissory note, secured by a deed of trust, alleged that said promissory note was usurious, and prayed for equitable relief and for the reform of the note, so as to purge therefrom all usurious contents. The note in question was executed and was made payable at Long Beach, in the county of Los Angeles, the residence and principal place of business of the defendant corporation. The deed of trust securing said note was also executed there; the real property described in said deed of trust, however, being situate in the county of Riverside. The trustee named in the deed of trust was the California National Bank of Long Beach, a corporation having at all times its residence and place of business at Long Beach.

It would thus appear that the proper county within which this action should have been commenced was the county of Los Angeles, under the provisions of section 16 of article 12 of the state Constitution, unless it can be held that this action is one "for the recovery of real property, or of an estate or interest therein, or for the determination in any form, of such right or interest, and for injuries to real property," which actions, under the provisions of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure, are to be commenced and tried in the county in which such real property, or some portion thereof, is situated. It would seem clear, both by reason and authority, that this is not one of the actions provided for in the aforesaid section of the Code of Civil Procedure, but, on the contrary, it is solely and simply an action brought for the reformation of a personal obligation wherein the question as to the title or possession of the real property described in the deed of trust which secures the payment of said personal obligation is in no wise involved. The cases of Bailey v. Cox, 102 Cal. 333, 36 P. 650, Woodbury v. Nevada, etc., 120 Cal. 463, 52 P. 730, and Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 P. 356, fully deal with and dispose of the question presented upon this appeal, and upon their authority, as well as upon the plain language of the provisions of the Constitution itself, above referred to, it is obvious that the trial court was in error in denying the defendant's motion for a change of place of trial to the county of its residence and principal place of business.

The order is reversed.

In determining percentage of permanent disability to employee by reason of injury to eye, the Industrial Commission erroneously included in the award a percentage of amount as compensation for disability attributed solely to a nonindustrial disease with which employee was theretofore afflicted, since the purpose of the Workmen's Compensation Act is to charge employer and through him industry as a whole with loss accruing to employee and resulting from his employment, in accordance with the provisions of St. 1917, p. 831, §§ 3, 9(b) 2(7, 10), 11(f).

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Julio Landlin, claimant, opposed by Frank Edson, employer, and the State Compensation Insurance Fund, as insurance carrier. To review an award of the Industrial Accident Commission, the employer and insurance carrier brings certiorari. Award annulled, and cause remanded.

B. E. Pemberton and Daniel W. Burbank, both of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHENK, J. This proceeding was brought by Frank Edson, as employer, and by state compensation insurance fund, as his insurance carrier, to review and annul an award of the Industrial Accident Commission.

Julio Landlin was a laborer and the employee in whose favor the award was made. On September 6, 1926, Landlin suffered an injury by being struck in his left eye by a flying nail. That the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment is not questioned. Prior to and at the time of the injury Landlin was afflicted with a nonindustrial disease by reason of which he had permanently lost 30/50 of the sight of each eye. On May 5, 1927, he filed an application for an adjustment of his claim with the respondent commission. On October 31, 1927, the commission made its finding wherein it was found that the applicant had sustained an injury "when he was struck in the left eye by a flying nail, the vision of the left eye having been previously impaired." It was further found in paragraph 2 as follows: "2. Said injury caused permanent disability consisting of reduction of vision of left eye to counting fingers at one foot, correctible to 10/200 with moderate blurring; loss of near vision, correction being impractical due to loss of lens, pre-existing vision of eye being assumed to be 20/50, which for applicant's age and occupation constitutes a permanent disability of nine per cent. entitling him to $9.26 a week for 36 weeks, in the total sum of $333.36, which has been paid, based upon weekly wages of $15.00."

On November 18, 1927, this court pronounced its judgment in the case of Ford Motor Co. v. Industrial Acc. Com., 202 Cal. 459, 261 P. 466, wherein certain provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) involved in the present proceeding were commented upon. Prior thereto this court had, on rehearing, decided the case of Liptak v. Industrial Acc. Com., 200 Cal. 39, 251 P. 635. Three days after the decision in the Ford Motor Co. Case the applicant herein filed with the commission a petition for a rehearing on the ground that the prior award was inadequate. The rehearing was granted, and on January 23, 1918, the commission made its second finding and award wherein it amended paragraph 2 of its prior award to read as follows: "2. Said injury caused permanent disability consisting of reduction of vision of left eye to counting fingers at one foot, correctible to 10/200, with moderate blurring; loss of near vision, correction being impractical due to loss of lens; reduction of vision of right eye to 20/50, which disability, for the applicant's age and occupation is equal to 59¼ % of total disability, entitling him to a weekly payment of $9.26 for 237 weeks, amounting to the total sum of $2,194.62, on account of which the applicant has been paid the sum of $333.36. Said payments are based upon a weekly wage of $15.00."

On February 21, 1928, the petitioners filed in the District Court of Appeal their application for a writ to review and annul the second award. The petition was denied by the District Court of Appeal without opinion. An application for a hearing in this court was granted on May 21, 1928. Prior to the order granting the hearing the respondent commission filed a supplemental answer confessing its uncertainty as to the correctness of the conclusions reached in the award now under review, and expressed a desire that this court definitely construe the powers of the commission under the facts presented.

The facts are undisputed. Prior to the injury of September 6, 1926, Landlin had permanently lost 30/50 of the sight of each of his eyes due to a nonindustrial disease. By the industrial injury he was caused to lose an additional 17½/50 of the sight in his left eye. The injury did not affect his right eye. The additional loss of vision caused by the injury to the left eye was rated originally at 9 per cent., and the award was made for $333.36. After rehearing the commission found in effect that the injury caused permanent disability consisting of all of the reduction of vision in the left eye and all of the reduction of vision in the right eye and found that these losses equaled 59¼ per cent. of total disability. Upon these findings the commission made an award for the payment "of compensation for permanent disability in the total sum of $2,194.62." It will thus be seen that approximately five-sixths of the permanent disability for which the award was made was for a permanent loss pre-existing the industrial injury and resulting from a nonindustrial disease.

The question for determination may fairly be stated as follows: Does any provision of the Workmen's Compensation Act require or permit the respondent commission to award compensation for that portion of permanent disability which existed prior to the industrial injury and was wholly caused by nonindustrial disease?

Generally, the purpose of the Workmen's Compensation Act is to provide and require industrial responsibility for industrial injury. In other words, it was enacted to impose a charge on industry for losses caused by industry. This court said in Union Iron Works v. Industrial Acc. Com., 190 Cal. 33, at page 39, 210 P. 410, 413: "The underlying principle upon which the Workmen's Compensation Act rests is, as its title indicates, the providing of compensation to an employee for injuries resulting from his employment. It emanates from the economic thought that personal injury losses incident to an industry is a part of the costs of production to be borne, just as the depreciation and replacement of a machine is borne, by the industry itself, which compensation will be included in the cost of the product of the industry. Western Indemnity Co. v. Pillsbury, 170 Cal. 686, 151 P. 398."

The portions of the act pertinent to the case in hand will be noted.

Section 3 of the act defines the terms used in the act "unless a different meaning is plainly required by the context." Subdivision (4) of that section provides: "The term 'injury,' as used in this act, shall include any injury or disease arising out of the employment. * * *" No question of aggravation of any disease existing prior to the injury involved herein arises in this case. Consequently the remainder of the subdivision is inapplicable to the facts. Section 9(b) 2(7) provides: "In determining the percentages of permanent disability, account shall be taken of the nature of the physical injury or disfigurement, the occupation of the injured employee, and his age at the time of such injury, consideration being given to the diminished ability of such injured employee to compete in an open labor market."

Section 9 (b) 2 (10) provides: "The percentage of permanent disability caused by any injury shall be so computed as to cover the permanent disability caused by that particular injury without reference to any injury previously suffered or any permanent disability caused thereby."

Section 11 (f) provides: "The fact that an employee has suffered a previous disability, or receives compensation therefor, shall not preclude him from compensation for a later injury, * * * but in determining compensation for the later injury, * * * his average annual earnings shall be fixed at such sum as will reasonably represent his annual earning capacity at the time of the later injury."

From the foregoing the purpose of the act with reference to the effect of prior injury or disease is obvious. Industry takes the employee as it finds him at the time of the employment. He may have suffered a prior injury, either industrial or nonindustrial. His capacity to serve may have been reduced by an industrial or a nonindustrial disease. It may safely be said that a small proportion of humans are perfect physically and mentally. Disease and accident during childhood and the diseases and habits of adults having no relation to any particular employment result in disability or impaired capacity to work in the sphere of both physical and mental labor. For such disability or impaired capacity the Workmen's Compensation Act was not intended to provide compensation. The plain intent of the act as framed was to charge the employer, and through him industry as a whole, with the loss accruing to the employee and resulting from his employment—i. e., arising out of and in the course of his employment. If the employee has suffered permanent disability by injury or disease prior to the injury for which compensation is sought, the statute requires that the percentage of disability on account of the latter injury be computed without reference to any injury previously suffered or any permanent disability caused thereby, except that in the case of aggravation of a pre-existing disease such proportion of the disability due to the aggravation of the prior disease as may be reasonably attributed to the later injury may be considered. And this is true as to pre-existing injury or disease, either industrial or nonindustrial. If the pre-existing injury or disease be nonindustrial, the employment has no relation to the disability caused thereby and the employer or the industry is not chargeable with compensation therefor, excepting, as above noted, in the case of aggravation of a pre-existing disease. If the prior injury or disease be industrial, the terms of the act import a presumption that it has theretofore been compensated for. Therefore, when the term "injury" was defined in section 3(4) of the act to "include any injury or disease arising out of the employment," the Legislature had in mind the injury or disease for which compensation was provided in the act. But where the term "injury" was used in section 9(b) 2 (10), in the phrase "without reference to any injury previously suffered," the context plainly requires that the term apply to a pre-existing nonindustrial as well as to a pre-existing industrial injury or disease. Any other construction of the language of the act would result in a palpable absurdity. If the word "injury" in section 3(4) of the act be given the same meaning when last employed in section 9 (b) 2(10) and without regard to the context, the result would be that in computing the percentage of permanent disability caused by the particular industrial injury under consideration the commission must exclude the effect of a prior industrial injury, but by inference might include disability on account of a prior nonindustrial injury or disease. Such was not the intention of the statute.

When, therefore, the commission, in computing the percentage of permanent disability of Landlin caused by the industrial injury, included any percentage of such disability attributable to the prior injury or disease, it proceeded in a way unauthorized by the statute. Likewise, there was no justification for the inclusion in the award of nearly five-sixths or any amount as compensation for the disability attributable solely to the prior injury or disease and for which the employment was in no wise responsible.

The action of the commission, as indicated by the dates of its particular orders hereinbefore noted, together with the dates of the judgments of this court in the Liptak and the Ford Motor Co. Cases, and the attitude of counsel for the commission in the present matter, all point to the conclusion that in making its second award the commission was guided by what it conceived to be the compelling force of our decisions in the two cases mentioned. It is due to the commission to say that prior to the decision in the Liptak Case the commission had consistently applied a method of computation in permanent disability cases consistent with the views herein expressed and likewise, prior to said decision, consistently contended that the general rule of computation should apply to Liptak's Case. It was not until after the decision in the Ford Motor Co. Case that it revised its method of computation to conform to what it believed to be the effect of those two cases on the proper method to be applied in the present case. And it is now frankly conceded by counsel for the commission that the application of the statute to the present case is an amplification and extension of the doctrine of the Liptak Case.

We are of the view that the doctrine of the Liptak Case is not applicable to the case in hand. That case involved compensation for total loss of the sight enjoyed by the applicant immediately prior to the time of the injury for which compensation was sought. Section 9 (b) 2 (9) of the act, relating to total loss of sight, played an important part in the determination of that case, and it was definitely stated in the opinion that because of an apparent ambiguity in the language of the statute relating to cases of complete loss of sight, the point involved could be decided either way. Applying the provisions of section 69(a) of the act, requiring a liberal interpretation of the act in favor of the employee, the court resolved the ambiguity in favor of the applicant for compensation. The doctrine of the Liptak Case may not, therefore, reasonably be extended to cases which do not involve total loss of sight.

Nor does the Ford Motor Co. Case have the effect of which the commission was apprehensive. The conclusions arrived at in that case are entirely consistent with our present conclusions. In that case the applicant had suffered a prior industrial injury. He was compensated for that injury and was re-employed by the same employer. He suffered another injury arising out of and in the course of his employment. It was decided in that case that the percentage of the total disability caused by the second injury must be computed without reference to the prior injury. The award in that case was annulled for other reasons. Our conclusions in this case are entirely in line with the reasoning and the result attained in that case.

From what has been said it follows that the award under review was and is unjustifiable on the undisputed facts. The award is therefore annulled, and the cause is remanded to the respondent commission for further proceedings not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

PEOPLE v. ESTORGA. (Cr. 3151.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1928.

1. Jury ⚷131(13)—Collective examination by court of panel, in such manner that neither people nor defense could observe jurors as they answered, disapproved (Pen. Code, § 1078, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Collective examination by court, under Pen. Code, § 1078, of entire panel in body of courtroom by series of questions, which might, for the greater part, be answered by silence, and in manner that neither people nor the defense had any opportunity to observe the jurors as they answered, held disapproved, in view of St. 1927, p. 1039, amending said section and authorizing reasonable examination of prospective jurors by counsel and people.

2. Criminal law ⚷1162—Reversal will not be ordered if it appears to reviewing court that result would have been reached if error had not been committed.

If it appears to satisfaction of Supreme Court that result reached in criminal trial was just, and that it would have been reached if the error complained of had not been committed, reversal or new trial will not be ordered.

3. Criminal law ⚷1186(4)—Improper collective examination of panel by court did not require reversal under circumstances (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Collective examination by court of entire panel in body of courtroom, in such manner that neither people nor defense could observe jurors as they answered, held not to require reversal of conviction for rape, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where it did not appear that defendant did not have a fair and impartial trial by jury selected, and defendant's testimony showed that he was notoriously guilty of some serious offense.

Preston, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Chas. L. Allison, Judge.

Charles Estorga was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal, 267 P. 589.

H. E. Thompson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., and George H. Johnson, of San Bernardino, for the People.

WASTE, C. J. The defendant was convicted on three counts of an information charging the crime of rape. The sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict is not questioned. In fact, it could not be, for, as defendant in the court below, appellant voluntarily took the stand and admitted, without equivocation, the commission of each of the acts charged. The only point we deem it necessary to consider on this appeal is the contention that the court committed prejudicial error in its method of conducting the examination of the jurors called to try the cause; the question for consideration being whether or not the court refused to allow counsel for the defense to make a reasonable examination of the prospective jurors for purposes related to the right of challenge for cause.

At the outset, this court must register its strong disapproval of the method followed by the trial court in selecting the jury in this case. From the record it appears that, when the case was answered "Ready for trial," the clerk called the roll of the jurors constituting the panel, apparently for the purpose of ascertaining who were present. Without any names being taken from the box containing the list of jurors, and before any jurors were called to take their places in the jury box, the court propounded to the jurors present, collectively, a large number of questions, which he termed "the usual questions touching your qualifications to act as jurors in this case." Before doing so, he stated who the parties were, and explained the nature of the charges as set out in the several counts of the information. The record is silent as to any answers returned by the jurors. Many of the questions, which extend through several pages of the transcript, appear to have been of such nature as to call for a negative reply, and it may be assumed that the silence of the jurors under the questions was equivalent, in the majority of cases, to a negative answer.

With the exception of a counter interrogatory addressed to the court by one of the jurors, who sought information as to her status on the jury because she was a member of the county probation committee, but one response was made by any juror. Some of the questions asked by the court dealt with possible knowledge by the jurors of the alleged offense, and the relationship, if any, of the parties. By other questions, the court sought to ascertain the attitude of the jurors toward the particular offense with which the defendant was charged, and whether, if the jurors were facing a similar charge, they would be willing to be tried by jurors who had the same attitude toward the charge and the defendant as they had at the present time. By other questions, the court sought to ascertain if the jurors would give the defendant the benefit of the presumption of innocence, and whether or not they would accept the instructions of the court as to the law in the case; the interrogatories concluding with several questions as to whether or not the jurors would give a fair, impartial, and unbiased consideration to the case.

After such examination by the court, the names of 12 jurors were drawn; the court announced that, in the opinion of the court, the examination for cause was sufficient, and directed counsel to exercise their peremptory challenges. The people passed the challenge. Thereupon the following took place:

"Mr. H. E. Thompson (counsel for the defense): If the court please, in the answers the veniremen made I was not able to find out how they answered. I was not able to see a nod of the head. There was a large number here standing up. I am not able from the examination to intelligently challenge on behalf of this defendant, and I would like to have the privilege of asking each individual juror a few questions.

"The Court: What questions would you like to ask?

"Mr. Thompson: I would like to know if they are married men, and if they have children, and whether they are young men or young women, and if they would have any prejudice by reason of those facts, and whether they have had any trouble of the kind in their family, or their near families, or near relations, and I don't know, any questions—all being examined in a body, I don't know how many of them answered any questions, and I would not know, without I individually asked them separately how each one feels.

"The Court: None of the questions you have suggested would tend to develop a ground for challenge for cause, and therefore would be immaterial."

The defendant thereupon excepted to the ruling, and peremptorily challenged two of the jurors, but declined to make any further challenges; counsel stating that he "was not sufficiently informed." On being directed to either exercise further challenges or pass the jury, the defense passed, and the jury was sworn to try the cause. Appellant contends that by reason of the method followed by the trial court in selecting the jury, and the trial court's limitation of examination by his counsel, he was denied the right to test by reasonable inquiry the qualifications of the prospective jurors.

[1] This court cannot approve the manner of selecting the jury in this case. While the Legislature, at its most recent session, provided, in section 1078 of the Penal Code, that "it shall be the duty of the trial court to examine the prospective jurors to select a fair and impartial jury," it further provided, in the same section, that the court "shall permit reasonable examination of prospective jurors by counsel for the people and for the defendant." Stats. 1927, p. 1039. We have noted a tendency on the part of trial judges throughout the state to place too literal an interpretation upon what is the "duty of the trial court to examine prospective jurors," and to pay too little attention to the right of a "reasonable examination of prospective jurors by counsel" for the people, and particularly counsel for the defendant. The section is one of those passed by the Legislature on the recommendation of the commission for the reform of criminal procedure created by the Legislature in 1925; the purpose of the enactment, of course, being to expedite the trial of criminal causes, and to correct the abuse, which has grown up in this jurisdiction, through tedious and unnecessary examination of prospective jurors in criminal cases. It has become a matter of common knowledge in this state that the efforts on the part of counsel for defendants in criminal cases have developed into attempts to disqualify jurors, rather than to seek to ascertain their qualifications.

The purpose of the statute, however, was not to bring about expedition by depriving either the people, or defendants charged with the commission of offenses, of the right of a reasonable examination of prospective jurors, and the Legislature was particular to provide for that right. The collective examination of the entire panel in the body of the courtroom, and by a series of questions which may, for the greater part, be answered by silence on the part of the jurors, and under circumstances like those in the case at bar, in which neither the people nor the defense had any opportunity to observe the jurors as they answered, is, in our opinion, such a wide departure from the due course and conduct of an examination as to call for the unqualified disapproval of this court. See, also, People v. Edenburg (Cal. App.) 263 P. 857; People v. Riordan, 79 Cal. App. 488, 496, 250 P. 190. In those cases the jurors who were examined collectively by the court appear to have been those who had been drawn and seated in the jury box in the customary manner, were thus reduced to 12 in number, and had thereby become more definitely prospective jurors for the case on trial. This court, however, is not prepared to criticize a collective examination by the trial court of jurors drawn and seated in the jury box, provided the examination be of such nature, and conducted in such manner, as to sufficiently disclose the state of mind and attitude of the jurors toward the cause and the parties involved, and that opportunity for a "reasonable examination" of the prospective jurors be accorded the people and the defense, on it being made to appear to the satisfaction of the court that such further examination is both "reasonable" and proper. We commend to the trial courts, however, a consideration of some of the observations made by the District Courts of Appeal on this subject.

[2, 3] A first impression of the situation presented in this case would seem to require a reversal of the judgment of conviction, upon the ground that the defendant had not been accorded an opportunity to select a fair and impartial jury. But where, as in this case, the jury has found the defendant guilty, we must, upon a review of the entire record, decide whether, in our judgment, any error committed has led to the verdict which was reached. If it appears to our satisfaction that the result was just, and that it would have been reached if the error had not been committed, a reversal or a new trial is not to be ordered. People v. O'Bryan, 165 Cal. 55, 66, 130 P. 1042. While the Constitution of this state guarantees to one accused of crime all the rights and safeguards incident to a trial by jury, including the right to the selection of a fair and impartial jury, it also provides that no judgment shall be set aside, or a new trial granted, in any case for any error of procedure in the trial court, unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the appellate tribunal shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

In his "qualified concurrence" in the case of People v. Fleming, 166 Cal. 357, 384, 385, 136 P. 291, 303 (Ann. Cas. 1915B, 881), Mr. Chief Justice Beatty expressed the view that the term "miscarriage of justice," as used in the section of the Constitution, supra, may be said to mean "the conviction of a person who is probably innocent." It may therefore be accepted as the rule that, since the adoption of the amendment to the Constitution, supra, the mere fact of the assignment of error is not conclusive. "The final test is the opinion of the appellate court upon the result of the error. No doubt this view requires the court, to some extent, to weigh the evidence, and form conclusions upon its weight—a function which, heretofore [before the amendment to the Constitution], has been reserved for the jury. But it cannot be doubted that the legislators, in proposing the amendment, and the electors, in adopting it, intended to put upon the courts the performance of just that function. We are not substituted for the jury. We are not to determine, as an original inquiry, the question of the defendant's quilt or innocence. But, where the jury has found him guilty, we must, upon a review of the entire record, decide whether, in our judgment, any error committed has led to the verdict which was reached." People v. O'Bryan, supra.

It therefore follows that, where prejudicial error is predicated on any of the grounds specified in the Constitution, it is incumbent upon this court to determine the matter on the particular facts and circumstances appearing in the individual case in which the assignment of error is made. Applying that rule to the present case, there appear to be two sufficient reasons why the procedure followed by the trial court in the selection of the jury, improper though it was, should not result in a reversal. The first of these reasons is that it would seem that the desire of the defense to further question the prospective jurors, after they were called to the box, as indicated by the questions which counsel stated it was desired to ask, was not so much for the purpose of laying the basis of challenges for cause as to pave the way for possible peremptory challenges, and there is no statutory authority for the examination of jurors solely for that purpose. People v. Edwards, 163 Cal. 752, 754, 127 P. 58. Furthermore, the defense did not exhaust its peremptory challenges, excusing only 2 jurors when accorded that opportunity. The defense has made no affirmative showing, and does not offer to show, that any of the 12 jurors who were actually sworn and served in the trial of the cause were biased, prejudiced, or in any way unfit to serve as trial jurors; nor does it appear that by reason of the manner in which the jury was selected the defendant did not have a fair and impartial trial.

The other, and to our minds the more potent, reason for holding that the judgment should not be reversed, is found in the fact that, although the defendant on arraignment entered a plea of not guilty to the charges of the information, he voluntarily took the stand at the trial, as a witness in his own behalf, and, without equivocation or qualification, admitted the commission of the acts charged. It appears from his own testimony that he met the prosecutrix—a girl of the age of 13 or 14 years—while the two were working in the orchards in Northern California. After a week of persuasion, and under a promise that the defendant would take the girl to Arkansas and marry her, the prosecutrix consented to the acts. In the meantime, they had traveled together from Sacramento in the defendant's automobile, spending their nights together, as far as San Bernardino county, where the acts specified in the information were committed. The defendant knew that the girl was under the age of 18 years. He, therefore, caused her to say that she was 17 years old, and his wife. On such a record, from which it appears from the testimony of the defendant that he has been notoriously guilty of some serious offense, it cannot be said that a miscarriage of justice has occurred by reason of the conviction.

While, as already indicated, we must strongly disapprove of the method by which the jury was selected in this case, we cannot bring ourselves to reverse the righteous judgment of conviction which followed.

The order overruling defendant's motion for a new trial, and the judgment and sentence of the court, are, and each is, affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; SEAWELL, J.; CURTIS, J.; LANGDON, J.; SHENK, J.

PRESTON, J. I dissent. I think the prejudice to the rights of the defendant requires a reversal of the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by W. H. Filson against M. J. Balkins for damages for personal injuries. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 268 P. 445.

Haas & Dunnigan and C. H. Veale, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Jones, Wilson & Stephenson and Leonard Wilson, all of Los Angeles (Wm. Fleet Palmer, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

PRESTON, J. [1] Action for personal injuries. Plaintiff had judgment for $1,500, and defendant has appealed.

On July 24, 1923, plaintiff was struck by an automobile driven by defendant, and was quite seriously injured. The place of the accident was 3 or 4 feet west of the center line of the highway running north and south and at a point about 2 miles south of the town of Newhall, in Los Angeles county. The traveled part of the roadway in this region was 21 feet. The automobile was coming from the south, traveling north. The proper side of the highway, according to the law of the road, was the east side thereof, but plaintiff was struck on the west side thereof, the machine being on that side.

Evidence was received that the road was clear of traffic; that defendant was traveling some 30 miles per hour, and that no warning of any kind was given; hence the verdict of the jury that defendant was negligent cannot be disturbed.

[2, 3] In fact, the only question made is that plaintiff, as a matter of law, was guilty of contributory negligence, but we confess a total inability to see any merit in this contention under the plaintiff's evidence.

For some 500 or 600 feet south of the point of the accident the road, though on an incline, was without any curve. On the day of the accident plaintiff was acting as the foreman of a crew of men repairing a pipe line of the Midway Gas Company, which traversed the west line of said highway. Near the point of the accident these employees were tunneling under the highway from the west side thereof a distance of 6 feet to effect a pipe connection. Warnings that men were at work on the highway were posted both north and south of this point at a distance of about one-half mile therefrom. Defendant admits that he saw the men at work when he approached within about 150 feet of them. Just prior to the accident plaintiff had been requested to go to the east side of the highway to secure two flags to be used in directing traffic away from this excavation. After securing the flags, he approached the highway, and, after waiting for two vehicles to pass, gazed to the north and to the south. He saw no traffic except defendant's car, which he judged to be some 400 or 500 feet distant. Believing that he had plenty of time to recross the highway in safety, he proceeded without further outlook at a moderate gait and at an angle of about 45 degrees. Upon reaching the center of the highway, he gazed to the north, the proper place to expect traffic. Seeing none, he proceeded, and, when he had reached a point 3 or 4 feet beyond the center, defendant, apparently endeavoring to swerve in front of and around him, struck him, plaintiff coming in contact with the front side of the car. Skid marks were found upon the ground indicating that defendant had skidded some 20 feet. The marks originated upon the east side, but ended wholly upon the west side of said highway. Plaintiff heard no warning or signal of any kind, and was struck without a realization that defendant was near him.

While admittedly it is the equal and reciprocal duty of the driver of the vehicle and the pedestrian to use ordinary care while upon the highway, it is usually a question of fact and not of law whether either has in fact done so. Plaintiff says that on investigation he saw defendant some 400 or 500 feet away and proceeded across the street with the belief that he would have ample time to cross, and that he relied upon the presumption that defendant would obey the law of the road and remain on the east side of the highway. Who can say, as a matter of law, that he was not warranted in this assumption? Who would expect to be struck by a north-bound car after reaching the west half of the road? We know of no rule of law that absolutely required the plaintiff to keep a continous gaze to the south after examination and appraisal of the situation and the justifiable conclusion that he could cross in safety. Henry v. Lingsweiler, 81 Cal. App. 142, 253 P. 357.

The whole situation is summed up in the thought that evidence exists which amply warranted the jury in finding that plaintiff exercised ordinary care for his safety in making the decision that it was safe to cross the highway. This conclusion makes it unnecessary to discuss the application of the doctrine of last clear chance. The same observation may be made as to the necessity of discussing the applicability of the more liberal rule of duty of a workman upon the street or highway. State Ins., etc., Fund v. Scamell, 73 Cal. App. 285, 238 P. 780. A similar case to the one at bar on the facts is Wortman v. Trott, 202 Ill. App. 528.

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1928.

1. Continuance ⚿20(1)—Motion for continuance because plaintiff's counsel were busy elsewhere, made on morning of trial, held properly denied.

Court did not abuse discretion in denying continuance sought on morning of trial because members of firm of lawyers which represented plaintiff and who were familiar with the case were busy elsewhere.

2. Time ⚿10(5)—Notice of trial served six full days before date thereof held not affected because last day fell on Sunday (Code Civ. Proc. § 594).

Notice of trial under Code Civ. Proc. § 594, served on plaintiff's counsel at least six full days before date of trial, held not affected by fact that last of such days fell on Sunday.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by Frank I. Tobias, as special administrator of the estate of William E. Tobias, deceased, against Francis D. Adams and others. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Norcop & Cushing, Paul Friedman, Maurice R. Norcop, John J. Cushing, Wellborn, Wellborn & Wellborn, and Stephen Monteleone, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Francis D. Adams and Earl Curtis Peck, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This appeal was submitted upon an order to show cause, the respondents having failed to present or file a brief. The action was one to set aside certain conveyances of real property alleged to have been made by the defendant Francis D. Adams to his wife and codefendant Gertrude B. Adams, upon the ground that such conveyances were in fraud of the rights of the decedent, William E. Tobias, of whose estate the plaintiff is the special administrator. The trial court, upon the issues made by the complaint and answer denying the above allegations, made findings in favor of the defendants and entered its judgment accordingly that the plaintiff take nothing by his said complaint. The appeal is from such judgment.

[1, 2] The appellant makes two points upon this appeal. The first is that the trial court was in error in refusing to grant the plaintiff a continuance upon his motion therefor made on the morning of the trial. The grounds of his motion were two: First, that the members of the firm of lawyers which represented the plaintiff, and who were familiar with the facts and issues in the case, were busy elsewhere; and, second, that the plaintiff had not received the five days' notice of the date of said trial provided for in section 594 of the Code of Civil Procedure. As to the first of these contentions, the showing made thereon was quite insufficient to justify the trial court in granting the continuance sought, and it certainly committed no abuse of its discretion in denying the same. Canty v. Pierce, 173 Cal. 205, 159 P. 582; Sheldon v. Landwehr, 159 Cal. 778, 116 P. 44; Handy v. Handy, 31 Cal. App. 590, 161 P. 21. As to the second ground, it appears upon the face of the record to be without merit. The cause was set for hearing on December 20, 1926. The notice thereof was served upon plaintiff's counsel on December 14, 1926, at least six full days before the date of trial. The fact that the last of said days fell on Sunday in no wise affected the sufficiency of the notice.

The next and final contention upon which the appellant relies is that the evidence does not sustain the findings and conclusions of the trial court, to the effect that the defendant Gertrude B. Adams was the owner of the property in question as her sole and separate estate, and that said property was not subject to the claims of the decedent creditor of her husband. This question was quite fully inquired into by this court upon the respondent's motion to dismiss this appeal, and was decided adversely to the respondent's then contention. Tobias v. Adams, 201 Cal. 689, 258 P. 588. Notwithstanding the adverse views of the court therein expressed, the respondent has seen fit to present no brief in defense of the judgment therein criticized. A further examination of the record satisfies us as to the correctness of our former conclusions expressed in that opinion, and on the authority thereof the judgment herein is reversed.

LEWIS et ux. v. YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASS'N. (Sac. 4130.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 29, 1928.

Hearing Denied in Bank Jan. 28, 1929.

1. Charities 🔑45(2)—Alleged religious, benevolent, and charitable association held not relieved from liability for personal injuries, absent showing of reasonable care in selecting employés.

Young Men's Christian Association held not relieved from liability for personal injuries to one swimming in swimming pool, under allegation that it was organized and conducted as religious, benevolent, and charitable corporation, where it did not allege and prove that it used reasonable care in selection of its agents and employés.

2. Negligence 🔑134(5)—Evidence sustained verdict for plaintiff suing for injuries received while swimming in defendant's swimming pool.

In action for injury sustained by one while swimming in swimming pool of Young Men's Christian Association, when her foot came in contact with jagged edges of pipe protruding into pool under surface of the water, evidence held sufficient to sustain verdict for plaintiff.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; Malcolm C. Glenn, Judge.

Action by Walter F. Lewis and wife against the Young Men's Christian Association. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Busick & Leeper, of Sacramento, for appellant.

Martin I. Welsh and John C. March, both of Sacramento, for respondents.

LANGDON, J. [1] This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against it in an action brought by Walter F. Lewis and Claire Lewis, his wife, to recover damages suffered by them by reason of injuries to the wife, sustained while she was swimming in the swimming pool of the defendant. The answer of defendant denied negligence in the particulars alleged in the complaint, and alleged that defendant was organized and conducted as a religious, benevolent, and charitable corporation. It did not allege, however, nor prove, that it used reasonable care in the selection of its agents and employés. Admitting that defendant has proven that it is a charitable organization, it failed in its defense on that ground, in that it failed to plead and prove that it had used due care in selecting its servants, whose negligence caused the injury to plaintiff. That fact is an integral part of the defense, the rule being stated in Thomas v. German Benevolent Society, 168 Cal. 183, 141 P. 1186, as follows: "That where one accepts the benefit of a public or of a private charity he exempts by implied contract the benefactor from liability for the negligence of the servants in administering the charity, if the benefactor has used due care in the selection of those servants." In the case of Roberts v. Ohio Valley Gen. Hospital, 98 W. Va. 476, 127 S. E. 318, 42 A. L. R. 968, it was said: "Because of its failure to allege that the defendant used reasonable care in selecting the nurse of whose negligence the plaintiff complains, we hold that the plea as presented does not in terms state a defense to the action."

Defendant relies upon the case of Burdell v. St. Luke's Hospital, 37 Cal. App. 310, 173 P. 1008, and contends that it is therein assumed that the burden of proving that the charitable organization did not use reasonable care in the selection of its servants is upon the plaintiffs seeking to recover for their negligence; but an examination of the reporter's transcript in that case discloses that the defendant fully proved, as a part of its case, that it had exercised reasonable care in the selection of its agents and employés, which disposes of appellant's assumption with reference to this case.

[2] Because of defendant's failure to sustain the burden of proving an integral part of its defense as a charitable corporation, the judgment appealed from must be affirmed, provided the evidence establishes a causal connection between negligence chargeable to defendant and plaintiff's injury. This brings us to the further contention of the appellant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict. This contention is made because Claire Lewis was unable to state, positively, the cause of her injury. She testified: "I dove off the board into the water and swam around and then I was treading with my hands on that thing, I thought was for a hand rail, was balancing myself, when my foot hit something sharp, some material, I did not know what it was, I got out of the water, swam down to the other—the west—end of the tank and looked at my foot; it was bleeding and Mr. McLain put some mercurochrome on, and I went home." However, the other evidence in the record clearly established facts from which the jury was justified in concluding that she had been injured by reason of her foot coming in contact with jagged edges of a pipe protruding into the pool under the surface of the water. Mrs. Lewis testified that the object which struck her foot was sharp; that the point where this occurred was just a little west of the end of the springboard; that she immediately left the tank and found her foot bleeding. It also appears that the injury was a ragged, jagged, lacerated wound. George Leads, superintendent of the defendant's building, testified that the springboard extended out over the water from 8 to 8½ feet; that the pipe in question was 9 feet 2 inches west of the east side of the tank; that it was 3 feet 9 inches from the floor of the tank and about 30 inches from the top of the plunge under the surface of the water. He testified that this pipe extended from one-eighth to a quarter of an inch beyond the surface of the wall of the tank; that the edges were rough and jagged; that the south wall is perfectly smooth excepting for this rough jagged pipe; that the end of the pipe was the only rough material on the south wall of the tank; that he knew from the time the pipe was installed until the time of the injury of the condition and existence of said pipe. We think the foregoing recital of the evidence answers the contention of appellant with reference thereto.

HENDERSON et al. v. MIGLIETTA.
(L. A. 8641.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 31, 1928.

1. Forcible entry and detainer 🔑12(1)—Action for possession of realty held not simply unlawful detainer suit, precluding cross-complaint.

Action for possession of realty in defendant's possession held not simply an action in unlawful detainer, wherein cross-complaint is not proper, but action either in unlawful detainer, ejectment, or to quiet title; plaintiff, out of, but entitled to, possession, having election of either of such remedies.

2. Judgment 🔑585(4)—Judgment refusing to set aside sale under trust deed on issue raised in answer and cross-complaint in action for possession held res judicata in action to set aside sale (Code Civ. Proc. § 580).

Where answer and cross-complaint, setting up in detail almost identical facts and identical issue of fraud or deceit tendered by complaint in subsequent action to set aside sale of realty under trust deed, were considered as part of issue tendered, under Code Civ. Proc. § 580, in action for possession of property, judgment denying such relief was res judicata as to such issue.

3. Judgment 🔑713(2)—Judgment in prior action involving same issue is conclusive, irrespective of presence or absence of probative facts in either cause.

Where issue was same in former as in present action, presence or absence of probative facts in support thereof in either cause is immaterial as respects conclusiveness of prior judgment, so long as any such facts might have been introduced in evidence in former suit; not what was actually done, but what might have been done, being concluded by former judgment.

4. Judgment 🔑585(4)—Complaint to set aside sale under trust deed and have defendant adjudged trustee presented issue determined in former action on cross-complaint to declare deed a mortgage and set aside sale.

Complaint praying that sale of realty under trust deed be set aside, and defendant adjudged trustee, directed to convey legal title to plaintiffs and account for proceeds of crop on plaintiffs' payment of stated sum, with interest, costs, and expenses, held to present same issue as that determined in former action against plaintiffs, who filed cross-complaint to declare deed a mortgage, set aside sale thereunder, and instruct plaintiff to reconvey premises on payment of such sums, as against contention that no effort was made therein to declare grantee an involuntary trustee.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Jesse Olney, Judge.

Action by Robert Walter Henderson and another against N. Miglietta. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Superseding opinion in 266 P. 823.

Walter E. Byrne and Emery B. Tyler, both of San Bernardino, for appellant.

Albert Sidney Brown, of Los Angeles, and Isaac Jones, of Ontario, for respondents.

PRESTON, J. An extended opinion does not seem to be required in the determination of this appeal, as the plea of res adjudicata must be sustained and the action dismissed.

Plaintiffs, as the owners of certain real property, executed a note and deed of trust thereon to the defendant, who thereafter upon due and regular proceedings had caused the said trust to be foreclosed and the premises sold, defendant becoming the purchaser at such sale. Thereafter he brought an action against the present plaintiffs for possession of said property, then in the possession of plaintiffs. Plaintiffs here answered, denying the right of possession in the present defendant, and setting up certain points of misrepresentation alleged to have been the inducement for the execution of said deed of trust. In said action defendants (plaintiffs here) also filed an "amended answer" in the nature of a cross-complaint, setting up in detail almost the identical facts and certainly the identical issue tendered by the present complaint, to which plaintiff (defendant here) answered, putting the material allegations thereof in issue. Without objection a complete trial of all issues on the merits was had. Findings were made sustaining the allegations of the complaint in said former action and declaring untrue all the averments of fraud or deceit alleged by defendants (plaintiffs here) in their answer and cross-complaint, and judgment was given following the prayer of the complaint. This judgment became, ever since has been, and now is final. During the pendency of said former action, however, the present action was instituted, plaintiffs here setting up in substance and almost in identical language the same averments of fraud and misrepresentation found in said cross-complaint in said former action. Defendant here pleaded said former judgment as res adjudicata. The court below overruled this plea and sustained the allegations of plaintiffs, making findings of fact and conclusions of law in their favor, and giving judgment accordingly. Defendant has appealed.

[1-3] The complaint in the former action between the parties might properly have been styled a complaint either in unlawful detainer, ejectment, or to quiet title. Plaintiff there, being out of but entitled to possession, had an election of either of these remedies. Universal Milk Co. v. Wood (Cal. Sup.) 272 P. 745. No reason exists for characterizing the former action simply as an action in unlawful detainer, in which event a cross-complaint would not be proper. Without objection, the answer setting up affirmative matter and the cross-complaint filed in said former action were considered as a part of the issue tendered. Section 580, Code Civ. Proc.; Baar v. Smith, 201 Cal. 87, 255 P. 827. The court therefore had the fullest power in said former action to give the identical relief given by the court in this action, and expressly declined to do so, giving a contrary judgment instead. The former judgment is therefore res adjudicata as to such issue, and an extended citation of authority is unnecessary. See the recent case of Price v. Sixth District, 201 Cal. 502, 258 P. 387. As long as the issue was the same in both actions, the presence or absence of probative facts in support of it in the one cause or the other is immaterial, so long as any such facts might have been introduced in evidence. It is not what was actually done, but what might have been done, that is concluded by a former judgment. Price v. Sixth District, supra.

[4] As conclusive proof that the issue involved in the present action and determined in the former action is the same, we need but refer to the practical identity of two sets of allegations, and quote here the prayer of the complaint before us and compare it with the prayer of the cross-complaint in the former action. The prayer of the complaint in the instant case is as follows:

"That said sale of said property under said trust deed be set aside and annulled. That the defendant be adjudged to be a trustee of said property, and of the said crop growing and maturing thereon, holding the legal title thereto in trust for the plaintiffs herein. That the defendant be ordered and directed to reconvey the legal title to said property, and to account for the proceeds of said grape crop to the plaintiffs herein upon the payment by the plaintiffs to the defendant of the sum of two thousand seven hundred ($2,700.00) dollars, together with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. (7%) from the 25th day of April, 1921, together with such additional sum as will reimburse the defendant for the costs and expenses incurred by him in the sale of said property under the said deed of trust, and that in the failure of the defendant to make such reconveyance upon the payments described, the clerk of the court be authorized and directed to act as a commissioner for said purpose, and authorized and directed to execute a deed conveying said property to the plaintiffs herein. For the costs of suit herein, and for such other relief as may be equitable and just."

The prayer of the cross-complaint in said former action reads: "Wherefore defendants demand judgment that said purported deed of trust be declared a mortgage. Second, that said sale of said property under said purported trust deed, which occurred on the 6th day of May, 1922, be set aside and annulled, and that plaintiff be instructed to reconvey the said premises to the defendants herein upon payment by defendants to plaintiff of the said twenty-seven hundred ($2,700.00) dollars, together with interest thereon, and the costs expended in said sale under said purported trust deed, and for such other relief as may be equitable, and for the costs of this action."

The contention of respondent that in the former action no effort was made to declare the present defendant an involuntary trustee is not borne out by the record, for that is the effect of the prayer in the first action. This holding may entail unfortunate consequences upon plaintiffs in this action, but the stability of judgments establishing the rights of parties is of more importance than a single hardship.

The judgment of the court below is reversed, with directions to dismiss the action.

PEOPLE v. HEUSS. (Cr. 1708; 3210.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 21, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 2, 1929. Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing Jan. 18, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⇨829(1)—Refusal of instructions contained in those given is not ground for reversal, though form was slightly different.

Failure of trial court to give certain instructions requested is not ground for reversal, where such instructions were contained in instructions given, though not in exact form requested.

2. Criminal law ⇨1035(3), 1186(4) — Trial court's remark, "It is a fact," held not reversible error, where no objection was made and court instructed jury to disregard his statements of opinion (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Remark of trial court in course of forgery prosecution, "It is a fact," held not prejudicial error requiring reversal under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where no objection was made or instruction requested relative thereto, and court instructed jury to disregard any expressions of opinion which he may have made as to facts established.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

3. Criminal law ⇨552(3)—Evidence must be inconsistent with innocence, as well as consistent with guilt, to warrant conviction.

Evidence to justify verdict of guilty must not only be consistent with guilt, but must be inconsistent with defendant's innocence.

4. Criminal law ⇨770(3)—Trial court, where practicable, should adopt instructions long approved by appellate courts.

As a general proposition, trial court should adopt, where practicable, instructions which have become standardized by long approval of appellate courts.

5. Criminal law ⇨1186(4)—Error in refusing instruction that evidence must be inconsistent with defendant's guilt held not to require reversal, where evidence was sufficient for conviction (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Error of trial court in forgery prosecution, in refusing instruction that evidence of defendant's guilt must be inconsistent with innocence, held not ground for reversal, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where evidence was sufficient in all respects to warrant verdict of guilty.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Shelley J. Higgins, Judge.

F. H. Heuss was convicted of forgery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Edgar B. Hervey, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., John W. Maltman, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., Thomas Whelan, Deputy Dist. Atty., and T. D. McLean, Asst. Dist. Atty., all of San Diego, for the People.

YORK, J. This is an appeal from a judgment of conviction of the crime of forgery, and from an order denying a motion for a new trial. The defendant was convicted upon both direct and circumstantial evidence. There was undoubtedly sufficient evidence to justify the verdict of the jury.

Counsel for appellant insists that appellant was entitled to instruction to the effect that, in order to convict upon circumstantial evidence, it is necessary not only that all the circumstances concur to show that the defendant committed the crime charged, but it must also be shown that all of these circumstances are inconsistent with any other rational conclusion; that it is not sufficient that the circumstances proven coincide with, account for and, therefore, render probable the hypothesis sought to be established by the prosecution, but they must exclude to a moral certainty every other hypothesis, except the single one of guilt, or the jury must find the defendant "not guilty."

The court did instruct the jury as follows: "In order to warrant a conviction for crime on circumstantial evidence, the circumstances taken together should be of a nature and tendency leading on the whole to a satisfactory conclusion and producing in effect a reasonable and moral certainty that the accused and no one else committed the offense charged, and it is the invariable rule and law that to warrant a conviction upon circumstantial evidence alone, such facts and circumstances must be shown as are consistent with the guilt of the party charged." But the appellant maintains that this is erroneous, for the reason that the words "and inconsistent with his innocence" are omitted.

In addition to the foregoing instruction to the jury, the court also quoted section 1096 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1039), which provides that a defendant in a criminal action is presumed to be innocent until the contrary is proved and that in case of a reasonable doubt as to his guilt, he is entitled to acquittal. Section 1096a of the same Code (added by St. 1927, p. 1039) specifically provides that no other instruction on the presumption of innocence or defining reasonable doubt need be given. The "consistency with innocence" rule is but another mode of stating the rule of presumption of innocence and reasonable doubt. In the case of People v. Raentsch (Cal. App.) 263 P. 345, it was held that where the jury was fully instructed on the question of reasonable doubt, it was not error for the trial court to refuse to instruct that if two plausible and reasonable conclusions could be drawn from the evidence, one pointing to guilt and the other to defendant's innocence, the jury must return a verdict of not guilty.

[1] The trial court gave voluminous instructions to the jury in this case, and the objection of appellant that certain instructions were not given is not well taken, for the reason that these instructions are contained in the instructions given, so far as proper, although not always in the form requested by the appellant.

The cases cited by appellant holding reversible error in instructions were all decided before section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution was in force. This is true, at least, of all of the cases that were at all in point, and it will be noted in these cases, as in People v. O'Brien, 130 Cal. 1, at page 5, 62 P. 297, the statement was made that in the opinion of the court it was difficult to determine affirmatively from the record that the defendant was not prejudiced and, therefore, reversal was ordered. In other words, the old rule was that prejudicial error was always presumed, if any error at all crept into the record.

As to the question of the instructions given in the case of People v. O'Brien, supra, at page 7 of 130 Cal. (62 P. 299), the court quotes from People v. Douglass, 100 Cal. 1, at page 6, 34 P. 490, 492, citing, also, People v. Strassman, 112 Cal. 683, at page 687, 45 P. 3: "There cannot be two presumptions in a criminal case. The accused is presumed to be innocent until his guilt is established beyond any reasonable doubt."

[2] Another objection made by the appellant is to the remark of the trial court: "It is a fact." As to just what was referred to by the court, or what was meant, we cannot say. However, no objection was made by the defendant at the time of the trial or at the time the remark was made, and no instruction was asked by him either when the remark was made or when the instructions were given, for a definition or explanation by the court as to what it meant by such statement, or for an order that the jury disregard the remark of the court, if improper. However, the court gave a general instruction to the jury as follows: "I have not expressed, nor intended to express, nor have I intimated or intended to intimate any opinion as to what facts have been established; or what inferences should be drawn from the evidence adduced, and if any expression of mine seems to indicate an opinion relating to any of these matters, such opinion must be entirely disregarded."

In view of this, it would be immaterial what construction, if any, the jury may have placed upon this remark of the trial judge. When the entire record has been carefully examined, we cannot see that any prejudice to the defendant resulted by reason of this remark. Neither can we see that it could have led to any miscarriage of justice.

Judgment of conviction, and order denying motion affirmed.

We concur: CONREY, P. J.; HOUSER, J.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [3] In denying the petition for a hearing herein, we withhold our approval of the action of the trial court refusing to give the instruction, or its equivalent, requested by defendant to the effect that circumstantial evidence, in order to justify a conviction, must not only be consistent with the guilt of the defendant, but "inconsistent with any other rational conclusion." The portion included in quotation marks, or its equivalent, was omitted from the instruction. Said instruction was legally sufficient in all respects as far as it went, but it fell short in not including the well-approved and frequently announced statement of the law that the evidence adduced must not only be consistent with guilt, but "inconsistent with innocence," in order to justify a verdict of guilty.

[4] We have not here attempted to name all of the elements that should be included in the court's charge on the subject of circumstantial evidence, but we have merely referred to the omitted portion, which furnishes the ground of appellant's complaint. As a general proposition, trial courts should adopt, where practicable, instructions which have become practically standardized by the long approval of appellate courts. The instruction now before us furnishes an apt example. Deviations are usually unnecessary, and are not infrequently productive of evil.

[5] In view of the state of the record, we do not feel that we would be justified in reversing the case for the error complained of, as the evidence is sufficient in all respects to have warranted the jury in returning its verdict of guilty. This being so, we would be compelled, under section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution, to disregard the error assigned.

The petition is hereby denied.

LITCHNER v. STAPLES. (Civ. 5032.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 21, 1928.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Whether lessor consented to subletting entire premises held for trial court under conflicting evidence and finding for lessor seeking to cancel lease for unauthorized subletting was justified.

In action to cancel lease for unauthorized subletting of premises without lessor's consent, issue as to extent of lessor's consent to sublease held for final determination by trial court under conflicting evidence, and finding that lessor notified lessee of election to forfeit lease, and consented to subletting of portion only of premises, and that defendant caused part of description in sublease to be stricken without lessor's consent, was supported by evidence, and could not be held incorrect.

2. Estoppel 🔑52—Equitable estoppels in pais are applied to prevent injury from acts or declarations.

Equitable estoppels in pais are generally applied to prevent injury which would ensue to one from acts and declarations of another were he permitted to gainsay truth of such acts or declarations.

3. Estoppel 🔑121—Finding that lessor did not by silence or acts lead lessee to believe he could sublease showed no basis for estoppel.

In action to cancel lease for unauthorized subletting of premises, where trial court found that lessor did not by silence or acts lead lessee to believe that he had right to lease additional territory, there was no fraud or misrepresentation on which lessee relied to his injury as basis for equitable estoppel.

4. Novation 🔑12—Evidence of lessor's consent to have lessee and sublessee fix matter up, without intending to enlarge original sublease, held not to show novation sustaining enlarged sublease.

In action to cancel lease for unauthorized subletting of part of premises, evidence that lessor, after giving written consent to sublease of premises described in original sublease, told lessee and prospective sublessee to "fix it up to suit yourselves, that she wanted tenants to be satisfied," but not showing that lessor intended to enlarge any provisions of original lease to sublessee from another lessor, or waived restrictions, held not to show novation.

5. Landlord and tenant 🔑34(5)—Evidence concerning use of adjoining property, which may not have been communicated to lessor, held properly rejected in action to cancel lease.

In action to cancel lease for unauthorized subletting of portion of premises by lessee, evidence as to objection of one of lessees to use which neighbor might have made of adjoining property, or of conversations which may not have been communicated to lessor, would not be relevant and admissible, and was properly rejected.

Suit by Lucile Greenlaw Litchner against Roy Staples. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

John B. Haas and John D. Home, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

M. D. Andrews, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The respondent, owner of lot 9 of the Gardena tract, in Los Angeles county, instituted suit for cancellation of a lease to appellant of the northerly 125 feet of the easterly 100 feet thereof, alleging that her lessee had sublet a portion of said premises in violation of covenants, and without her knowledge or consent. It was contended by the defendant that there was a mutual mistake regarding the description of the property described in the sublease, but that he had previously obtained the consent of his lessor, and he further urged as defenses estoppel in pais, and novation. Judgment was rendered in favor of the plaintiff, and this is an appeal therefrom.

It appears that on December 1, 1922, the respondent executed a lease to appellant for the period of five years of one garage and filling station, "said building to be used only as a general garage and machine shop and filling station and for no other purpose." It was therein agreed: "That the lessee shall not assign this lease nor any rights thereunder nor sublet the premises or any part thereof (only for the purpose pertaining to and carrying on a general garage and machine shop) without the written consent of the owner, under penalty of forfeiture, this building and premises to be kept free of any nuisance in or around and adjacent thereto at the expense of lessee." At the time of the execution of said lease, a firm doing business under the name of Blanton & Young occupied a plot alleged and testified by respondent as being 25 feet long and 25 feet deep, in the southeasterly corner of the demised premises, under a sublease from a prior lessor, which they continued to occupy as lessees of the appellant. During the month of September, 1923, negotiations initiated by Blanton & Young for the sale of their leasehold interests to one D. J. Biesinger were communicated to Mrs. Litchner by a real estate agent who solicited her consent to such transfer and change of subtenants. It is conceded that respondent visited the premises with her husband on September 19, 1923, where she met Biesinger and several other persons, at which time the agent measured the entire depth of the 100-foot lot, to its westerly line, and that Biesinger indicated that he desired to place a garage on the rear 75 feet, but that respondent "refused to have anything to do with the transaction, stating that she wished to see her attorney." Thereafter she did, however, sign an instrument which read as follows:

"I or we, the undersigned, give our consent for R. V. Blanton, C. B. Young to transfer their lease to Douglas Biesinger.

"Dated Sept. 19, 1923.

"[Signed] Lucile M. Greenlaw Litchner."

On October 1, 1923, appellant herein and D. J. Biesinger entered into a lease which, with the deleted words indicated, appears in part as follows:

"That Roy Staples of the county of Los Angeles, state of California, lessor, does hereby lease, demise and let unto J. D. Biesinger of said county, lessee, O. K. Roy Staples ~~The east twenty-five (25) feet of~~ the south twenty-five (25) feet of the east one hundred (100) feet of the north one hundred twenty-five (125) feet of lot nine (9) of the Gardena Tract.

"This lease is subject to conditions and restrictions contained in a certain lease from Lucile M. Greenlaw-Litchner to Roy Staples, dated Dec. 1, 1922. * * *

"Written permission for this lease has been obtained by the lessor as required by this lease."

As opposed to Mrs. Litchner's contention that, although Blanton & Young may have used the rear of the lot for a garbage pit, toilet, oil tank, and storage of wood and coal, they did so without her consent, and that she at no time intended to sublet more than the front 25 feet, Staples testified that he had not seen their lease, and supposed that it conveyed the entire 100 feet; further, that he and Biesinger both believed that the latter was leasing the whole lot, and that, upon discovery of its narrow limitation, appellant personally, and out of the presence of respondent, struck out the words, "The east twenty-five (25) feet of"; also that he understood from numerous conversations with respondent that she intended leasing 100 feet; that at none of their conferences had she denied such to be the fact; and that he honestly entertained the impression that Mrs. Litchner believed the entire lot to have been included in the Blanton & Young lease.

[1] There is strong affirmative evidence tending to support the plaintiff's allegations and the findings and judgment below. Mrs. Litchner positively testified that, prior to signing the consent, she examined the lease to Blanton & Young, and that she observed, and told appellant, that the lot was 25 by 25 feet; that, when it was suggested that Biesinger contemplated erecting a building costing $3,000 or $3,500, she stated: "They can't, because the property is too little and the space is only 25 by 25." She testified further: "At no time did I consent to a sub-letting to the said Douglas J. Biesinger, or anybody else, the west 75 feet of the east 100 feet of lot 9," and that she did not know that this had been done until about December 4, 1923. Her husband testified that he was present during the negotiations, and that, while there was some discussion about leasing the small corner and property adjoining it to the south, "in the presence of Mr. Staples, Mrs. Litchner said to the Biesingers, 'You haven't got the 25 by 100 feet. All you have is 25 by 25 feet.'" The trial court found that respondent notified appellant in writing on December 5, 1923, of her election to forfeit the lease in controversy; that she had previously consented to the subletting of only 25 by 25 feet, but that Staples caused the words "the east 25 feet of" to be stricken from the description without her consent, and "that the property by mutual mistake was erroneously described" was untrue. There is considerable corroborative evidence which tends to support these findings. It is clearly a case where the trial court before whom the witnesses appeared in person, and to which all other evidence was presented, is invested with the duty and power of finally determining the issues.

Appellant attempts to substantiate his contention by the fact that the predecessors of his sublessee had used the rear of the premises for depositing rubbish and for other purposes without objection by the lessor, except that she had expressed the opinion that such use might infringe upon certain health laws, and asserts this as an admission of Mrs. Litchner's knowledge and consent to their use of additional land, and of appellant's intention to sublet the rear 75 feet of lot 9. Doubtless this circumstance was considered by the trial court, but apparently was not regarded of controlling weight, and it is not within our province to say that its conclusion was incorrect.

[2, 3] From the foregoing it becomes unnecessary to devote extensive discussion to appellant's remaining propositions. Equitable estoppels in pais "generally, if not universally, are applied to prevent injury which would ensue to one from the acts or declarations of another, were he permitted to gainsay the truth of such acts and declarations. The principle is invoked and applied for the prevention of fraud, or that which is tantamount thereto, on the one side, and injury on the other." Davis v. Davis, 26 Cal. 23, 39 (85 Am. Dec. 157); Pope v. J. K. Armsby Co., 111 Cal. 159, 43 P. 589. As already observed, the trial court found upon much substantial evidence that respondent did not by silence or by her acts lead the appellant to believe that he had a right to lease the additional territory, and from this we must conclude that there was no fraud or misrepresentation upon which appellant relied to his injury.

[4] The plea of novation is equally untenable. It is insisted that, after giving written consent to a sublease to Biesinger of the land described in the Blanton & Young sublease, respondent finally instructed the parties to "fix it up to suit themselves, that she wanted her tenants to be satisfied." Appellant urges from this premise that he was justified in subletting more than the Blanton & Young property, and that the restriction against it was waived. However, there is no evidence that by this expression Mrs. Litchner intended to enlarge or forego any of the provisions of the original lease, and there is strong positive evidence to the contrary, from which the court found in favor of the plaintiff. True, appellant offered evidence tending to show that he so understood his lessor's intentions, but his allegations and testimony were apparently disbelieved, and we cannot as a matter of law, under the facts and circumstances, say that such conclusion was erroneous.

[5] Rulings of the trial court in sustaining objections to testimony offered by appellant are assigned as error. Respondent having admitted that Blanton at one time complained about Japanese who occupied land owned by her to the south of the 25 by 25 foot plot, saying there "was a talk," she was asked as to what the conversation was. Blanton testified that he had a conversation with Freeman concerning the amount of property he desired to sublet, and was asked to state that conversation. Objections were sustained, and it is argued that any evidence relating to knowledge of the lessor, or acknowledgment by her, that other lands were being used, would be admissible as tending to establish an estoppel; that Blanton could have maintained in an ejectment suit by Freeman; that by mutual mistake 25 by 25 feet was not the correct description. Upon the assumed facts stated, such testimony might have been admissible, but the Blanton lease specifically described the lot as being 25 by 25 feet, and there is no evidence in the record that Blanton claimed or understood otherwise. Evidence as to his objection to the use which a neighbor might have made of adjoining property, or of conversations which may not have been communicated to the respondent, would not be relevant or admissible.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Solano County; W. T. O'Donnell, Judge.

Action for damages for ejectment by the California Packing Corporation against Manuel Lopez individually, and as administrator of the estate of John Lopez, deceased, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint. From the judgment, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

T. A. Farrell and George A. Work, both of Sacramento, and W. U. Goodman, of Fairfield, for appellants.

Rufus H. Kimball and Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, all of San Francisco, and Joseph M. Raines, of Fairfield, for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This is an action of ejectment brought by respondent against appellants for 100 acres of land, known as lot 26 of Hastings Tract, and the pumphouse thereon or adjacent thereto.

Respondent claims to be the owner and entitled to the possession thereof and alleged that defendants had wrongfully and unlawfully entered into possession of the same and ejected respondent therefrom and wrongfully withholds such possession from respondent to his damage in the sum of $100.

Appellants answered, denying that they unlawfully entered into the possession of said property or unlawfully or wrongfully withheld the same from respondent or that plaintiff has been damaged as claimed.

Appellants also filed a cross-complaint, a demurrer to which was sustained, and thereupon, by stipulation, the cross-complaint was withdrawn.

Substantially, the facts of the case are about as follows: On February 15, 1924, the Wright Corporation, respondent's grantor, entered into an agreement with the John Souza Company, by the terms of which the said company was permitted to occupy and grow asparagus during the cropping seasons of 1924 to 1934, inclusive, on the said 100 acres, and to grow intercrops thereon, as approved by the said corporation. By the terms of said agreement, the said corporation was to furnish tools, teams, feed for horses, and all asparagus roots necessary for the planting of said 100 acres, and to allow the said John Souza Company $5.50 per acre for preparing the land and planting said asparagus roots, as approved by the said Wright Corporation. That as directed by the Wright Corporation, the John Souza Company was to harvest, gather, wash, pack, and deliver said crop free on board the nearest landing designated by said Wright Corporation, and said corporation was to sell said crop and pay to John Souza Company 55 per cent. of the net proceeds of all asparagus and 75 per cent. of all intercrops, deducting expenses of sale of said crops, John Souza Company to pay 75 per cent. of the cost of containers for intercrops. The John Souza Company was a partnership, consisting of John Souza and John Lopez.

On February 23, 1925, John Souza assigned his interest in said contract to John Lopez, which assignment was accepted by the Wright Corporation. On March 6, 1925, John Lopez was accidentally killed, and administration was granted upon his estate to defendant Manuel Lopez, a brother of deceased, on February 10, 1926. John Lopez was not married, and his next of kin and his heirs were his father and mother, who resided in Portugal. Defendant Manuel Lopez was a minor at the time of his brother's death and became of age November 17, 1925.

Manuel Lopez, immediately after his brother's death, took charge of the growing crops on said 100 acres and farmed said land during the cropping season of 1925, raising an intercrop of beans thereon, cultivating and harvesting the asparagus growing thereon, and during that period was trying to get the Wright Corporation to substitute him as a party to said agreement in the place and stead of his deceased brother. In the meantime, he was occupying the upper portion of said pumphouse as a place of abode. In August, 1925, and January, 1926, the Wright Corporation paid the amounts called for by said agreement, that is, the John Lopez portion thereof, from the sale of the 1925 bean and asparagus crops, by delivering checks drawn in favor of John Lopez to defendant Manuel Lopez. On December 31, 1926, the Wright Corporation deeded to respondent with several thousand additional acres the 100 acres in controversy in this action. Respondent took possession of the 100 acres of land in January, 1926, and appellants thereupon ceased to farm the same but still continued to occupy the pumphouse.

At the close of the testimony, the court directed the jury to return a verdict for the respondent. This was done, and thereupon judgment for respondent was entered. In the case of Perera v. Panama-Pacific Int. Exposition Co., 179 Cal. 63, 175 P. 454, the court said: "It is now settled that the right of a court to direct a verdict is, with regard to the condition of the evidence, absolutely the same as the right of a court to grant a nonsuit; and also that a court may grant a nonsuit only when, disregarding conflicting evidence and giving to plaintiff's evidence all the value to which it is legally entitled, herein indulging in every legitimate inference which may be drawn from that evidence, the result is a determination that there is no evidence of sufficient substantiality to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff if such a verdict were given. (Estate of Caspar, 172 Cal. 147, 155 P. 631.)"

There is nothing in the record indicative of the grounds upon which the trial court acted in directing the verdict.

[1] However, it appears that one of the vital propositions that it was necessary for defendant to establish was that the agreement was a chattel real, that is to say, was a lease upon the premises in controversy. It is well settled that a tenancy from year to year is not terminated by the death of either the landlord or the tenant. Upon the death of the tenant of an estate from year to year, the estate still continues. Underhill on Landlord and Tenant, vol. 1—136.

In a long line of decisions, the courts of this state, beginning with Bernal v. Hovious, 17 Cal. 541, 79 Am. Dec. 147, up to In re Okahara, 191 Cal. 353, 216 P. 614, have uniformly held that agreements similar in character to the one involved in this case are merely cropping contracts and create no interest in the land. In re Okahara, supra, was a proceeding on habeas corpus to secure the release of Okahara for the alleged violation of the Alien Land Law. The agreement under which Okahara occupied and cultivated the land was in many respects similar to the agreement in the instant case. Under and by virtue of the conclusions reached by the Supreme Court in that case, that the agreement did not create an interest in the land, but that it was, in effect, nothing more than a cropping contract, it ordered the discharge of Okahara from custody. Shortly after this decision was rendered the Legislature at its biennial session in 1923 (St. 1923, p. 1023, § 7) amended section 8 of the Alien Land Law (St. 1921, p. lxxxv) by adding after the word "fee" the following: "Including cropping contracts which are hereby declared to constitute an interest in real property less than the fee," so that said section 8, as amended, reads as follows: "Any leasehold or other interest in real property less than the fee, including cropping contracts which are hereby declared to constitute an interest in real property less than the fee, * * * by any alien mentioned in section 2 of this act, * * * shall escheat to the State of California."

Appellants contend that as a result of this amendment all cropping contracts and agreements, whether made between citizens of this state or between a citizen and an ineligible alien, create an interest in the land, thus setting aside and casting into the discard the law of this state applying to cropping contracts between citizens thereof, as it has existed for more than 65 years. So far, this amendment, otherwise than as it affects ineligible aliens, has not been passed upon either by the Supreme or Appellate Courts of this state.

In the case of In re Nose, 195 Cal. 91, 231 P. 561, which was a proceeding on habeas corpus to discharge petitioner, a Japanese and ineligible alien, from custody upon a charge of violating the Alien Land Law, the court denied the writ, basing its reason for so doing upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States as given in the case of Porterfield et al. v. Webb et al., 263 U. S. 225, 44 S. Ct. 21, 68 L. Ed. 278, where that court held that the treaty between the United States and Japan gave no permission to the subjects of Japan to enjoy, use or have the benefits of land for agricultural purposes, and in the course of its opinion in the case of In re Nose, supra, the Supreme Court of this state said: "It is not necessary to decide whether or not the Legislature had the authority to provide that a 'cropping contract' in this class of cases shall impress lands affected thereby with an interest therein in favor of the cropper. For the purposes of this decision the effect of the contract upon real property may be regarded as surplusage." And, in the case of In re Dudley et al. v. Lowell et al. (Cal.) 257 P. 57, the court, in holding that a cropper contract entered into by an ineligible alien was a violation of the Alien Land Law, entirely ignored this last amendment of section 8 of said law, which provides that a cropping contract shall create an interest in land.

It is apparent that the sole intention of the Legislature in adding this amendment was for the purpose of using all the means at its command to prevent the agricultural lands of the state from passing into the occupancy and possession of ineligible aliens. For as was said by the Supreme Court in the case of Porterfield v. Webb, 195 Cal. at page 81, 231 P. 558: "Conceivably, by the use of such contract [a cropper contract], the population living on and cultivating the farm lands might come to be made up largely of ineligible aliens. The allegiance of the farmers to the state directly affects its strength and safety."

[2, 3] The cardinal rules of statutory construction require an interpretation of a statute which will give effect to the legislative intent, if consistent with the real object and purpose of the statute. Coulter v. Pool, 187 Cal. 181, 201 P. 120. To arrive at the legislative intent in the interpretation of statutes, the original purpose and object of the legislation must be considered. Mackey v. Mott, 25 Cal. App. 110, 142 P. 1082; Johnstone v. Baker, 167 Cal. 260, 139 P. 86.

[4] We are of the opinion that in amending section 8 of the Alien Land Law, by adding thereto the provision that cropping contracts constituted an interest in real estate, the intention of the Legislature was to confine and limit that provision to the Alien Land Law alone, and that it did not thereby intend to, nor did it, annul or repeal the law as it now stands and as it has stood since the organization of the state that a cropping contract, except where an ineligible alien is a party to it, creates any interest in real estate.

[5] The contract or agreement entered into between the Wright Corporation and the John Souza Company provided that the said company did not claim any interest in the real estate set forth therein. It is well established that a person may waive any civil right, and the benefit of any statute or Code provision in respect to his rights and obligations, unless such waiver would be against public policy. Civ. Code, § 3513; Cal. Juris. vol. 25, p. 929.

[6] Regardless of the question as to whether or not the said agreement created an interest in the land, it is evident that this provision would preclude John Souza Company or their assigns or successors in interest from claiming such interest.

The undisputed evidence in this case also shows that the respondent purchased the land for value without notice of appellants' claim that the John Lopez estate or Manuel Lopez had any interest in said land.

[7] Appellants contend that Manuel Lopez was in possession of the premises in controversy at the time the Wright Corporation sold the same to the respondent and that such possession was notice to respondent. The authorities are uniform in holding that the possession necessary to put a purchaser on notice must be open, notorious, and exclusive. Campbell v. Grennan, 13 Cal. App. 481, 110 P. 156. Notice to be effectual must be precise and complete enough to put the purchaser on his guard. Kowalsky v. Kimberlin et al., 173 Cal. 506, 160 P. 673. There is practically no evidence that tends in any degree to show notice on the part of respondent.

[8] Witness Tonnengen, superintendent of respondent, who, on behalf of respondent, made the examination of the property in controversy before its purchase by respondent, stated that in making that examination he was accompanied by Wm. G. Wright, the president of the Wright Corporation, and that Wright informed him that there were no incumbrances against the land, that Wright made no mention of the fact that appellants or either of them were in possession of said land or claimed any interest therein by lease or otherwise; nor did Tonnengen see Manuel Lopez on the land, nor anything indicating such possession. There is an entire lack of evidence showing that respondent had any notice or knowledge that appellants claimed any interest in the said 100 acres or were in possession of the same prior to its purchase thereof.

[9, 10] In their brief, appellants rely to some extent upon the doctrine of waiver and also estoppel in pais as a defense to this action. No such defense was set up in the answer. It appears to be well settled that a party who has an opportunity to plead an estoppel, upon which his cause of action or defense depends, must do so. 10 Cal. Juris. p. 654. Waiver is an affirmative defense, and a defendant desiring to take advantage of it must set up in his answer the facts upon which he bases his claim. Wienke v. Smith, 179 Cal. 220, 176 P. 42.

HILTSCHER v. WAGNER et ux. (Civ. 3639.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District. California. Dec. 28, 1928.

1. Appeal and error ⚷1011(1)—Trial court's finding on conflicting evidence as to location of boundary line cannot be disturbed by appellate court.

Trial court's finding as to location of boundary line, based on conflicting evidence consisting of surveyors' locations of corners, cannot be disturbed by appellate court.

2. Boundaries ⚷4—It was duty of trial court in boundary dispute to endeavor to re-establish corners with reference to original government surveys and monuments.

In action to quiet title and to establish boundary line, it was trial court's duty to ascertain as near as possible where the original monuments set by government surveyors were located and to re-establish corners with reference to such monuments and original field notes.

3. Appeal and error ⚷761—Probable effect of judgment on third parties is not legitimate argument to trial court, and much less to appellate tribunal.

The probable effect of a judgment on third parties is not a legitimate basis for an argument addressed to a trial court, and much less so to an appellate tribunal.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Warmer, Judge.

Action by Fred Hiltscher against Charles Cecil Wagner and wife. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

H. V. Weisel, of Carlotta, and Thomas L. McFadden and McFadden, Holden & Friis, all of Anaheim, for appellant.

Head, Rutan & Scovel, of Santa Ana, and Swing & Wilson, of San Bernardino, for respondents.

TUTTLE, Justice pro tem. This is an action to quiet title and to establish the boundary line between the lands of appellant and respondents. The appeal is prosecuted from a judgment rendered in favor of defendants. The complaint is in the ordinary form to quiet title to the north half of the southwest quarter of section 36, township 2 south, range 9 west, S. B. B. & M.; said property being shown on map of Hiltscher tract, which is recorded in San Bernardino county. The answer denies any interest in said land except as to the east 384 feet of the property described in the complaint, and sets up additional defenses of agreed boundary line and adverse possession.

At the commencement of the trial, it was stipulated that plaintiff was the record owner of the north half of the southwest quarter of said section as shown by government survey, and that defendants were the owners of the southeast quarter of said section, and that each party had, for some 20 years past, paid all taxes due on his respective parcel. It was further agreed that defendants, in approximately 1906, erected a dividing fence between said tracks, and have maintained it ever since, and claim everything east of it, and have so claimed for the past 15 or 20 years. The land in dispute is a strip some 1,300 feet long and 384 feet in width, and located between the legal subdivisions mentioned. The evidence shows that this strip was fenced in by defendants some 20 years ago, and has been in their possession ever since. They have erected valuable improvements thereon, and have cultivated a large portion of the same.

[1, 2] The case of the plaintiff rests entirely upon a survey made by his engineers. It is, so far as he is concerned, an engineering proposition. His testimony establishes the corners of said legal subdivisions in such a manner as to include said strip within his tract, which is the north half of the southwest quarter of the section. On the other hand, defendants' engineers locate the corner of said legal subdivisions in such a manner as to place the said strip within the southeast quarter of said section. In other words, it is a clear case of conflicting evidence in the matter of the establishment of the said corners, and it would be a palpable invasion of the fact-finding province of the trial court were we to interpose with our views upon the weight of the evidence adduced. It is contended by appellant that the trial court resorted to the wrong method in fixing said corners; that this is not a case where the original monuments were lost, and hence the court was bound to fix the same in accordance with the testimony of his engineers, who claimed to have found some of the original monuments set by the government surveyor. But here, again, we are met with a conflict in the evidence. Defendants' engineers testified they could not find or see such monuments, and the trial court found with them upon that issue, and we are bound by that finding. The corners were fixed by defendants' engineers, by re-establishing them in accordance with the natural objects described in the field notes and found to exist upon the ground, and which were least inconsistent with the distances mentioned in said notes and the plat of the government survey. Weaver v. Howatt, 171 Cal. 307, 152 P. 925; Weaver v. Howatt, 161 Cal. 86, 118 P. 519. "It was the duty of the trial court to ascertain, as near as might be, where the monuments were set by the government surveyors, and from records of the official survey and the evidence as to the present conditions and positions of natural objects to locate the lines and corners of the sections and the boundary lines of the property in controversy at points where they will best accord with the natural objects described in the field notes as being about the monuments found to exist on the ground, and in a manner least inconsistent with the government surveys, notes, and plats." Wilmon v. Aros, 191 Cal. 80, 214 P. 962.

[3] The trial court found that the said fence was upon the line dividing the legal subdivisions which it was stipulated each of the parties owned. In other words, the trial court left the parties in the same position that they had maintained for some 20 years, so far as fence lines and actual possession were concerned. It is contended by appellant that, if the corners established by the court are allowed to stand, it will change the boundary lines of San Bernardino, Orange, and Los Angeles counties. The probable effect of a judgment, upon third parties, is not a legitimate basis for an argument addressed to a trial court, and much less so to an appellate tribunal. It is a practice not to be commended, and which we believe should not be indulged in.

Appellant construes the judgment as depriving him of a strip of land 768 feet in width. This is not the effect of the judgment, as we construe it. The judgment specifies that the fence line is the west boundary of the lands of the defendants. This gives defendants title to the disputed strip 384 feet in width, and no more. It leaves the boundary line between the parties just as it has been for the past 20 years. If there be any ambiguity about the judgment, a reference to the pleadings would show without question that the only issue was as to the ownership of a strip of land 384 feet in width. The point is without merit.

Findings upon the question of adverse possession and an agreed boundary line, are attacked, but we do not deem it necessary to pass upon these matters. The judgment is amply supported by the findings upon the question of the location of the section lines which we have discussed.

We are satisfied that the trial court reached a conclusion which resulted in a just disposition of the matters presented, and, accordingly, the judgment is affirmed.

SCATENA v. LAWSON et al. (Civ. 6512.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 22, 1928.

1. Evidence ⚷444(6)—When note and mortgage were payable at definite date, oral agreement making payment contingent upon sale of certain property held not provable (Civ. Code, § 1698).

Where note and mortgage given retiring partner for interest in real estate and certain personal property contained definite provision for payment on certain date, evidence of parol agreement making payment contingent upon sale of other assets of the old partnership was not admissible, in view of Civ. Code, § 1698.

2. Evidence ⚷444(6)—When written agreement between partners did not provide that retiring partner should be paid only from sale of assets, this could not be proved by parol.

Where written contract between retiring and continuing partners recited that retiring partner had conveyed certain property on agreement that assets of partnership should be promptly liquidated, and provided that the partnership should be liquidated and dissolved as early as it could be practically accomplished without loss, and contained no agreement that note and mortgages for the property conveyed was to be paid only from sale of other assets or that the object of the desired quick sale was to pay such note, such facts could not be shown by parol.

3. Partnership ⚷282—Any partner could dispose of assets after dissolution, in absence of agreement (Civ. Code, §§ 2459, 2460).

If written agreement between retiring and continuing partners reciting conveyance of certain property by retiring partner on agreement for prompt liquidation of the partnership did not make the continuing partners the liquidating partners, then any of the partners could dispose of the remaining assets under Civ. Code, §§ 2459, 2460.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; R. L. Thompson, Judge.

Action by Sylvestro Scatena against William H. Lawson and others to foreclose mortgages. From an order and judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Athearn, Chandler & Farmer, and Walter Hoffman, all of San Francisco, for appellants William H. and Agnes May Lawson.

Edwin V. McKenzie and Harry A. McKenzie, both of San Francisco, and W. F. Cowan, of Santa Rosa, for appellants Charles and Jeanne Perelli-Minetti.

Barrett & McConnell, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

BARNARD, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment on the pleadings, the trial court having held that the answers failed to set up a defense. The action is one brought to foreclose a real estate mortgage and a chattel mortgage, both made by William H. Lawson and Agnes May Lawson, his wife, and A. G. Perelli-Minetti and Jeanne Perelli-Minetti, his wife, to the plaintiff, securing the payment of one promissory note for $41,000, dated June 9, 1921, and due five years after date. The complaint, filed June 16, 1926, is in the usual form. It alleges, among other things, the payment of interest to June 9, 1925, the nonpayment of the subsequent interest and the principal, the death of A. G. Perelli-Minetti, and the appointment of defendants Charles Perelli-Minetti and Jeanne Perelli-Minetti as executor and executrix, respectively, of his last will. An answer was filed by defendants Lawson, and a separate answer by defendants Perelli-Minetti. They have also filed separate appeals.

All of the defendants admit the material allegations of plaintiff's complaint, but as a defense claim the breach of an express promise made by plaintiff, in consideration of the execution by the defendants of the note and mortgages sued on and as a part of the same transaction, which breach is asserted to amount to a failure of consideration. In this behalf, the answers allege that prior to June 9, 1921, Sylvestro Scatena, William H. Lawson, and A. G. Perelli-Minetti were copartners in the wine business under the firm name of Scatena, Lawson & Perelli. The copartnership owned the real and personal property covered by the mortgages involved in this action, and in addition thereto owned large quantities of wine and shipping barrels. Scatena desiring to withdraw from the business, and, the other two partners desiring to continue therein, it is alleged: That on June 9, 1921, the date of the note and mortgages, it was agreed between the parties that William H. Lawson and A. G. Perelli-Minetti should form a new partnership under the firm name of Lawson & Perelli, and that this new partnership should take over from the old partnership all of the real and personal property covered by these mortgages. But the wine and shipping barrels, above referred to, were to be retained by the old partnership. That it was agreed that Scatena should be secured for the purchase price of his interest in the real and personal property, so to be turned over to the new partnership, by mortgages on the whole of said properties. It is alleged that it was further agreed that the wine and shipping barrels should be sold without delay, and the affairs of the old partnership liquidated, "so that by the proceeds derived from such sale" the mortgagors might pay off and extinguish the mortgages so to be given on the other properties. It is then alleged that in pursuance of this agreement, and all on June 9, 1921, the interest of Scatena in the real and personal property covered by the two mortgages was conveyed to the above mortgagors, the mortgages were given for the purchase price, the new copartnership above referred to was formed, and as a part of the same transaction and in consideration of the other parts thereof, another written agreement was executed by the parties as follows:

"Exhibit C.

"Agreement made this the 9th day of June, 1921, by and between Sylvestro Scatena of the City of Healdsburg, Sonoma County, California, party of the first part, and William H. Lawson and A. G. Perelli-Minetti of the same place, parties of the second part, witnesseth:

"That whereas, the parties to this agreement have heretofore conducted a copartnership under the firm name and style of Scatena, Lawson and Perelli and

"Whereas, the said Sylvestro Scatena is desirous of withdrawing from said copartnership and all the parties thereto have agreed and do agree that said copartnership shall be dissolved and terminated, and

"Whereas, the party of the first part has this day conveyed to the parties of the second part all of his interest in the real estate and certain of the personal property heretofore owned by said copartnership upon the understanding and agreement that the assets of said copartnership shall be promptly liquidated and said copartnership terminated and closed,

"Now, therefore, it is mutually agreed that the partnership heretofore existent between the parties to this agreement, shall be liquidated and dissolved at as early a date as the same can be practically accomplished without loss to the parties in interest and the net assets realized, after paying all debts and expenses of liquidating the assets and caring for the property of the partnership shall be divided in the proportion of an equal one-third each.

"Executed in triplicate this the day and year first above written.

"Sylvestro Scatena.
"[Signed] William H. Lawson.
"A. G. Perelli Minetti."

Further, it is alleged that the plaintiff willfully and fraudulently broke his express promises, as set forth in Exhibit C above, and in violation of his agreement has refused and still refuses to wind up the affairs of the old partnership; that he has refused to consent to the sale of the wine and barrels at market prices, or at any prices; that he never intended to perform his agreement, but did intend, by failing to perform and by preventing a sale of the other assets, to acquire for himself the whole of the mortgaged property; that the interest of the mortgagors in the said wine and barrels is greater in value than the amount of the mortgage indebtedness; that the United States government has a lien for taxes on the wine, and the same cannot be sold until a bond for $10,000 guaranteeing the payment of the tax has been executed by said Scatena and said Lawson; that said plaintiff, in violation of his agreement and for the purpose of preventing the mortgagors from getting funds with which to pay the note, has refused to sign such a bond; that as a part of the said agreement of June 9, 1921, it was agreed that these mortgagors should care for said wine, advancing the costs thereof, which was to be repaid by the old partnership, and that they have expended in this regard the sum of $14,000, which has not been repaid. And they pray that plaintiff be compelled to liquidate the affairs of the old partnership, or that the defendants be empowered to dispose of the partnership assets; that an accounting be had and the amounts found due to defendants be offset against the amount of the note; and that, pending the accounting, plaintiff be enjoined from proceeding with this action.

Appellants' main contention is that this case falls within the rule that in a suit to foreclose a mortgage the defendant may allege, as a valid defense thereto, a breach of an express promise made by the plaintiff to the defendant, in consideration of the execution of the mortgage and as a part of the same transaction. To this end they state that they rely on the breach of the written promises contained in Exhibit C, above set forth, but their answers conclusively show they are also and mainly relying on the various oral promises of June 9, 1921, above mentioned. Among other cases cited in support of the above rule, the case of Snow v. Holmes, 71 Cal. 142, 11 P. 856, is cited as being a parallel case and as compelling a reversal in the instant case. It may be conceded that the rule of law contended for is correct, without solving the problem in this case, other considerations being presented by the facts here.

In Snow v. Holmes, supra, the breach of the agreement was the destruction of the very property (namely, the good will) paid for by the mortgage. Here, it is not claimed appellants did not receive all the property they bought, or that there was any misrepresentation as to it. The express promises claimed here related to another matter, to disposing of and accounting for the proceeds of other properties belonging to the same parties. It is not even claimed that plaintiff owes any money to defendants, but merely that there are other assets the proceeds of which might have been used to pay the note, if the agreements had been kept. To say the least, the application of the rule in Snow v. Holmes to such a case as this would be an extension of that rule requiring grave and careful consideration, and appellants' claim of a parallel set of facts is unfounded.

[1] A further consideration is that the express promises, the breach of which is claimed, not only relate to what is really, if true, another cause of action between the parties, arising out of agreements and assets, other than the mortgages and mortgaged property, but, in addition, they are largely if not entirely oral. Assuming that the breach of these agreements would be a defense, if they were in writing, we are met by the fact that the written agreement does not contain the promises and agreements alleged to have been broken. Parol evidence would have to be relied upon to prove the vital portions of the defense claimed. While want of consideration for a note may be shown by parol evidence, the making and breaking of a contemporaneous oral agreement, entirely at variance with the terms of a written agreement, may not be so shown. Carver v. San Joaquin Cigar Co., 16 Cal. App. 761, 118 P. 92. In this case the obvious intent of the allegations of the answer is to change the terms of payment of a promissory note by testimony of an oral agreement. To permit this, the court would have to modify the absolute terms of a note and mortgages, with a definite provision for the payment of a certain sum on a certain date, by permitting testimony to show that the payment of the money was contingent upon the sale of other assets. This cannot be done. Lindemann v. Coryell, 59 Cal. App. 788, 212 P. 47; Civ. Code, § 1698.

[2, 3] Again, even if it be assumed that the alleged broken promises were sufficiently a part of the mortgage transaction to permit them to be set up in defense to the mortgage, and if it be further assumed that testimony could be admitted, under the circumstances alleged, to show that in spite of the absolute terms of the note, it had been agreed that payment should be made only after certain other assets were sold, it having been agreed that these should be sold for this express purpose, we must then face another fact, namely, that is this case these parties did not rely on any such oral agreement but went further. After alleging in their answer that an agreement had been reached, setting forth the terms thereof, which agreements and promises are the very ones alleged in the answer to have been broken by the plaintiff, they then allege the acts done "pursuant to said agreement," which includes the execution of the note and mortgages and the execution of the written agreement above quoted in full. This written agreement falls far short of containing the agreements contended for by the appellants as having been theretofore made and relied upon by them as a defense to the note. On its face it would indicate that it was not interdependent with the note and mortgages. It does not mention the latter or the payment thereof in any manner; it contains nothing to show the object of the desired quick sale of the partnership assets was to pay the note; there is no agreement therein that the plaintiff is to be paid the amount of the note from the sale of the assets, that he is to wait until the assets are sold before being paid, or even that any cash received from the sale of the assets is to be applied on the note. Neither does the plaintiff agree to sign any bond to cover the payment of any taxes on the wine. The written agreement indicates that the mortgagors were to be the liquidating partners, as it recites that the property was conveyed upon the agreement that the assets were to be promptly liquidated. That this was true is affimatively alleged by defendants Perelli-Minetti. If this be not the effect of the agreement, then any one of the partners could have disposed of the assets. Hawn v. Land & Water Co., 74 Cal. 418, 16 P. 196; Civ. Code, §§ 2459, 2460. The agreements, the breach of which is relied on by appellants, are missing from the written agreement. They cannot be supplied by parol. Under the circumstances pleaded, it must be assumed that all of the previous agreement was merged in the written documents. To admit parol evidence, not only to change the definite payments of a note into contingent payments, but, in addition, to add to and change the terms of written instruments entered into after and in pursuance of a full agreement previously worked out and agreed to, would be to set aside all established rules of law and let down the bars entirely. The writing (Exhibit C) is not ambiguous, at least, as to the terms appellants want to explain. It leaves no doubt as to what is to be done with the proceeds of the sale of the assets, which are to be divided between the partners.

That the parties themselves did not consider the note and mortgages and the agreement as interrelated, and that they were not expecting to rely only on the proceeds of the sale of the assets to pay the note, is indicated by the fact that, in spite of the continuing neglect of the plaintiff to keep his promises, as alleged, they paid all interest due for four years, retained the property, and apparently nothing was done until after the note became due, five years after its execution. While the record is silent on the point, it is possible that the delay in disposing of the stock of wine may have been partly caused by certain well-known laws and existing conditions, and not entirely by the broken promises of the plaintiff. While appellants have alleged that the breach of agreement, with which respondent is charged, occurred with fraudulent intent, the answers contain no allegations of fact, showing fraud, and the facts alleged do not warrant the setting aside of the written contracts on that ground.

An additional point urged by appellants Perelli-Minetti is that the respondent, by executing a grant deed to the real property involved, warranted the property to be free from all liens, and an attempt is made to set up a breach of this warranty. Aside from any other considerations, however, the answer contains no sufficient allegation of the existence of the lien, and no allegation whatever of any damage sustained thereby. Thurgood v. Spring, 139 Cal. 596, 73 P. 456.

The consideration of other points raised is rendered unnecessary by the views herein expressed. A promissory note is not to be lightly set aside. Though well-defined exceptions to the rule that testimony is not admissible to add to, contradict, or vary the terms of a written instrument necessarily exist to meet special circumstances, no facts are here alleged to bring this case within any such exception. No defense having been set up by the answers, judgment for the plaintiff, on the pleadings, was properly entered.

The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

TODD v. TEMPLE HOSPITAL ASS'N, INC., et al. (Civ. 6514.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 28, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 26, 1929.

1. Evidence 🔑157(5)—In action against corporation by officer on claims assigned for collection, parol evidence held admissible to show claims were transferred before plaintiff became officer.

In action against corporation, brought by officer thereof, on claims assigned to him for collection, parol evidence was admissible to show that claims were transferred before plaintiff became officer of corporation; there being no statutory requirement that indebtedness represented by notes and book account should be assigned in writing after maturity.

2. Corporations 🔑313—Transactions in which corporate officers have interest adverse to corporation are subject to rigid scrutiny and voidable for fraud or violation of duty (Civ. Code, § 2230).

Under Civ. Code, § 2230, transaction in which corporation's officers or directors take part and in which they or those for whom they act have interest adverse to corporation are not ipso facto void, but are subject to rigid scrutiny, and are voidable for fraud or violation of duty.

3. Corporations 🔑309(3)—Corporate officers may purchase and enforce corporation's indebtedness if not inequitable.

Officers of corporation are not trustees of property of corporation in such sense as to disable them from purchasing and enforcing corporation's indebtedness, unless circumstances of transaction make it inequitable for them to do so.

4. Corporations 🔑309(2)—Assignee of claims against corporation held not disqualified from enforcing them by becoming director.

Plaintiff suing corporation on claims assigned for collection held not disqualified from enforcing them merely because he subsequently became director of corporation debtor.

5. Appeal and error 🔑878(3)—Respondents not appealing cannot attack finding of ultimate fact.

Respondents who have not appealed are in no position to attack finding of ultimate fact, since only objections to findings which can be reviewed are those urged by appellant.

6. Corporations 🔑171—In action against corporation on notes and account, corporation books held admissible to show names of stockholders or subscribers and amount of stock issued.

In action against corporation on notes and account, books of corporation, properly identified, were admissible to show names of stockholders or subscribers for stock and amount of stock issued.

7. Corporations 🔑519(1)—Person asserting that corporation is incapable of purchasing and holding stock of another has burden of proof.

Corporation is not presumed incapable of purchasing and holding stock of another, and burden of proof is on party who claims that such purchase and ownership were not within its powers.

8. Corporations 🔑519(1)—Corporation claiming contract void as ultra vires has burden of proof.

When corporation seeks to avoid contract on ground of want of power to contract, contract, if not on its face necessarily beyond scope of corporation's authority, will be presumed valid, and corporation must make good its defense by plea and proof.

9. Corporations 🔑519(3)—Evidence held prima facie sufficient to show defendant corporation authorized to own stock in another and that it had purchased stock of codefendant.

In action against corporation on notes and account, evidence, including books of corporation and testimony as to names of stockholders and stock owned by each, held prima facie sufficient to show defendant corporation was authorized to own stock in another corporation and had purchased stock in codefendant, ultra vires not having been pleaded and evidence supporting such defense not offered.

10. Corporations 🔑243(1)—Not only is corporation owning stock in another liable for proportion of debts, but stockholders of holding company are also liable; "liability;" "debt."

Not only is corporation which owns stock in another liable for proportion of its debts, but stockholders of holding company are also liable, liability of stockholders existing by reason of Constitution and statute and "liability" being more comprehensive word than "debt," and embracing also involuntary obligation of corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Debt; Liability.]

★Rehearing denied.

11. Corporations ⚷519(3)—Evidence supported finding that individual defendant was owner in severalty of but one share of stock in defendant corporation when indebtedness sued on was incurred.

In action against corporation on notes and account, evidence held sufficient to support finding that individual defendant was owner in severalty of but one share of stock in defendant corporation when indebtedness was incurred.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; J. D. Murphey, Judge.

Action by James H. Todd against the Temple Hospital Association, Inc., and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed in part, and affirmed in part.

Clark, Nichols & Eltse, of Berkeley, for appellant.

Eugene D. Bennett, of San Francisco, for respondent Temple Hospital Ass'n, Inc.

Carl F. Wood, of Oakland, for respondent Herrick.

John H. Crabbe, Bradford Webster, Edward D. Knight, and Max Mayer, all of San Francisco (J. E. White, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents Temple Hospital Ass'n of California and others.

PER CURIAM. The above action was brought by an assignee for collection to recover upon three promissory notes and an account for work and labor. The trial court found that the three notes, which were set forth in the first, second, and fourth causes of action in the complaint and dated, respectively, the 1st and 23d days of June, 1922, were executed for value received by Temple Hospital Association, Incorporated, a corporation, the several amounts thereof with the names of the payees and the dates when payable being as follows: The first note was for $25,000, payable 60 days after date to the First National Bank of Emeryville; the second for $3,322.16, payable on December 23, 1922, to Bush Electric Corporation; and the third for $600, payable 90 days after date to the above-named bank. Each note carried interest and provided for the payment of an attorney's fee in the event of suit.

The court found, with respect to the third cause of action, that the above-named corporation defendant between July 31, 1921, and August 31, 1922, became indebted to Troy Laundry upon an open book account for laundry work in the sum of $950, no part of which had been paid. It was also found that no part of the principal sums of the notes had been paid, and the interest on the first note had been paid to March 31, 1923, but no findings with respect to interest payments on the other notes were made.

The plaintiff, in addition to a recovery against defendant Temple Hospital Association, Inc., sought to recover against defendants L. F. Herrick and Temple Hospital Association of California, a corporation, alleged to have been the owners of a majority of the stock of the first-named corporation defendant, and also against defendants Frye, Miller, Webster, Crabbe, and Mayer, alleged to have been the owners of certain shares of stock in defendant Temple Hospital Association of California.

As to the total number of shares of the capital stock of defendant Temple Hospital Association, Inc., subscribed and outstanding, and the number of such shares owned by defendants Herrick and Temple Hospital Association of California at the times when the above notes were executed and the indebtedness evidenced thereby and by the book account was incurred, the court found, with respect to the first cause of action, that the number of shares subscribed and outstanding was 2,477, the second, 2,077 shares, and the third and fourth, 2,477 shares, of which at all the times mentioned in the complaint defendant Herrick owned 400 shares and defendant Temple Hospital Association of California 1,567 shares. It was also found that during all of said times defendant Temple Hospital Association of California had subscribed and outstanding 2,285 shares of its capital stock, of which the remaining defendants owned the following shares: Richard L. Frye, 401 shares; L. C. Miller, 401 shares; Bradford Webster, one share; J. H. Crabbe, Bradford Webster and Max Mayer, as copartners, 200 shares. With regard to the assignments, the court found that the several claims were assigned for collection under an agreement whereby the plaintiff was to receive 25 per cent. of the amounts collected. It was also found that the plaintiff at the time the action was commenced was a director and the assistant secretary of the Temple Hospital Association, Inc. No finding as to whether the claims were assigned before or after the assignee became such officer was made; but it appears without contradiction that the same were orally assigned to him before his official connection with the corporation commenced, and that formal assignments thereof were made thereafter and before the action was filed.

It was the conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiff, by reason of the fact that he was an officer of the corporation, and that the assignments were made for collection only, was without capacity to sue the corporations mentioned or the stockholders thereof.

The court on its findings entered judgment against the plaintiff, who has appealed therefrom.

As grounds for reversal it is contended that the conclusion of the court that the plaintiff was without capacity to sue, and the finding that defendant Webster was the owner in severalty of but one share of stock in defendant Temple Hospital Association of California when the indebtedness was incurred, cannot be sustained.

[1-3] There is no statutory requirement that the indebtedness represented by the notes and book account, all of which had long since matured, should be assigned in writing, and parol evidence was admissible to show that the same were transferred to the plaintiff before he became an officer of the corporation debtor. Humboldt Milling Co. v. Northwestern Pacific Ry. Co., 166 Cal. 175, 135 P. 503; Ralph v. Anderson, 187 Cal. 45, 200 P. 940. Furthermore, it is not contended that the plaintiff sought in any way to take advantage of his position as an officer, or that the transaction had in it any element of fraud, and no claim is made that the corporation was not indebted as alleged or had a defense to the claims on the merits. The provisions of section 2230 of the Civil Code apply to directors and other officers of corporations, and they are forbidden to take part in any transaction concerning the trust in which they or those for whom they act have an interest adverse to the corporation; but it was not intended thereby to make a transaction between them and the corporation ipso facto void. Such transactions are subject to rigid scrutiny, and are voidable for fraud or any violation of the duties of the trust; but they will not be held void if shown to be in good faith and free from fraud. Schnittger v. Old Home Con. M. Co., 144 Cal. 603, 78 P. 9; Snediker v. Ayers, 146 Cal. 407, 80 P. 511; California & Arizona Land Co. v. Cuddeback, 27 Cal. App. 450, 150 P. 379. Nor are such officers trustees of the property of the corporation in such sense as to disable them from purchasing and enforcing corporation indebtedness, unless the circumstances of the transaction make it inequitable for them to do so. Sullivan v. Triunfo G. & S. Mining Co., 39 Cal. 459; Schnittger v. Old Home Con. M. Co., supra; Merrick v. Peru Coal Co., 61 Ill. 472; Harts v. Brown, 77 Ill. 226; Forest Glen Brick, etc., Co. v. Gade, 55 Ill. App. 181; St. Louis, etc., R. R. Co. v. Chenault, 36 Kan. 51, 12 P. 303; Camden Safe Dep. Co. v. Citizens' Ice, etc., Co., 69 N. J. Eq. 718, 61 A. 529; Seymour v. Spring Forest Cemetery Ass'n, 144 N. Y. 333, 39 N. E. 365, 26 L. R. A. 859; Inglehart v. Thousand Island Hotel Co., 32 Hun (N. Y.) 377; Glenwood Mfg. Co. v. Syme, 109 Wis. 355, 85 N. W. 432; Martin v. Chambers (C. C. A.) 214 F. 769.

[4] In the absence of fraud or inequitable circumstances, the rule that it is a violation of his trust for an officer to deal with the corporation applies only where his conduct is in the nature of an attempt to unite his personal and representative characters in the same transaction and where his official connection is an essential part of the corporate action. California & Arizona Land Co. v. Cuddeback, supra. Within the above rule he is not compelled by the fact alone that he is a director to forego any of his rights as a creditor; and in bringing an adversary action against the corporation he is not in any way taking advantage of his position as a director, the right sought to be asserted being entirely independent of his fiduciary status. Title Ins. & T. Co. v. California Development Co., 171 Cal. 173, 152 P. 542.

Respondent cites certain cases wherein the circumstances were such as to make it inequitable for an action to be maintained against the corporation defendant, either because fraud was shown, or an attempt by the officer to unite in the transaction his personal and representative capacity. In the present case, however, no such facts appear, and our attention has been called to no authority holding that one who has acquired in good faith a valid claim against a corporation, either for his sole benefit or for collection, is disqualified from enforcing the same by the mere fact that subsequently he became a director or assistant secretary of the corporation debtor.

[5-9] Respondents claim that the evidence was insufficient to show that the defendant Temple Hospital Association of California was authorized to own stock in another corporation, or that it had purchased stock in its codefendant. As stated above, the complaint alleged generally, and the court found, that the former owned 1,567 shares of the latter's stock. This was an allegation and a finding of ultimate fact (Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 514, 39 P. 922; Robinson v. City of Glendale, 182 Cal. 211, 187 P. 741; First Nat. Bank v. De Moulin, 56 Cal. App. 313, 205 P. 92), which the respondents, who have not appealed, are in no position to attack, the only objections to the findings which can be reviewed being those urged by appellant (Klauber v. San Diego Street Car Co., 98 Cal. 105, 32 P. 876; Trevaskis v. Peard, 111 Cal. 599, 44 P. 246; Garibaldi v. Grillo, 17 Cal. App. 540, 120 P. 425). Nevertheless, the above findings were sufficiently supported. At the trial of the action the stock ledger, journal and transfer book of defendant Temple Hospital Association, Inc., were produced, and its clerk, whose duty it was to keep the same, testified to the names of the stockholders and the stock owned by each. In addition, a list of its stockholders was furnished by defendant to the plaintiff. From the above it appeared that the number of shares as found by the court was held therein by defendant Temple Hospital Association of California. The books of the corporation, which were properly identified, were admissible to show the names of its stockholders or the subscribers for its stock and the amount of stock issued. Evans v. Bailey, 66 Cal. 112, 4 P. 1089; Kennedy v. California Bank, 101 Cal. 497, 35 P. 1039, 40 Am. St. Rep. 69; Brown v. Board, 103 Cal. 534, 37 P. 503; Zierath v. Claggett, 46 Cal. App. 15, 188 P. 837; Lebens v. Nelson, 148 Minn. 240, 181 N. W. 350. A corporation is not presumed incapable of purchasing and holding the stock of another; and the burden of proof is upon the party who claims that such purchase and ownership were not within its powers. Evans v. Bailey, supra. When a corporation seeks to avoid its contract on the ground of its want of power to contract, where the contract is not upon its face necessarily beyond the scope of its authority, it will in the absence of proof be presumed to be valid, and the corporation must make good its defense of ultra vires by plea and proof. Brown v. Board of Education, 103 Cal. 531, 37 P. 503; Morgan v. Board of Education, 136 Cal. 245, 68 P. 703; Davis v. Pacific Studios Corporation (Cal. App.) 258 P. 440. In the present case ultra vires not having been pleaded, nor evidence supporting such defense offered by defendants, the above was sufficient prima facie to support the finding of the court.

[10] The liability of stockholders, which is distinct and separate from that of the corporation (Winona Wagon Co. v. Bull, 108 Cal. 1, 40 P. 1077), exists by reason of the Constitution and statute (Green v. Beckman, 59 Cal. 545; National City Bank v. Chubb, 52 Cal. App. 655, 199 P. 537), the word "liability" as used therein being more comprehensive than the word "debt" (Coulter Drygoods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 P. 939), and embracing also the involuntary obligations of the corporation (Lininger v. Botsford, 32 Cal. App. 386, 163 P. 63). As held in the following cases, not only is a corporation which owns stock in another liable for a proportion of its debts (Kiefhaber v. Newport Lumber Co., 15 Cal. App. 37, 113 P. 691; Kennedy v. California Savings Bank, 101 Cal. 495, 35 P. 1039, 40 Am. St. Rep. 69), but the stockholders of the holding company are also liable (Lininger v. Botsford, supra).

[11] We find no merit in appellant's contention that the finding with respect to the amount of stock in defendant Temple Hospital Association of California owned by defendant Webster individually cannot be sustained. The evidence shows that this defendant on or about July 28, 1921, acquired in severalty 200 shares therein; that by an arrangement with the officers of the corporation —who wished the stock of the same to be held in smaller lots by a larger number of persons—the certificate representing these shares was indorsed to the corporation and the shares subsequently sold by its officers to others. While the evidence shows that this defendant received the check of the corporation for the price of the shares, nevertheless it sufficiently appears that the purchase was not made nor intended to be made by it, but that the transaction was as stated above. During the period in which these sales were being made a part of the indebtedness to the Troy Laundry as shown by its account was incurred, but it appears therefrom that the amounts charged during that time were fully paid. The indebtedness alleged by the other causes of action was incurred after the above transaction was had.

We are satisfied that the conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiff was without capacity to sue is not sustained by the evidence, and the judgment as to respondents Temple Hospital Association, Inc., a corporation, Temple Hospital Association of California, a corporation, L. F. Herrick, Richard L. Frye, L. C. Miller, and J. H. Crabbe, Bradford Webster, and Max Mayer, as copartners, is accordingly reversed, and as to respondent Bradford Webster individually it is affirmed.

ABBE et al. v. BERRY. (Civ. 6461.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 4, 1929.

1. Trial 🔑388(4)—Finding that plaintiffs were copartners complying with statute was unnecessary, where such matters were alleged, denial was based on want of information, and reply was sufficient (Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468).

Finding that plaintiffs were copartners and had complied with Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, was not required, where such matters were alleged in complaint, and denial thereof in answer was based on want of information and belief, and reply was sufficient.

2. Trial 🔑395(5)—Finding that bill sued on was given in settlement of note supported judgment, without incorporating probative matter.

In action on bill of exchange, finding that the bill was given by defendant to plaintiffs in settlement of prior note and mortgage sufficiently supported judgment in plaintiff's favor, without necessity of reciting probative matter.

3. Bills and notes 🔑513—In suit on bill given in payment of secured note, evidence that mortgaged property was in plaintiff's possession held immaterial.

Where bill of exchange sued on was given in payment for note secured by mortgage, it was immaterial whether mortgaged property was in existence at date of trial, and evidence that plaintiff had it in his possession was properly excluded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Frank Abbe and George E. Abbe, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of the Abbe Company, against N. L. Berry. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Fitzgerald & Johnson, of Gilroy, for appellant.

L. F. Hobbs, of San Jose, for respondents.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendant to recover the amount of an unpaid bill of exchange theretofore delivered by the defendant. The defendant appeared and answered, and a trial was had in the trial court before the court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendant has appealed.

[1] The first finding made by the trial court found the fact to be that at all times mentioned in the complaint of the plaintiffs they were copartners and had complied with sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code. The finding was directly responsive to the first allegations contained in plaintiffs' complaint. However, the defendant contends that there was no evidence introduced on the subject. In reply to that contention the plaintiffs call to our attention that the denial contained in the answer of the defendant was based on want of information or belief, and that, therefore, the denial raised no issue. 21 Cal. Jur. 153. The reply is sufficient, and it follows that it was not necessary for the court to make any finding on the subject.

Prior to April 5, 1927, the date of the bill of exchange, the defendant executed and delivered to the plaintiffs his promissory note and executed and delivered a chattel mortgage to secure its payment. It was the theory of the plaintiffs that the bill of exchange sued upon was given and received in payment of the promissory note. It was the contention of the defendant in the trial court, and he also contends in this court, that there was no agreement between the parties that the bill of exchange was given and accepted in payment of the note. On this issue the trial court made a finding that the said bill of exchange was given by the defendant to plaintiffs in settlement of the promissory note and chattel mortgage, and that the transaction constituted a novation. However, the defendant claims that there is no evidence supporting the finding. That claim is too broad. It might be claimed that the evidence was conflicting, but there was some evidence which, if the trial court believed it, supported the finding as made.

The trial court made a finding that all of the allegations of the answer are untrue. The defendant claims that the finding as made is not supported by the evidence. Thereupon he proceeds to quote excerpts from the answer, to the effect that the bill of exchange was not given or accepted with any understanding that it would constitute absolute payment of any previous indebtedness. What has been said above in reply to the second point made by the defendant is a sufficient discussion on this point.

[2] In the next place the defendant claims that the findings do not support the judgment, As we understand his contention, it is to the effect that in drawing its findings the trial court was not warranted in stopping with the expression that said bill of exchange was given by defendant to plaintiffs in settlement of the note and mortgage, but should have gone further and should have used language to the effect that when the said bill of exchange was delivered to the plaintiffs that at said time and place the defendant said to the plaintiffs, "I give you this bill of exchange in full payment of my note and mortgage which you now hold," and that at said time and place the plaintiffs replied to the defendant, "We accept the said bill of exchange on said terms." In other words, that the trial court was bound to have inserted in its finding probative matters. We think there is no merit in the contention.

[3] If, as we have held above, the trial court was warranted in finding that the bill of exchange was given and accepted in payment of the note and mortgage, it follows that there is no merit in the last point made by the defendant. That point rests on the claim that the trial court erred in refusing to hear evidence to the effect that the mortgaged property was still in existence, was in the plaintiffs' possession, etc. If the mortgage had in fact been paid it was altogether immaterial whether the mortgaged property was or was not in existence at the date of the trial.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

Holder of real estate salesman's license may recover commission for services rendered to another broker than one employing him in course of work from his employer's office.

2. Brokers 🔑60—Broker, selling to another than purchaser secured by salesman suing him for commission, cannot object that plaintiff did not produce purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy.

Broker, selling property to another than purchaser secured by salesman, thereby placing it beyond his power to make conveyance pursuant to agreement with such salesman, cannot object to recovery of commission by latter on ground that he did not produce purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy property.

Joseph L. Lewinson, Benjamin F. Bledsoe, and Frank L. Kostlan, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

YORK, J. [1] This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of a real estate salesman for a commission against a broker other than his employer broker, the contention of the appellant being that the decision of Firpo v. Murphy, 72 Cal. App. 249, 236 P. 968, is controlling, and from that decision he inferred that the court meant that the particular service had to be rendered to the employer broker by the real estate salesman in order to enable the salesman to recover. That is not the way we construe the law as to the holder of a real estate salesman's license.

In case the real estate salesman should leave the employ of his employer broker and should do business at another place, that would raise a question, which is not before this court. So far as the evidence shows, the real estate salesman was still located with and doing business from the office of his employer broker; and in the course of such work, he rendered services for another broker, the defendant and appellant herein.

[2] The appellant further contends that the plaintiff did not produce a purchaser ready, able, and willing to buy the property in question. It does not lie in the mouth of the appellant to object in a case where he proceeded to and did sell the property to a third person, as he had placed it beyond his power to make the conveyance in accordance with his agreement with the real estate salesman, especially when, as in this case, there was sufficient evidence to support the findings of the trial court that the purchaser secured by the salesman was ready, willing, and able, and that the findings were sufficient to support the judgment.

The judgment is therefore affirmed.

1. Trusts 🔑91—Housekeeper, terminating services without fraud, did not hold property under constructive trust after conveyance, based on valuable consideration, by plaintiff to himself and housekeeper jointly.

In quiet title action, defendant did not hold property under constructive trust, and plaintiff was therefore not entitled to take anything by action, where plaintiff conveyed property jointly to himself and defendant, who was his housekeeper, based on a valuable consideration of services, and defendant subsequently terminated services, without fraud and for good cause, since, if plaintiff desired to make termination of services condition subsequent to retention of title, he should have so inserted it in deed.

and subsequently he amended his complaint by adding a second cause of action thereto, whereby he sought to impress the property with a constructive trust and to compel a conveyance of defendant's title therein to him. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff does not question the trial court's decision relating to the first cause of action, but as to the second he contends, in substance, that the trial court's affirmative findings upon certain probative facts alleged therein are sufficient to establish a constructive trust, and that, therefore, the decision with respect to the second cause of action is not supported by the findings, and is contrary to law.

[1] The main facts disclosed by the record are as follows: In November, 1914, plaintiff, being then 58 years of age, was living alone in Los Angeles, having been estranged from his wife for a number of years, although not divorced. He was the owner of property of the value of $45,000 or $50,000, and was engaged in a number of business enterprises, among them being the operation of the Santa Barbara Apartments in Los Angeles. Defendant, who was 35 years of age, had been married, but was living separate from her husband, and was dependent upon her labor for a livelihood. She applied for work at plaintiff's apartment house, which was at first refused; but after informing plaintiff of her necessitous condition, and that she was much in need of a home, plaintiff agreed that, if she would make herself generally useful about the apartment house by keeping the premises clean and orderly, and would cook and keep house for him, he would give her board and room, furnish her necessary clothing, medical aid when required, and some spending money. Defendant accepted the proposition, and, during the 5 years following, her services were not only satisfactory, but of much value to plaintiff, for during that period he disposed of the Santa Barbara Apartments, and afterwards acquired, operated, and disposed of two other apartment houses, namely, the Euclid and the Grace Apartments, all to his financial gain.

After selling the Grace Apartments in 1919, plaintiff decided to discontinue the apartment house business, and at that time, because of the long period of defendant's faithful services to him, and of the trust and confidence each had in the other, plaintiff informed defendant that, if she would continue to stay with him during his lifetime, and care for him as his housekeeper, and look after his welfare under the same general arrangement as theretofore existing, he would buy a piece of property and cause the same to be conveyed to them as joint tenants with the right of survivorship, so that in case of his death she would become the sole owner of the property. Defendant agreed, and pursuant to such agreement plaintiff purchased a piece of property on North Benton way, Los Angeles, and caused title thereto to be conveyed to himself and defendant as joint tenants. The entire consideration therefor was furnished by plaintiff, and after the deed had been recorded it remained in plaintiff's possession.

In February, 1920, plaintiff sold said property, defendant, at plaintiff's request, having joined in the deed; and thereafter, in January, 1921, plaintiff purchased a second piece of property on Sixty-Fourth street, Los Angeles, and likewise caused the same to be conveyed to himself and defendant in joint tenancy, upon the same understanding and for the same purposes as in the case of the purchase of the Benton way property. Part of the purchase price for the second piece of property consisted of a payment of $275 in cash, which amount was drawn by plaintiff from a joint bank account opened by him in June, 1920, in the names of himself and defendant, as part of the same arrangement, so he claims, under which the real property was acquired. With respect to this latter property, the trial court found that "at the time of such purchase the plaintiff informed the defendant that the property last mentioned was neither as desirable nor as valuable as the said property on Benton way, and that he expected to dispose of it in a short time, but in the meantime, and while acquiring some other property, he would cause defendant's name to be placed on the deed of purchase with that of plaintiff, as joint tenants, with the same understanding as aforesaid, all of which was understood and consented to by defendant." As will hereinafter appear, the parties continued to hold the property last mentioned until February, 1924, at which time it was sold and the proceeds deposited in said joint bank account.

In the meantime, however, to wit, in August, 1921, plaintiff purchased the property in question, situate on Vermont avenue, Los Angeles; and with reference thereto the court found as follows: That "plaintiff and defendant having confidence in each other, plaintiff caused the deed to said described property last mentioned to be taken in the names of the plaintiff and defendant as joint tenants, in accordance with and upon the same agreement" as theretofore existed between them; and, furthermore, that "in the matter of the purchase of said real property and in the matter of the taking of the title thereto and the placing of the name of the defendant as a joint tenant on the deed of purchase as hereinbefore alleged, each of said parties believed in the honesty and good faith of the other and relied upon their agreements as aforesaid; and that during all of said times a confidential relationship existed between the plaintiff and the defendant." The purchase price for the property was approximately $16,000, which was paid as follows: Execution and delivery of a joint note and mortgage for $5,000, signed by plaintiff and defendant, allowances for rebates, credits, in the sum of $160, and the delivery of six checks, aggregating $10,864, drawn by plaintiff on said joint bank account. The money deposited in said joint bank account to meet the payment of said checks was the proceeds from the sale of certain real and personal property, separately owned by plaintiff and not here involved. As stated, in February, 1924, plaintiff and defendant disposed of the property on Sixty-Fourth street, and, about this time, or soon thereafter, a disagreement arose between the parties, and approximately two months after such sale, and on May 7, 1924, defendant, for just cause as she claims, left the premises where she was residing with plaintiff and refused to return.

With reference to the Vermont avenue property, plaintiff alleged in his complaint that it was agreed "that defendant would not claim any ownership in said property prior to plaintiff's death; and that at all times it was understood between the plaintiff and the defendant that while plaintiff lived said described property should be owned absolutely by plaintiff"; also, that "the plaintiff did not intend to make any gift of said property or any part thereof to the defendant, or to vest the ownership of said property or any part thereof in the defendant." But the court found that said allegations were not true, and, on the other hand, found that, although it was understood that plaintiff should have the right to control and manage such property, and that plaintiff did actually manage and control same during all times since its purchase, the legal title to said property became vested in the plaintiff and defendant as joint tenants, with the right of survivorship at the time the same was purchased, to wit, on or about August 12, 1921; furthermore, the court found "that the defendant asserts and claims that she was and is the owner of a joint tenancy estate in said real property with the plaintiff and that it is not true that such assertion and claim by defendant was or is wrongful, fraudulent, or inequitable or contrary to the intention of the parties, and that it is not true that the defendant has no interest or estate whatever in or to said described property or any part thereof. * * *"

Plaintiff also alleged that the departure of defendant on May 7, 1924, was wrongful and "in violation of the trusts and confidences imposed in her by the plaintiff, as aforesaid, and contrary to and in violation of her promises and agreements. * * *" The trial court made no finding as to whether or not such departure was wrongful, but found that "the defendant deliberately left the plaintiff and departed from the premises where the plaintiff and defendant had theretofore resided, and packed her belongings and removed them from the premises, and thereafter failed and refused to return or in any manner thereafter to carry out or perform any of her said promises to act as plaintiff's housekeeper or to care for him or to look after his welfare; * * * that while it is true that defendant has violated her promises and agreements as hereinbefore found, it is not true that defendant is wrongfully and fraudulently endeavoring to gain an unconscionable advantage over plaintiff by virtue of said deed."

We are convinced that the foregoing facts and circumstances, and others incidental thereto, which are unnecessary to set forth herein, were, as the trial court held, legally insufficient to establish a constructive trust, and that, therefore, plaintiff was entitled to take nothing by his action. Nowhere in the complaint is it alleged, nor does the court find, nor the evidence prove, that defendant obtained the joint tenancy estates in the various properties through any misrepresentation, imposition, circumvention, abuse of confidential relations, or any other kind of actual or constructive fraud. Admittedly throughout the 10 years of their acquaintanceship, and particularly during the latter 5 years thereof, while they were acquiring said properties in joint tenancy, plaintiff's was the dominating mind, and the status of the properties and of the parties resulted alone from his affirmative, voluntary acts. Nor is there any proof whatever from which the inference could be drawn that defendant's agreement was made without intention of performing the same, or that it was terminated other than for good cause. On the other hand, the findings and the evidence affirmatively show that the various conveyances to defendant as a joint tenant where absolute in form, and were all based upon a valuable consideration, namely, the performance of future personal services, and that thereafter said services were faithfully performed for a period of 5 years, and until, as she claims and as the evidence in her behalf tends to show, plaintiff's treatment of her justified her in leaving. Therefore, the case on principle is the same as, and should be governed by the law declared in, Schott v. Schott, 168 Cal. 342, 143 P. 595, wherein the court said in part: "As to the property described in the first deed, defendant's remedy [here it is the plaintiff's] at most, in view of the pleadings and evidence, there being no actual fraud, was an action for damages. As was said in Lawrence v. Gayetty, 78 Cal. 132 [20 P. 385, 12 Am. St. Rep. 29], of a case somewhat similar in principle: 'The plaintiff saw proper to accept the verbal promise of the respondent to do certain things without any agreement or understanding that the failure to do the acts as promised should be a condition, or in any way affect the validity of the deed, or entitle him to a reconveyance.' Under such circumstances, in the absence of fraud, actual or constructive, defendant would have no right to rescind, or to have the deed set aside [citing cases]."

It may be conceded, as plaintiff contends, that, where confidential relations exist between two parties, and one of them accepts a conveyance of real estate upon a parol promise that he will hold it for the benefit of the grantor, or for the benefit of some third person in whom the grantor is interested, and there is no other consideration for the conveyance, a trust arises by operation of law in favor of the grantor, or in favor of the third person for whom the property is to be held; that it is the violation of the parol promise which constitutes the fraud and gives rise to the trust, and that, if it is made in good faith, and is of a continuing nature, the performance of it for a time does not prevent a trust from arising when it is broken and repudiated. Cooney v. Glynn, 157 Cal. 583, 108 P. 506, and cases cited; Smith v. Lombard, 201 Cal. 518, 258 P. 55; Taylor v. Bunnell, 77 Cal. App. 525, 247 P. 240; Logan v. Ryan, 68 Cal. App. 448, 229 P. 993. But the mere statement of the rule is sufficient to show its inapplication to the facts of the present case, because, as indicated by the above italics, the application of the rule depends upon the proposition that there is no consideration for the conveyance other than the mere promise of the grantor to hold the title for the benefit of the grantor or some third person; and here defendant's joint tenancy estates were not conveyed to her for the benefit of some one else, but, as pointed out, were conveyed to her absolutely in consideration of future personal services, which were performed for a period of 5 years, and also as a reward for faithful services rendered plaintiff without wages during the preceding 5 years. And, although no finding was made as to whether defendant was justified in discontinuing her services in 1924, the evidence, in our opinion, is amply sufficient to support the conclusion that, as she claims, she was warranted in so doing. But whether or not such justification existed would seem to be of little importance in this suit to declare a constructive trust, because, even assuming that such legal grounds did not exist, the termination of her services amounted to no more than a breach of contract, involving no fraud, either actual or constructive, and, there being a consideration for the conveyance, a constructive trust did not arise. Schott v. Schott, supra.

The case of Cole v. Manning, 79 Cal. App. 55, 248 P. 1065, which is emphasized by plaintiff, is not in point here, for there the defendant Mrs. Manning acquired an interest in Cole's property by entering into a meretricious relationship with him, under a fraudulent promise of marriage, which she knew could not be fulfilled, because she was already married. It is evident, therefore, that she obtained title through fraud.

Plaintiff also contends for the application of the rule stated in Pomeroy, Equity Jurisprudence, § 1053, and by other text-writers to the effect that, whenever the legal title to property is obtained through means or under circumstances which render it unconscientious for the holder of the legal title to retain and enjoy the beneficial interest, equity imposes a constructive trust in the property thus acquired. Here, however, the court found that, under all of the circumstances surrounding the acquisition of said property, defendant's claim of title was neither wrongful, fraudulent, inequitable, nor contrary to the intention of the parties; also that it was not true, as plaintiff alleged, that she was wrongfully and fraudulently endeavoring to gain an unconscionable advantage over plaintiff by virtue of said deed; and it is apparent that these conclusions of the trial court are fully supported by the evidence, for, in addition to the facts hereinabove referred to, the record shows that for 10 years she acted in the best of faith toward plaintiff; that during that period of time she not only looked after his personal welfare, but worked incessantly to promote his property interests; and that her industry, hard work, and devotion to his interests had much to do with increasing his financial worth during the 10 years she labored for him. And, irrespective of whether legal grounds existed for the termination of her agreement after 5 years' services, she was apparently honest in her belief that plaintiff's treatment of her in 1924 justified her in leaving him.

[2] Under such circumstances it would hardly seem to be in keeping with equitable principles, or in accordance with the evidence in the case, to declare it to be unconscientious for her to retain and enjoy the joint tenancy estate of which she is the legal and rightful owner, and thus deprive her of all of the fruits of her several years' labor. As stated, in substance, in Lawrence v. Gayetty, supra, if plaintiff desired to make the termination of the services a condition subsequent to the retention of the title, he should have so inserted it in the deed. In any event, the question of whether it would be unconscientious for defendant to retain the estate conveyed to her must necessarily be left to the determination of the trial court, and we fully agree to the conclusion it has reached thereon.

(Civ. 5388.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 3, 1929.

1. Evidence 🔑429—Evidence to show alteration of note held admissible (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1855, 1856).

In action on note, testimony that note did not bear figures indicating amount at time it was signed and delivered held admissible, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, since section 1855 does not exclude evidence to show that alteration of writing has been made, where it is claimed that instrument in evidence fails to express true contract by reason thereof.

2. Bills and notes 🔑489(3)—In action on note, agreement acknowledging payment of all accounts between parties held admissible, under answer in which payment was pleaded.

In action on note, written agreement dissolving partnership between parties, and acknowledging settlement and payment of all accounts between them, held admissible under answer in which payment was pleaded, as against contention that exhibit was not pleaded in answer.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. D. Dehy, Judge.

Action by Mike Akopoff, also known as Mike Akopian, against Jacob Mesropian and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Henry W. Mahan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stanley Visel, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. This is an action on three counts for a money judgment. The third count is upon a promissory note. The answer denies the allegations of the complaint, and in addition sets up a separate defense that, since its execution, the note has been altered and is null and void, and also a defense "that the defendants have paid to the plaintiff the whole sum," etc. Judgment was entered in favor of the defendants, and plaintiff assigns three grounds of appeal.

He first contends that the evidence does not support the findings. We have read the reporter's transcript, and there is substantial evidence to sustain the findings of the trial court.

[1] Appellant next contends that the trial court committed error in admitting, over the objection of the plaintiff, testimony that the note did not bear the figures $606 at the time it was signed and delivered. Appellant contends that the writing speaks for itself, and that section 1855, Code of Civil Procedure, known as the best evidence rule, excludes such evidence. The above section has no application to the question involved. The true rule is expressed by section 1856, Code of Civil Procedure, and is called the extrinsic evidence rule. While ordinarily there can be, between the parties to a written agreement, no evidence of its terms other than the contents of the writing itself, yet exceptions are made by the statute, where imperfection of the writing is put in issue by the pleadings, or where the validity of the agreement is the fact in dispute.

The rule against parol evidence to vary or contradict a written instrument does not exclude evidence to show that an alteration of a writing has been made, and where it is claimed that an instrument in evidence fails to express the true contract of the parties by reason of alterations therein, extrinsic evidence thereof is admissible. 22 C. J. p. 1147, and cases cited under notes 83 and 85.

[2] Appellant's last contention is that the trial court erred in admitting defendants' Exhibit A, which was an agreement in writing dissolving the partnership between the parties, and acknowledging settlement and payment of all accounts between them. Plaintiff complains that the exhibit was not pleaded in the answer. However, payment was pleaded, and we know of no rule which would support the plaintiff's contention. Plaintiff refers us to none.

Judgment affirmed.

Preston Higgins, City Atty., and John W. Collier and Homer W. Buckley, Deputy City Attys., all of Oakland, for respondent.

KOFORD, P. J. This is an original proceeding for a writ of mandamus requiring the Oakland city auditor to approve the first week's salary claims of certain special deputy city clerks appointed and employed by the city clerk under authority of a resolution of the city council of the city of Oakland for the purpose of verifying the signatures and registrations of the signers of a petition filed with the city clerk proposing certain amendments to the charter of the city of Oakland. The refusal of the auditor to approve these claims resulted in stopping the proceedings looking to the calling of an election at which the people of the city could vote upon the proposed charter amendments. Owing to this condition, this court's original jurisdiction was invoked, notwithstanding that the dispute might otherwise appear to be a private one showing no reason to depart from the customary procedure of applying to the superior court for relief.

The first defense raised by the auditor is that the verification of the signatures on the petition must be done only by the county clerk, as specified by the provisions of the Constitution.

The Constitution, section 8, art. 11, states, among other things: "The signatures on such petition shall be verified by the authority having charge of the registration records of such city or city and county, and the expenses of such verification shall be provided by the legislative body thereof. If such petitions have a sufficient number of signatures the legislative body of the city or city and county shall so submit the amendment or amendments so proposed to the electors." In Alameda county the county clerk and not the city clerk has charge of the registration records of the city of Oakland. No provision of law has been called to our attention which gives the city clerk charge of the registration records of the city of Oakland. There is scarcely any room for interpretation of the constitutional provision just quoted unless some doubt is raised by the last sentence of section 8 of article 11 of the Constitution. It reads: "The election laws of such city or city and county shall, so far as applicable, govern all elections held under the authority of this section." The expressions "election laws" and "all elections" as here used cannot include all the proceedings leading up to the election. If it meant this, it would also mean that the city laws could change the constitutional requirement of a 15 per cent. petition to a 30 per cent. or a 60 per cent. petition. Such a broad delegation of authority is not to be assumed without a plain intention manifested so to do. However this sentence of the section of the Constitution should be interpreted, it should not receive an interpretation which would nullify the specially expressed requirements of the section, one of which designates the authority who shall verify the petition.

The city charter, contrary to the Constitution, specifies that the city clerk shall verify the petition. Section 7, subd. 4, clearly states that the city clerk shall verify a recall petition. Section 7, subd. 4, is by reference in section 163 incorporated into article 21 of the charter, and that article contains section 174, which expressly makes article 21 applicable to charter amendment proceedings unless prohibited by the Constitution. But the Constitution does prohibit the charter from empowering the city clerk to make the verification. The Constitution states that such verification shall be made by the authority having charge of the registration records of said city. This, in the county of Alameda, means the county clerk.

We conclude, therefore, that the city auditor properly has refused to audit and approve the claims described in the petition. The signatures on the petition should be verified by the county clerk under the constitutional provision and not by the city clerk as stated in the city charter. Under the constitutional provision requiring that "the expenses of the verification shall be provided by the legislative body thereof," the city will still pay for the expense of the verification, but it will be for expenses incurred by the county clerk and not by the city clerk.

The writ is denied, with costs to respondent.

STEWART v. ATKINSON et al. (Civ. 6529.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 28, 1928.

1. Taxation 🔑421(1), 764(1)—Description in tax assessment and deed by reference to map held sufficient, though two maps were on record in every respect identical (Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 2).

Description of property in tax assessment and in tax deeds by reference to map held sufficient, within Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 2, though there were two maps of record in the office of the county recorder, which were in every respect identical, though only one contained a title, since, in absence of proof to the contrary, the court might assume that the map containing a title was the only map thereof, or that, as the two maps were identical, the tract and extent of boundaries were well known by name.

2. Taxation 🔑421(3), 764(2)—Description in assessment and tax deed as one-half of certain lot held void for uncertainty (Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 2).

Description in assessment and tax deed as one-half of certain lot held void for uncertainty, under Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 2, in that it could not be ascertained from the description what half of lot was attempted to be described.

3. Taxation 🔑734(2)—Tax deed, founded on invalid assessment, is void.

A tax deed, which is founded on an invalid assessment, is itself void.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Action by Wade Stewart against S. C. Atkinson and others, wherein Maude M. Stewart was substituted for plaintiff after his death. Decree for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and in part reversed.

William R. Biaggi, of San José, for appellants.

J. A. Bardin and Russell Scott, both of Salinas, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a decree adjudging plaintiff to be the owner of certain real property in Monterey county and quieting her title against the claims of defendants.

It is conceded that on and for a long time prior to June 24, 1912, Mary A. Wagner was the owner in fee simple and in the exclusive possession of lot 10 and the northerly one-half of lot 12, in block 132, of Carmel-by-the-Sea, Monterey county; also that she died on June 14, 1924, and that the defendant Anna S. Fisher is, and was at the time of the trial of the action, the duly appointed, qualified, and acting administratrix of the estate of Mary A. Wagner, deceased. It is also conceded that, on and for a long time prior to June 24, 1912, the defendant Nettie E. Wagner was the owner in fee simple and in the possession of the southerly one-half of lot 12, block 132, Carmel-by-the-Sea.

It is further conceded that the title and right of possession, which the plaintiff claims in and to the lands and premises involved in the action, is based upon a certain tax deed dated July 16, 1917, from J. E. Hunter, tax collector of Monterey county, to the state of California, recorded July 18, 1917, in volume 13 of Tax Deeds, page 190, Monterey County Records, conveying to the state of California for the sum of $1.42 that certain real property in the county of Monterey, state of California, and more particularly described as follows: "As per map of Carmel-by-the-Sea, lot 10, block 132;" also another tax deed, made by the same grantor to the same grantee dated July 16, 1917, and recorded July 18, 1917, and conveying for the sum of 96 cents that certain real property in the county of Monterey, state of California, and more particularly described as follows: "As per map of Carmel-by-the-Sea, lots, one-half of lot 12, block 132;" that by deed dated May 17, 1923, J. E. Hunter, tax collector of Monterey county, conveyed to Wade Stewart the real property in dispute, described as situate in the county of Monterey, state of California, and more particularly described as follows: "Property sold to the state June 24, 1912, for tax of 1911, as per map of Carmel-by-the-Sea, lot 10, block 132; as per map Carmel-by-the Sea, one-half of lot 12, block 132, which deed was recorded May 21, 1923, in Liber 17 of Official Records, folio 310, Monterey County Records."

It is further conceded that Wade Stewart died during the pendency of the action, and that on May 17, 1925, after due and regular proceedings had therefor in the matter of the estate of Wade Stewart, deceased, the superior court of Monterey county duly made and entered its order assigning the whole of the estate, including whatever interest the deceased had in and to the property in controversy, to the present plaintiff herein Maude M. Stewart, the widow of Wade Stewart, deceased.

[1] Appellants contend that the tax deeds through which plaintiff derived title are void; that, as held in Pretty v. Warden, 38 Cal. App. 708, 177 P. 490, "proceedings calculated to deprive an owner of his property under the taxing power are in invitum, and that all the requirements of the statute respecting the same must be strictly complied with." The reasons assigned by appellants as to why the tax sales and tax titles based thereon are invalid are that the descriptions of the property set forth in the assessment and in the tax deeds are void for uncertainty in the following particulars: "It is not stated in the descriptions that the property is located in any city or town. The property is merely described by reference to a map of Carmel-by-the-Sea, and the evidence shows that there are two maps of Carmel-by-the-Sea of record in the office of the county recorder of Monterey county, each of said maps containing a lot 10, block 132, and also a lot 12, block 132, and it does not appear from the evidence which of said maps the assessment refers to or which map the assessor had in mind when he prepared the assessment roll," and as to the description of one-half of lot 12, block 132, it is further uncertain in that "it cannot be ascertained, either from the description of said lot, as set forth in the assessment roll, nor from the description contained in the tax deeds, what portion, or half, of lot 12, block 132, is attempted to be described therein, nor can it be ascertained therefrom whether it is the north, south, east, west or middle one-half of said lot, nor whether the said half is in the shape of a square, circle or rectangle." Appellants also urge in their opening brief that the auditor did not correctly compute the interest and penalties. This latter objection is waived by appellants in their closing brief in which they concede that both of the parcels of property in question were sold by the tax collector for the correct amounts, and that the taxes, penalties, and costs were correctly computed.

On the date when the assessor of Monterey county prepared the 1911 assessment roll Carmel-by-the-Sea was not an incorporated town, and did not become a town of the sixth class until October 31, 1916, and it is conceded that the lots in question were listed under subdivision 2 of section 3650 of the Political Code. This section provides: "The assessor must prepare an assessment book, with appropriate headings as directed by the state board of equalization, in which must be listed all property within the county, and which shall show under the appropriate head; * * * 2. Land, by township, range, section, or fractional section; and when such land is not a congressional division or subdivision, by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify it; * * * city and town lots, naming the city or town and the number of lot and block, according to the system of numbering in said city or town," etc.

By stipulation of the parties it appears as a fact in the case that the map of "Carmel-by-the-Sea" is a map of record in the office of the county recorder of Monterey county and was of record in Map Book 1, at page 2, on March 7, 1902, and that in the same volume at page 52 there is another map showing the same property—that is, lots 10 and 12, block 132, appear on each of such maps in every respect identical. As to the map on page 2, the stipulated facts show it to be a "map of Carmel-by-the-Sea," while no title, so far as the stipulated facts show, appears on the map recorded on page 52.

Appellants rely on the case of Cadwalader v. Nash, 73 Cal. 43, 14 P. 385, quoting the following, which they claim is decisive of the first point urged here: That "a sheriff's deed * * * is void for uncertainty, when the reference contained therein is equally applicable to two different maps, and in an action founded thereon, parol evidence of the sheriff to identify the one referred to is inadmissible." In that case the two maps in evidence represent blocks and lots of corresponding numbers as being situated in different parts of Middletown, and consequently the court held the description void for uncertainty. Here, however, the same lots and blocks appear identically the same on two maps, only one of which, however, is entitled "Carmel-by-the-Sea." It is only where there is a difference between two maps so far as the assessed property is concerned that the question as to which map was intended can arise.

In Baird v. Monroe, 150 Cal. 571, 89 P. 356, this language is used: "If by such evidence it was made to appear that there was such a recorded map, and only one such map, or, if more than one, no difference therein so far as the assessed property was concerned, the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conclusion that the assessment sufficiently identified the property. The trial court had the right to assume, in the absence of a showing to the contrary by the person assailing the description, that there was but one Pellissier tract in the county of Los Angeles, and that this tract and the extent of its boundaries were well known by that name. People v. Leet, 23 Cal. 161."

And so in the present case the court had the right to assume—there being no proof to the contrary, and no evidence as to the designation of the map recorded in liber 1, page 52—that the "map of Carmel-by-the-Sea," recorded in liber 1, page 2, was the only map of "Carmel-by-the-Sea," or that, as the two maps were identical, so far as the assessed property was concerned, this tract and the extent of its boundaries were well known by that name.

If the language of the court in Baird v. Monroe, supra, announces the correct rule, it is decisive of the objection urged against the descriptions as being uncertain because of there being two maps. Appellants contend that as it appears from the evidence in the Baird Case that there was but one map of the Pellissier tract in the county of Los Angeles the language of the court above quoted is mere dicta. While it is true that this language was not indispensable to the conclusion reached in the decision, we think it states the correct rule and the descriptions here sufficiently comply with the provisions of section 3650, subdivision 2, of the Political Code as a "description sufficient to identify it," as against the first objection urged.

[2] As to the description contained in the assessment and tax deed with respect to the one-half of lot 12, block 132, assessed to defendant Nettie E. Wagner, who it is conceded was the owner of the south one-half of such lot, and which was assessed and deeded as "one-half of lot 12, block 132," we think the description is void for uncertainty in that it cannot be ascertained from the description what half of the lot is attempted to be described. In Harvey v. Meyer, 117 Cal. 60, 48 P. 1014, the court lays down the rule in tax proceedings that no presumption of fact may be indulged in as to the size, location or extent of a lot, nor is parol evidence admissible to ascertain what particular tract or lot the assessor had in mind when making the assessment. An assessment so indefinite and uncertain as to render it impossible to determine what part of the land was intended to be assessed—what particular half of a lot—is invalid. People v. Flint, 39 Cal. 670; Ventriniglia v. Eichner, 155 App. Div. 236, 140 N. Y. S. 395. "Section 3650 of the Political Code of this state provides that property shall be listed by the assessor in accordance with the following method: Land, by township, range, section, or fractional section, and when such land is not a congressional division or subdivision, by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify it. * * * Any assessment not in conformity with this section is wholly void." Smith v. City of Los Angeles, 158 Cal. 707, 112 P. 307; Palomares Land Co. v. Los Angeles Co., 146 Cal. 536, 80 P. 931.

[3] We have examined the cases cited by respondent to support her contention that the description "one-half of lot 12" means an undivided one-half, and that therefore respondent's tax deed makes her a tenant in common with appellant Nettie E. Wagner, who, it was conceded at the trial, was the owner of the south one-half of lot 12, and who paid the taxes levied and assessed against her property for the year 1911. The cases cited are not in point, as they all involve conveyances between private persons, while here we are concerned with a conveyance based upon tax proceedings, which are in invitum. "A description sufficiently certain to convey land between man and man, and which, if contained in an agreement to convey, would authorize the court of equity to decree specific execution, will not answer in the proceeding to enforce the collection of a tax." Commercial National Bank v. Schlitz, 6 Cal. App. 182, 91 P. 753; Miller v. Williams, 135 Cal. 185, 67 P. 788. "In the case of private transactions, the courts, in construing the document, endeavor to collect the intention of the parties, and give that intention effect. * * * But in these tax proceedings the owner of the estate has nothing to do; he intends nothing. The government is acting, through its agents, in hostility to him, and with the view of enforcing the collection of a tax from him." People v. Mahoney, 55 Cal. 288.

In tax proceedings "the description must be certain of itself, and not such as to require evidence aliunde to render it certain. * * * Certainty in the description is required to apprise the owner that his property is advertised for sale, and to enable him to prevent the sale by the payment of the taxes thereon, and to impart information to bidders of the actual extent and location of the premises to be sold. All subsequent proceedings depend upon this certainty. An inaccurate or an uncertain description defeats every step subsequently taken, and, as we have already said, the uncertainty cannot be cured by evidence aliunde." Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 302, 82 Am. Dec. 738. See, also, Roberts v. Chan Tin Pen, 23 Cal. 267; Mountain Club v. Pinney, 67 Cal. App. 251, 227 P. 630; Miller v. Williams and Smith v. City of Los Angeles, supra. A deed founded on an invalid assessment is itself void. Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 27 P. 356.

That part of the decree in which it is adjudged that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to the possession of lot 10 in block 132, as laid down and designated upon that certain map entitled "map of Carmel-by-the-Sea, Monterey county, state of California," and quieting her title against the claims of defendants, is affirmed, and that part of the decree adjudging plaintiff to be the owner of an undivided one-half interest in and to lot 12, block 132, as laid down and described on that certain map entitled "map of Carmel-by-the-Sea, Monterey county, state of California," and quieting her title thereto, is reversed. Each party to pay his and her own costs of appeal.

KIRBY v. SAN FRANCISCO SAVINGS & LOAN SOC. (Civ. 6387.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 26, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 25, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 21, 1929.

1. Injunction ⟹228—There can be no disobedience of injunction by one not included in mandate and not aiding or abetting one so included.

There can be no disobedience of injunction by person not included in mandate of court, either by name or as member of classes of persons properly included, or who is not active as aider or abettor of one so included in assertion of his claims.

2. Injunction ⟹261—Court of law may take cognizance of violation of injunction in another action, though it was not perpetuated by final decree.

In action for damages for bank's payment of deposit, withdrawal of which had been enjoined, defendant's claim that court of law cannot take cognizance of violation of injunction in another action, unless such injunction be shown to have been perpetuated by final decree, held overruled.

3. Injunction ⟹261—Complaint for damages for bank's payment of deposit, withdrawal of which had been enjoined, held sufficient against general demurrer.

In action for damages for bank's payment of deposit, withdrawal of which had been enjoined, complaint, though open to criticism as containing conclusions of law, held sufficient as against general demurrer, notwithstanding that precise facts constituting defendant an aider or abettor, violating order and right of plaintiff, may have been left uncertain, since objection to such matter should have been presented by special demurrer.

4. Divorce ⟹206—Husband held unauthorized to withdraw bank deposit of community property, where order restraining such withdrawal had been entered in divorce action (Civ. Code, § 172).

Though husband could, under Civ. Code, § 172, withdraw from bank deposit of community property, he had not such right as against wife, where order restraining such withdrawal had been entered in divorce action.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Sarah Kirby against the San Francisco Savings & Loan Society, now known and designated as the San Francisco Bank. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded, with instructions.

J. J. Dunne and Harmon D. Skillin, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Goodfellow, Eells & Orrick, of San Francisco (Bradford W. Bosley, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought to recover the damage alleged to have been caused by the payment to plaintiff's husband of a deposit made by the spouses in defendant bank, and the withdrawal of which by the husband had been enjoined.

The complaint alleged that on March 14, 1924, the community property of the spouses consisted, among other things, of a bank account or deposit with defendant bank in the sum of $2,521.80; that the deposit was in the names of plaintiff and her husband, Michael J. Kirby, "and in form to be paid to either said plaintiff or said Michael J. Kirby or the survivor of them"; that on the above date the plaintiff commenced in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco an action for divorce against her husband on the ground of extreme cruelty; that on the same day in that action the court issued its order restraining Michael J. Kirby, "his agents and servants, and each of them, from selling, assigning, withdrawing, or otherwise disposing of, or mortgaging or incumbering, the community property of the parties to the action for divorce, including the aforesaid bank account * * * with said defendant * * *"; that certified copies of the order were on the day of its issuance served upon the husband and defendant bank. It was further alleged that on March 15, 1924, in violation of the restraining order, defendant paid over and delivered to Michael J. Kirby the amount of the deposit, and the whole thereof was lost to plaintiff; that on March 27, 1924, Kirby having made default, the divorce action was tried, findings of fact were filed, and an interlocutory decree entered, by which a divorce was granted to the plaintiff on the ground alleged and the deposit awarded to her. According to the above findings, a copy of which was attached to the complaint, the deposit was the community property of the spouses.

The complaint further alleged that on March 27, 1924, a copy of the decree was served upon defendant bank, that no part of the deposit has been paid to plaintiff, and that by reason of the premises she was damaged in the amount thereof. A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained, with leave to amend. The plaintiff, however, declined to amend, and from the judgment entered upon the demurrer, plaintiff appealed.

[1] It is the rule that there can be no disobedience of an injunction by a person who is not included in the mandate of the court, either by name or as a member of the classes of persons properly included, or who is not active as an aider or abettor of one so included in the assertion of his claims. Berger v. Superior Ct., 175 Cal. 719, 167 P. 143, 15 A. L. R. 373. In some jurisdictions, where the disobedience of an injunction has resulted in pecuniary loss or injury to the plaintiff, the court, by reason of statute, may, in imposing punishment, award an amount sufficient to indemnify him for his loss, while in others relief is given in an independent action. 32 Corp. Jur. "Injunctions," § 889, page 509, and cases cited. But, whatever the form of the proceeding for relief, the right to recover as against one who, in disobedience of the mandate of the court, violates a right sought to be protected thereby, to the damage of another, or who knowingly aids and abets such violation, is generally recognized. Lawton v. Herrick, 83 Conn. 417, 76 A. 986; White v. Wadhams, 211 Mich. 658, 179 N. W. 245; Webster v. Douglas County, 102 Wis. 181, 77 N. W. 885, 78 N. W. 451, 72 Am. St. Rep. 870; Main v. Field, 13 Ind. App. 401, 40 N. E. 1103; Springfield M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Peck, 102 Ill. 265.

[2] Defendant claims that a court of law cannot take cognizance of the violation of an injunction in another action, unless the injunction be shown to have been perpetuated by a final decree, relying upon a statement to that effect in High on Injunctions (4th Ed.) p. 1461, in support of which the case of Callan v. McDaniel, 72 Ala. 96, is cited. An examination of this case, however, shows that the decision was not contrary to the rule stated in the cases cited above. The action was one in ejectment, and in the course of the trial a writ of injunction, issued in an equity case between the same parties, enjoining the plaintiff from clearing the land involved in the action then being tried, was offered in evidence for the purpose of showing that the writ had been violated. The offer was rejected, and in affirming the ruling the court, after stating in substance that the offered evidence was not material to the issues in the ejectment action, and that the violation alleged could not be punished in that proceeding, said: "If the suit in equity has passed into a final decree, and the injunction been perpetuated, the court adjudging that the defendant was without right to clear the lands in controversy, the decree would be admissible evidence, and conclusive. That is not, however, the question now presented."

[3] In the present action it is not claimed that the defendant acted as the agent or servant of Kirby, and it was not named in the restraining order. Defendant contends, therefore, that this case is to be distinguished from cases where the depositary was so named in the order, as in Springfield M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Peck, supra, and that in the absence of an allegation that it was so named, or acted as an agent or servant of Kirby, the complaint was insufficient. Such allegations, however, in view of other facts pleaded, were not essential to the statement of a cause of action against the defendant within the above rule as to liability; it being sufficient that the complaint show that the defendant aided and abetted Kirby in doing the act which resulted in damage to the plaintiff. As stated, the complaint averred that the withdrawal of the deposit by Kirby was enjoined, and it sufficiently appears therefrom that the defendant knew the fact. It is also manifest from the situation disclosed by the pleading that without the defendant's aid and cooperation such withdrawal was impossible.

Taken in connection with these facts, the averment that "in violation and disregard of said restraining order and in prejudice to the rights of the plaintiff said defendant paid over and delivered to said Michael J. Kirby and said Michael J. Kirby received from said defendant the whole of said deposit, * * *" while open to the criticism that with allegations of fact it also contained conclusions of law, was nevertheless sufficient to meet the objection raised by the general demurrer; and if the precise facts claimed to have had the effect of constituting the defendant an aider and abettor in the violation of the order and the rights of the plaintiff were left uncertain by the pleading, the objection should have been presented by a special demurrer. City of Santa Barbara v. Eldred, 108 Cal. 294, 41 P. 410; Eva v. Andersen, 166 Cal. 420, 137 P. 16; San Christina, etc., Co. v. San Francisco, 167 Cal. 762, 141 P. 384, 52 L. R. A. (N. S.) 676.

[4] Defendant contends that, it having been determined in the divorce action that the property was the community property of the spouses, the husband had, under the provisions of section 172 of the Civil Code, full power to withdraw the same, at least until the deposit had by a judgment of the court been awarded to the wife. That the husband had such power may be conceded; but that, in the face of the restraining order, he had not the right to do so as against his wife is, we think, equally clear.

In view of the foregoing, it will be unnecessary to consider the further claims by plaintiff that the service of the copy of the restraining order upon the defendant was sufficient, under the provisions of section 15a of the Banking Act (Stats. 1925, pp. 510–512), as a notice in writing not to pay the deposit according to its terms, and was also a notice of an adverse claim thereon by the plaintiff.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the lower court to overrule the demurrer to the complaint.

CONNOLLY v. LAKE COUNTY CANNING CO. et al. (Civ. 6389.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 27, 1928.

1. Specific performance 🔑92(1)—Tender of price within time fixed by option is not essential, where prevented or delayed by vendor's act (Civ. Code, § 1511).

Time is not of essence of option to purchase, so as to render it essential to judgment for specific performance that tender of purchase price be made within time limit fixed, where such offer is prevented or delayed by act of vendor, under Civ. Code, § 1511.

2. Specific performance 🔑121(11)—In suit for specific performance of option, evidence supported finding that owner of interest in land delayed exercise of option beyond time fixed.

In suit for specific performance, evidence held sufficient to support finding that plaintiff, owning interest in land on which defendants had option to purchase, made statements for purpose of delaying exercise of such option beyond period of time fixed therein, where plaintiff, who was abstractor and searcher of titles, was employed to obtain correct list of record owners of property, and failed to do so before time had expired.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1011(1)—Finding on conflicting evidence is controlling.

Trial court's finding on conflicting evidence is controlling on appeal.

4. Specific performance 🔑101—Owner of interest in land, having delayed exercise of option beyond stipulated time by statements while employed by purchaser, cannot complain of delay in tendering price.

Owner of interest in land on which another had option to purchase cannot complain of purchaser's delay in tendering price, where he had made statements, while employed by purchaser, to obtain correct list of record owners, for purpose of delaying exercise of option beyond period of time fixed therein.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action to quiet title and for an accounting brought by P. Connolly against the Lake County Canning Company and another, in which defendants filed a cross-complaint for specific performance. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. L. Held, of Ukiah, for appellant.

Hale McCowen, Jr., of Ukiah, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Appellant, as the owner of an undivided one-fifteenth interest in an acre of land in Mendocino county, brought this suit to quiet title thereto, and to require respondents, who were occupying said land, to account for the proceeds derived from its use. Respondents filed a cross-complaint for specific performance, alleging, in substance, that during the year 1916 respondent Lake County Canning Company entered into possession of said land under a written lease granted by plaintiff and his co-owners, and by the same instrument was given an option to purchase the land at any time prior to April 1, 1919; that the exercise of the option was delayed by the acts of the appellant until April 10, 1919, at which time said canning company tendered appellant his share of the purchase price, amounting to $233.19, and demanded a deed; and that appellant refused to accept the money or to execute the deed. The trial court found generally in accordance with the facts alleged in the cross-complaint, and from the judgment entered on said findings this appeal is taken.

[1] Appellant devotes much space in his brief to the citation of authorities, holding generally that time is of the essence of an option to purchase, and that it is essential to a judgment in specific performance that a tender of the purchase price be made within the time limit fixed by the option. Section 1511 of the Civil Code provides, however, that the want of performance of an obligation, or of an offer of performance, in whole or in part, or any delay therein, is excused "when such performance or offer is prevented or delayed by the act of the creditor * * *"; and in the present action the trial court found that the delay of 10 days in exercising the option was caused by the acts of the appellant; consequently the only question presented for determination on the appeal is whether the evidence reasonably supports such finding.

[2] The facts are as follows: During the year 1910, the Ukiah Canning Company, a corporation, deeded the land in question to some 15 individuals, one of whom was the appellant. In 1916, a Mr. Poage, acting on behalf of the Lake County Canning Company (which for convenience will be referred to hereinafter as respondent), obtained from said individuals the written lease and option above mentioned, but the same was not recorded. During the subsequent occupation of the property by respondent, and with the expectation of buying the same, it expended several thousand dollars in erecting buildings thereon and otherwise improving the property. In February, 1919, respondent decided to exercise its option, but the written lease and option could not be found, the same apparently having been misplaced during a change which had taken place previously in the official personnel of the company. Mr. Cunningham, who became the manager and secretary of the respondent company, knew of the existence of said instrument and that appellant was one of the signers thereof, but he did not know the names of the numerous individuals holding the record title to the property, nor the exact date of the expiration of the option. Therefore, in order to prepare a valid deed conveying complete title, Cunningham, on behalf of respondent, employed appellant, who was an abstractor and searcher of titles in Mendocino county, to obtain a correct list of the record owners of said property and to report the same to respondent. Appellant accepted the employment, and agreed to furnish such report, but when Cunningham called on him later, on three or four different occasions prior to April 1, 1919, for the report of the title, was told by appellant that he had not yet had time to secure the necessary information from the records; and finally, so Cunningham testified, about April 1, 1919, appellant informed him that the data he was seeking was not available from the records, because, as appellant stated, the deed from the Ukiah Canning Company to the 15 individuals who executed the lease and option was not of record. This latter statement was manifestly not true, because admittedly said deed had been on record in Mendocino county since 1910, and appellant had knowledge of such fact; and therefore the trial court was justified in finding, as it did, that appellant made said statements for the purpose of delaying the exercise of said option beyond the period of time fixed therein; and that such was the effect thereof. The evidence further shows that within several days after appellant made such statement respondent succeeded in obtaining the necessary information from the records to consummate the sale, and thereupon, and on April 10, 1919, it tendered appellant his share of the purchase price, and demanded the execution of a deed; but, as stated, appellant refused to accept the money or to execute the deed upon the ground that the tender had not been made within the time fixed in the option.

The foregoing facts and circumstances are amply sufficient in our opinion to support the conclusion reached by the trial court that the delay in exercising said option was due to the acts of the appellant, and that therefore he was estopped from taking any legal advantage of such delay.

[3, 4] Appellant does not deny having accepted employment from respondent to examine the records, but claims that such employment related to the lease and option, which, as stated, was not of record, and not to the recordation of the deed or the contents thereof. The trial court found otherwise, however, upon conflicting evidence; and consequently its finding is controlling. Appellant also claims that, in any event, it is immaterial whether or not he misrepresented the state of the record as to the recordation of the deed, because, as he asserts, Cunningham knew prior to April 1, 1919, that appellant was one of the owners of record, and that consequently nothing he may have said with reference to the recordation of said deed could have prevented respondent from exercising its option as to appellant's interest prior to April 1, 1919, had it desired to do so. This argument might have some force, were it not for the fact that it totally ignores the matter of said employment. After accepting the same, appellant was doubtless acting toward respondent in the dual capacity of vendor and employee, and as such employee he was bound to act in good faith toward his employer. The object of such employment, as he knew, was to obtain certain information disclosed by the recordation of the Ukiah Canning Company deed, so that respondent in closing the transaction might prepare a deed to convey complete title; and it is evident that, if he had furnished this information to respondent within a reasonable time, as could have been done easily, respondent would have been in a position to exercise the option long prior to the date of its expiration. But, as shown, owing to appellant's conduct, first in offering the excuse that he had not yet been able to attend to the matter, and then in misrepresenting the fact as to the recordation of the Ukiah Canning Company deed, the date fixed for the exercise of the option, which as stated was then unknown to respondent, was allowed to expire. Clearly, under such circumstances, the trial court was warranted in holding that appellant was not in a position to complain of the delay.

The judgment is affirmed.

YORK, J. The appellants state that the grounds of appeal are that the evidence totally fails to support the findings of fact and judgment, and particularly findings Nos. 3 and 9, and that the decision of the trial court is against law.

There was in the record sufficient evidence to support the findings made by the trial court, especially those findings which declare that at the time of execution of the will, decedent was not mentally capable of making a will. It is true there was a sharp conflict in the evidence; nevertheless, there was evidence to support said findings.

The findings were sufficient to support the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; S. L. Strother, Judge.

Action for labor furnished and money advanced, brought by K. Kurokawa and another against Aram Saroyan and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Conley, Conley & Conley, of Fresno, for appellants.

M. F. McCormick and Irvine P. Aten, both of Fresno, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The above action arose out of certain farming operations carried on by the defendants in Fresno county in connection with which the plaintiffs were employed. The complaint by separate causes of action alleged claims for labor furnished and moneys advanced to the defendants, with a further claim for money had and received to the use of the plaintiffs. Defendants alleged in their answer among other defenses payments on account together with several counterclaims against the plaintiffs. The trial court—a trial by jury having been waived—found that the balance of plaintiffs' claims unpaid amounted with interest to $7,862.90, from which should be deducted the sum of $882.25, found to be due the defendants on their counterclaims, and entered judgment against the latter for $7,040.65.

Defendants appeal from the judgment, and contend that the trial court erroneously admitted certain testimony over objection, that its conclusion with respect to plaintiffs' first and second causes of action and to several items of the counterclaims are unsupported, and that the findings are conflicting.

It was alleged in the first cause of action, and the court found, that plaintiffs were employed to plow, cultivate, and irrigate land owned by defendants aggregating 250 acres, to prune and hoe the trees and vines thereon and to sulphur the vines; that the work was to be done during the season of 1925, was to continue to the date when the picking of the crops thereon commenced, namely, to July 22, 1925, and that the defendants agreed to pay therefor the sum of $6,000; that plaintiffs further agreed to furnish all necessary labor for picking and harvesting the crops produced thereon during the season, and also to harvest other crops of grapes which the defendants purchased during that year; and that the latter agreed to pay 40 cents per hour for labor furnished under the last-mentioned agreement, the total amount furnished thereunder by the plaintiffs, as found by the trial court, being 14,193¾ hours.

It was alleged, as a second cause of action, and the court found, that, during the time that the contract set forth in the first cause of action was being performed, plaintiffs, at the request of defendants, furnished the labor for additional work, which consisted of leveling, preparing, and planting 11 acres of land to Alicanti grapes, 3 acres to strawberries, farming and caring for the same, and picking and delivering portions of the crops thereon, and also in hauling tools and performing work in and about the packing house of defendants, and that plaintiffs completed the latter contract on July 22, 1925, and furnished pursuant thereto 5,277 hours of labor, for which the defendants agreed to pay 35 cents per hour.

The defendants contended that all farming work on the land described in the first cause of action, including the harvesting and marketing of the strawberries mentioned in the second cause of action during the whole season of 1925, was under their agreement with plaintiffs to be done for $6,000; it being further agreed that the defendants should pay to the plaintiffs the reasonable value of all services rendered in harvesting such crops other than the strawberry crop as might be produced thereon.

The plaintiffs upon demand served and filed a bill of particulars purporting to state the items of their claims for labor furnished, from which it appears that a portion of the services for which recovery is sought under their first cause of action, namely, 5,734½ hours, was not rendered in connection with the harvesting of the crops described therein, but was rendered between July 17, 1925, and about November 27, 1925, in irrigating and cultivating certain Mission and Thompson grapes, picking oranges, doing general ranch and packing house labor, and in the operation of two automobile trucks for defendants. Defendants therefore contend that neither the allegations of the first cause of action, nor the findings which, with respect to the character of the work done, follow these allegations, are supported by the evidence.

The complaint, however, as stated above, alleged a number of hours claimed under this cause of action, the same number being shown by the bill of particulars, which also showed the character of the work done. In addition, the plaintiffs testified without objection or contradiction in support of the facts shown by the bill of particulars, and that this labor was performed for the agreed price of 40 cents per hour.

[1, 2] A bill of particulars is to be regarded as an amplification of the complaint, and for the purpose of determining the plaintiffs' right of recovery or the admissibility of evidence in support of the claim is to be considered as incorporated into the complaint as originally filed (Millet v. Bradbury, 109 Cal. 170, 41 P. 865; Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 263, 228 P. 25; Ames v. Bell, 5 Cal. App. 1, 89 P. 619; Gage v. Billing, 12 Cal. App. 688, 108 P. 664); and, where it appears from the record that the case was tried upon the theory that the pleadings were sufficient to raise certain issues, and no objection was made in the court below to the introduction of evidence upon those issues, the point that the findings are not within the issues presented by the pleadings cannot be raised for the first time on appeal (Moore v. Campbell, 72 Cal. 251, 13 P. 689; Sprigg v. Barber, 122 Cal. 573, 55 P. 419; Silvers v. Grossman, 183 Cal. 696, 702, 192 P. 534).

[3] The trial court having found, according to the allegations of the complaint and the bill of particulars, the number of hours of labor furnished, and this finding being supported by the evidence, which also showed without conflict that the character of the work done was as stated in the bill of particulars, it only remained for the court to make findings accordingly. While in the above respect there was a failure to do so, the appellate court is authorized to make findings contrary or in addition to those made by trial court (Const. art. 6, § 4¾; section 956a, Code Civ. Proc. [added by St. 1927, p. 583]; Kirk v. Culley, 202 Cal. 501, 261 P. 994), and the present is a case for the exercise of the power.

[4] Appellants also claim that the items of work alleged under the second cause of action to have been done for the defendants were but duplications of the items shown by the bill of particulars for which compensation was claimed and allowed under the first cause of action.

While certain work was similar in character, according to the bill of particulars and the evidence, the services under the second cause of action were fully rendered before those alleged in the first cause of action commenced.

The evidence fully supports the conclusion of the trial court as to the number of hours of labor furnished by plaintiffs, as it does likewise the finding against the contention of the defendants that more labor was to be rendered for the $6,000 than that alleged and testified to by the plaintiffs. The finding which is contended by defendants to be conflicting on its face and with others was based upon certain allegations in their answer to plaintiffs' first cause of action. As stated, defendants claimed by their answer that the sum last mentioned above covered all the farming work on the land described in that cause of action for the season of 1925, including the harvesting and marketing of the crop of strawberries; the finding in effect being that none of the work other than as alleged by plaintiffs was included within the terms of the contract price of $6,000, as alleged by defendants. When read in connection with the pleadings, no conflict on the face of the finding nor with the other findings, as claimed by defendants, appears.

[5, 6] We find no merit in the further contention that the findings against defendants on certain of their counterclaims are without support, as an examination of the record shows either a conflict in the testimony or circumstances tending to contradict the testimony of the defendants in those respects, where the conclusions of the court were adverse to their claims.

Three witnesses for the plaintiffs were permitted over objection to testify in rebuttal as to the reasonable cost of performing the work described in the first cause of action, which defendants claimed was covered by the contract price. This testimony was introduced for the purpose of showing that this amount was the reasonable value of the work contracted to be done to July 22, 1925, and to show the improbability of the defendants' claim that the agreement was that this amount should be compensation for all farming operations during that year. Defendants claim that no proper foundation for the testimony was laid; that it did not take into consideration the exact nature and quality of the work to be done or the location and character of their property.

One of the witnesses was an experienced vineyardist, engaged in farming land in the vicinity, and who was familiar with that owned bv defendants. Another for several years immediately preceding the trial had been the secretary of an organization of fruit growers in the San Joaquin Valley, known as the Valley Fruit Growers' Association, and whose duty it was to investigate and compile the costs of the various farming operations in connection with vineyards, and advise vineyardists in these respects; this information being gained among other sources from interviews with vineyardists and at meetings of the latter held at the various farm centers. A third was a Japanese, engaged in the growing of strawberries in Fresno county, who testified as to the cost per acre of planting and growing the same on lands similar in kind to that owned by defendants. This testimony was competent and relevant for the purpose offered and was properly admitted. Ellis v. Woodburn, 89 Cal. 129, 132, 26 P. 963; Whitton v. Sullivan, 96 Cal. 480, 482, 31 P. 1115; People v. Crane, 34 Cal. App. 760, 168 P. 1055; Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 234; 13 Corp. Jur. p. 744, Contracts, § 975.

[7] Further it is claimed that the court, in arriving at its conclusions, took into consideration facts within its knowledge as an individual and which were not shown by the evidence adduced at the trial. This suggestion is wholly unwarranted by the record. During the course of the trial, the court, referring to a statement by defendant Bagdasarian, who went under examination as a witness, to the effect that plaintiffs were receiving commissions from their workmen, made the following remark: "The court has got a pretty good knowledge of those things, how those things are managed—not as a court but as an individual." Following the remark, the attorneys for the plaintiff said, "Well, we are willing to stipulate that the court will draw on his personal experience to the full extent." No such stipulation was made, nor was the matter again referred to by the court or by counsel, and nothing appears which supports defendants' claim.

[8] Lastly, it is urged that the conclusion of the trial court that the obligation of the plaintiffs to furnish labor under the first contract was to continue only to July 22, 1925, the date when they commenced to pick the first crop which matured on defendants' ranch, is erroneous; the defendants contending in this regard that by the agreement that such obligation should continue from the time of the commencement of the picking of the crops thereon the parties meant that all labor necessary for the farming of the premises should be furnished for the lump sum mentioned up to the date when the picking of the last crop which matured thereon should begin.

The contract was oral; and, in view of the facts shown, the construction placed thereon by the trial court was reasonable and consistent with the true intent of the parties. Under such circumstances its conclusion will not be disturbed. Smyth v. Tennison, 24 Cal. App. 519, 141 P. 1059; Slama Tire Protector Co. v. Ritchie, 31 Cal. App. 555, 161 P. 25; Manley v. Pacific Mill & T. Co., 79 Cal. App. 641, 250 P. 710.

After an examination of the entire record including the evidence, we are satisfied that the conclusions of the trial court are fully sustained, and that no error is shown which would justify a reversal of the judgment. The court therefore makes the following findings in lieu of paragraphs 2, 4, and 5 of the findings made by the trial court under the first cause of action in plaintiffs' amended complaint, to wit:

"2. At the same time and as a part of said agreement plaintiffs agreed to do all the necessary work for the picking and harvesting of crops to be produced upon said premises during the season of 1925, and to harvest other crops of grapes that defendants intended to and should purchase during said season; that plaintiffs further agreed to perform and did perform between July 17 and November 27, 1925, for defendants at their request other work in picking oranges, irrigating and cultivating the same, irrigating and hoeing strawberries, cultivating and irrigating Mission and Thompson grapes and pomegranates, general ranch work on land owned by defendants and known as the new ranch, work in and about defendants' packing houses, together with services in hauling, by means of two automobile trucks owned by the latter; that the harvesting and other work mentioned in this paragraph was done under the supervision of defendants as had been agreed; that it was agreed that defendants should pay the rate of wages to be agreed upon at the time the above work commenced; that the payment of said wages should be made from time to time as demanded by plaintiffs, and should be fully paid upon completion of said work; and it was further agreed that plaintiffs should employ, hire and furnish all of the necessary labor for the carrying on of said operations."

"That in addition to the foregoing work the plaintiffs agreed to cure and did cure about twenty-five tons of raisins for defendants at the agreed price of ten dollars per ton, and about seven tons of figs at the agreed price of twelve dollars per ton."

"4. That on or about the 29th day of June, 1925, and before the commencement of the work described in paragraph 2 of these findings plaintiffs and defendants agreed that the price per hour for all labor furnished therefor by the plaintiffs should be forty cents per hour; that on the 22d day of July, 1925, plaintiffs commenced the harvesting of the crops upon the land described in paragraph 1 of these findings and completed the same; that they furnished for that purpose 8,459¼ hours of labor; that in addition thereto plaintiffs between July 17, 1925, and November 27, 1925, performed the work described in paragraph 2 of these findings as other work, and in so doing furnished 5,734½ hours of labor; that all of said work was completed prior to November 27, 1925, and that the total sum agreed to be paid therefor was the sum of $5,677.50."

"5. That the defendants paid on account of the contract for the farming of said lands prior to the time of the commencement of the harvesting of said crops the sum of $5,650.00 and no more, and that there remains now due and unpaid as a balance on said contract price the sum of $350.00, with interest thereon from the 27th day of November, 1925, at the rate of seven per cent.: that the defendants have paid on account of labor performed in the harvesting of said crops and other work furnished as aforesaid by the plaintiffs $3,838.60, and that there remains now due, owing and unpaid on account thereof the sum of $1,838.90, together with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum from the 27th day of November, 1925; that by reason of the harvesting and curing of the said twenty-five tons of raisins at the agreed price of ten dollars per ton there became due from the defendants to the plaintiffs the sum of $250.00, and that by reason of the harvesting and curing of seven tons of figs at the agreed price of twelve dollars per ton there became due and owing to the plaintiffs the sum of $84.00, and that all of said work was completed on or before the 27th day of November, 1925, and said sums have not been paid, and that there remains now due, owing and unpaid on account thereof the sum of $334.00 with interest thereon at seven per cent. from the said 27th day of November, 1925."

The judgment is affirmed.

WORKS, P. J. A petition for a rehearing of this matter was filed for the consideration of this court and it was in due time denied. 271 P. 356. Thereafter a petition for hearing was presented to the Supreme Court and it has been granted. The petition filed with the latter court is much more full than the one presented to us. In addition to the petition itself, a comprehensive brief has been filed in support of it by friends of the court. The briefs which preceded our main opinion in the proceeding were meager, although doubtless containing all that counsel thought was necessary to a presentation of the case, in view of the strong expressions contained in California decisions, and the greater part of the opinion is the result of a research conducted by ourselves. The case has now been fully argued for the first time, in the petition and brief upon which the Supreme Court has acted in granting a hearing.

[1] Our faith in the correctness of the views expressed in our main opinion has been strengthened by a perusal of the petition and brief which lie in the Supreme Court files, but points are presented in them which make it advisable for us to amplify and elucidate some of the views stated in the opinion. Under the language of the Supreme Court in Houston v. Williams, 13 Cal. 24, 73 Am. Dec. 565, a notable declaration of the control which a court may exercise over its own opinions until they are officially published, we think it proper to present that amplification and elucidation in the form of a supplemental opinion. In the case cited, Justice Field, after drawing a distinction between an opinion proper and the judgment which is pronounced at its end, said that an opinion "is the property of the judges, subject to their revision, correction, and modification, in any particular deemed advisable, until, with the approbation of the writer, it is transcribed in the records"; evidently having in mind its "transcription" in the official reports. We cannot conceive that this right to revise, correct, and modify is lost to a District Court of Appeal because of the transfer of a cause to the Supreme Court, provided that the exercise of the right does not presume to alter, but is resorted to for the purpose of upholding, the judgment pronounced by the court.

We should perhaps say a little more as to the reasons which prompt us to the unusual but wholly proper procedure to which we resort. The petitioner in this proceeding has no particular interest in the questions presented by the petition for hearing and the brief. Indeed, if he can be said to have an interest in them at all, that interest probably lies with that of his formal opponents in the proceeding, for he himself asked the Supreme Court for a hearing, but upon grounds different from those presented by the other petition and by the brief filed in its support. Consequently, no written argument has been offered to the Supreme Court in opposition to the latter petition and to the brief. The matter is soon to come on for oral hearing before the higher tribunal, and it is greatly to be feared that the argument produced upon that occasion, and touching the important questions discussed in our main opinion, will be wholly unilateral. The able counsel who have contended for a hearing of these questions in the Supreme Court will doubtless then stand unopposed. It is these reflections which have impelled us to the preparation of this supplement. We have tried to free ourselves as completely as possible from that pride of opinion which in some degree will always be associated with literary authorship. We have endeavored to purge ourselves of all desire merely to combat the rather fervid assault which has been made upon our main opinion, to enter a plea of self-justification, to defend unduly an utterance which under ordinary circumstances would be left to shift for itself.

The situation is not an ordinary one. The questions to be discussed at the oral argument are of the utmost importance to the bench and bar of the state. We conceive the arguments advanced in the petition and brief to be unsound and dangerous. We think, no one else being appointed to the task, that we should expose, if we can, the fallacies which are advanced in opposition to our views. Our sole desire is that these important questions be decided correctly, and we dedicate this opinion to that desire.

It is said in the petition for hearing addressed to the Supreme Court by respondent Bar Association:

"The respective functions of the courts and of the Legislature are these:

"(1) An attorney does not hold an office or public trust, in the constitutional sense of that term, but is an officer of the court, exercising a privilege or franchise.

"(2) As attorneys are officials of the court, the power to admit applicants to practice law is judicial, and not legislative, and is invested in the courts only.

"(3) Notwithstanding the jurisdiction of the courts, the Legislature may, in the exercise of its police power, prescribe reasonable rules and regulations for admission to the bar, to which the courts will and must conform.

"(4) But the Legislature may not impose unreasonable rules, or deprive the courts of their inherent power to prescribe other rules and conditions of admission to practice."

Authorities are cited in support of the propositions stated in each of these paragraphs, to which we shall refer hereafter by the numbers given them by petitioner. In dealing with them we shall cover, so far as is necessary, the ground taken in the brief filed by friends of the court in aid of the petition.

[2, 3] As to the correctness of the propositions stated in paragraph (1) there can be no question. Paragraph (2) is also correct, but when its contents are considered in connection with the matters stated in paragraphs (3) and (4) it becomes patent that the grounds upon which the petition for hearing is based are not tenable. Paragraph (2) asserts that the power to admit applicants for admission to the bar is judicial, and is invested in the courts only. Counsel cannot mean by this statement that the mere perfunctory power to make orders admitting to the bar, and nothing more, is vested in the courts. If the Legislature may occupy the entire remaining field affecting admissions, that omnipotent body may take from the courts the power to make orders. If the courts cannot consider, weigh, deliberate, but must make such orders as the Legislature requires, the asserted power to make them is empty. It is no power. As asserted in our main opinion, the courts in making such orders would be but the agents of the Legislature, and the principal could terminate the agency, thereafter lodging it elsewhere, or itself exercising the power to make them. There must be some power in the courts beyond the mere power to make orders.

The only question is: Where is the line to be drawn? That counsel cannot intend paragraph (2) to stand with the limitation upon it which we have imagined is evident from an inspection of the single case which they cite in support of it. Ex parte Garland, 4 Wall. 333, 18 L. Ed. 366. The court there said: "[Attorneys] are officers of the court, admitted as such by its order, upon evidence of their possessing sufficient legal learning and fair private character. It has been the general practice in this country to obtain this evidence by an examination of the parties. * * * The order of admission is the judgment of the court that the parties possess the requisite qualifications. * * * Their admission * * * is not the exercise of a mere ministerial power. It is the exercise of judicial power."

[4] So much for paragraph (2) standing alone. Let us now proceed to consider it and paragraphs (3) and (4) together. Paragraph (3) is to the effect that, despite the jurisdiction of the courts which is mentioned in paragraph (2), the Legislature, in the exercise of the police power, may prescribe reasonable rules and regulations for admission to the bar, to which the courts must conform. This statement, we think, is erroneous. Several cases are cited in support of it, three of which are decisions of the Supreme Court of the state. The first two of these, Cohen v. Wright, 22 Cal. 293, and Ex parte Yale, 24 Cal. 241, 85 Am. Dec. 62, concede to the Legislature in the most positive terms—whether justly or unjustly it is not permitted to this court to inquire—the power to pass laws designed to prevent improper persons, traitors to the general government, from practicing law. To that doctrine the courts of California are at present committed, as we pointed out in our main opinion. The third case cited, In re Galusha, 184 Cal. 697, 195 P. 406, while quoting from Ex parte Yale, supra, decides only that a member of the legal profession may be made subject to the payment of an occupational tax provided for by a city ordinance.

It is true that there are decided cases which, in general terms, state a rule to the effect that the Legislature, under the police power, may pass reasonable laws regulating the matter of admissions to the bar. The reason for the existence of this rule has not been set down. The courts have been content to state that it is, not why or how it is. The broad question to be determined in this proceeding is whether the doctrine of Cohen v. Wright, supra, and Ex parte Yale, supra, is to be so extended as to allow to the Legislature sole and exclusive power over admissions and readmissions or reinstatements; for, while the proceeding is one for a reinstatement only, the power of the Legislature over admissions, if it enjoys such a power, necessarily must be as plenary as its power over reinstatements. This question of legislative power we endeavored to plumb to its depths in the opinion to which this is a supplement. Our endeavor was not successful, as it now appears, at least in so far as the question of the assumed rights of the Legislature under the police power are concerned. These rights are insisted upon, not only in the petition for hearing addressed to the Supreme Court, but in the brief filed in support of it.

[5, 6] Petitioner's paragraph (4), quoted above, is stated in a manner which we think was not intended. We shall assume that counsel meant to say that the Legislature may not impose unreasonable rules, and that the courts, in the exercise of an inherent power, may prescribe rules and conditions to operate over a field not already occupied, or perhaps afterward to be occupied, by legislative enactment. Counsel thus assent to a rule which the courts, in a practically universal concord, have settled at least in the terms in which counsel have stated it. The rule as thus stated cannot, under the authorities, be denied. We followed in our main opinion those courts which have gone further, and which have held that this inherent power is exclusive, although those cases make the exception that the Legislature may pass laws denying admission to the bar, or the right to continue in practice, to unworthy persons. It appears to us that in stating the contents of paragraph (4) counsel have conceded the ground we then took and to which we now adhere. We shall here attempt to show that the inherent power of the courts over admissions is derived from the Constitution, and is for that reason exclusive of the power of the Legislature, under the police power and in the thin disguise of "regulation," to invade the field. "A power [in a court] which the Legislature does not give, it cannot take away. If power, distinguished from jurisdiction, exists independently of legislation, it will continue to exist notwithstanding legislation." Hale v. State, 55 Ohio St. 210, 45 N. E. 199, 36 L. R. A. 254, 60 Am. St. Rep. 691. The court, in employing the phrase "distinguished from jurisdiction," apparently had in mind that jurisdiction, strictly so termed, was conferred by the Legislature.

[7, 8] We understand, both from the petition for hearing and from the accompanying brief, that the functions here claimed for the Legislature under the police power are regulatory only. Moreover, it seems that it is conceded in both documents that the power is to "regulate" the performance of a constitutional duty imposed upon the courts; and we call this a concession, for the reason that, if the attitude of counsel is correctly appraised by us, the whole ground upon which they attempt to stand is cut from under them by a process of erosion of which they are the creators. If, however, the concession is not made that the ordering by courts of rules governing admissions is the exercise of a constitutional power, then we are brought to the necessity of determining whether the making of those rules is the exercise of such a power.

Counsel for petitioner says, in effect, that the courts, in the discharge of an inherent function which they characterize as judicial, may adopt a full code of rules concerning admissions; the Legislature not having occupied the field. This power, called judicial, must be constitutional, for it exists because of those parts of the organic law which provide for the three departments of government and which erect the courts of the state as the instrumentalities through which the judicial branch is to operate. If the power does not come from the Constitution, where does it originate? It will not do to say that it is not constitutional, because it is inherent. What powers are inherent in courts find their residence in these forums because they are courts, of course; but it is obvious that they can possess no inherent powers prior to their existence, and they owe their existence to the Constitution. Their inherent powers are therefore derived from that paper. It is well known that the doctrine of implied powers applies to the judicial department. "Courts possess implied and resulting powers from general grants of jurisdiction." McNealy v. Gregory, 13 Fla. 417, 435. "Jurisdiction may be conferred upon a court by necessary implication as effectually as by express terms." Spence v. Fenchler, 107 Tex. 443, 457, 180 S. W. 597, 601. "It is well settled that courts of general jurisdiction possess inherent powers not created or conferred by legislative enactment." Hitt v. Carr, 77 Ind. App. 488, 501, 130 N. E. 1, 6. "A court has the inherent right to function and to function efficiently." People v. Brown, 238 Mich. 298, 212 N. W. 968.

It seems plain that the power in courts to provide for a bar is a resultant from the general provisions of the Constitution to which we have referred. The organic law makes no provision for a bar, and yet lawyers are indispensable to the discharge of the judicial function. They are officers of the courts. They are, in a body, an integral factor of the judicial department. It is therefore just to perceive in the constitutional provisions relating to the department a power in the courts, which stand at the head of the department, to provide for a bar. At any rate, the power certainly exists, and it is difficult to ascribe to it any other origin. In truth, it seems that it can possibly have no other origin.

It is perhaps not strange that counsel should contend that the Legislature, by means of the police power, may occupy this field of constitutional judicial power and totally exclude the courts from it, for some of the courts themselves have reached the same degrading conclusion, albeit without an examination of the principles involved in the question. The brief filed in support of the petition for hearing contains, however, statements which do violence to the attitude which counsel assume. It is said, for instance: "The Legislature has no power to prescribe regulations which substantially impair the discharge by a co-ordinate department of the government of the latter's constitutional functions." At another place: "Numerous as are the decisions holding that the Legislature may not, under the guise of regulation, substantially impair the discharge by a co-ordinate department of its constitutional functions, much more numerous are the decisions holding that the power of regulation still remains with the Legislature, and it is only if the regulations are unreasonable, either in the way of substantially impairing the discharge by a co-ordinate department of its functions or in some other way, that the regulations are invalid."

The idea that the courts may frame rules governing admissions to the bar is utterly inconsistent with the idea that the Legislature, under any circumstances, may do the same thing. It is futile to assert that the Legislature, under the police power, may make such rules either to fill a void left by a failure of the courts to make them or to supplant rules which the courts have made. Let us suppose an illustration which will serve further to develop this point. Let us imagine two states of the Union, which we will call state A and state B. We will suppose that the Supreme Court of state A adopts a complete code of rules governing admissions to the bar. The Legislature of state B passes a bill attempting to put into effect a set of rules in the exact language of those adopted by the court in state A. Can it possibly be said that the rules for state A were adopted in the exercise of a constitutional judicial function, while those framed for state B spring from an exercise of the police power? It cannot. The action of the Legislature of state B was not an attempt to regulate the constitutional functions of the judicial branch of the state government. It was neither more nor less than an attempt to exercise those functions themselves. The action was a usurpation of power, a plain invasion of the rights of one of the co-ordinate branches of government by one of the others. however benevolent the invasion was intended to be. It was, to employ the language above quoted from the brief filed in support of the petition, a clear violation of the principle that "the Legislature may not, under the guise of regulation, substantially impair the discharge by a coordinate department of its constitutional functions."

The national Constitution (article 2, § 2) provides that the President shall appoint the principal officers of the executive branch of the government "by and with the * * * consent of the Senate." Despite the concurrence allowed the upper house of Congress by this provision, the practice, since the government began to function in 1789, based upon an extended debate in Congress, has been to allow the Chief Executive the sole power of removal of those officers. It has never been questioned that the power of removal would rest in the President, if appointments were not required by the Constitution to be concurred in by the Senate. Before the new government was installed, this question had been presented to the people of the states in the Federalist. The power of removal was there said to be vested in the President and Senate together, but solely on the ground that both participated in appointments. The paper in which the discussion is contained (No. 77) was written by Alexander Hamilton and these are its opening sentences: "It has been mentioned as one of the advantages to be expected from the co-operation of the Senate in the business of appointments that it would contribute to the stability of the administration. The consent of that body would be necessary to displace as well as to appoint."

This view was departed from at the first session of the First Congress. The House of Representatives had under consideration a proposal for the creation of a Department of Foreign Affairs, and during the debate Smith, of South Carolina, advanced the view, a little different from that of Hamilton, that the head of such a department could be removed only by impeachment. 5 Writings of James Madison, 361, note. Madison, who had been a collaborator with Hamilton in the preparation of the Federalist, took issue with Smith, and during the course of the debate said: "I think it absolutely necessary that the President should have the power of removing from office; it will make him, in a peculiar manner, responsible for their conduct, and subject him to impeachment himself, if he suffers them to perpetrate with impunity high crimes or misdemeanors against the United States, or neglects to superintend their conduct, so as to check their excesses. On the constitutionality of the declaration I have no manner of doubt." Id. 362. In the same speech Madison remarked further:

"It is said that it comports with the nature of things, that those who appoint should have the power of removal; but I cannot conceive that this sentiment is warranted by the Constitution; I believe it would be found very inconvenient in practice. It is one of the most prominent features of the Constitution, a principle that pervades the whole system, that there should be the highest possible degree of responsibility in all the executive officers thereof; anything, therefore, which tends to lessen this responsibility, is contrary to its spirit and intention, and, unless it is saddled upon us expressly by the letter of that work, I shall oppose the admission of it into any act of the Legislature. Now, if the heads of the executive departments are subjected to removal by the President alone, we have in him security for the good behavior of the officer. If he does not conform to the judgment of the President in doing the executive duties of his office, he can be displaced. This makes him responsible to the great executive power, and makes the President responsible to the public for the conduct of the person he has nominated and appointed to aid him in the administration of his department. But if the President shall join in a collusion with this officer, and continue a bad man in office, the case of impeachment will reach the culprit, and drag him forth to punishment. But if you take the other construction, and say he shall not be displaced, but by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, the President is no longer answerable for the conduct of the officer; all will depend upon the Senate. You here destroy a real responsibility, without obtaining even the shadow; for no gentleman will pretend to say the responsibility of the Senate can be of such a nature as to afford substantial security. But why, it may be asked, was the Senate joined with the President in appointing to office, if they have no responsibility? I answer, merely for the sake of advising, being supposed, from their nature, better acquainted with the character of the candidates than an individual; yet even here the President is held to the responsibility—he nominates, and, with their consent, appoints. No person can be forced upon him as an assistant by any other branch of the government." Id. 363.

A few days later Madison said again: "It is evidently the intention of the Constitution that the first magistrate should be responsible for the executive department; so far, therefore, as we do not make the officers who are to aid him in the duties of that department responsible to him, he is not responsible to his country. Again, is there no danger that an officer, when he is appointed by the concurrence of the Senate, and his friends in that body, may choose rather to risk his establishment on the favor of that branch, than rest it upon the discharge of his duties to the satisfaction of the executive branch, which is constitutionally authorized to inspect and control his conduct? And if it should happen that the officers connect themselves with the Senate, they may mutually support each other, and for want of efficacy reduce the power of the President to a mere vapor; in which case his responsibility would be annihilated, and the expectation of it unjust. The high executive officers, joined in cabal with the Senate, would lay the foundation of discord, and end in an assumption of the executive power, only to be removed by a revolution in the government. I believe no principle is more clearly laid down in the Constitution than that of responsibility." Id. 392.

Upon this same occasion Madison said further: "The Constitution affirms that the executive power shall be vested in the President. Are there exceptions to this proposition? Yes; there are. The Constitution says that, in appointing to office, the Senate shall be associated with the President, unless in the case of inferior officers, when the law shall otherwise direct. Have we a right to extend this exception? I believe not. If the Constitution has invested all executive power in the President, I venture to assert that the Legislature has no right to diminish or modify his executive authority. The question now resolves itself into this, Is the power of displacing an executive power? I conceive that if any power whatsoever is in its nature executive, it is the power of appointing, overseeing, and controlling those who execute the laws. If the Constitution had not qualified the power of the President in appointing to office, by associating the Senate with him in that business, would it not be clear that he would have the right, by virtue of his executive power, to make such appointment? Should we be authorized, in defiance of that clause in the Constitution, 'The executive power shall be vested in a President,' to unite the Senate with the President in the appointment to office? I conceive not. If it is admitted that we should not be authorized to do this, I think it may be disputed whether we have a right to associate them in removing persons from office, the one power being as much of an executive nature as the other; and the first only is authorized by being excepted out of the general rule established by the Constitution, in these words, 'The executive power shall be vested in the President.'" Id. 394.

In 1850 Senator Bradbury, of Maine, offered a resolution calling upon the President to furnish to the Senate certain information relating to removals from office which he had enforced. Daniel Webster opposed the resolution, on the ground that such matters were of no concern to the Senate. He thus addressed himself to the theory that the power of removal rested solely in the President: "I have looked recently, though not for the first time, into the debates which took place in Congress when that construction of the Constitution was fixed at its first session. You know, sir, that the Senate of the United States, at that time and for several years afterwards, sat with closed doors. There were no debates of the Senate published up to the year 1794, I think. But this question was debated in the House of Representatives at great length. The speeches made there were reported and published. The idea that the President possessed a removing power, without the consent of the Senate, seems to have been chiefly supported by a very able speech from Mr. Madison, whose opinions, as one engaged in framing the Constitution, upon constitutional subjects, were regarded, and have ever been regarded, as very high authority. His judgment appears to have prevailed with the House of Representatives on that occasion. I have understood that the vote affirming that power in the President passed the Senate by the casting vote of the then Vice President, Mr. Adams." 14 Writings and Speeches of Daniel Webster, 360.

During the same speech Webster said, again: "But, sir, since the practice has become a settled practice, since every administration has indulged in it, and since it must now be considered, as the legal construction of the Constitution, that it is one of the powers of the President to remove incumbents from offices which they hold, it follows, as a necessary and as an inevitable consequence, that this power, thus legally vested in the President, must be exercised by him as independently of our control as any other power that is to be exercised by him under the Constitution. If he holds the power, he holds it to be exercised at his own control and discretion. And I see no ground upon which we can call upon him to give us reasons for the manner in which he exercises that power, any more than we can call upon him to give reasons for the manner in which he exercises any other power under the Constitution; or, on the other hand, that we have no more right to call upon him to account to us for the manner in which he exercises a power solely confided to him, than he has to call upon us to give him reasons for the manner in which we exercise a power solely confided to our hands. And I think, therefore, it would be against what is the settled construction of the Constitution, and the practice of the government, for us to make any such requirement of the President." Id. 361.

And later in the speech Webster employed this very striking language concerning the inviolability of the powers of each of the three departments of government: "The powers of the departments are not all mixed up in a jumble. They are separate, and are made separate by the Constitution, and have hitherto been kept separate by the practice of the government. I hope they will continue to be kept separate, for then there is a just responsibility. If every department acts within its own power, it takes the responsibility belonging to its power. But if the powers of two or more departments are mixed up irregularly and jumbled together, there is no just responsibility upon anybody. Every consideration therefore of propriety, as well as the written text of the Constitution, requires that the powers assigned to one department of the government shall not be interfered with or intermeddled with by another." Id. 362.

Notwithstanding the long-settled practice concerning removals from office and the excellent reasons for it, the Congress willfully violated the established construction of the Constitution during the administration of President Andrew Johnson. The national Legislature passed what is known to history as the Tenure of Office Bill (14 Stat. 430), as a part of the frenzied struggle between it and the President over the question of reconstruction. The act contained the following provisions: "That every person holding any civil office to which he has been appointed by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and every person who shall hereafter be appointed to any such office, and shall become duly qualified to act therein, is and shall be entitled to hold such office until a successor shall have been * * * appointed" by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and duly qualified; and "that the Secretaries of State, of the Treasury, of War, of the Navy, and of the Interior, the Postmaster General, and the Attorney General shall hold their offices respectively for and during the term of the President by whom they may have been appointed and for one month thereafter, subject to removal by and with the advice and consent of the Senate." 6 Messages and Papers of the Presidents, 492.

The measure went to the President, but was promptly returned without his approval. The veto message which accompanied it was with little doubt prepared by the masterly hand of William H. Seward (2 Bancroft, Life of Seward, 465), who was then Secretary of State, and contained a convincing argument against the constitutionality of the bill (6 Messages, 492), based, however, upon the construction which had been placed upon the organic law by the First Congress and upon the acquiescence in it during a period of more than three-quarters of a century. The bill was passed over the veto, the President a little later removed Edwin M. Stanton as Secretary of War without the consent of the Senate, articles of impeachment were presented against him, he was tried by the Senate and was acquitted by only a narrow vote. The question of the constitutionality of the Tenure of Office Bill was never presented to the courts, nor was the general question upon which it trenched. 1 Kent, Comm. p. 310.

[9] It cannot be denied that some reason operates against the construction placed upon the President's power of removal by the First Congress, but the fact that such a construction could be reached, in the face of the constitutional provision allowing the Senate to participate in appointments made by the President, is significant in a consideration of the present proceeding. The President's appointees are subordinate officers of the executive department, and he is responsible for their acts (1 Kent, Comm. p. 310), as Madison points out, and the First Congress saw in this circumstance, as we must see in reason, that it was imperative that he exercise control over them in all respects except the mere matter of their appointments. This latter power he could not exercise because of the direct mandate of the Constitution. Kent, joining with Madison, says at the place above cited that "the participation in that authority by the Senate was an exception to a general principle and ought to be taken strictly." This general principle is, of course, that each of the three departments of government should control the appointment, as well as the discipline and removal of its officers. A reading of Madison's remarks will demonstrate that the construction of the Constitution by the First Congress was based upon this principle and upon the view that the concurrence of the Senate in appointments was an exception to it. There can be no doubt, to our minds, that the principle applies as well to the judicial department as to the executive department.

The various speeches above quoted show the dangers incident to an attempt to divide the indivisible powers of a department of government. Webster, particularly, covers this special question. It is to be observed, too, how Madison, as well as Webster, dwells upon the question of responsibility as fixed in each of the departments by the Constitution. This point is of great moment here. Where is responsibility to be located if the Legislature, from time to time and in a greater or lesser degree, as its uncontrolled inclination may dictate, makes provision for admissions to the bar, leaving the courts to occupy so much of the field as it chooses not to cover?

[10] At several places in our main opinion we characterized the contention of respondent Bar Association as an attempt to dismember an indivisible power, and we said particularly: "All these matters—admissions, discipline, disbarments—are either wholly under legislative control or they are wholly under judicial control." The deeper the subject is probed, the more clearly does the justice of this conclusion become certain; and, as we said in our main opinion, the answer is that the power is judicial. If the courts exercise a constitutional function in making provision for a bar, how can the Legislature divest the power through the exercise of an assumed police power? It is too clear for words that the Legislature cannot, under the feeble guise of regulation, destroy a constitutional function of either of the other departments of government. If it could, one of the salient tenets of governmental science is scrapped. The time-honored principle that all government is naturally divided into three branches, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial, perceived by at least as early a thinker as Aristotle, and presented to the fathers of the national Constitution in the forceful phrase of Montesquieu, is relegated to the depths of the despotisms from which it was unearthed, and government itself becomes a reproach.

"When the legislative and executive powers are united in the same person, or the same body of magistrates, there can be no liberty, because apprehensions may arise, lest the same monarch or senate should enact tyrannical laws, to execute them in a tyrannical manner. Again, there is no liberty of the judiciary power if it be not separated from the legislative and executive. Were it joined with the legislative, the life and liberty of the subject would be exposed to arbitrary control; for the judge would be the legislator. Were it joined to the executive power, the judge might behave with violence and oppression. There would be an end of everything were the same man, or the same body, whether of nobles or of the people, to exercise these three powers—that of enacting laws, that of executing the public resolutions, and of trying the causes of individuals." Montesquieu, Esprit des Lois, book 2, c. 6.

We perceive no such dire consequences to result from the present proceeding; but, if the views expressed in the petition for hearing and in the brief were to prevail, we are on the broad highway to serious results. It can make no difference here if the courts of the land, in neglectful submission to the legislative will, imposed without sinister intent, as it has been in the various states, have heretofore slept upon a question important to the general welfare. It is well that in this state an opportunity has been given to stem the tide, which, if it is not curbed, will widen the breaches it has already made in the levees which protect the sacred domain of government.

The writers of the brief which accompanies the petition for hearing in the Supreme Court, in developing the theory that the Legislature, by means of the police power, may "regulate" the matter of admissions to the bar, point to the fact that the law-making bodies of the land have long been accustomed to "regulate" judicial procedure throughout the Union. It is quite pertinent to observe that such matters, either in whole or in part, were formerly in the control of the courts. We have no inclination to go deeply into this question, but we shall briefly notice the auspices under which were developed the principles of the law of evidence, touching only that particular item in the realm of court procedure. The rules of evidence were created, improved, and have reached their present state of excellence through an age-long devotion of the courts to the subject. This point is too well understood to require a lengthy exposition, but it is dealt with in a most instructive historical note in Jones' Blackstone, commencing at page 1969. It appears from this note, not only that the law of evidence was the outgrowth of the successive opinions of the courts, but that the subject was sometimes covered by rules of court. It was also thoroughly explored and elucidated by another factor of the judicial department, in the numerous text-books on evidence, prepared by members of the bar. And yet our Code of Civil Procedure contains what is assumed to be a complete statement of the rules of evidence. Thus the law upon this important subject passed, apparently, into the hands of the Legislatures of the various states, and the same situation applies to other branches of procedure.

If we return again to the general question of court procedure, laying aside the special matter of evidence, it is not to be forgotten that one of the forward-looking movements of the day is toward the ultimate regulation of procedure by rule of court. The judicial department is endeavoring again to come into its own. As an evidence of this movement, on the day on which these lines are written, a newspaper is laid upon our desks which acquaints us with the intelligence that, at the session of the Legislature which is to convene next month, the Judicial Council will endeavor to procure the introduction of a bill authorizing that body to adopt rules of court regulating judicial procedure, with a view to nullifying, by that means, the major portion of the Code of Civil Procedure and large parts of the Penal Code. We do not, of course, take this newspaper report as authorlative, but present it as indicating that the movement to which we have referred is afoot, and as illustrating what may happen under it.

If the courts, by a relaxation of that vigilance which is the price of liberty, have abdicated their dominance over the regulation of court procedure, there is no reason why they should relinquish the control which constitutionally they may exercise over their own officers. Upon that question the sentry is so far awake, and it would be deplorable if he should surrender to the joy of slumbering upon his beat.

I concur in everything that is said in the opinions of my associates which follow.

CRAIG, J. [11] I concur in the opinions of Presiding Justice WORKS and Justice THOMPSON. The question is vital, and its decision must be far-reaching. The right of the legislative branch of the government to invade the province of the judicial, whose authority in its own sphere the Constitution makes absolute, is in question. That such invasions of this realm in the past have not been disputed cannot bar the assertion of the authority of the judiciary over a matter clearly and solely within its power. It is quite probable that certain courts have been reticent to refuse recognition of statutes whose provisions were beneficent, even though it appeared that such acts were in reality beyond the power of the Legislature to enact. It is quite possible that this reticence has been partly due to reluctance to create friction with a sister branch of government, as well as a natural modesty on the part of the judiciary to assert its own authority in conflict with that of the Legislature.

But the question is one to be decided impersonally. The preservation of the complete separation of the functions of the legislative, judicial, and executive branches of government is too fundamental to the maintenance of the American democracy to allow its slightest infringement. It is, I think, worthy of serious consideration that the federal Constitution itself guarantees this form of government in each state, and to that end it is essential that such government shall have these functions independently and separately maintained. To my mind, even the public rights presumably protected by the exercise of the police power of the state might better suffer than have this governmental principle ignored, and a beginning made toward the ultimate complete subjugation of the judicial branch of government to the legislative. The maintenance of an independent judiciary is not merely a privilege permitted that department of the government; it is its imperative duty, perhaps the first and most important one, to guard that independence.

[12] I believe that the courts have the power by rule to regulate the entire subject of admission of attorneys to the bar, their discipline, and disbarment. This necessarily follows from the fact that the entire subject is admittedly incidental to the judiciary, and that the courts have entire supervision of such matters as a constitutional right which follows as incontrovertibly as does the right of the Legislature to enact laws from the mere creation of such a body by the Constitution.

Our courts have been slow, perhaps neglectful, in the exercise of their authority in this behalf. Their failure to act may even have invited the Legislature to take action amounting to an attempt to take over the performance of this judicial duty, but this fact, if it be one, cannot affect in the slightest degree the constitutional apportionment of the separate governmental functions. Nor is the duty of the courts to safeguard their independence any less clear and imperative because such action if taken now would be belated and perhaps might result in the criticism of certain former decisions not altogether well or fully considered.

I have said that the whole subject of the practice of the law by the legal profession is an incident to the judicial department of government. Not only is this true, but the services rendered by the members of the bar are essential to the successful functioning of courts of justice. Several instances are recorded in history where it has been attempted to abolish the legal profession, and to conduct courts without their aid; in every such case utter failure has resulted. In France the bar was formally abolished, but in a short time as a matter of necessity it was reinstated, and resumed its place in the governmental machinery.

[13] The courts should be free, and I believe that they are at liberty, regardless of any edict which the Legislature may enact, to receive such aid in the production of evidence and a proper consideration and presentation of the law as the exigencies of any litigation may demand. To subserve the ends of justice, it might be well that in some case the services of a member of the legal profession might not be available. The assistance of a layman, or of some one learned in the law, though not formally admitted in this jurisdiction, might be invaluable to the court. To my mind, any law attempting to limit such power would be void, as an attempted abridgment of the judicial powers inherent in the courts by reason of the fact that they are courts of justice.

In a number of the decisions which have approved the doctrine that statutory regulations of the practice of the law must be upheld by the courts, it has been reasoned that the power of the legislation in that regard is similar to that admittedly possessed to legislate concerning various trades and professions. Such observations are not in point.

They overlook the fact that the practice of medicine or dentistry, or of the trade of a barber, are in no way incident to the maintenance or functioning of the government. The practice of the law is more than a commercial pursuit. The rights of those who are permitted to practice law are secondary. The right of the public in the makeup of the personnel of the bar and its interest in their rectitude is primary. Superficially it might appear that therefore the matter is one for police regulation, but it must be remembered that the interests of the public may be safeguarded perhaps better through other channels than through the police power in the hands of the Legislature. It is worthy of reflection that the absolute authority of the courts over their own procedure and in their own jurisdiction is at least as potential in the protection of public interest as the police power lodged in the Legislature.

At all events, and beyond the possibility of cavil, the police power exercised by the Legislature is inferior to the Constitution and its provisions, and where, as in this instance, the Constitution allocates judicial prerogatives to the judicial department alone, such authority cannot possibly be lodged in the Legislature under the guise of police power.

THOMPSON, J. [14] I concur in all that has been said by Presiding Justice WORKS and Justice CRAIG. In view, however, of the extreme importance of the case to the cause of an independent judicial system and its protection against the gradual, although well-intended, encroachment of the Legislature, it seems meet that an effort be made, although the hope is probably vain, to add somewhat to the force of what has already been said. Counsel seem to fear that the state bar is in danger of not being permitted "to function properly and bring about the great good in the administration of justice which is confidently expected of it by the people of the state." (Italics ours.) What is the basis of this fear? They say it springs from the conclusion, reached in the former opinion, that admissions, discipline, and disbarments are wholly under judicial control. Is this a confession that the Legislature is the better able to judge of the qualifications, or misfeasance, or regeneration, of those who are to assist in administering justice, or to judge the conditions upon which it is proper to permit persons to aid the courts in dispensing justice, than is the judiciary itself? Since when has the judiciary become so impotent to judge the qualifications of its officers? What has recently occurred to qualify laymen, a majority of whom probably compose the Legislature, to correctly judge of the duties and responsibilities of members of our ancient and honorable profession?—something that was not conceded yesterday. Can it be possible that the present fear is akin to the desire manifested by some in the past few years for a recall of judicial decisions?

The questions are not beside the point. They are asked for the purpose of conveying to the mind a twofold idea: First, that the judicial system is composed, not only of courts, consisting of judges, clerks, and bailiffs, but also of each and every member of the bar, constituting the other officers of the courts, who are named and designated by them as worthy and able to assist, as counsel say, "in the administration of justice"; second, that the process of determining the qualifications of those and the conditions upon which they shall be admitted to practice, of passing upon the nature of unethical conduct which shall subject them to discipline, or the regeneration of character which warrants readmission is wholly and exclusively a judicial function. Every act performed requires a thorough understanding and appreciation of that branch of legal learning, knowledge of which, according to the court in Danforth v. Egan, 23 S. D. 43, 119 N. W. 1021, 139 Am. St. Rep. 1030, 20 Ann. Cas. 418, "has long been recognized as the most important qualification for one who is to be entrusted with the sacred duties of an attorney at law" and which is known to the profession as legal ethics. If it be said to this that the Legislature has the power to confer this judicial authority upon the state bar, the answer immediately suggests itself that the people have already vested their entire judicial power, through the Constitution, in courts already established.

[15] Let us view the matter from another standpoint. What is the purpose of requiring legal learning and good moral character as prerequisites to admission and their retention after admission as conditions to continued membership in the profession? In re Percy, 36 N. Y. 651. If the applicant fails to measure up to the standards of the time, in legal learning, instead of being an aid to the court and one of those indispensable cogs in the machinery, he is a hindrance and an obstruction to the administration of justice. If he fails to attain and preserve that high degree of moral character demanded of an attorney, he is no longer entitled to the confidence of the court, and the latter can repose no trust in his statements or activities. In short, "he is no longer an aid to the court." Fairfield County Bar v. Taylor, 60 Conn. 17, 22 A. 443, 13 L. R. A. 767. From this it follows, as the authorities have repeatedly announced, that the paramount duty of every lawyer is to assist the courts in the administration of justice.

The people, by their form of government and through the Constitution, have designated the courts as the instrumentalities through which justice shall be dispensed. The necessities of the situation have called to their assistance those possessed of the requisite ability and character. But the fact remains that the courts are primarily and solely responsible to the people for administering justice and for that reason have always exercised a supervisory and disciplinary power over their officers. If the vigilance has sometimes been relaxed, it is because the bench has been inclined to place great confidence and trust in the profession. That is no reason, however, why they should now shirk the responsibility placed upon their shoulders by the Constitution, nor is it a reason why any member of the bar should renounce his position as an officer of the courts and rise to protest against that supervision. Conceivably, we might have a somewhat different situation to deal with, if we had a branch of the profession which did not and was not permitted to appear before the courts, such, for instance, as the solicitors of England, the example of which probably gave birth to the provisions now involved. But we have no such branch, and no such problem to consider.

It is said by counsel that, though the enactment which purports to confer upon the state bar certain jurisdiction over the admission, discipline, and disbarment of lawyers is by the former opinion held to be stillborn, yet the opinion says the courts may treat those provisions as still existing, even in defiance of a possible legislative repeal. And they express astonishment at this result. Suppose a newspaper editor had suggested the identical provisions in question, or a member of our profession, and suppose the courts had been forcibly impressed with the merits of the proposed system and had put it into effect by rules adopted for that purpose; certainly no objection could be entertained provided always that it be considered that the courts have the authority to adopt such rules to regulate their judicial business. Nor would any one be astonished if they refused to set aside the rules if the original author should change his mind. And in such light must the various enactments of the Legislature be read which have been recognized from time to time by the courts as reasonable. They have been suggestions emanating from a co-ordinate branch of the government, entitled to consideration only because they did come from such a source, and not by reason of any authority to impose their legislative will respecting a judicial function upon the judiciary. Undoubtedly, if the courts had not thought the suggestions reasonable, as is indicated by all the authorities, the suggestions would have been ignored as of no force or vitality. The problem here presented is simple. It becomes confused only when it is proposed to split up the judicial duty, conceding a part to the judiciary and giving the rest to the Legislature. It becomes impossible of solution when an effort is made to divide an indivisible quantity. It becomes alarming when it is made manifest that under the stress of the modern practice of the law sight is lost of the position and first duty of a lawyer as an officer and aid of the court.

It is argued, in an effort to sustain the contention that the judicial functions may be divided, that the Legislature has authority by reason of the police power. There is a modern tendency to use this expression as a "catch-all." In addition to what has been said by Presiding Justice WORKS, however, upon the subject, I should like to call attention to an instance where, if the power may be invoked at all, there can be no question of its proper application. In fact, the Legislature has spoken upon the subject in subdivision 5 of section 282 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which reads that it is the duty of an attorney "to maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself, to preserve the secrets of his client."

It has been argued with great force by an eminent member of the profession that counsel should be compelled to disclose all facts communicated to them in secret which might require a verdict of guilty to be returned; this on the theory that the guilty should not be allowed to escape. See Rationale of Judicial Evidence by Jeremy Bentham (Bentham's Works, John Bowring's Ed., vol. 7, p. 473); excerpt also found in Costigan's Cases on Legal Ethics, p. 82. As a footnote to the excerpt in Costigan's Cases just mentioned, and on page 84, we read the answer of Chief Justice Taft as follows: "I have recently heard an arraignment of our present judicial system in the trial of causes by a prominent, able and experienced member of the Boston bar. * * * He feels that the procedure now in vogue authorizes and in fact requires counsel to withhold facts from the court which would help the cause of justice, if they were brought out by his own statement. To remedy this he suggests that all counsel should be compelled to disclose any facts communicated to them by their clients. * * * To require counsel to disclose the confidential communications of his client to the very court and jury which are to pass on the issue which he is making would end forever the possibility of any useful relation between lawyer and client. It is essential for the proper presentation of the client's cause that he should be able to talk freely with his counsel without fear of disclosure." (Italics ours.)

Here is a debatable question of public policy and public welfare. If it be a debatable question, and the Legislature has the right to speak by reason of its possession of police power, and does so speak, then it is the duty of the court to sustain the enactment as a proper exercise of that power. Suppose the Legislature should say, in the place of the subdivision which we have already quoted, that it is the duty of lawyers to communicate to the court and jury all that has been conveyed to them by their clients, thereby destroying the useful relation of attorney and client, and forever putting an end to that beneficent repository of the troubles and tribulations of the layman, and which operates as the cleansing receptacle to divide the chaff from the wheat for the machinery of justice, would the courts be powerless? Must they sit idly by and see the profession deprived of their usefulness, and they themselves deprived of the services of their officers, because the Legislature in the exercise of the "police power" has so decreed? We think it too apparent for argument that the courts are to determine the duty of their officers and the standards of conduct by which their usefulness to the courts and the cause of justice shall be preserved.

ISSENHUTH v. ROBERT MARSH & CO., Inc. (Civ. 3635.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1928.

1. Mines and minerals 🔑74—Contract for purchase of interest in oil lease guaranteeing development held complete and unaffected by subsequent assignment of interest not mentioning guaranty authorizing rescission on breach of guaranty.

Where plaintiff and defendant executed instrument conveying interest in oil lease, reciting receipt of buying order for interest in oil lease, consideration therefor, and guaranty of development of properties, contract was complete, and subsequent execution of assignment of lease pursuant to original agreement did not deprive plaintiff of rights under original contract merely because assignment did not refer to guaranty, and hence breach of guaranty authorized plaintiff to rescind entire transaction.

2. Mines and minerals 🔑74—Contract for transfer of interest in oil lease held not severable because consideration was payable in installments.

Contract for transfer of interest in oil lease reciting total consideration held not rendered severable by fact that consideration was payable in two installments.

3. Mines and minerals 🔑74—Defendant guaranteeing development of oil properties under contract naming contractors held properly found to have guaranteed development by such contractors.

Where contract for transfer of interest in oil lease recited name of operating company and drilling contractor and that defendant guaranteed development of properties, finding that guaranty covered development by drilling contractor and operating company, assignors of defendant, was justified.

4. Appeal and error 🔑931(1)—Appellate court must construe finding to uphold rather than defeat judgment.

District Court of Appeal is under duty to construe finding in manner to uphold rather than to defeat judgment.

5. Mines and minerals 🔑74—Finding that oil development could not be determined from contract held not inconsistent with finding determined from other evidence that development was not performed.

Finding that court was unable to determine from receipt nature or extent of oil development attempted to be guaranteed held in effect finding that court could not so determine from contract alone and was not inconsistent with finding that development had not been performed, since court was not precluded from determining such fact from other evidence.

6. Mines and minerals 🔑74—Opinion evidence that oil development, if completed, would not have produced oil, held properly excluded in action to rescind purchase of interest in oil lease for breach of guaranty of development.

In action to rescind contract for purchase of share in oil lease under which defendant guaranteed development of oil properties, based on breach of guaranty, opinion evidence that development work, if completed, would not have produced oil held properly excluded since plaintiff had right to full performance under his contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Reuben S. Schmidt, Judge.

Action by Charles C. Issenhuth against Robert Marsh & Co., Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Clyde C. Shoemaker, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Norman T. Mason, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought to rescind a contract for the purchase of a share in an "oil lease" and to recover the sum of $5,000 paid upon the same. Judgment went for plaintiff according to the prayer of the complaint, and from said judgment this appeal is taken.

The following facts are undisputed: On April 14, 1923, Gilbert & Hawley assigned to Reed & Campbell an interest in an oil lease covering 2½ acres of land in the Santa Fé Springs district. By the terms of said instrument the assignees agreed to do certain development work in search of oil. Included in this work, the assignees were to continuously and diligently prosecute the drilling of a well to a depth of 5,000 feet or until production was obtained at a lesser depth in what is known as the "Meyer sand." Gilbert & Hawley then assigned 2 per cent. of the royalty under said agreement to appellant Robert Marsh & Co., and the latter assigned 1 per cent. of said royalty to plaintiff.

On May 15, 1923, respondent paid appellant the sum of $2,000 in cash, and received from it a writing as follows:

> "May 15, 1923.
> "Received from C. C. Issenhuth buying order covering 1 % Gilbert Lease, Carter Tract, operating company Reed & Campbell, drilling contractor Roy Evans, Price—$5,000.00. Robert Marsh & Co. Inc., Guaranteeing development of said properties and title pertaining to same. Terms $2,000.00 cash, receipt of which is hereby acknowledged—balance on or before the 31st day of May.
> "Robert Marsh & Co. Inc.
> "By C. A. Briggs, Mgr."

The balance of the purchase price, $3,000, was paid June 4, 1923, and on June 18, 1923, appellant executed to respondent an assignment of the 1 per cent. royalty which he had agreed to purchase on May 15th.

The court found, upon sufficient evidence, certain facts to be true, and they are given, in substance, as follows:

At the time of the purchase the oil well had been drilled to about 2,000 or 3,000 feet; a month thereafter (June 7, 1923), it had reached the depth of 2,953 feet; on July 26, 1923, it had been sunk 940 feet deeper—that is, to a depth of 3,893 feet—which was the last development work done upon the property.

Thereafter the drilling contractor was engaged in a "fishing job" which was never completed, and since the middle of October, 1923, all efforts to resume development work ceased. It was necessary, in order to complete a well in this field, to sink it to a depth of about 5,000 feet to the "Meyer sand," where oil at those times was found in commercial quantities.

The lease under the terms of which plaintiff's 1 per cent. royalty was to be paid was forfeited by failure to do the development work therein required, viz., to prosecute drilling "diligently and continuously until it reached what is known as the 'Meyer sand,' being approximately 4800 feet in depth"; "and further upon the completion of the first well and within sixty days thereafter to commence the drilling of a second well and diligently prosecute the same to completion as above provided for the first well, and within sixty days thereafter a third well shall be commenced and drilled to completion as above provided, and within sixty days after its completion, a fourth well shall be commenced and drilled to completion as above provided."

When respondent made the first payment of $2,000 to appellant, it will be noted that he received from it a writing duly signed and which we have quoted in full, supra. This writing contained the clause, "guaranteeing developing of said properties." At the time of the execution of the said instrument containing said "guarantee," respondent also signed a "buying order," which reads as follows:

> "Robert Marsh & Co., Inc.
> "Stocks Bonds
> "Realtors
> "200 Marsh-Strong Bldg., Los Angeles, Cal.
> "I hereby authorize you to buy ~~sell for my account and risk in open market or by private purchase~~ 1% Gilbert Lease, Carter Tract, operating company Reed & Campbell drilling contractor Roy Evans Drilling Company—price—$5,000.00 Terms $2,000.00 cash, balance on or before May 31, 1923.
> "Subject to confirmation
> "[Signed] C. C. Issenhuth
> "Make checks payable to Robert Marsh & Co., Inc. Address
> "The face of this subscription contains all the terms and agreement between the undersigned and Robert Marsh & Co., Inc. This agreement subject to confirmation by Robert Marsh & Co., Inc."

When the final payment of $3,000 was made, appellant executed to respondent a formal assignment of 1 per cent. of the gross production from all oil, gas and other hydrocarbon substances produced and saved as reserved in a certain gas and oil lease between the parties in the manner we have explained. No mention of any guaranty was made in this assignment.

[1, 2] It is contended by appellant that the instrument containing the guaranty was distinct and separable from the sale; that it was a collateral agreement and a separate undertaking; and that a breach of the same would not authorize a rescission of the entire transaction. We do not take this view of the matter. The first instrument executed by the parties was the only contract between them. Upon that date respondent became obligated to pay the sum of $5,000, and, in return, appellant was bound to convey the royalty interest. The subsequent execution of the assignment conveying said interest was an act done in pursuance of the carrying out of said contract. The same applies to the "buying order." It is not contended by appellant that the first contract was incomplete or that it did not express all the terms necessary to complete the transaction, or that there is any inconsistency between these documents. We cannot see how the subsequent execution of the assignment could possibly operate to deprive respondent of a right which he had acquired under the contract, merely because they did not repeat or refer to the guarantee clause which appeared in the said contract. The contract was in its nature entire, and not severable. The fact that the consideration was payable in two installments does not make it otherwise. The consideration of $5,000 was single, and it must follow that the contract is entire. The contention that there was an apportionment of the consideration is contrary to the obvious intent of the parties, and is wholly without merit. Stern v. Sunset Road Oil Co., 47 Cal. App. 334, 190 P. 651.

[3] It is next contended that the guaranty did not refer to development work which the assignors of appellant were obligated to perform under the various leases and assignments in evidence, and that the finding that the guaranty included the obligations assumed by appellant's assignors is not supported by the evidence. The answer to this is that the contract here referred particularly to the Gilbert lease, and to Reed & Campbell, who agreed to do certain development work upon the property covered by said lease. All of these leases and assignments were in evidence, and the court was justified in drawing the inference and finding that the guaranty referred to and covered the development which appellant's assignors were obligated to perform.

The court made the following finding:

"The court is unable to determine from said receipt the nature or extent of the 'development of said properties' attempted to be so guaranteed, nor the time within which such development should be done."

[4, 5] Thereafter the court found that the development work which the assignors of appellant had agreed to perform had not been done, specifying the particulars. It is contended that these findings are so conflicting as to entitle appellant to a reversal. It is our duty to construe the finding in a manner to uphold rather than to defeat the judgment. But it is scarcely necessary to invoke this rule here. The court merely finds that from the contract alone it cannot determine the nature or extent of the development attempted to be guaranteed. This does not preclude the court from turning to the other evidence introduced, for the purpose of ascertaining these facts, and that is precisely what the court did. The nature and extent of the development referred to in the contract was found in the various leases and assignments before the court, and which documents were referred to in the contract.

[6] Appellant offered opinion evidence to the effect that if it had done the development work called for, no oil would have been found. The court excluded this testimony. This ruling was correct. It was no defense to the action to prove that full performance upon the part of appellant would have shown respondent's "investment" to be valueless. The latter had the right to full performance under his contract. It would, indeed, be a lax rule of law which would permit a promisor to exercise his own discretion as to the extent he should perform his part of an obligation. The question of damages is not raised, as respondent merely seeks rescission and return of his consideration, and that was the adjudication made.

It is contended that rescission was not made promptly, under section 1691 of the Civil Code. The court found on this matter adversely to appellant. We have examined the record, and we are satisfied that the finding is amply supported.

The judgment is affirmed.

DOBBIE v. PACIFIC GAS & ELECTRIC CO. (LONDON GUARANTEE & ACCIDENT CO., Limited, Intervener). (Civ. 6513.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Dec. 27, 1928.

1. Negligence ⟹136(15)—Whether employee of independent contractor was invitee as to portion of premises where he was injured held for jury.

Whether employee of independent contractor was an invitee in going on roof of building, where he was injured by falling through skylight, held for jury under evidence, especially as his object in going to such place was not his own pleasure or benefit, but the benefit of his employer.

2. Negligence ⟹136(26)—Contributory negligence of employee of independent contractor, injured when falling through skylight, held for jury.

Contributory negligence of employee of independent contractor in going on roof, where he was injured by falling through a skylight, held for jury.

3. Negligence ⟹32(1)—Owner of premises owes duty to invitee only of exercising ordinary care in seeing that premises are in safe condition.

Owner of premises is not an insurer of the safety of an invitee, but owes him the duty to exercise ordinary care in seeing that premises are in safe condition.

4. Negligence ⟹52—Owner of premises had duty of warning employees of independent contractor as to defective condition of skylight on roof, notwithstanding knowledge of contractor and foreman.

The fact that independent contractor and his foreman had actual knowledge of skylight on roof, where employee was injured, and that it was so covered with soot and cinders as to be invisible, and to appear as a solid portion of the roof, did not relieve owner of premises of duty of warning employees of contractor as to such condition.

5. Negligence ⟹52—Owner of premises owes same duty to employees of independent contractor of guarding them against hidden dangers as owed to other invitees.

ants of independent contractor, nevertheless contractor's servants are deemed to be on premises by owner's invitation, express or implied, and he therefore owes the same duty of guarding them against hidden dangers thereon as he would to a guest, customer, or other person going there by his invitation.

6. Negligence 🔑52—Duty of owner of premises to warn employees of independent contractor as to hidden dangers cannot be delegated.

Duty of owner of premises to warn employees of independent contractor as to hidden dangers on premises cannot be delegated, and the contractor's knowledge or notice to him of the danger is not imputable to his employees.

7. Negligence 🔑136(22)—Whether owner of premises used ordinary care in having premises in safe condition for employee of independent contractor, injured when falling through skylight, held for jury.

Whether owner of premises used ordinary care in seeing that its premises were in a safe condition for use of employees of independent contractor held for jury as respected injury to employee falling through skylight.

8. Trial 🔑337—That jury disregarded instruction erroneously requiring condition precedent to recovery was no ground for reversal.

Fact that jury disregarded instruction in so far as it erroneously required condition precedent to recovery for injury to employee of independent contractor that neither employer nor foreman had knowledge of the existence of skylight where employee was injured held not to constitute ground for reversal.

9. Evidence 🔑471(17)—Objection to question asked contractor as to occasion for employee going on roof where he was injured held properly sustained as calling for opinion.

In action to recover for injuries to employee of independent contractor falling through skylight, objection to question to contractor as to whether there was any occasion for men in doing the work to go on the roof held properly sustained, in that question called for opinion of witness as to question which was for jury to determine from all circumstances.

Admission or exclusion of opinion evidence rests largely within discretion of trial court.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Franklin A. Griffin, Judge.

Action by Henry Dobbie against the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, wherein the London Guarantee & Accident Company, Limited, intervened. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Thos. J. Straub and Charles E. Finney, both of San Francisco (George F. Jones, of Oroville, and Leo H. Susman, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Edwin V. McKenzie and Jesse H. Miller, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought by plaintiff, Henry Dobbie, against appellant, Pacific Gas & Electric Company, a corporation, hereinafter called the gas company, to recover damages for personal injuries sustained on its premises.

The plaintiff, a sheet metal worker, was in the employ of W. Heidt, an independent contractor, who was under contract with the gas company to reconstruct a blast pipe and do other work of like character in and about the generator building of the plant of the company in San Francisco.

The complaint alleged that on the day of the accident, and for a long time previously, there had existed on the roof of the generator building a glass skylight, which was near the place where the plaintiff was required to work; that the gas company had knowingly permitted the skylight to become covered to a depth of several inches with cinders and soot discharged from its gas generators; that this rendered the skylight invisible to any person on the roof of the building, and caused the same to appear to be a part of the solid portion of the roof; that the true conditions were unknown to plaintiff, who, in the course of his employment, stepped upon the skylight, which broke with his weight, precipitating him to the floor below and causing his injuries. A jury returned a verdict against the gas company, which has appealed from the judgment entered thereon.

As grounds for reversal, it is urged that no actionable negligence on the part of the gas company was shown; that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence as a matter of law; that certain of the court's rulings were prejudicially erroneous; and that two of its instructions were disregarded by the jury.

Appellant's generator building is a steel frame structure about 160 feet in length east and west, 75 feet in width, and is walled and roofed with corrugated iron. The roof is of the gable type, sloping north and south from the ridge. The building has two floors, the first the ground floor, and the second called the generator floor, which is of steel. It is about 26 feet below the ridge of the roof. In the building are located four gas generators, each consisting of a furnace on the ground floor, topped by a cylindrical shell protruding through the generator floor to a height of about 20 feet. On this is a second cylindrical shell of smaller diameter which protrudes through the main roof of the building, and above which is a metal stack 15 feet high capped by a spark arrester. The process of gasmaking consists in spraying crude oil into the generator shells, where it is cracked or decomposed by heat, and the gas separated from other ingredients of the oil. The gas is then filtered to remove a residue of carbon or lamp black, and at this plant about 250 tons of this substance was produced each 24 hours. In the process, a portion of the lamp black adheres to the brick interior of the generators. This is expelled at intervals into the stacks in the form of soot and cinders, which, unless prevented by the spark arresters, pass into the open air. The generators are numbered; the one nearest the east end of the building being No. 5, and that next to the west No. 6. Between and to the north of these is the skylight in question, which is also below another skylight upon the ridge of the building and between it and the north wall. The skylight upon the ridge projects above the level of the main roof, but the one in question is sunk in a light well below the level of the main roof. Immediately below the upper skylight and at the upper or south end of the light well a plank walk 23 inches in width was built across from east to west. The light well, which is about 20 feet wide, begins underneath this walk, and extends to the north wall of the building. The skylight therein, which is 4 feet 10 inches below the level of the main roof, is composed of 10 panes of reinforced glass, each 8 feet 6 inches long, and varying from 17 to 24½ inches in width. These are held in place by metal bars running lengthwise between the panes; their elevation above the panes being 1¼ inches. A portion of the bottom of the light well both north and south of the skylight is covered with corrugated iron roofing. Crossing the light well immediately north of the glass panes, and about 3 feet below the level of the roof, is a blast pipe 36 inches in diameter, which is used for supplying air to the generators 5 and 6. At each generator a spiral steel stairway leads from the generator floor to the top of the lowest generator shell, and from this point another steel stairway leads to the top of the upper generator shell on the main roof of the building. That from generator No. 5 opens upon the roof a few feet to the east, and that from generator No. 6 the same distance to the west of the light well.

On the afternoon of the day of the accident the plaintiff was working at appellant's boiler house on the same premises. He had previously worked on the ground floor of the generator building, but not upon the generator floor. About 30 minutes before the accident occurred he was instructed by his foreman, Volz, to accompany another employee, named Tucker, to the generator building for the purpose of riveting certain flanges and iron sheets about the blast pipe mentioned above. Tucker there pointed out the place where plaintiff was to work; this being upon a scaffold within the building which was placed near the west wall of the light well, and at about the level of the blast pipe mentioned. It appears that two men were required for this work, one within and the other without the building, and that Tucker then took a position on the outside of the wall mentioned and within the light well, seating himself upon the blast pipe near the west wall. According to their testimony, the metal sheets which they were instructed to rivet bulged in a manner which prevented the doing of the work. They were unable to see one another owing to their positions, and the noise about the plant prevented intelligible communication. Tucker, wishing to explain the situation to the plaintiff, then passed through an opening which had been made in the east wall of the light well, thence along a scaffold, and down the stairway leading from the top of the lowest generator shell of generator No. 5 to the generator floor; from there he went to the stairway at generator No. 6, and thence to the scaffold where the plaintiff had been working. In the meantime, however, the plaintiff for the purpose of apprising Tucker of conditions and to consult with him, had left the scaffold which extended to the top of the lowest generator shell of generator No. 6, thence down the metal stairway running from there to the generator floor. From the floor he went to the stairway at generator No. 5 and ascended to the roof of the building. This point was east of the light well, and from there, according to his testimony, he saw a workman in a stooping position at about the place in the light well where Tucker testified that he had been working. This workman, named Koennecke, according to the testimony, had been assisting Tucker, and remained in the light well while the latter went below to communicate with plaintiff. The plaintiff then crossed the light well by the plank walk mentioned and walked to the north to a point about 18 inches north of the south end of the most westerly pane of the skylight. There he lowered himself into the light well until his feet rested upon the skylight, which gave way. He fell to the generator floor, receiving the injuries for which he sought to recover.

It was testified by the plaintiff and other witnesses who were employed on the building at the time of the accident, including the foreman, Volz, that soot and cinders completely covered the skylight, giving it an appearance similar to that of the roof proper; and, according to the testimony of both Tucker and Keonnecke, who had been working in the light well before and on the day of the accident, neither discovered the skylight until shortly before the accident happened. These witnesses also testified that they had not observed it from the floor below. It further appears from the testimony of an employee of appellant that it had been his duty to sweep the skylight weekly, in order to remove the accumulation of cinders, but that, after Heidt commenced work under his contract, which was about four weeks previous to the accident, this was not done.

The negligence charged was in permitting the skylight to become obscured, so that it constituted a hidden danger to invitees. Appellant contends, however, that the plaintiff, at the place where the accident occurred, was a mere licensee and not an invitee, and that in either case no neglect of duty on its part was shown.

[1] The plaintiff, as stated, was unable to carry out the work according to instructions, nor could he from his position communicate with Tucker, his superior. It is clear from his testimony that his object in going to the place where the latter had been stationed was not his own pleasure or benefit, but the benefit of his employer. His going had not been forbidden, and, under the circumstances, the conclusion that the act was impliedly authorized was not unreasonable. Moreover, his destination was a place in the building where the same work in which he had been engaged was being carried on by his employer; this portion of the premises, as appellant states, having been practically turned over to the latter. These facts were such as to make the question of his right to go to that part of the building one for the jury, and support their implied finding that he was an invitee. Bush v. Weed Lumber Co., 63 Cal. App. 426, 218 P. 618; McKee v. Bidwell, 74 Pa. 218; 1 Thompson, Negligence, p. 907, § 989.

[2, 3] It is further claimed that, assuming plaintiff to have been an invitee, his selection of the route followed in order to reach the light well constituted negligence as a matter of law. According to the testimony, an opening for temporary use had been made and left by the contractor in the east wall of the light well; and from this opening a temporary scaffold extended to the lowest shell of generator No. 5. This was the way followed by Tucker in reaching the generator floor; but it is evident from plaintiff's testimony that he was not aware that the light well could be reached in this manner. The route followed by him from the generator floor to the roof was that which appellant had provided for its employees; and, while it was longer than that taken by Tucker, it could be and was followed without hazard. Moreover, after reaching the roof, the plaintiff crossed the light well in safety on the plank walk provided by appellant and only arrived at a place of danger when he stepped upon the skylight. The route followed was both practicable and convenient, and the only other or safer way than that pursued was unknown to him. Under such circumstances, the fact that it ultimately proved to be dangerous did not make his conduct negligent as a matter of law, and the question was one for the jury. Roseberry v. Niehaus & Co., 166 Cal. 481, 137 P. 232; Cozad v. Raisch Improvement Co., 175 Cal. 619, 166 P. 1000. The owner of premises is not an insurer of the safety of an invitee, but he owes him the duty to exercise ordinary care in seeing that the premises are in a safe condition. Means v. Southern California Railway Co., 144 Cal. 473, 77 P. 1001, 1 Ann. Cas. 206. As the rule is stated in Shanley v. American Olive Co., 185 Cal. 552, 197 P. 793, "A person so invited upon the premises of another may recover from such owner 'for any injuries received owing to the dangerous condition of the premises known' to the owner and not known to the person so invited; but such owner 'is not bound to keep his premises absolutely safe.' 29 Cyc. 453. The responsibility of such owner for the safety of such person in such a case is not absolute; he is only required to use ordinary care for the safety of the persons he invites to come upon the premises. If there is a danger attending upon such entry, or upon the work which the person invited is to do thereon, and such danger arises from causes or conditions not readily apparent to the eye, it is the duty of the owner to give such person reasonable notice or warning of such danger. But such owner is entitled to assume that such invitee will perceive that which would be obvious to him upon the ordinary use of his own senses. He is not required to give to the invitee notice or warning of an obvious danger."

[4] Notwithstanding evidence that the plaintiff had no actual knowledge of the skylight, and that the same was a source of danger, appellant claims that the fact that the contractor and his foreman, as was testified, knew or had notice of the condition, relieved appellant of the duty of warning employees of the contractor. In two California decisions cited in support of this contention, it is intimated that knowledge by the contractor or notice to him of the unsafe condition of the premises should be imputed to his employee. Brown v. Board of Trustees, 41 Cal. App. 100, 182 P. 316; Jacobson v. Northwestern Pac. R. R. Co., 175 Cal. 468, 166 P. 3. An examination of these cases discloses, however, that the expressions relied upon were unnecessary for their determination; the decision in each case being that, under the circumstances shown, no warning of the danger was necessary. In the first the death of an employee of an independent contractor was caused by the fall of an unsupported wall of a burnt building. It was held that the deceased, by the exercise of ordinary care, could have observed the danger, and that under such circumstances it was unnecessary for the owner to give warning. In the second it appeared that an employee of an independent contractor, actuated solely by curiosity or for his own convenience, went upon a platform where there had been installed highly charged electric wires, and was killed. It was held that as to the owner he was but a licensee, and that the injury resulted solely from his own negligence.

[5, 6] The case of Proctor v. San Antonio R. Co., 26 Tex. Civ. App. 148, 62 S. W. 938, 939, is also cited by appellant. In that case the deceased was the father of one of the independent contractors, and had brought the latter's lunch to the power house owned by the defendant. The contractors were engaged in removing a pile of cinders, over which at a height of about seven feet was stretched a trolley wire. The deceased was not employed in the work on the premises, and the owner was not shown to have had knowledge of his presence. The deceased casually took up a hoe and dug into the pile of cinders. While so doing the hoe was elevated above his head and struck the trolley wire, from which he received a shock which caused his death. It was held that the duty, if any there was, to warn the deceased of the danger devolved upon the contractor, and not upon the owner. While the court does not so hold, it is clear from the facts that the deceased was but a licensee. Gibson v. Sziepienski, 37 Ill. App. 601; Indian Refining Co. v. Mobley, 134 Ky. 822, 121 S. W. 657, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 497; Freeman v. United Fruit Co., 223 Mass. 300, 111 N. E. 789; Kinsman v. Barton, 141 Wash. 311, 251 P. 563. While the relation of master and servant does not subsist between the owner and the servants of an independent contractor, and the obligations of a master are not imposed upon the former (Schmidlin v. Alta Planing Mill Co., 170 Cal. 589, 150 P. 983), nevertheless the contractor's servants, while engaged in the performance of the contract, are deemed to be upon the premises by the owner's invitation, express or implied. John Spry Lumber Co. v. Duggan, 182 Ill. 218, 54 N. E. 1002; Gagnon v. St. Maries Light & Power Co., 26 Idaho, 87, 141 P. 88. He therefore owes the same duty of guarding them against hidden dangers thereon as he would to a guest, customer, or other person who came there by his invitation (Black v. Warehouse Investment Co., 32 Cal. App. 154, 162 P. 403; Union Oil Co. v. Rideout, 38 Cal. App. 629, 177 P. 196; 1 Thompson, Negligence, §§ 680, 970, 19 Cal. Jur. Negligence, § 53, p. 618); and it is his duty to warn them of any danger in coming of which he knows or, as a prudent person, ought to know, and of which they are not aware. Ryan v. St. Louis Transit Co., 190 Mo. 621, 89 S. W. 865, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 777. The duty, however, arises from the invitation and not from the contract between the contractor and the invitees, this being but the occasion for the invitation; and the fact that the invitees are servants of the contractor does not relieve the owner of any duty owing to them as invitees. Stevens v. United Gas & Elec. Co., 73 N. H. 159, 60 A. 848, 70 L. R. A. 123; Fidelity & Casualty Co., etc., v. Llewellyn Iron Works, 42 Cal. App. 766, 184 P. 402; Smith v. Twin City, etc., Co., 102 Minn. 4, 112 N. W. 1001; Newingham v. Blair, 232 Pa. 511, 81 A. 556. Moreover, the duty cannot be delegated; and the contractor's knowledge or notice to him of the danger is not imputable to his employees, who are invitees. Lechman v. Hooper, 52 N. J. 253, 19 A. 215; Stevens v. United Gas & Elec. Co., supra; Woodman v. Metropolitan R. Co., 149 Mass. 335, 21 N. E. 482, 4 L. R. A. 213, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427; Pittsfield Cottonware, etc., Co. v. Pittsfield Shoe Co., 71 N. H. 522, 53 A. 807, 60 L. R. A. 116; Rolfe v. Boston & M. Ry. Co., 69 N. H. 476, 45 A. 251; Cabot v. Kingman, 166 Mass. 403, 44 N. E. 344, 33 L. R. A. 45; Engel v. Eureka Club, 137 N. Y. 100, 32 N. E. 1052, 33 Am. St. Rep. 692; Smith v. Twin City, etc., Co., supra; U. S. Cast Iron Pipe Co. v. Sullivan (C. C. A.) 3 F.(2d) 794.

[7] It being shown that the skylight was concealed by cinders and soot to an extent that the danger therefrom was not readily apparent, and that this condition was likely to occur unless steps were taken to prevent it was known to appellant, also that the greater portion of the work under the contract was to be performed in and about the light well, and it being undisputed that no warning of the conditions was given to the plaintiff, the question whether the latter at the place of the injury was an invitee using ordinary care for his own safety, and the further question whether appellant under all the circumstances used a like degree of care in seeing that its premises were in a safe condition, were both for the jury.

Appellant complains that the court erroneously amended an instruction offered by it. The instruction as given was in substance that, before the plaintiff could recover, the jury must find that, if the skylight was so covered with cinders as to be invisible, the existence of the skylight was unknown to the plaintiff or his employer. It is claimed that the court erred in striking from the offered instruction after the word "employer" where that word appears therein the words "or his foreman." In view of the above authorities, this was not error, nor was the refusal of an instruction to the effect that, if the contractor or his foreman had knowledge of the existence of the skylight a sufficient time before the injury to have warned the plaintiff of its existence, no duty to do so rested upon appellant.

[8] Appellant also claims that instruction No. 9, given by the court, was disregarded by the jury. By this instruction the jury was told that, before the plaintiff would be entitled to a verdict, it must find "* * * 3, that if said skylight was so covered with cinders and soot as to be invisible and unobservable as alleged, the existence thereof was unknown to plaintiff or to his employer; 4, that if said skylight was covered over as claimed, defendant had knowledge thereof, and with such knowledge failed to warn plaintiff or his employer of the existence of such skylight. * * *" Although the evidence shows that both his employer and his foreman knew of the existence of the skylight previous to the accident—and it may be conceded that a finding by the jury to the contrary would be unsupported—nevertheless, in view of our conclusions above stated, the instruction, so far as it required as a condition to recovery a want of knowledge on the part of the employer or his foreman of the existence of the skylight, or that appellant failed to warn them of its existence, was erroneous; and the fact that the jury disregarded it is not ground for reversal. Altoona Q. M. Co. v. Integral Q. M. Co., 114 Cal. 100, 45 P. 1047; Edwards v. Wagner, 121 Cal. 376, 53 P. 821; O'Neill v. Thomas Day Co., 152 Cal. 357, 92 P. 856, 14 Ann. Cas. 970; Compressed Air Co. v. San Pablo, etc., Co., 9 Cal. App. 361, 99 P. 531; Lucas v. Walker, 22 Cal. App. 296, 134 P. 374, 379.

[9,10] At the trial the contractor was asked the following question by appellant: "Was there any occasion for the men in doing the work to go on top of the main roof?" The court sustained an objection thereto on the ground that the question called for the opinion of the witness, and this ruling is also assigned as error. The question referred to the fact that the plaintiff, in his attempt to communicate with Tucker, followed a different route than that taken by Tucker. The objection was, we think, properly sustained, as it was for the jury to determine from all the circumstances whether the plaintiff was reasonably justified in going upon the roof, a question which did not call for the aid of opinion evidence. Furthermore, the admission or exclusion of such evidence rests largely within the discretion of the trial court, which in the present instance was not abused. Nolan v. Nolan, 155 Cal. 476, 101 P. 520, 132 Am. St. Rep. 99, 17 Ann. Cas. 1056; Maris v. H. Crummey, Inc., 55 Cal. App. 573, 204 P. 259.

From a review of the whole record, including the evidence, we are of the opinion that the trial court did not err in submitting the case to the jury, and that its determination of the issues is fairly supported by the evidence.

LACALUSA INV. CO. v. HESSE et al.
(L. A. 9565.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1929.

1. Principal and agent ⚷123(5)—Statement of owner that agent was securing lessee held not to warrant finding of agreement to pay commission to broker employed by agent.

Evidence of statement of owner of lot erecting apartment house that agent was handling business of securing lessee, and that whatever he did was satisfactory, held insufficient to support finding of employment by owner of broker whose services agent procured, or of agreement to pay broker commissions.

2. Frauds, statute of ⚷116(5)—Agent's written approval of lease of principal's property, without written authority, held not binding on principal (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5).

Written approval of agent to lease of principal's property held not binding on principal, where agent had no written authority to execute lease under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5.

3. Principal and agent ⚷102(1)—Defendants, who authorized agent to submit offers from prospective lessees, held not liable to broker, employed by agent, for commissions for procuring lease which defendants never accepted.

Defendants, authorizing agent to obtain propositions, from prospective lessees of apartment building, to be submitted for defendants' approval or rejection, held not liable to broker, employed by agent, for commission for securing lessee, where lease agreement procured by broker was never accepted and approved by defendants and there were no transactions directly between defendants and broker.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harold Louderback, Judge.

Action by the Lacalusa Investment Company against Arvilla A. Hesse and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

Dan. V. Norland, Randall J. Hood, Minor Moore, and Chas. Mitschrich, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

William C. Jensen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This appeal was submitted upon an order to show cause, the respondent having failed to present or file a brief. The trial court found that plaintiff, as a real estate broker, was entitled to recover from defendants the sum of $6,879.60 as a commission for services rendered by it as such broker, and gave judgment accordingly. Defendants appealing urge numerous assignments of error as ground for reversal of the judgment.

It appears that appellants, owners of a lot upon which they planned to erect an apartment house, extended to one Stroud, a man previously in their employ as a general helper in connection with another building being constructed by them, the privilege of securing offers from prospective lessees for said new building. In other words, appellants advised said Stroud of certain terms which they would require to be incorporated in any lease before it would have their approval, and orally authorized him to obtain propositions from prospective lessees and to submit such propositions to them for approval or rejection. In the event of their approval of any proposition, they were to pay said Stroud a commission for his services. Thereafter, said Stroud met and negotiated with Mr. Graf, the president of respondent corporation. As a result of these negotiations, said Stroud, through Mr. Graf, procured the signature of one Ida M. Theurer to a lease prepared by Mr. Graf and witnessed by him and also by said Stroud. Mrs. Theurer also deposited with Mr. Graf $9,555 to cover the five months' rental in advance required by the provisions of said lease, which was to be for a term of ten years.

Appellants refused to accept this proposition. They never signed the lease nor approved it, nor did said deposit ever leave the hands of Mr. Graf. On the contrary, at about the same time, and likewise through negotiations conducted by said Stroud, appellants approved and executed an agreement to lease the property to another party at a slightly higher rental. Thereafter, contending that it earned a commission in securing the signature of Mrs. Theurer to said lease and in procuring said deposit from her, respondent instituted this action, which resulted in a judgment in its favor as aforesaid.

We find that the record substantiates the contentions of appellants, to wit: That there is no evidence of any agency of respondent for appellants; that there is no evidence of the employment of respondent by appellants as a real estate broker or in any other capacity; that there is no evidence that respondent rendered services of any kind at the instance of appellants, or that appellants became indebted to respondent, or that said Stroud had actual or ostensible authority, as the agent of appellants, to either make a lease or to employ another agent to do so.

[1-3] There is no convincing evidence of any direct contract, agreement, covenant, written or oral, or of any transaction of any kind whatsoever between appellants and respondent. Taking at its full value the testimony offered by the witnesses for respondent, among whom were its representative, Mr. Graf, his secretary, and said prospective lessee, its substance, as a basis for upholding the findings and judgment herein, is that in addition to the facts as above detailed, Mr. Graf testified that prior to rejection of the offer, he had a conversation with appellant Arthur T. Hesse, which conversation is denied by said appellant, in the course of which the latter remarked that Mr. Stroud was handling his business and whatever Mr. Stroud did was satisfactory to him. This evidence will not support a holding that appellants employed respondent or agreed to pay it the commission in question or ratified the lease submitted to them by said Stroud. The lease itself executed by Mrs. Theurer, which had the written approval of said Stroud, was, of course, not binding upon appellants, as Stroud had no written authority to so execute it as the agent of appellants (section 1624, subd. 5, Civ. Code).

We are compelled to conclude that respondent was fully aware of the limitation placed upon the authority of Stroud; that Stroud, who did not hold a license himself, was not authorized by appellants to secure the services of a licensed broker, but was merely authorized orally by appellants, if he so chose, to negotiate directly with prospective lessees and to secure from them, and submit to appellants, for approval or rejection, offers or propositions to lease, and that appellants had it within their power to reject the offer procured through respondent, with whom they had had no dealings and to whom they were under no obligation.

These views make it unnecessary to discuss all of the numerous points urged by appellants.

The judgment is reversed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; CURTIS, J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.

PEOPLE v. TROCHE. (Cr. 3117.)★

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 10, 1929.

1. Jury 🔑31(11)—Where substance of right to jury trial is preserved, procedure is within Legislature's discretion (Pen. Code, § 4; Pol. Code, § 4468).

So long as substance of right to trial by jury as guaranteed by Constitution is preserved, procedure is wholly within discretion of Legislature, under Pen. Code, § 4, and Pol. Code, § 4468, in view of Pol. Code, § 4, Civ. Code, § 4, and Code Civ. Proc. § 4.

2. Constitutional law 🔑257—Statutes as to plea of not guilty by reason of insanity in murder case held not to deny "due process of law" (Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1020, as amended, and § 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149).

Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1020, as amended, and section 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149, relative to plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity" in prosecution for murder, held not invalid as violating due process provision of either federal or state Constitutions; words "due process of law" meaning law in regular course of administration according to prescribed forms and in accordance with general rules for protection of individual rights.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Due Process of Law.]

3. Constitutional law 🔑251—"Due process" may include new methods of procedure unknown to common law.

"Due process of law" is not limited to due process of settled usages of past, but may include new methods of procedure unknown to common law; but they must be orderly and provide for reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard.

4. Jury 🔑31(11)—Statute relative to plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity" in murder case does not violate constitutional right to jury trial (Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1020, as amended, and § 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149; Const. art. 1, § 7; Code Civ. Proc. § 193); "trial jury."

Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1020, as amended, and section 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149, relative to plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity" in prosecution for murder, held not to deprive accused person of any of essentials of common-law jury trial, under Const. art. 1, § 7; trial jury, under Code Civ. Proc. § 193, being body drawn from citizens of district before court or officer of competent jurisdiction, sworn to try and determine fact question by unanimous verdict in criminal case.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First Series, Trial Jury.]

5. Criminal law 🔑311—Statutory provision that one pleading insanity is conclusively presumed sane on trial of issue as to guilt held not to amount to splitting of issues and trial by piecemeal (Pen. Code, § 1016, and § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

Provision of Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, that, during trial of murder case on plea of not guilty, one who has also interposed plea of not guilty by reason of insanity shall be conclusively presumed sane, question of sanity to be subsequently determined if he be found guilty, held not to amount to splitting of issues for trial by piecemeal, since insanity plea is plea of confession and avoidance, and special pleas have long been recognized, under section 1016.

6. Homicide 🔑179—Evidence of mental condition held inadmissible on separate trial of plea of not guilty where defendant also pleaded insanity (Pen. Code, § 1020, as amended, and § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, Cr. Prac. Act 1851; Pen. Code, §§ 1019, 1020, enacted in 1872).

In prosecution for murder in which defendant entered pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity, court committed no error on trial of issue as to guilt in excluding all evidence tending to show mental condition at time of commission of offense, under Pen. Pen. Code, §§ 1019, 1020, enacted in 1872, plea of not guilty puts in issue all matters tending to establish defense except former conviction and once in jeopardy.

7. Criminal law 🔑48—Doctrine of partial insanity is not recognized in California.

Doctrine of partial insanity is not recognized in California, but in order for insanity to be defense defendant must have been so deranged that he was not conscious of wrongful nature of act.

8. Homicide 🔑199—Only evidence concerning circumstances connected with offense is admissible to enable jury to determine whether death penalty should be imposed in murder case.

In prosecution for murder, only evidence admissible for purpose of enabling jury to determine whether death penalty should be imposed in event of guilt of murder in first degree is evidence concerning circumstances connected with offense.

9. Homicide 🔑27—Insanity cannot be used to reduce crime from first degree murder to second degree murder.

Insanity of defendant in prosecution for murder cannot be used to reduce crime from first degree murder to second degree murder.

10. Criminal law 🔑573, 635—In murder case, trial of issue of insanity separately did not prevent trial from being "one speedy public trial," within constitutional requirement (Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1020, as amended, and § 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149).

Trial for murder held to be one speedy and public trial, and no more, within provisions of Constitution, notwithstanding that issue of insanity was tried separately, under provisions of Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1020, as amended, and section 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Speedy Trial.]

11. Homicide 🔑237—As general rule, defendant in murder case must prove insanity by preponderance of evidence (Pen. Code, § 1105).

In prosecution for murder, general rule is that one who tenders issue of defendant's insanity as bar to punishment for offense committed must satisfactorily establish such insanity by preponderance of evidence, under Pen. Code, § 1105.

12. Constitutional law 🔑55—Statutory provision that on trial as to guilt of murder defendant also pleading insanity shall be conclusively presumed sane held not invasion of province of judiciary (Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

Provision of Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, that defendant in murder case entering pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity shall be conclusively presumed sane on trial of plea of not guilty, held not invalid as invading province of judicial branch of government.

13. Criminal law 🔑655(1), 706—It was not misconduct for attorney and court to demonstrate, after evidence was closed, how many shells defendant's pistol would hold, pistol being in evidence.

In prosecution for murder, district attorney and court were not guilty of misconduct as to demonstration before jury, after evidence was closed, how many shells defendant's pistol would hold where pistol was already in evidence.

14. Homicide 🔑237—Evidence held to support finding that defendant, accused of murder, was sane at time of crime.

In prosecution for murder, evidence held sufficient to support finding that defendant was sane at time of crime on hearing on such issue under plea of not guilty by reason of insanity.

Preston, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, El Dorado County; George H. Thompson, Judge.

Joe Troche was convicted of murder in the first degree with sentence of death, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Rehearing denied: PRESTON, J., voting for a rehearing.

Edmond H. Lomasney, of San Francisco, and William R. McKay, of Hanford, for appellant.

WASTE, C. J. The appellant was charged with the murder of Mary Lorenzo, the killing occurring upon a trip to Nevada, where, according to appellant's story, they intended to be married. On the morning of November 20, 1927, a stockman residing at Negro Hill, Placer county, found the appellant seated back of the steering wheel of an automobile standing on the side of the road. He was in a reclining position, covered with blood, and with a gunshot wound in his head. On the right side of the car was the dead body of the girl. Her death had been caused through severance of the spinal cord from a gunshot wound passing through her neck from left to right. Appellant, who was able to talk, and to walk with assistance, stated to the stockman that he had killed the girl after a quarrel. He also stated to the constable, immediately called to the scene, that he had killed the girl. He made similar statements during his stay in a sanitarium in which he was placed during the time prior to his removal to the county jail. He signed a written statement containing a history of the affair in the office of the district attorney.

On arraignment the defendant entered a plea of not guilty, and also a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. When the cause came on for trial, the court announced that it would submit the trial of both issues to the one jury then about to be selected, and explained to the prospective jurors the nature of the issues raised by the two pleas and the procedure to follow. On the voir dire the jurors were examined by the court as to their state of mind on each plea. When the examination of the jurors was completed, and those selected were sworn to try the cause, defendant, through his counsel, demanded of the court to know if, during the trial on the issue of not guilty, the defense would be permitted to offer evidence tending to prove the insanity of the defendant at the time of the alleged commission of the offense, and was informed that it would not, for the reason, assigned by the court, that on the trial of the issue of not guilty the defendant was "conclusively presumed to be sane."

The defendant, testifying in his own behalf on the trial of the issue of not guilty, claimed that he had no recollection or knowledge of how the tragedy occurred, and remembered nothing of what happened between the time he was driving in the automobile with the deceased and the time he was taken to the county jail. On cross-examination, however, he gave minute details of the trip, and identified doctors, nurses, officials, and other people who had seen and talked with him during his stay in the sanitarium and jail, and during the period when he claimed to have no recollection. At the conclusion of the trial of the first issue, which the court restricted to the circumstances connected with the offense and the subsequent conduct of the defendant, the jury returned a verdict of guilty of murder in the first degree, without recommendation. Over the objection of the defense, the trial court then directed that the question of the insanity of the defendant, raised by the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, be forthwith submitted to the same jury which had just rendered the verdict of guilty. At the conclusion of the trial of the second issue, the jury returned its verdict that the defendant was sane at the time of the commission of the offense. The trial court thereupon pronounced its judgment and sentence that the defendant be executed on a day fixed. From the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial the defendant has appealed.

The principal arguments for reversal in the case center in an attack on the constitutionality of the recently enacted law prescribing the procedure to be followed when a person accused of the commission of a penal offense interposes a plea of not guilty together with a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity. Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1020, 1026. The questions presented in the instant attack on the validity of the Code sections are involved in a number of cases now on appeal to this court. It was because of that fact that a reargument and resubmission of this case was ordered.

Section 1016 of the Penal Code, which was amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1148) to provide for the interposition of a fifth plea, "not guilty by reason of insanity," has already been considered by this court and its validity upheld. People v. Hickman (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 909. See, also, the more recent case touching the subject: People v. Davis (Cal. App.) 270 P. 715. The provisions of section 1017, also amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1149), and which prescribe the form in which pleas to an indictment or information must be entered upon the minutes of the court, being directory and procedural, and not in any way involving any substantive rights of a defendant, are not called in question.

Section 1020 of the Penal Code, also amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1149), provides that matters of fact tending to establish a defense under certain pleas, including that of not guilty by reason of insanity, may not be given in evidence under the plea of not guilty. Section 1026 (new in 1927; St. 1927, p. 1149) provides that: "When a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity, and also joins with it another plea or pleas, he shall first be tried as if he had entered such other plea or pleas only, and in such trial he shall be conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time the offense is alleged to have been committed. If the jury shall find the defendant guilty, * * * the question whether the defendant was sane or insane at the time the offense was committed shall be promptly tried, either before the same jury or before a new jury, in the discretion of the court. In such trial the jury shall return a verdict either that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed or that he was insane at the time the offense was committed. If the verdict or finding be that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed, the court shall sentence the defendant as provided by law." Then follows a provision as to the procedure to be taken in the event the verdict or finding be that the defendant was insane at the time of the commission of the offense, a question not here involved. The particular provisions just noted, and which were strictly followed, are the ones here under attack.

The arguments touching the validity of these provisions have been advanced from three points of view: First, that the present law affects the substantive rights of persons accused of crimes, and is unconstitutional and void in that it deprives a defendant of due process of law, and is an invasion of the guaranteed right of a citizen of this state to a common-law jury trial. Second, that, when properly construed, the statute eliminates from the consideration of the jury during the trial of the general issue the question of the "legal insanity" of the defendant—the only kind of insanity which excuses one from punishment for a crime committed—but does not prevent the introduction of evidence tending to establish the mental condition of the accused at the time the offense was committed, for the purpose of showing a lack of criminal intent, malice, or premeditation, such evidence to be also considered by the jury, in the exercise of its discretion in a trial for murder, in fixing the degree of the crime and the punishment at life imprisonment or the extreme penalty, if it finds the offense to have been murder in the first degree. Third, and in support of the validity of the law it is argued that the amendments in question relate merely to procedure in jury trials, and not to substantive law; that the procedural steps provided in no way infringe upon any rights secured to a defendant by the common law or by the state and Federal Constitutions.

[1] So far as the common law is concerned, it has no application to this particular question except in so far as it has been incorporated into our law by statutory enactment and judicial decision. It was but natural that the framers of the first state Constitution and those called upon to first construe the provisions of that document should turn to that system of jurisprudence with which they were most familiar for precedents in enactment and construction. But when California became organized as a state it began to enact its own statutes to take the place of the provisions of the common law. In 1872 it departed entirely from the ranks of the "common-law states," and, following the example particularly of the state of New York, it became a "Code state." It enacted four Codes, to wit, a Political Code, a Civil Code, a Code of Civil Procedure, and a Penal Code, and declared that each established the laws of the state respecting the subjects to which it related. One of the first provisions (section 4) in the Penal Code is that "the rule of the common law, that penal statutes are to be strictly construed," has no application to that Code, but that, to the contrary, "all its provisions are to be construed according to the fair import of their terms, with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice." In the same numbered section of each of the other Codes it is declared that the rule of the common law that statutes in derogation thereof are to be strictly construed has no application to such Code. At the same time it was enacted that the common law, if repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution or laws of this state, shall not be the rule of decision in the courts of this state. Pol. Code, § 4468. So long as the substance of the right to trial by jury, as guaranteed by the Constitution, is preserved, the procedure by which this result is reached is wholly within the discretion of the Legislature, and the courts may not set aside any legislation in this respect because the form of action—the mere manner in which the questions are submitted—is different from that which obtained at the common law. Walker v. New Mexico & S. P. R. R. Co., 165 U. S. 593, 596, 17 S. Ct. 421, 422, 41 L. Ed. 837, 841.

[2, 3] We are also satisfied that the present statutes in no way violate the "due process" provisions of either the federal or the state Constitutions. The words "due process of law" merely mean law in its regular course of administration, according to prescribed forms and in accordance with the general rules for the protection of individual rights. Kalloch v. Superior Court, 56 Cal. 229, 240. Due process of law is not limited to the due process of the settled usages of the past, but may include new methods of procedure unknown to the common law, provided they are in harmony with the accepted underlying principles of such procedure according to the traditions of the common law. They must be orderly and provide for reasonable notice and opportunity to be heard. Hurtado v. California, 110 U. S. 516, 4 S. Ct. 111, 28 L. Ed. 232; Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 S. Ct. 14, 53 L. Ed. 97. Mr. Cooley, in his work on Constitutional Law, says (p. 224): "When life and liberty are in question there must, in every instance, be judicial proceedings; and that requirement implies an accusation, a hearing before an impartial tribunal with proper jurisdiction, and a conviction and judgment, before the punishment can be inflicted. But the states will prescribe their own mode of proceeding and trial." See, also, People v. Hickman, supra.

[4] Neither does the present law deprive an accused person of any of the essentials of a common-law jury trial. The state Constitution (art. 1, § 7) declares that "the right of trial by jury shall be secured to all, and remain inviolate," but does not define what that trial is. Whatever the framers of the Constitution may have had in mind, it seems to be thoroughly settled that the constitutional guaranty refers to the right to a trial by a jury as known at common law. In re Mana, 178 Cal. 213, 214, 172 P. 986, L. R. A. 1918E, 771. Juries at the common law were not always the same, but, through changing conditions and gradual development, it came about that a jury for the trial of a cause was established to be "a body of twelve men, described as upright, well qualified and lawful men, disinterested and impartial, not of kin, nor personal dependents of either of the parties, having their homes within the jurisdictional limits of the court, drawn and selected by officers free from all bias in favor or against either party, duly impaneled under the direction of a competent court, sworn to render a true verdict according to the law and the evidence given them; who, after hearing the parties and their evidence, and receiving the instructions of the court relative to the law involved in the trial, and deliberating, when necessary, apart from all extraneous influences, must return their unanimous verdict upon the issues submitted to them." Opinion of Justices, 41 N. H. 550, 551, quoted approvingly in Capital Traction Co. v. Hof, 174 U. S. 1, 15, 19 S. Ct. 580, 586 (43 L. Ed. 873). To the same effect, but more concisely stated, was the first definition of a trial jury adopted by the Legislature in this state. Section 193 of the Code of Civil Procedure, enacted in 1872, read: "A trial jury is a body of men returned from the citizens of a particular district before a court or officer of competent jurisdiction, and sworn to try and determine, by [unanimous] verdict, a question of fact." Other than an amendment adopted in 1880, striking out the word "unanimous," in order to permit of a verdict by three-fourths of the jury in civil cases, in accordance with the provision of the new Constitution adopted in 1879, and another amendment in 1917, substituting the word "persons" for the word "men," in order to provide for women jurors, the definition of a jury in this state has remained the same. It is therefore manifest that there is nothing in the new enactments to in any way interfere with the constitutional right of a citizen to a trial by jury, as established by the common law and guaranteed by the federal and state Constitutions. See Smith v. Western Pac. R. Co., 203 N. Y. 499, 96 N. E. 1106, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 137, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 264.

[5] It has been very earnestly argued that the provision that, during the trial of the first issue, one who has interposed the plea of not guilty by reason of insanity shall be conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time of the commission of the offense—the question of his sanity to be subsequently determined, if he be found guilty of the offense charged—amounts to a splitting of the issues and a trial by piecemeal. This contention rests upon the proposition that the issue of not guilty under the first plea contains within it the issue of sanity or insanity. That is undoubtedly true where, as under the old system, but one plea was required; but it does not follow that there is any legal objection to the procedure now prescribed. The plea of insanity is, and of necessity must be, a plea of confession and avoidance. State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574, 583; People v. Leong Fook, Crim. 3143, 273 P. 779, this day decided. The requirement under the present system, that the two issues be separately tried, while a departure from the old method of procedure, is but a departure in procedure. Each issue must still be tried by a jury of 12 impartial persons, and the verdict must be unanimous. In substance, the old and the new systems are alike. The guaranteed right of a trial by jury is as inviolate and just as much secured to all under the new system as it was under the old.

The interposition of special pleas by way of abatement, or for the purpose of avoiding punishment for offenses committed, has long been permitted in this state and in other jurisdictions. Special pleas of a former judgment of conviction or acquittal of the offense charged, and of once in jeopardy, have long been recognized. Pen. Code, § 1016. In other jurisdictions defendants are required to interpose the special plea of not guilty by reason of insanity where insanity is relied upon for the purpose of escaping punishment, the finding of the jury on that fact to be conclusive during the subsequent proceedings in the cause. Courts in those states have uniformly held that such procedure does not amount to a violation of constitutional provisions, relating to jury trials, similar to our own. In Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 69, 14 N. W. 912, 46 Am. Rep. 26, the court upheld the validity of a statute requiring that a defendant specially plead insanity, when relied on as a defense, the issue on the special plea to be first tried; if the verdict of the jury be that the defendant was sane at the time of the commission of the offense, his trial upon the plea of not guilty to at once proceed before the same jury, and the finding of the jury on the special plea to be final and conclusive for the purpose of the further trial. Under provisions of a Constitution similar to our own, the Supreme Court of Wisconsin held that there was no constitutional objection to the statute, and that the other objection, that it required the jury to dispose of the special plea by a verdict thereon before the trial proceeded upon the plea of not guilty, was one relating to the form of jury trial, and not to substance. The court said: "All the issues would still be tried by a jury, in the same way they are now tried. * * * It is clear, if the legislature have the power to compel the defendant to plead insanity as a defense, or waive it, then it has the power to prescribe the manner of disposing of that issue on the trial so long as it leaves the accused a trial by jury upon such issue." See, also, Hempton v. State, 111 Wis. 127, 86 N. W. 596; Oborn v. State, 143 Wis. 249, 126 N. W. 737, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 966.

A statute of Alabama providing that where the defense of insanity is relied upon it must be set up by a special plea, and cannot be put in issue under a general plea of not guilty, was held not to contravene any constitutional guarantee. Walker v. State, 91 Ala. 76, 9 So. 87; Baker v. State, 209 Ala. 142, 95 So. 467. In People v. Hickman, supra, this court upheld the constitutionality of section 1016 of the Penal Code, which has the same effect as the Alabama statute. See, also, Ex parte Brown, 39 Wash. 160, 81 P. 552, 553, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 540, 109 Am. St. Rep. 868, 4 Ann.

Cas. 488, and State v. Saffron, 146 Wash. 202, 262 P. 970.

[6, 7] The trial court committed no error in strictly following the letter of the statute (Pen. Code, §§ 1020 and 1026) and excluding, on the trial of the general issue of not guilty, all evidence tending to show the mental condition of the defendant at the time of the commission of the offense. The doctrine of "partial insanity," announced by some authorities, particularly Wharton in his work on Criminal Law, has never been recognized as the law in this jurisdiction. In this state, in order that "insanity may be available as a defense to a crime charged, it must appear that the defendant, when the act was committed, was so deranged and diseased mentally that he was not conscious of the wrongful nature of the act committed. If he has reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act he is doing, knowledge and consciousness that what he is doing is wrong and criminal and will subject him to punishment, he must be held responsible for his conduct. Although he may be laboring under partial insanity,—as, for instance, suffering from some insane delusion or hallucination,—still if he understands the nature and character of his action and its consequences,—if he has knowledge that it is wrong and criminal, and that if he does the act he will do wrong, such partial insanity or the existence of such delusion or hallucination is not sufficient to relieve him from responsibility for his criminal acts." People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 554, 89 P. 124, 129; People v. Kerrigan, 73 Cal. 222, 225, 14 P. 849. See, also, People v. Hurtado, 63 Cal. 288. In this state "so far as accountability to the law is concerned, there is no middle ground." People v. Perry, 195 Cal. 623, 639, 234 P. 890, 896. Such is the law in many jurisdictions. Warner v. State, 114 Ind. 137, 16 N. E. 189; United States v. Lee, 4 Mackey (D. C.) 489, 54 Am. Rep. 293; Commonwealth v. Wireback, 190 Pa. 138, 42 A. 542, 70 Am. St. Rep. 625; Dean v. State, 105 Ala. 21, 17 So. 28; Wartena v. State, 105 Ind. 445, 5 N. E. 20; Kirby v. State, 68 Tex. Cr. R. 63, 150 S. W. 455. "Protection is always afforded in courts of law to persons of unsound mind. Distinction is made between sanity and insanity in people, but not as respects their grade of intelligence. The law does not attempt to measure degrees of intellect nor to make distinction with respect thereto, where the power of thought and reason exists." State v. Schlaps, 78 Mont. 560, 578, 254 P. 858, 863. In 14 R. C. L. page 599, § 54, it is said: "It is the general rule that insanity, when interposed as a defense in a criminal prosecution, is either a complete defense or none at all, and it has been held that there is no degree of insanity sufficient to acquit of murder but not of manslaughter." A valuable note on this subject is found in the case of Knights v. State, 76 Am. St. Rep. 83 (58 Neb. 225, 78 N. W. 508).

It follows, therefore, that any evidence tending to establish the insanity of the defendant under his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity at the time of the commission of the homicide, other than evidence of the immediate circumstances of the offense, would have been irrelevant and immaterial on the trial of the general issue as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant raised by the general plea of not guilty. As the statute accorded the defendant his full right, and ample opportunity to submit to a jury his plea of insanity at the time of the commission of the offense, in excuse of his act and as a reason why no penalty of the law should be visited upon him, it follows that the trial court correctly excluded the evidence on the trial of the general issue.

[8, 9] Furthermore, the only evidence admissible for the purpose of enabling the jury to determine whether the death penalty or life imprisonment should be imposed in the event the defendant should be found guilty of murder in the first degree was the evidence which the court did admit, and which concerned "the circumstances connected with the offense." People v. Golsh, 63 Cal. App. 609, 613, et seq., 219 P. 456. See, also, People v. Witt, 170 Cal. 104, 110, 148 P. 928. The insanity of a defendant cannot be used for the purpose of reducing his crime from murder in the first degree to murder in the second degree. If responsible at all in this respect, he is responsible in the same degree as a sane man, and if he is not responsible at all he is entitled to an acquittal in both degrees. State v. Maioni, 78 N. J. Law, 339, 74 A. 526, 528, 20 Ann. Cas. 204.

[10] From these general deductions, applicable to all the cases now in this court in which the new law relating to the plea of insanity in criminal cases is under attack, we pass to a consideration of the special matters raised by the appellant, Troche, in his appeal. Counsel for appellant argues that the provision of the state Constitution guaranteeing a public and a speedy trial to one accused of a crime "means one speedy and public trial, and no more." The trial had by the defendant, under the present law, amounted to one trial, and no more. The defendant was charged with the commission of but one crime, and his pleas to the one accusation, constituting his answer and defense, tendered the issues for investigation by the court and the jury selected to try the case. Whether the issue of the guilt or innocence of the accused should be tried before or after the trial of the issue of his sanity or insanity was a question to be determined by the Legislature. The order in which the inquiry upon the issues is to be conducted in such a case is a matter which may be regulated by statute, and, if the course prescribed gives the accused the right to present his defense fully upon the trial of the case, he is not deprived of any right or privilege incident to the common-law jury trial. Schissler v. State, 122 Wis. 365, 379, 99 N. W. 593.

Appellant further contends that, as the Criminal Practice Act of 1851 (St. 1851, p. 212) and sections 1019 and 1020 of the Penal Code, enacted in 1872, provide that the plea of not guilty puts in issue every material allegation of the indictment or information, and that all matters of fact tending to establish a defense, other than a former judgment of conviction, and once in jeopardy, may be given in evidence under such plea, the action of the trial court in this case was error. An answer to the contention is that the whole matter of trial is one of procedure, which is subject to the control of the Legislature, within the limitations we have already discussed, none of which were transcended in the enactment of the new law. A more complete answer to this contention will be found in the decision of this court in People v. Leong Fook, Crim. 3143, 273 P. 779, supra.

[11, 12] Another contention of the appellant is that the Legislature has no right or power to enact a law declaring that, at the time of the commission of an offense, an accused shall be conclusively presumed to have been sane, or that, at any given time, a person is conclusively presumed to be sane or insane, and that when the Legislature does so it is invading the province of the judicial branch of the government. If the Legislature had gone so far as the appellant would lead us to believe, his contention would arouse considerable interest; but it has not. The presumption established is one merely for the purpose of a trial, and is not one of guilt, but only a presumption of sanity. The whole law relating to crimes rests upon the presumption of sanity, and, if it does not exist in any particular case, such case is an exception, and the absence of sanity must be proved by the person asserting it. In conformity with that principle, one who tenders the issue of insanity, as a bar to punishment for an offense committed, must satisfactorily establish such insanity by a preponderance of the evidence. In other matters the accused has only the burden of raising a reasonable doubt in the minds of the jurors. It has long been the law of this state that: "Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable." Pen. Code, § 1105. In view of the general presumption of sanity, which abides until overthrown by the accused by a preponderance of evidence, the Legislature has deemed it wise to provide that the plea of insanity at the time of the commission of the offense must be made in a special manner, and that, unless the issue is raised in that way, it will be held to be waived for the purpose of the trial. It goes no further. If the plea may be waived, it would seem to logically follow that, for the purpose of the trial, the accused may be conclusively presumed to have been sane when he committed the act.

The appellant complains that upon the voir dire "not one question was asked by the court of any talesmen as to their views as to the defense of insanity." Aside from the fact that appellant's counsel might have examined the jurors on that subject, it seems that he is mistaken in making this assertion. The reporter's transcript shows that the court, on the voir dire, fully instructed the jurors as to the nature of the charge and the defenses the defendant was entitled to make, including the defense of insanity, and asked the jurors if, in view of a trial of the second issue—that of the insanity of the defendant—any of them had any objection to that defense, and if any of them "knew of any reason of any kind whatever why [they] could not act fairly and impartially." Subsequently, when the clerk of the court read the information and stated the plea of the defendant, the court very fully defined the issues to the jury, in the light of the two pleas. The court appears to have made it very clear at that time that, if the jury returned a verdict of guilty on the first issue, it would at once submit the issue of insanity to it.

[13] It is contended that the court and the district attorney were guilty of misconduct, the former in permitting, and the latter in demonstrating before the jury, after the evidence was closed, how many shells the pistol of the defendant would hold. As the pistol was already in evidence, it does not appear that any error resulted from the action complained of.

[14] In support of his plea that he was insane at the time of the homicide, and that the direct cause of the act was an attack of insanity suffered by him after his fiancée and he left San Francisco, appellant offered evidence showing that he had received a severe fracture of the skull by a fall from a tree when he was 10 years old, and that he had suffered from temporary insanity on many occasions. There is no question but that all those facts were established; but, a doctor who had the defendant under observation from the time of the homicide until the trial, during which period the defendant talked freely of his crime, testified that, during the greater part of that period the defendant was rational. The superintendent of one of the state hospitals for the insane, testifying as an expert, declared the defendant was sane when he committed the homicide. Under full and accurate instructions on the subject of insanity, as viewed in this state, when interposed by one seeking immunity from punishment for a crime committed, the jury found that the defendant was sane at the time he killed his sweetheart. The finding of the jury concludes the question.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHENK, J.; CURTIS, J.; RICHARDS, J.; LANGDON, J.; SEAWELL, J.

PRESTON, J. I dissent. I cannot reach the conviction that the majority opinion is sound. No authority is cited that supports it. In fact, I do not believe it covers accurately the points of attack upon the validity of the statutes. The first statute involved may be set out again as follows:

Section 1026 of the Penal Code, enacted in 1927, reads in part: "When a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity, and also joins with it another plea or pleas, he shall first be tried as if he had entered such other plea or pleas only, and in such trial he shall be conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time the offense is alleged to have been committed. If the jury shall find the defendant guilty, or if the defendant pleads only not guilty by reason of insanity, then the question whether the defendant was sane or insane at the time the offense was committed shall be promptly tried, either before the same jury or before a new jury, in the discretion of the court. In such trial the jury shall return a verdict either that the defendant was sane at the time the offense was committed or that he was insane at the time the offense was committed. * * *"

With this provision must stand or fall the amendment passed at the same time to section 1020 of the Penal Code, which amendment omits the word "and" formerly found between the words "third" and "fourth," in line 2, and adds after the said word "fourth" the words "and fifth," making the section as amended read as follows: "All matters of fact tending to establish a defense other than one specified in the third, fourth, and fifth subdivisions of section 1016, may be given in evidence under the plea of not guilty." The effect of said amendment is to provide that evidence of insanity at the time of commission of the act may not be given upon the trial under the plea of "not guilty." It should also be first noted that likewise, in 1927, section 1016 of the Penal Code was amended to provide for the interposition of this fifth plea, to wit, a special plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity."

As I understand the main opinion, it concludes that the steps inserted in the statutes by the amendments of 1927 were merely procedural, involving no invasion of the substantial rights of a defendant. It is my view that no legal basis can be found upon which to rest these provisions, and, moreover, that no beneficial results can flow from their practical operation. The conscience immediately rebels when the effect of these provisions is contemplated. They are no more nor less than provisions intended to hamper the free, full, and fair consideration of the cause by the jury, a cause, too, which involves the life or liberty of the citizen. The state, representing the whole people, can least afford to be cruel or unjust. These provisions savor of oppression. The rights of the state and the accused are not equal upon entering the temple of justice. The scales of justice are out of balance. A man may not be both guilty and innocent at the same time of a single charge. If the defendant, though insane or an idiot, must first be convicted, and then inquiry by the same jury is made as to his innocence, something is radically wrong. Such a law seems, on its face, clearly to be a step toward a return to the dark ages.

It will be noted that, on the first half of this bifurcated trial or hearing under this procedure, the jury may not stop by merely finding that the defendant physically did or did not do the prohibited act. The jury must go further and find the existence or absence of all the elements of the crime charged. The jury must convict the defendant before any verdict adjudicating sanity may be announced. Even though the jury believe the defendant to have been insane, and, for that matter, to be still insane, yet under its oath it must, in violation thereof, attribute sanity to him, convict him of the crime, report the finding to the court, and assent in open court to the result. Indeed, in a case of first degree murder the jury must also fix the punishment at life or death. The defendant, in other words, with condemnation resting upon his head, and in some instances with execution facing him, must submit the issue of his sanity to the judgment of his condemners, condemners who have already adjudged him sane upon a modicum only of the available evidence that should have been considered by them. I repeat that a sovereign must indeed be unjust who exacts a verdict of guilty by such a method. Surely this court has the power and is charged absolutely with the duty of preventing such a misuse of the machinery of justice.

But the legal infirmities of these provisions are easily discerned. They undertake to subdivide an indivisible integer, and therein lies their chief infirmity. In other words, the plea of not guilty necessarily includes within it the element of insanity. This is true not because of any legislative fiat, but because sanity is a fundamental element of all amenableness to punishment and is the prime ingredient of the criminal legislation of all civilized countries. See Pen. Code, §§ 20, 21, 26. There can be no malice, deliberation, or premeditation without sanity. There can be no criminal intent—indeed, no criminal act—where there is no sanity. If the jury, in ascertaining the intent of the defendant, may not consider the evidence of his insanity, it must follow that the Legislature has the power to dispense entirely with the element of intent. Yes, more is true: If the jury may not, before assessing guilt to the defendant, consider the fact that he is insane, not only may criminal intent be dispensed with, but the time-honored and almost sacred presumption of innocence may be set at naught by the lawmaking power. See State v. Strassburg, 60 Wash. 106, 110 P. 1020, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1216, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 917.

What think ye of a statute providing that, if A commits the physical act of killing B, he shall be declared by law guilty of murder in the first degree, and upon arrest of the person thought to be the criminal he shall be conclusively presumed to be the party wanted, but, after his conviction, he may for the first time have a hearing before the same jury as to whether or not he is the man who really committed the act? If the provisions under review are procedural only, so must it be in the situation I have supposed.

What a storm of protest would arise if the Legislature had provided that, on the first trial under this procedure, a defendant is conclusively presumed to have been insane. Would the prosecution have admitted then that this change was only procedural? Or suppose that the Legislature had provided that on the first trial sanity should be conclusively presumed, but on the second trial insanity should be conclusively presumed. This mere act of reforming procedure would in that case be an entire nullification of the whole criminal law. Would such a strangulation of justice be held procedural only? So a mere contemplation of the effect of these provisions proves more clearly than words could express that the procedure outlined by the statutes is a procedure which destroys for all practical purposes the defense of insanity and thereby destroys one of the principal rights of a person charged with the crime.

It has been said, however, that these changes are procedural because the verdict on the first trial is but a conditional verdict. Is it possible that motive or criminal intent exists or can exist conditionally or hypothetically? They are either present or absent. The admixture making up the compound of criminal intent is not capable of a hypothetical or conditional or presumed existence. It may not be presumed to exist, then reach a conclusion of guilty based on such presumption, and, while still holding to this conclusion, undertake to determine the existence of intent. This is "boot strap" lifting, petitio principii.

Would any one defend a statute which provided that a defendant must first be found guilty and then the same jury be required to retire and consider whether or not the defendant committed the act or was in fact the party wanted for the crime? This contention that the verdict is only conditional illuminates the positive conclusion that the statute is mischievous, unfair and unjust, and contrary to the basic principles underlying our criminal law. Again it is said that it is procedural because on the second trial the jury may pass upon the question of the defendant's sanity. We have already observed that there could be no criminal intent, malice, premeditation, or deliberation without the functioning of a sound but vicious mind. We have already observed that sanity is a necessary element of all crime. A defendant who is convicted has been thereby not only found guilty, but also found to be sane. This conclusion is inescapable and undeniable. The jury on the first hearing has therefore passed upon the defendant's sanity, determined the issue against him, and done so on a consideration of a portion only of the evidence that must be again passed upon at the second or final hearing.

Is a juror, who, after having heard the circumstances of the offense, and after having seen the defendant, and after having heard his testimony, has decided that he is sane, in any condition of mind to be impartial when sitting in review upon his own act solemnly performed under oath and reported to the court? I submit that no juror, whatever his degree of mentality or whatever his degree of theoretical fairness, could impartially rejudge the second issue. No human mind, with the elements we know to exist in it, could do so. That is why our statute (section 1073, subd. 2, Pen. Code) provides that a juror may be challenged "for the existence of a state of mind" in reference to the case, "which will prevent him from acting with entire impartiality and without prejudice to the substantial rights of either party." That is also the reason underlying section 1074 of the Penal Code (subdivision 4), which provides that a citizen may not sit as a juror if he has served on the grand jury which found the indictment, or on a coroner's jury which inquired into the death of a person whose death is the subject of the indictment or information; and subdivision 6 of the same section, which forbids a citizen to sit as a juror if he has been "one of a jury formerly sworn to try the same charge, and whose verdict was set aside, or which was discharged without a verdict, after the case was submitted to it." Yet under the statutes under review it is permissible for the jury which has actually convicted the defendant, and in this case sentenced him to death, to sit again upon the issue of sanity.

The contention is made that there is but one trial. If this is true, then why not dispose of both pleas at one hearing? Why seek to prejudice, shackle, and intimidate the jury by calling them into court in the midst of their deliberations and have them deliver a verdict which prejudges the undetermined issue involved? It is no parallel to this situation to say that the pleas of former acquittal, former conviction, or other special pleas may be heard separately, and therefore the plea of insanity may also be heard in like manner. This is untenable for the reason pointed out above, that insanity is a necessary ingredient of the plea of not guilty, whereas these special pleas rest upon their own separate foundations, and do not depend in any respect upon the plea of not guilty.

Reference is made to the case of Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 69, 14 N. W. 912, 46 Am. Rep. 26, wherein the court upheld the validity of a statute requiring that a defendant specially plead insanity, when relied on as a defense, the issue on the special plea to be first tried. That procedure is not constitutionally objectionable, and the reason is that, on that issue, every item of evidence admissible under the plea of not guilty may be heard and should be heard on the plea of insanity, and the result is that such a practice involves two separate, distinct, but full and complete, trials of the case. No defendant can constitutionally object to such procedure, nor could he object to a procedure which authorized a new jury for the issue of insanity if the whole field of guilt or innocence could again be traversed. That this duplicate procedure was found impracticable is evidenced by the fact that in 1911 the state of Wisconsin abandoned it by repeal of the statute.

However, in the case of French v. State, 85 Wis. 400, 55 N. W. 566, 21 L. R. A. 402, 39 Am. St. Rep. 855, where the jury which sat on the insanity hearing was unable to agree and was required to sit upon the plea of not guilty over the objections of defendant, the court of that same state had this to say: "The case stood precisely as it would if these statutes in relation to a special issue of insanity had not been enacted. The accused is placed on trial for the crime. His insanity is a question material to the case. A jury is forced upon him to try his case, all of whom had formed and expressed an opinion on the question whether he was or was not insane when he killed the deceased. Does the law suffer or sanction such a biased, partial, and prejudiced jury for the trial of one charged with the crime of murder? Any one would say that this would be a judicial outrage upon the legal and constitutional rights of the accused. And yet this is just such a case. The accused has the right to demand that he be tried before a fair and impartial jury. Constitution, article 1, section 7, provides that the accused shall have 'a speedy public trial before an impartial jury.' Besides this, the right of the accused to have a jury specially selected and impaneled to try him for the crime charged, and his right of challenge, were cut off and denied. It is obvious and self-evident that this jury was an unlawful one, and that the accused was deprived of his constitutional right of trial by jury. It has been uniformly held, and from early times in the history of jury trials for crime, that the grand jury that found the indictment, and each of one of them, is disqualified from sitting on the petit jury to try the accused."

This language is clearly applicable to a jury which the law requires to report their adverse conclusion before they finish their deliberations on the same issue. "Due process of law" is defined as follows: "By the law of the land is most clearly intended the general law; a law, which hears before it condemns; which proceeds upon inquiry, and renders judgment only after trial. The meaning is, that every citizen shall hold his life, liberty, property, and immunities, under the protection of the general rules which govern society. Everything which may pass under the form of an enactment, is not, therefore, to be considered the law of the land." Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (17 U. S.) 518, 581 (4 L. Ed. 629). Volumes might be quoted on this subject, but no clearer statement can be found than the above. Who can state that these provisions meet this test?

In thus making a judicial inquiry as to the existence of a fact, to wit, guilt or innocence, the court and jury are circumscribed by a legislative declaration which forbids the introduction of essential evidence upon that issue by declaring that a necessary element of guilt be conclusively presumed. Is this due process of law? Has the defendant in such case had his full day in court? May the Legislature thus commit an incursion into the domain of the courts? The answer universally given is "No." Even in civil cases, unless the Legislature is making substantive law and not merely rules of evidence, it may not make one fact conclusive evidence of another.

Says Mr. Wigmore (2 Wigmore on Evidence [2d Ed.] page 1057, § 1353): "The judicial function under the Constitution is to apply the law in controverted cases; to apply the law necessarily involves the determination of the facts; to determine the facts necessarily involves the investigation of evidence as a basis for that determination. To forbid investigation is to forbid the exercise of an indestructible judicial function. To make a rule of conclusive evidence, compulsory upon the Judiciary, is to attempt an infringement upon their exclusive province."

Again, Judge Cooley wrote: "But there are fixed bounds to the power of the legislature over this subject which cannot be exceeded. As to what shall be evidence, and which party shall assume the burden of proof in civil cases, its authority is practically unrestricted, so long as its regulations are impartial and uniform; but it has no power to establish rules which, under pretense of regulating the presentation of evidence, go so far as altogether to preclude a party from exhibiting his rights. Except in those cases which fall within the familiar doctrine of estoppel at the common law, or other cases resting upon the like reasons, it would not, we apprehend, be in the power of the legislature to declare that a particular item of evidence should preclude a party from establishing his rights in opposition to it. In judicial investigations the law of the land requires an opportunity for a trial; and there can be no trial if only one party is suffered to produce his proofs." 2 Cooley's Constitutional Limitations (8th Ed.) Carrington, pp. 768, 769.

In State v. Beach, 147 Ind. 74, 79, 46 N. E. 145, 146 (36 L. R. A. 179), the rule, with a superabundance of authority to sustain it, has been stated as follows: "We think it clear that the legislature has the power to prescribe rules of evidence and methods of proof. A law which would, in effect, exclude the evidence of a party, and thereby deny him the right to be heard, would deprive him of due process of law. A law which provides that certain facts are conclusive proof of guilt would be unconstitutional, as also would one which makes an act prima facie evidence of crime which has no relation to a criminal act, and no tendency whatever to establish a criminal act. If, however, the legislature in prescribing the rules of evidence in any class of cases, leaves a party a fair opportunity to establish his case or defense, and give in evidence to the court or jury all the facts legitimately bearing on the issues in the cause to be considered and weighed by the tribunal trying the same, such acts of the legislature are not unconstitutional."

In Vega S. S. Co. v. Consolidated Elevator Co., 75 Minn. 308, 312, 77 N. W. 973, 974 (43 L. R. A. 843, 74 Am. St. Rep. 484), the court in discussing the legality of a statute that made conclusive the certificate of a state weighmaster, said: "But is it competent for the legislature to make the weight thus ascertained absolutely conclusive? We are of the opinion that it is not. The legislature cannot in this manner provide for the arbitrary exercise of power, so as to deprive a person of his day in court to vindicate his rights. And the law which closes his mouth absolutely when he comes into court is the same, in effect, as the law which deprives him of his day in court [citing many cases]."

An early annotator stated the rule as follows: "In criminal prosecutions, we apprehend that under no circumstances can the legislature create a conclusive presumption of guilt, nor deprive the accused of the right to offer proof of his innocence, nor require the jury to disregard such proof, nor to give effect to any presumption of the truth of which they are not satisfied. Voght v. State, 124 Ind. 358 [24 N. E. 680]; State v. Beswick, 13 R. I. 211, 43 Am. Rep. 26." Note: People v. Cannon, 36 Am. St. Rep. 689 (139 N. Y. 32, 34 N. E. 759).

A case often cited and frequently distinguished, but at no time overthrown, is Hammond v. State, 78 Ohio St. 15, 84 N. E. 416, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 906, 125 Am. St. Rep. 684, 14 Ann. Cas. 732, a case where the court had under consideration a statutory provision as follows: "The character of the trust or combination alleged may be established by proof of its general reputation as such." The court, in declaring it invalid, said: "It may be conceded that, within proper constitutional limits, the legislature has the general power to prescribe rules of evidence and methods of proof,—to determine what may or may not be competent evidence in a particular case,—and, with certain qualifications, has, perhaps, the power to enact and prescribe that in criminal prosecutions certain facts, when duly established, shall be held to be presumptive or prima facie evidence of guilt. But this power is not without its limitations, one of which is that the legislature may not arbitrarily create a conclusive presumption of guilt against the accused, as to any element of the crime charged, by giving artificial and evidential force and effect to certain facts which otherwise would be wholly irrelevant and inconclusive. * * * Thus, the statute in terms makes proof of the general reputation of the trust or combination, not only competent evidence against the accused, but sufficient and conclusive evidence of the unlawful and criminal character of the combination to which he may belong. This, in effect, is to deprive the accused of the protection of the cardinal presumption that every person is to be presumed innocent until he is legally proven guilty,—a presumption which attends the accused throughout his trial, and has reference and relation to every fact that must be established in order to prove his guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. If the general assembly, in order to make conviction easier under this act, can rightfully provide that one of the essential and constituent elements of the crime charged, viz., the unlawful character of the trust or combination, may be shown and made certain by proof of common rumor or general reputation, and the guilt of the accused be thus established, it is difficult to see why it may not, with equal right, provide that murder, arson, or any other crime may be thus established by proof that the person accused thereof is generally reputed to be the person who committed the same—a proposition at once so obnoxious and repugnant to the plainest principles of reason and justice that none would yield assent to it. * * * To concede to the legislature the power to provide, in prosecutions under the act here in question, that the unlawful character of the combination to which the defendant belongs may be established—that is, made certain—by proof of its general reputation as such, is to grant that the legislature has power to, and may, in a criminal case, prescribe a rule of conclusive evidence as to a vital and controlling fact that shall be binding alike upon court and jury. This the general assembly may not do."

Mr. Justice Lurton, in the case of Mobile, etc., R. R. v. Turnipseed, 219 U. S. 35, 42, 43, 31 S. Ct. 136, 137 (55 L. Ed. 78, 32 L. R. A. [N. S.] 226, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 463), summed the whole situation up in a single paragraph: "The law of evidence is full of presumptions, either of fact or law. The former are, of course, disputable, and the strength of any inference of one fact from proof of another depends upon the generality of the experience upon which it is founded. * * * Legislation providing that proof of one fact shall constitute prima facie evidence of the main fact in issue is but to enact a rule of evidence, and quite within the general power of government. Statutes, national and state, dealing with such methods of proof in both civil and criminal cases abound, and the decisions upholding them are numerous. * * * That a legislative presumption of one fact from evidence of another may not constitute a denial of due process of law or a denial of the equal protection of the law it is only essential that there shall be some rational connection between the fact proved and the ultimate fact presumed, and that the inference of one fact from proof of another shall not be so unreasonable as to be a purely arbitrary mandate. So, also, it must not, under guise of regulating the presentation of evidence, operate to preclude the party from the right to present his defense to the main fact thus presumed."

A recent annotator put the question in this form: "The general proposition is supported by many cases that a legislature cannot constitutionally make one fact conclusive evidence of another material fact in controversy, if the former is not, in and of itself, by virtue of its own force, conclusive." 51 A. L. R., page 1149. See Griffin v. State, 142 Ga. 636, 83 S. E. 540, L. R. A. 1915C, 716, Ann. Cas. 1916C, 80.

It will be noted that the above quotations from the opinion in the case of Hammond v. State, supra, bring vividly into play the further evident proposition that to conclusively presume any ingredient of crime is to clash squarely with the presumption of innocence. The defendant in such case enters upon his trial not surrounded by this ancient and wise safeguard but must yield that advantage in part at least to a presumption of an element of guilt which, though he may be able to do so, the strong arm of the law forbids him an opportunity to combat.

This is no time or place for a lengthy dissertation upon this presumption, but it may be well remembered that its object is to protect the innocent and not to shield the guilty. It is a presumption of both law and fact. It was present in the Roman law, and some authorities state that it marks back through Sparta and Athens to the Book of Deuteronomy. It was known to be a part of the common law as early as 1802. In 1817 Lord Gillies, in McKinley's Case (33 St. Tr. 275, 506), in speaking of this presumption said, among other things: "It is a maxim which ought to be inscribed in indelible characters in the heart of every judge and juryman; and I was happy to hear from Lord Hermand he is inclined to give full effect to it. To overturn this, there must be legal evidence of guilt, carrying home a degree of conviction short only of absolute certainty."

Blackstone maintained (1753–1765) that: "The law holds that it is better that ten guilty persons escape than that one innocent suffer." 4 Bl. Com. c. 27, margin page 358, ad finem.

It is the strongest presumption known to the law. It is as much a part of our Constitution, both state and national, as if it were written therein in letters of burnished gold. This fact has been assumed many times in this state and in one case at least expressly stated (In re Wong Hane, 108 Cal. 680, 41 P. 693, 49 Am. St. Rep. 138). We presume that no one would contend that this presumption could be overthrown by any statutory enactment. Prima facie evidence or presumptions may be declared to exist where they flow logically from certain facts, but the presumption of innocence is ever present even in the deliberations of the jury and may alone and of itself sometimes avail to acquit the defendant.

This court should be quick and decisive in its action to declare anew our Bill of Rights and to preserve the essential attributes of a jury trial as known to the common law and as preserved by our Constitution. Article 1, §§ 7 and 13, Const. These provisions are so obnoxious to the spirit of our institutions that the blood of Abel "crieth from the ground" for vindication.

The question of the degree of insanity that shall constitute a defense of crime is not here involved and no reason exists to question the established rule on this subject. People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 P. 124; People v. Gilberg, 197 Cal. 306, 314, 24 P. 1000; People v. Sloper, 198 Cal. 238, 245, 244 P. 362.

It should here be noted that the striking down of these provisions will in no wise hamper, but on the contrary will greatly aid the administration of the criminal law. The pleas, and the effect thereof, provided for in section 1016 of the Penal Code, will remain intact and fully effective. People v. Hickman (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 909. Hereafter a plea of not guilty and the special plea of not guilty by reason of insanity will be tried at the same time before a single jury as in the states of Wisconsin and Washington, and perhaps other states, and the jury may, and doubtless will, under all proper circumstances, be required to find on the special plea. Defendant will, in case of a verdict that he was insane at the time of the commission of the offense, be dealt with as provided in the remaining portion of said section 1026 of the Penal Code.

It may also be said that it is not every double trial that would entitle a defendant to reversal of the judgment of conviction—only those cases where it can be seen that prejudice has been suffered by him. If there be no evidence produced upon the second hearing that would warrant or justify a finding that the defendant was insane, then, of course, no error would appear, but in the case before us there was substantial evidence, in addition to the circumstances of the case, which would have supported the verdict that defendant was insane at the time he committed the act; therefore prejudicial error appeared in the case before us.

It may here also be said that we have not presented this dissent upon the ground that the jury, in assessing the punishment of death in this case, should have been allowed to receive all or a portion of the evidence admissible upon the issue of insanity in order that it might determine in a just manner the question of punishment. I prefer to rest my conclusion upon a broader ground and content myself with citing that situation as additional evidence of the inhumanity of the provisions under consideration. The judgment should be reversed.

PEOPLE v. LEONG FOOK. (Cr. 3143.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 27, 1928.

1. Criminal law ⚷15—Court must endeavor to reconcile changes in statute as to plea of not guilty by reason of insanity with older procedural provisions not expressly affected, implied repeal not being favored (Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1017, 1020, as amended, and § 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149).

In construing Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1017, 1020, as amended, and section 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149, relative to plea of not guilty by reason of insanity in prosecution for murder, court must endeavor so far as reasonably possible to reconcile changes with older procedural provisions which are not expressly affected thereby, under rule that amendment or repeal by implication is not favored.

2. Criminal law ⚷623—Murder prosecution remains single cause and trial single trial notwithstanding separate hearing on issue of insanity (Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1017, 1020, as amended, and § 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149).

Trial of prosecution for murder in which defendant interposed pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity, under Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1017, 1020, as amended, and section 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149, held to remain single cause, and trial was single trial notwithstanding separate hearings on such pleas.

3. Homicide ⚷27—Insanity of murderer does not diminish quality of homicide as unlawful act.

Proof of insanity of person committing homicide does not in any degree diminish quality of homicide as unlawful act.

4. Homicide ⚷151(2)—Defendant must prove plea of insanity in murder case, after prosecution has shown commission of crime by him (Pen. Code, § 1105; Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1963, subds. 2, 3, 1957, 1959, 1961); "mitigation."

In prosecution for murder, burden of affirmatively establishing plea of insanity is on defendant where prosecution has shown commission of homicide by defendant, under Pen. Code, § 1105, relative to proof for purpose of "mitigation," which means reduction, diminishing, or lessening amount of penalty or punishment, and under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1963, subds. 2, 3, 1957, 1959, 1961, citing Words and Phrases, 2d Series, "Mitigation."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Mitigation.]

5. Jury ⚷31(11)—Statute relative to separate trial of issue of insanity in murder case held not to invade right of trial by jury (Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1017, 1020, as amended, and § 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149).

Provision of Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1017, 1020, as amended, and section 1026, as added by St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149, providing for separate hearings in prosecution for murder under pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity, held not invasion of right of trial by jury, in view of Pen. Code, §§ 21, 187, 188, 190, 1019, 1096, and Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1961, 1962.

6. Criminal law ⚷718—Homicide ⚷179—Evidence of insanity and argument thereto are improper during hearing on plea of "not guilty," where defendant also pleaded insanity.

In prosecution for murder in which defendant entered pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity, exclusion of evidence as to insanity and denial of right to present argument on such issue during hearing on plea of not guilty held not error.

7. Criminal law ⚷291—In murder case, defendant cannot plead "once in jeopardy" at conclusion of hearing and return of verdict on plea of not guilty and at inception of further hearing on insanity plea.

In prosecution for murder in which defendant entered pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity, defendant held to have no right to plead "once in jeopardy" at conclusion of hearing and return of verdict on plea of not guilty and at inception of further hearing on plea of insanity.

8. Jury ⚷148(3)—Jury need not be resworn to try insanity issue after hearing on plea of not guilty (Code Civ. Proc. § 604).

In prosecution for murder in which defendant entered pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity, cause was single notwithstanding separate hearings on the two pleas, and, jury having been sworn, under Code Civ. Proc. § 604, at inception of cause, it was not necessary that jury be resworn to try issue of insanity.

Preston, J., dissenting.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Leong Fook was convicted of murder in the first degree with sentence of death, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Russell & Heid, Glenn L. Moran, and Calvin L. Russell, all of Tulare, for appellant.

RICHARDS, J. This appeal is from a judgment of conviction of the defendant upon a charge of murder and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. Upon the arraignment of the defendant upon such charge, had upon March 28, 1928, he waived time to plead and entered his pleas as follows: "(a) Not guilty as charged in the information; (b) not guilty as charged in the information by reason of insanity." The cause came on for trial upon April 17, 1928, whereupon his counsel moved the court to permit the defendant to place the defense of insanity before the jury upon the trial of the defendant upon his plea of "not guilty." This motion the trial court denied. The request of the defendant to have his plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity" presented to the jury at the inception of the trial upon the defendant's plea of "not guilty" was also denied. The trial of the cause upon the defendant's plea of "not guilty" was then proceeded with before the court and jury, during the course of which all of the facts and circumstances surrounding and for a considerable period of time preceding and also succeeding the commission of the homicide were exhaustively, and without any objection from either side, made the subject of inquiry, during the course of which the defendant himself volunteered to take the witness stand and testify fully as to his relations with the husband, family, and friends of the murdered woman, during the giving of which testimony he denied the commission of the crime. At the conclusion of the testimony upon the defendant's plea of "not guilty," his counsel requested permission of the court to argue the question of the defendant's insanity to the jury, which request was refused by the trial court. Thereupon the cause, having been otherwise argued, was submitted to the jury, which, after instructions by the court, retired and presently returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree without recommendation. Thereupon the trial court proposed to proceed with the further hearing of the cause upon the defendant's plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity," to which the defendant objected, and in support of such objection, offered the plea of "once in jeopardy." The trial court overruled such objection and denied said plea, and in so doing informed counsel for the defendant that the burden of supporting the plea of insanity rested upon the defendant, and inquired whether the defendant desired to offer any such evidence, to which his counsel responded that he did not, declaring it to be the defendant's intent to stand strictly upon his constitutional rights at that time. In this state of the case the prosecution stated that it also had no evidence to offer; and thereupon, and under certain instructions of the trial court touching the plea of insanity which are not herein assailed, the cause was resubmitted to the same jury upon the defendant's plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity"; whereupon the jury retired and presently returned a verdict finding that the defendant was sane at the time the offense charged in the information was committed. Upon the defendant's motion for a new trial it was made to affirmatively appear that while the jury at the outset of the trial was sworn to well and truly try the cause in conformity with the provisions of section 1046 of the Penal Code, the jury was not resworn at the time the trial upon the defendant's plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity" was entered upon. The court denied the defendant's motion for a new trial upon this as well as upon the other grounds urged, and the judgment and sentence followed, from which this appeal has been taken.

We are thus brought to a consideration of the nature, interpretation, and effect of those amendments to the Penal Code which were enacted by the Legislature in 1927 (St. 1927, pp. 1148, 1149) and are embraced in sections 1016, 1017, 1020, and 1026 of said Code. In order to proceed logically with such consideration it is necessary to refer briefly to the state of the law regulating the procedure of criminal trials prior to the enactment of these amendments to the Penal Code. By the provisions of section 1016 of said Code as it read prior to its said amendment, four pleas were permitted to a defendant at the time of his arraignment. These were "guilty," "not guilty," "former conviction or acquittal" and "once in jeopardy." Upon entering a plea of "not guilty," the defendant put in issue every material allegation of the indictment or information. Pen. Code, § 1019. Upon such plea and during the ensuing trial, the defendant, in all crimes to which the existence of a criminal intent was essential, was presumed to be sane until the contrary was established by a preponderance of evidence. People v. Williams, 184 Cal. 590, 593, 194 P. 1019. Upon such plea and trial the defendant was presumed to be innocent until the contrary was proved. Pen. Code, § 1096. While this presumption of innocence prevailed over many of the other disputable presumptions, such as those referred to in Hunter v. Hunter, 111 Cal. 261, 43 P. 756, 31 L. R. A. 411, 52 Am. St. Rep. 180, it did not prevail over such conclusive presumptions as are referred to in sections 1961 and 1962 of the Code of Civil Procedure; nor did the presumption of innocence prevail over the presumption that every person is sane, since, under the provisions of section 1105 of the Penal Code in trials for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving insanity as an excuse for the homicide devolved upon the defendant, and such evidence must have been sufficient to overcome this presumption in order to enable the defendant to rely upon the presumption of innocence for an acquittal based thereon. People v. Harris, 169 Cal. 53, 69, 145 P. 520. Upon a trial for murder, which consisted in the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought (Pen. Code, § 187) and which required proof of a deliberate intention unlawfully to take away the life of a fellow creature (Pen. Code, § 188), such intention was to be manifested by the circumstances connected with the offense (Pen. Code, § 21), and the prosecution was not only entitled to show all of such circumstances for the purpose of proving such intent, but the defendant was also entitled to have admitted in evidence all of the facts and circumstances attending the commission of the homicide for the purpose not only of disproving intent, but also, in all cases wherein murder of the first degree was charged, for the purpose of mitigation (Pen. Code, § 1105). The term "mitigation" as used in the above section of the Penal Code has a well-defined meaning. It means "reduction, diminution, lessening of the amount of a penalty or punishment." 2 Bouvier's Law Dictionary, Rawle's third revision, page 2234: "Mitigation." Or, as more fully stated in Black's Law Dictionary (2d Ed.): "Mitigating circumstances are such as do not constitute a justification or excuse of the offense in question, but which in fairness and mercy may be considered as extenuating or reducing the degree of moral culpability." See, also, "Words and Phrases," Second Series, "Mitigation."

In all cases of first degree murder it was and still is provided by section 190 of the Penal Code that "every person guilty of murder in the first degree shall suffer death, or confinement in the state prison for life, at the discretion of the jury trying the same." In commenting upon this provision of the Penal Code in the case of People v. Perry, 195 Cal. 623, 635, 234 P. 890, 897, this court declared that: "It is the jury's right and duty to consider and weigh all the facts and circumstances attending the commission of the offense, and from these and such reasons as may appear to it upon a consideration of the whole situation, determine whether or not in the exercise of its discretion, life imprisonment should be imposed rather than the infliction of the death penalty." The foregoing statement of the law was quoted and expressly approved in People v. Hall, 199 Cal. 451, 456, 249 P. 859, and it amounts to no more than a restatement of the settled law in this state as announced in the early case of People v. Jamarillo, 57 Cal. 111, 114. In the case of People v. Witt, 170 Cal. 104, 111, 148 P. 928, the following limitation was placed upon the extent of the application of the foregoing rule in a case wherein the defense of insanity was not presented or relied upon by the defendant and wherein the evidence offered and refused admission did not consist of any of the facts and circumstances connected with the commission of the offense charged, but consisted wholly of evidence relating to the character and previous habits of the defendant. This court held that such evidence was not admissible for the sole purpose of enabling the jury to assess the punishment, in the event of conviction, at death or life imprisonment. This conclusion was adopted by the District Court of Appeal in People v. Golsh, 63 Cal. App. 612–613, 219 P. 456, wherein the defense of insanity had been expressly disclaimed by the defendant. It will thus be seen that the rule as stated in the two foregoing cases, while in no way impinging upon the doctrine laid down in People v. Perry, supra, may have an important bearing upon cases to which the recent amendments to section 1016 et seq. of the Penal Code may be given application.

[1-4] The foregoing statement of the law as it previously existed governing the trial of cases wherein the defendant was charged with murder in the first degree has also an important bearing upon the question as to what changes in principle or procedure have been effected by the foregoing recent amendments of the Penal Code. It is to be noted that these amendments and changes in said Code do not expressly purport to amend or repeal any other of the provisions of the Penal Code than those thus immediately amended or changed. In view of the well-settled and very salutary rule that the amendment or repeal of sections of our Codes, and especially of our Penal Code, by implication is not to be favored and is only to be tolerated where no reasonable basis for harmonizing the new with the older enactments can be found, it becomes our duty to endeavor so far as is reasonably possible to reconcile these new changes in our Penal Code with those older procedural provisions which are not expressly affected thereby.

In such endeavor and in the entire absence of any expressed intent on the part of the Legislature in the enactment of these recent changes in the procedure of criminal trials to essay or to accomplish any other, greater, or more radical change in our long-established criminal procedure than that to which these amendments expressly relate, we are constrained to hold that the cause at issue between the people of the state and the defendant as presented by the indictment or information and by the defendant's several allowable pleas thereto, in so far as the same is affected by these amendments, remains a single cause and the trial thereof a single trial. We are enforced in this conclusion not only by the aforesaid principle which frowns upon repeals by implication, but also by a consideration of the plea of insanity as a defense in criminal causes involving intent and deliberation. It is a canon of the law of crimes existing from antiquity and having its foundation in judicial experience that all persons charged with the commission of offenses against the law are presumed to be sane to the extent of intending the ordinary consequences of their voluntary acts. This presumption, which has been embodied in our law by virtue of the provisions of subdivisions 2 and 3 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is made a form of evidence by the terms of sections 1957, 1959, and 1961 of the same Code; and under the latter section this presumption, unless controverted by other evidence, is made conclusive upon the jury trying such a cause. By the terms of section 1105 of the Penal Code it is provided that upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances which excuse it devolves upon the defendant. The defense of insanity existing in the defendant at the time of the commission of the homicide is a defense which does not in most cases have its foundation in the facts and circumstances attending its commission, but depends, as a rule, upon the proof of antecedent facts and conditions which serve to show such a mental state as would make the defendant incapable of exercising that degree of criminal intent which would render his homicidal act a crime. To quote the apt words of Danforth, J., in the leading case of State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574, 583. in dealing with the plea and proof of insanity: "Here as everywhere in the law, sanity is assumed and treated as an essential attribute of humanity. The indictment follows the statute, setting out all the acts deemed essential to the crime, but omitting all reference to the capacity of the accused. Of all that is set out in the indictment he is presumed innocent and that must be proved and nothing else * * * unless he interposes some defense other than a sane denial of the allegations against him. A simple plea of not guilty puts in issue the allegations and only the allegations in the indictment, and as to them the prosecution has the affirmative. But if the accused would put in issue any other allegation, any question as to his capacity or responsibility, he must do it by an affirmative statement. If he puts in the plea of insanity he assumes the affirmative, he changes the issue. * * * It is true it may be resorted to in connection with the plea of not guilty, but it is not and cannot be a part of it. The plea of insanity is and of necessity must be a plea of confession and avoidance." The foregoing language of Judge Danforth is quoted with approval in Wigmore on Evidence in dealing with the affirmative nature of the plea of insanity and of the burden of its proof. 5 Wigmore on Evidence (2d Ed.), page 484.

It is thus made clear that the presentation and proof of insanity in the person committing the homicide do not in any degree diminish the quality of the homicide as an unlawful act. The homicide in question may have every attribute of beastliness. It may have been conceived, attended, and executed with the craftiness and cunning of the fox, the bloodthirstiness and lying-in-wait of the tiger, the cruelty and cowardliness of the hyena, the cold ferocity of the most secretive and deadly of serpents; it may exhibit in its attendant facts and circumstances not a single redeeming incident entitling the defendant to offer any plea for mercy, and yet, if he or those who would save him from punishment are able affirmatively to prove by preponderating evidence a state of mind in the defendant amounting to a lack of capacity to form a criminal intent at the time of the commission of the homicide, which is the test of sanity, he cannot lawfully be found guilty of murder. The proofs of a state of mind in the defendant at the time of the homicide amounting to legal insanity lie in most instances peculiarly within the knowledge of those who by ties of blood or of past association are most familiar with the defendant's mental qualities and deficiencies, and it is for this reason that by the long-established law the burden of affirmatively establishing the plea of insanity has devolved upon the defendant after a time in the progress of the cause when his plea or pleas have been presented, when the presumption of sanity has attached, and when the prosecution has shown the commission of the homicide by the defendant. Pen. Code, § 1105. It has thus been established as a result of long judicial experience that the plea and proofs of insanity are not only such as the defendant must affirmatively offer, but that they are also such as, in the nature of things, and as a rule, are separable from the facts and circumstances attending the commission of the homicide. The plea of insanity as well as the proofs which support it more nearly resembles the plea and proofs of "once in jeopardy" or of "prior conviction or acquittal" than they do, for instance, the plea and proofs of self-defense, in the twofold aspects that, first, the former pleas and the proof thereof do not tend in any degree to diminish the unlawfulness of the homicide, nor, second, do they relate to the facts and circumstances of its commission; while the plea and proofs of self-defense are inextricably interwoven with the facts and circumstances of the homicide, and, if sufficiently established, destroy utterly its unlawful attribute. The Legislature of this state, as of most other states, has for the foregoing reason provided that the pleas of "once in jeopardy" and of "former conviction or acquittal" must, if relied upon by the defendant, be made separately, and are not provable under the plea of "not guilty." Pen. Code, §§ 1016, 1017.

In the state of New York, from which these sections of our Penal Code have been bodily taken, and in the case of People v. Connor, 142 N. Y. 130, 36 N. E. 807, it has been held that when the defendant tendered the plea of "not guilty" and also the separate plea of "former conviction" it was within the discretion of the trial court, even in the absence of an express statute, to order the trial first upon the special plea and, after the hearing and finding of the jury upon that plea, to proceed before the same jury upon the defendant's plea of "not guilty," the court holding that the proceedings upon both issues constituted but one continuous trial; and further holding that the application of the defendant, after the finding and verdict of the jury against him upon his special plea, for permission to re-examine the members of the jury before proceeding upon his plea of "not guilty" as to their qualifications to further act as jurors in view of their determination against him upon his special plea, was properly denied. The court said: "There was but one indictment and one charge, and the defendant's pleas constituted his answer and defense to the accusation. He was entitled to but one trial and could demand but one jury. The order in which the issues should be disposed of was a matter in the discretion of the court, which had power to direct them to be tried separately or together; and whatever course was adopted the trial must be one continuous proceeding, and the rights of the defendant with respect to the examination of the jury were the same as if the plea of 'not guilty' alone appeared upon the record. He had no more right to stop the trial while in progress in order to ascertain the effect which the evidence given had upon the minds of the jury than he would have had if there was only a plea of the general issue." In a recent case decided in the state of Wisconsin, and which involves a direct application of the foregoing principles to the plea of insanity, the Supreme Court of that state was called upon to interpret and apply an act of its Legislature which provided that a defendant in a criminal action, who claimed that he was insane at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, should be required to plead his insanity separately but with the plea of "not guilty," and which further provided that the issue upon a plea of insanity should be first tried by the jury impaneled to try the cause and that the verdict of the jury upon that plea should be taken before the case was tried upon the plea of not guilty, and that if the verdict of the jury upon such former plea was that the defendant was not insane at the time of the commission of the offense, the finding of the jury to that effect should be final and conclusive upon the question of the insanity of the defendant upon his trial upon the plea of "not guilty." Upon an appeal by the defendant upon a charge of murder from a judgment of conviction arrived at in pursuance of the procedure provided for in said statute, practically every question which is presented in the instant case was considered and decided by said court in its decision of the case of Bennett v. State of Wisconsin, 57 Wis. 69, 14 N. W. 912, 46 Am. Rep. 26, to which we shall later and more particularly refer.

[5] We have thus far been considering the state of the law as contained in our Penal Code and interpreted by the courts of this and other jurisdictions prior to the recent changes effected by the amendment or enactment of sections 1016, 1017, 1020, and 1026 of the Penal Code. The substance of these amendments and changes is to provide for the addition of a new and special plea to those already enumerated in sections 1016 and 1017 of the Penal Code, viz. the plea of "not guilty by reason of insanity." In so far at least it could hardly be seriously contended, in view of the principles and course of judicial decision above referred to, that in so providing the Legislature has to any extent invaded the constitutional rights of any defendant in a cause wherein he may be entitled to avail himself of such special plea. The defendant herein made no such contention when required at his trial to present such special plea, and he urges no such contention upon this appeal. It was, however, further provided by the addition of section 1026 to the Penal Code that: "'When a defendant pleads not guilty by reason of insanity and also joins with it another plea or pleas, he shall first be tried as if he had entered such other plea or pleas."

Thus far also we are unable to discover any vital or constitutional defect in the changed order of procedure provided for in the portion of the new section 1026 above quoted, since, if our foregoing reasoning in this opinion is correct in the conclusion that but a single cause and but a single trial was before the trial court for its full determination and that the body of our criminal law in this respect has not been changed by these recent enactments, and if our conclusions are also correct to the effect that the plea of insanity is a separable plea, that the burden of making the proofs in support of such plea is a burden affirmatively cast upon the defendant presenting it, and that in the ordinary and usual course of judicial experience the proofs to be proffered in support of such plea are such as exist antecedently to the commission of the homicide and are thus disconnected with the facts and circumstances which immediately precede, attend, and follow its commission, and if we are further correct in our foregoing conclusion that the plea and proof of insanity existing in the state of the defendant at the time of his commission of a homicide, even if fully established, in no degree operates to diminish the unlawful quality of the homicidal act, then it seems to us to logically follow that it would be competent in the Legislature to provide for separate hearings in the course of the single trial of a single cause involving such separate pleas, issues, and proofs, and that the order of such separated hearings would be a matter lying entirely within the discretion of the Legislature, invested as it is with the power to provide by law for the procedural courses of criminal trials within the limits of the constitutional rights of persons accused of crime. We are unable to perceive that the constitutional right of trial by jury has been invaded by the procedural changes in the Code thus far considered, our more extended views upon this branch of the question being expressed in the case of People v. Troche (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 767, this day decided. We desire, however, at this point to express our full approval of the decision of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin in the case of Bennett v. State, supra, as to the singleness of the cause and trial and as to the point that the jury, to which has been submitted one of the separable pleas and issues which arise in the course of a criminal trial, and which renders a verdict thereon, is not thereby, under proper instructions as to their legal and limited duty, disqualified to hear and determine successively the issues presented by the defendant's other and separate pleas. We have already quoted to the same effect the decision of the New York Court of Appeals in the case of People v. Connor, supra.

[6] We come now to consider the further provision of the recent amendments to the Penal Code embodied in section 1026 thereof, to the effect that, upon the trial of a defendant upon his plea of "not guilty," who has pleaded "not guilty by reason of insanity," he shall be conclusively presumed to have been sane at the time the offense is alleged to have been committed. As we have already seen, the presumption of sanity is inherent in criminal trials, and while at the outset of such trials under our procedure, in the course thereof, prior to the recent changes therein, it was a disputable presumption, it could only be disputed by the defendant upon his affirmative assumption of the burden of disproving it under his general plea of "not guilty"; and if he either repudiated such plea or refused to assume such burden the presumption of his sanity became conclusive upon the jury trying the cause. Code Civ. Proc., § 1961. When, therefore, the Legislature saw fit to limit the defendant's plea of "not guilty" so that it no longer included the defense of insanity and hence the right of the defendant in the absence of such special plea to offer under the limited plea of "not guilty" his proof of such defense, and when the Legislature further provided that the right of the defendant to make such defense should be preserved to him in the form of a special plea and that his proofs in support of such defense should be heard in a separate hearing before a jury, the effect of such changed procedure would logically be to render the presumption of sanity conclusive even in the absence of the provision in the new section 1026 making it so, for the very reason that proof to rebut it was no longer presentable under the recently limited plea of "not guilty," and we are thus brought back to the original question as to the power of the Legislature to provide for a separation of the plea of insanity from the plea of not guilty and for a separate trial of such separated issue; and we have already held that the Legislature possessed such power. It follows irresistibly that, when the defendant in the instant case demanded of the trial court the right to offer evidence upon his plea of insanity during the trial upon his limited plea of "not guilty," he was doing nothing more than demanding the right to present evidence upon an issue which his plea of "not guilty" had not presented and which was not at that stage of the trial before the court or jury; and the same reasoning applies to the demand of the defendant of the right to present argument before the jury upon the issue of insanity during the hearing upon the issue of "not guilty"; and this is peculiarly true by reason of the fact that no evidence of any kind had up to that time been presented upon which such an argument could have been predicated. The defendant had been permitted, and properly permitted, to offer and have received in evidence all of the facts and circumstances relating to, attending, and succeeding the commission of the homicide, and he was entitled to present and was not prevented from presenting to the jury those facts and circumstances with every inference or argument which might be drawn therefrom touching whatever defenses are now available to a defendant upon the plea of not guilty and also as were formerly and are still presentable in mitigation of punishment. The trial court therefore, assuming our previous conclusions to be sound, committed no error in denying the foregoing two requests on the part of counsel for the defendant.

[7] The defendant's next contention was that he had a right to plead "once in jeopardy" at the conclusion of the hearing and return of the verdict upon his plea of not guilty and at the inception of the further hearing upon his plea of insanity. We have recently held that there is no merit in this contention for the reasons stated in People v. Coen (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 1074.

[8] The defendant's next and final contention is that the jury was not resworn to try the issue of insanity. At the inception of the cause the members of the jury, after having been duly impaneled, were administered the usual oath in the form prescribed by section 604 of the Code of Civil Procedure. This oath expressly covered the cause or matter at issue between the people and the defendant, and hence necessarily covered each and all of the various issues thereof to be successively presented to the consideration of the jury. The cause being single, the administration of no further oath during its progress was required.

We deem it timely to restate in conclusion certain of our foregoing deductions for the purpose of clarifying the procedural courses of jury trials under the changed scope and order of the issues presentable in view of the aforesaid recent amendments to the Penal Code. Under the present plea of "not guilty" and upon the hearing thereon, the consideration of the jury is expressly limited to the determination as to whether the defendant committed the homicide in question, and as to whether he is to be held responsible therefor if sane at the time of its commission, and as to the mitigation, if any, of his punishment in the event of a finding of guilty upon such plea. It would be the duty of the trial court, either at the inception of the hearing upon that issue or at the conclusion of the evidence and argument thereon, as was done in the instant case, to fully instruct the jury as to their limited functions upon such plea. We must assume that a fair and impartial jury of intelligent men and women would obey such instructions and would therefore hold in reserve their ultimate finding upon the issue of the defendant's sanity until that separate issue and the evidence supporting it had, in the prescribed order of the trial, been committed to it for determination. We are not to assume that such a jury will cease to be fair and impartial as the cause progresses upon its successive issues, but, on the contrary, we must assume, in the absence of any other showing, that the jury has retained its attitude of fairness and impartiality under the changed procedure as before until the whole cause, submitted to it successively for its consideration, has been determined. There is no showing that such was not the precise situation in the instant case, nor was there any evidence presented or, so far as the record before us discloses, presentable, tending in any degree to show that this defendant at the time of his commission of this brutal and atrociously cruel murder was other than entirely sane and responsible.

There may be other problems which are yet to present themselves under this changed procedure, but these are not presentable upon the record in the present case.

The judgment is affirmed.

PRESTON, J. I dissent. My views are expressed at length in a dissent in the case of People v. Troche (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 767, this day filed. Nothing appears in the opinion in this case that alters these views. We do get this fact clearly, however, that the division of opinion between us rests upon the proposition of whether the plea of insanity is or is not a separable plea in fact. In this case Mr. Justice RICHARDS declares it to be a separable plea akin in independent status to the plea of former acquittal or conviction or once in jeopardy. If I could even for a moment accede to this proposition it would take all the violence out of this dissent. But I cannot come to this view. This statement ignores the basis of all criminal law.

A sound mind is the foundation upon which rests all responsibility to the sovereign for inhibited conduct. Every crime presupposes a sound mind, guiding and directing the criminal agency. If the party charged is insane, the act is not his act and his vindication is as complete and in essence the same as though he had not in fact perpetrated the deed. As said in State v. Strasburg, 60 Wash. 106, 119, 110 P. 1020, 1024 (32 L. R. A. [N. S.] 1216, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 917):

"We believe enough has been said to show that the sanity of the accused at the time of committing the act charged against him has always been regarded as much a substantive fact, going to make up his guilt, as the fact of his physical commission of the act. It seems to us the law could as well exclude proof of any other substantive fact going to show his guilt or innocence. If he was insane at the time to the extent that he could not comprehend the nature and quality of the act—in other words, if he had no will to control the physical act of his physical body —how can it in truth be said that the act was his act? To take from the accused the opportunity to offer evidence tending to prove this fact is in our opinion as much a violation of his constitutional right of trial by jury as to take from him the right to offer evidence before the jury tending to show that he did not physically commit the act or physically set in motion a train of events resulting in the act. The maxim, 'An act done by me against my will is not my act,' may, without losing any of its force, be paraphrased to fit our present inquiry as follows: 'An act done by me without my will, or in the absence of my will, is not my act.'"

Take the crime of murder in the first degree—the one before us. Is any one ready to say that a defendant insane is capable of forming the intent to murder or of possessing the malice or of doing the premeditation and deliberation necessary to make the crime complete? Certainly not. Our statute specifically provides that criminal intent is the manifestation of a sound mind. Section 21, Pen. Code. Our statute also says that an insane person is not amenable to punishment. Section 26, Pen. Code. Then, I repeat that the plea of not guilty contains within it indissolubly the plea of insanity. No legislative declaration can remove it, and it bears no resemblance to the special pleas enumerated above, but does bear a resemblance to the issue of self-defense or not guilty because of noncommission of the interdicted act.

It seems constantly to be overlooked that the verdict required in this bifurcated trial is not merely whether the defendant did or did not do the prohibited act. If this were alone the issue, the main opinion would be sound and the plea would be separable. But this is not the case—the jury are required to convict or acquit, and to convict the sanity of the defendant must first be found to exist; this, even though the jury from the circumstances of the crime, the res gestæ, see that the defendant was and is insane.

I condemn the procedure because it requires a conviction of the crime charged while excluding much of the material testimony upon the issue.

I condemn the procedure because it enables the state to curtail the deliberation of the jury and prevent the free agency of that body in its deliberations. If this is not true, why the inauguration of this cumbersome, useless, and time-cheating experiment? The trial judges know the effect of the operation of this statute. The bar can easily discern its baneful effects. The plea of insanity is for practical purposes gone. Its loss will work the conviction of innocent men. It shocks the idealism of the citizen. It imputes vengeance to the sovereign. If the state wants to be fair and just with its citizenry, why arrest the jury in the midst of their deliberations, require a verdict of guilty to be recorded, and then return them to deliberate upon the accuracy of the decision so theretofore rendered? Crime will not be lessened by cruelty. It is certainly to be deplored that such a procedure is to be found among our statutes, and it is my hope that the Legislature will speedily rectify this injustice.

KNOKE v. KNIGHT et al. (L. A. 9563.) ★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 14, 1929.
Hearing Denied in Bank Feb. 11, 1929.

1. Taxation 🔑734(7)—Tax deed is void where notice of delinquent list stating amount of delinquent taxes and costs failed to state amount of penalties.

Proceedings leading up to execution of tax deed are defective and tax deed is void, where notice of delinquent list, though stating amount of delinquent taxes and costs, failed to state amount of penalties.

2. Taxation 🔑830—In action to quiet title, plaintiff claiming under tax deed which was declared void held not entitled under evidence to repayment of amount he expended as taxes, penalties, and costs (Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5).

In action to quiet title brought by one claiming under tax deed, in which such deed was declared void, judgment not requiring defendant to repay or refund amount paid by plaintiff as taxes, penalties, and costs under Pol. Code, § 3898, subd. 5, held not erroneous, where there was nothing in evidence that would enable trial court to fix amount of taxes, penalties, etc., expended by plaintiff, and no demand or request that court determine amount.

3. Taxation 🔑789(1)—In action to quiet title, introduction of void tax deed did not make prima facie case.

In action to quiet title, brought by one claiming under tax deed which was declared void, introduction of such void tax deed did not make prima facie case that plaintiff was owner of property.

4. Quieting title 🔑10(1)—Plaintiff must recover on strength of his title, not weakness of defendant's.

In action to quiet title, plaintiff must recover on strength of his own title, rather than weakness of defendant's.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action to quiet title brought by A. H. Knoke against Alice R. Knight and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Catherine A. McKenna and J. Irving McKenna, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John C. Packard, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CURTIS, J. Action brought to quiet title to certain real property situated in the county of Los Angeles. The appellant relies upon a tax deed issued to him by the tax collector of said county on the 31st day of July, 1922. If this tax deed is invalid by reason of any of the irregularities mentioned by the respondent, then the judgment should be affirmed. Otherwise it should be reversed, unless one of the other objections made to said judgment by appellant is well founded.

[1] The delinquent tax list, together with the notice appended thereto, were identical in form with the delinquent tax list and notice involved in the case of Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 236 P. 371. In that case it was held that the proceedings leading up to the execution of a tax deed thereunder were defective in that the published notice of the delinquent list, while it stated the amount of delinquent taxes and costs, failed to state the amount of the penalties. The deed issued thereunder was held to be void. The case of Bussenius v. Warden, supra, was cited with approval in the case of Snodgrass v. Bell (Cal. App.) 261 P. 497, where the court said: "Respondent also claims the tax title is void because the published notice of the delinquent tax list failed to set forth the amount due for penalties as well as for taxes. The notice is the same notice which was held to be illegal in Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 236 P. 371, for failure to comply with Political Code, § 3764, for the same reason assigned by respondent here. Under this authority the appellant's tax title is void." It is claimed by appellant that the case of Bussenius v. Warden has been overruled by the decision in Re Rogers (Cal. App.) 267 P. 729. We do not so understand that this last-named case has that effect. In that case the court differentiates the case of Bussenius v. Warden from the case then before it in the following language: "In the case of Bussenius v. Warden, 71 Cal. App. 717, 236 P. 371, the facts before the court showed that the notice of delinquent tax sale did not conform to Political Code, § 3764, but was in violation thereof in this, that it recited that the sale would be made for taxes and costs and did not state that it would be made for 'penalties.' That error is not presented by the record in the case before us."

There is language to be found in the case of Stuart v. Smith (Cal. App.) 262 P. 348, which somewhat reflects upon the position taken by the court in Bussenius v. Warden as to the validity of the notice of delinquent sale, but in the case of Stuart v. Smith there appeared to be considerable confusion in the record before the appellate court, and the decision of that court upon the validity of said notice of delinquent sale was based, in part, at least, upon the failure of the record to disclose the facts upon which the defendants in that case predicated their attack upon the said notice of delinquent sale. But notwithstanding any language used in the case of Stuart v. Smith, supra, which might appear to indicate that the court rendering the decision in that case did not approve of the ruling in Bussenius v. Warden relative to the invalidity of the notice of delinquent sale, we are of the opinion that the holding upon this question of the sufficiency of the notice made by the court in the case of Bussenius v. Warden was correct, and we are disposed to follow it in this case. The tax deed, therefore, under which the plaintiff claims title to the real property in controversy, is void, and plaintiff's proof of title has wholly failed. Our determination of this point in favor of respondent renders the consideration of other objections raised by respondent as to the validity of the tax deed under which appellant claims unnecessary.

[2] There is no merit in appellant's contention that the judgment is erroneous in that it does not require that respondent repay or refund the amount paid by the appellant as taxes, penalties, and costs. Subdivision 5 of section 3898 of the Political Code provides for such repayment or refund in certain cases where by decree of court the deed issued by the tax collector upon a sale for delinquent taxes is declared void.

Appellant relies upon Holland v. Hotchkiss, 162 Cal. 366, 123 P. 258, L. R. A. 1915C, 492; Squires v. Estey, 33 Cal. App. 287, 165 P. 34; Beck v. Wilson, 49 Cal. App. 281, 193 P. 158, and Joslin v. Shaffer, 66 Cal. App. 69, 74, 225 P. 307. In each of these cases the claimant of the property adverse to the holder of the tax title was either the plaintiff in the action, and sought to quiet his title to the property against the claims of the holder of the tax title, or he was the defendant and sought affirmative relief quieting his title against the plaintiff, the holder of the tax title. In the present action the holder of the tax deed is the plaintiff, and the judgment does not purport to quiet the respondent's title against the plaintiff's claim under the tax deed. The judgment simply decrees that plaintiff is not the owner of any interest in the real property described therein, and that the respondent recover her costs. The present action is thus differentiated from the cases relied upon by the appellant and renders them inapplicable for our present purpose. This clearly appears from the following excerpt from the opinion in Holland v. Hotchkiss, supra: "Where the owner comes into equity asking equitable relief to remove or cancel a tax deed or sale as a cloud upon his title, or to obtain a judgment which, in effect, will invalidate such sale or deed, the court should refuse any relief except upon the condition that he first repay to the tax purchaser, or his grantee or assignee, the taxes, penalties, interest, and costs justly chargeable upon the land and which the purchaser has paid at the sale, or afterward upon the faith of it." These cases appear to have been decided without any particular reference to subdivision 5 of section 3898 of the Political Code. The provision therein requiring repayment or reimbursement to be made to the purchaser at the tax sale, upon such sale being decreed void by the court, was added by amendment to said section in 1913. The levy and assessment involved in Holland v. Hotchkiss, supra, and Squires v. Estey, supra, was each made prior to the enactment of said amendment, and Beck v. Wilson, supra, and Joslin v. Shaffer, supra, were decided upon the general, equitable principles enunciated in Holland v. Hotchkiss supra, rather than in pursuance of the terms of said amendment.

The only decision of the courts of this state, which we have discovered, bearing directly upon the point here involved, is that of Biaggi v. Mainero, 60 Cal. App. 608, 213 P. 541. In that action the plaintiff claimed under a tax title and brought the action to quiet his title. The court held his tax deed void; that he was not the owner of the real property described therein; and that defendants have judgment for costs. It will be noted that this judgment is precisely in effect like the judgment in the present action. Upon appeal it was insisted by the plaintiff therein that the judgment was erroneous in not providing that he be reimbursed for the amount of taxes, penalties, etc., paid out by him, or his predecessors in interest. In disposing of this claim the court did so adversely to plaintiff's claim, and with the following declaration:

"In its decision the trial court, among other things, found that plaintiff's claim of title was based upon 'an alleged sale of said property for alleged delinquent taxes for the fiscal years 1914-15, and upon alleged conveyances executed to plaintiff's predecessor in interest, R. G. Biaggi, pursuant to said alleged delinquency and pursuant to said alleged sale.' In this connection respondent calls our attention to subdivision 5 of section 3898 of the Political Code, which provides that in an action of this kind no decree of forfeiture shall be given 'until the former owner, or other party in interest, shall have repaid to the purchaser the full amount of taxes, penalties and costs paid out and expended by him.' The finding was unnecessary to the judgment. Furthermore, we note that the court did not find that there was in fact a delinquency on the property in question, or that there was in fact a sale of the property for such delinquency. Neither did it find that plaintiff or his predecessors in interest ever paid any sum whatever for taxes, penalties or costs. In the absence of any evidence showing such payment it must be assumed that there was no evidence in that respect. Had the court made a decree quieting title in defendants, it may be that such decree should have been conditioned on payment of the moneys paid by plaintiff in pursuit of the tax title, but this question does not arise in this case for the reason that the title was not decreed in anyone. If plaintiff is not aggrieved by a judgment declaring someone else to be the owner when he has shown no title in the land in himself, this plaintiff cannot be heard to complain of this judgment."

While the present appeal is not upon the judgment roll, and accordingly the evidence before the trial court is a part of the record on appeal, we fail to find anything in the evidence that would have enabled the trial court to fix the amount of the taxes, penalties, etc., expended by the appellant, nor does the record contain any attempt or offer on appellant's part to prove this amount, nor any demand or request by appellant that the trial court determine the amount thus expended by appellant. The tax deed under which the appellant claims title to said real property called for 158.18 acres of land, while the amount of land described in the judgment was only 80 acres. Under these circumstances there was no duty resting upon the trial court to determine any amount to be repaid appellant, and the judgment is not erroneous for its failure to contain a direction to respondent to make repayment of such amount.

[3, 4] The further contention is made by appellant that as the respondent offered no proof of her ownership of the land described in her answer, it was error for the court to have rendered the judgment which it did in this action. This contention is based upon the claim of appellant that by the introduction of the tax deed the appellant made out a prima facie case in his favor. This claim, of course, has no foundation upon which to rest. The court held the tax deed void. Plaintiff therefore failed to make a prima facie case that he was the owner of said real property. Having failed to establish any title in himself, the appellant's case utterly failed. It is hardly necessary to cite an authority in support of the well-established principle of law that in an action to quiet title the plaintiff must recover on the strength of his own title rather than any weakness of the defendant's. It has been repeatedly so held by this court. We will only cite among the many cases decided by this court in which this point was directly determined the following: Rockey v. Vieux, 179 Cal. 681, 178 P. 712, Sears v. Willard, 165 Cal. 12, 130 P. 869, and Williams v. City of San Pedro, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 44, 94 P. 234. Upon this point appellant's case is summed up in the concluding words found in the opinion in Rockey v. Vieux, as follows: "Having shown no interest in the land, the plaintiffs are not aggrieved by a judgment declaring some one else to be the owner."

PEOPLE v. SMITH. (Cr. 3152.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 16, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⚷1172(9)—Instruction that restoration of property embezzled authorized mitigation of punishment held reversible error, where court, under circumstances, could not grant probation (Pen. Code, § 1203).

In prosecution for embezzlement by city treasurer, instruction that restoration of property allegedly embezzled authorized court to mitigate punishment, in its discretion, held reversible error. under Pen. Code, § 1203, depriving court of right to grant probation under the circumstances.

2. Criminal law ⚷1186(4)—Where, but for erroneous instruction, jury might have rendered acquittal, conviction must be reversed (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

Where jury might have entertained a reasonable doubt as to the existence of all the necessary elements of the felony charged against defendant, and acquitted him, but for erroneous instruction, Const. art. 6, § 4½, does not operate on the judgment of conviction, and it must be reversed.

3. Criminal law ⚷957(2)—Affidavits that jurors would not have voted for conviction, but for instruction, held properly excluded as attempt to impeach verdict.

Affidavits of several members of jury that they would not have voted for verdict of guilty, except for instruction complained of, held properly excluded as an attempt to impeach jury verdict.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Imperial County; A. C. Finney, Judge.

W. D. Smith was convicted of embezzlement, and he appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion of Court of Appeals in 267 P. 387.

Edgar B. Hervey, of San Diego, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Elmer W. Heald, Dist. Atty., and Edward B. Patterson, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of El Centro, for the People.

SHENK, J. The defendant was charged in four counts with embezzlement of public funds during the time he was treasurer of the city of Imperial. On the first trial the jury disagreed. Counts 1 and 3 were dismissed on motion of the district attorney. On the second trial the defendant was acquitted on the fourth count and was found guilty on the second count, which charged the embezzlement, on the 9th day of November, 1926, of the sum of $218.46 of the funds of the city of Imperial. He appeals from the judgment of conviction, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The grounds of the appeal are that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict, and that the court erred to the prejudice of the defendant in certain instructions given. It appears that one C. H. Hawkins was city recorder and justice of the peace of the city of Imperial. On November 1, 1926, he handed a check for the amount of fines collected during the preceding month, in the sum of $342, to his clerk for delivery to the defendant as city treasurer. This check was delivered to the defendant on November 9, 1926. On the same day the defendant signed and delivered to said clerk a receipt, showing the deposit of that sum in the city treasury. The defendant had pursued the method of depositing in bank to the credit of designated accounts the funds of the city reposed to his custody. He maintained a checking account under the designation, "W. D. Smith, Trustee." The money represented by the check received from the city recorder could not, in whole, be credited to one fund. Thirty dollars was subject to be credited to the general fund, and the balance to the street improvement fund. On November 9, 1926, he deposited the full amount of the check in the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank of Imperial to the credit of the street improvement bond account. On the same day he withdrew by check from said account the sum of $218.46 and deposited the same in the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank to the credit of the W. D. Smith Trustee account. Six days later, to wit, on November 15, 1926, the defendant deposited to the credit of a city treasurer account in the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank said sum of $342, being the amount received from the city recorder on November 9. The accounts of the city treasurer were experted on the 30th day of the same month. No shortage was discovered, and the defendant thus fully accounted for all public moneys on hand on that day, and said funds were thereupon turned over to the defendant's successor in office. With this state of the treasurer's accounts as to count 2, the defendant was, on December 28, 1926, formally charged with embezzlement of public funds.

The respondent insists that the evidence was sufficient to support the verdict, because it further appeared in evidence that between November 9 and 15 certain amounts were withdrawn from the W. D. Smith Trustee account and devoted to the defendant's personal use, which withdrawals reduced the W. D. Smith Trustee account to the extent of $218.46. It is not claimed by respondent that on November 15 and thereafter all moneys received by the defendant from the city recorder were not on deposit in the proper accounts.

By reason of the strictness with which the law surrounds the custody and use of public funds, it may reasonably be contended that the showing with reference to the withdrawal and use of moneys from the trustee account during the times intervening between November 9 and 15 was sufficient to support a verdict of guilty of embezzlement of public funds, provided the jury was satisfied that all of the elements of the felony charged were present in the transaction and no prejudicial error was committed by the court. This brings us to the consideration of the most serious error complained of.

[1, 2] The court instructed the jury that, whenever a person is charged with embezzlement, and it appears that the accused voluntarily or actually restores or tenders restoration of the property alleged to have been embezzled, or any part thereof, such fact is not a ground of defense, "but it authorizes the court to mitigate the punishment in its discretion." Without intimating what would be the effect of such an instruction in an ordinary embezzlement case, it is obvious that it is entirely inappropriate and misleading in the case of alleged embezzlement of public funds. Section 1203 of the Penal Code has in effect deprived a defendant in this class of crimes of the right to apply for probation, and has absolutely divested the court of all power therein to grant probation. Except by an order of probation, there would be no way by which the trial court could "mitigate the punishment." That the instruction was considered by the jury to the prejudice of the defendant is evidenced by the form of the verdict, wherein the defendant was found guilty as charged in count 2 and "We recommend probation—unanimously." The jury retired for deliberation at 4:40 p. m., and returned with the verdict at 9:30 the following morning, and it is conceded by the respondent that it was only by reason of the showing on the question of restitution that the jury recommended probation. We are satisfied from the record that the jury was misled by said instruction into rendering the verdict which was returned, and that it is fairly apparent that, but for such mistaken statement as to the powers of the court in the premises, the jury would not have agreed upon a verdict of guilty.

The case of Territory v. Griego, 8 N. M. 133, 42 P. 81, is in point. In that case the defendant was charged with murder. The court instructed the jury as follows: "While the law fixes the punishment in the case, or rather while the court assesses the punishment, the law authorizes you, in case you find the defendant guilty, to recommend him to the mercy of the court, and that recommendation made by the jury will be considered by the court in fixing the punishment." The jury found the defendant guilty as charged and recommended the prisoner to the mercy of the court. The judgment was reversed on the ground that the court, under the law in that jurisdiction, upon a verdict of guilty in murder cases, had no discretion to mitigate the punishment, and had no alternative but to sentence the defendant to death. It was held that, if the jury had been informed of the true state of the law, it was within the range of reasonable probability that the jury would not have agreed upon a verdict, and that because of the gravity of the punishment the jury might well have clung to a doubt of guilt, rather than to hang a man whose guilt they doubted. Persuasive authorities to the same effect are cited in the opinion in that case.

The vice in the instruction here complained of is that the intimation or promise extended to the jury, that leniency in the punishment might be extended to the defendant by the court, had a tendency to draw the attention of the jury away from the evidence and overcome reasonable doubt, and thus to induce the jury to reach a verdict on ulterior considerations. On the facts in this case the jury might have entertained a reasonable doubt as to the existence of all the necessary elements of the felony charged against the defendant and acquitted him but for the erroneous instruction. Under these circumstances the saving clause of the Constitution (Art. 6, § 4½) may not operate on the judgment of conviction and it should be reversed. The fact that the court further instructed the jury that the question of punishment is left wholly to the court did not cure the error. It may not be said to have effaced from the minds of the jury the hope and expectation that the court in the exercise of its powers might extend leniency to the defendant.

[3] On the motion for a new trial the defendant produced the affidavits of several members of the jury that by the instruction complained of they were led to believe and did believe that the court had the power to grant the defendant probation, that they believed that under the circumstances shown in the case the court would grant probation, and that they would not have voted for a verdict of guilty except for said instruction. The court very properly ruled that the showing thus made was insufficient to support the motion, in that, under the well-established rule, a juror will not be permitted to impeach his verdict in the manner thus sought to be done. People v. Kromphold, 172 Cal. 512, 524, 157 P. 599; 8 Cal. Jur., p. 437. No other alleged errors require discussion.

The judgment and order are, and each is, reversed.

FOGARTY et al. v. DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRIAL RELATIONS OF CALIFORNIA, DIVISION OF INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENTS AND SAFETY et al. (S. F. 12793.)

Supreme Court of California. Dec. 28, 1928.

1. Master and servant 🔑398—In absence of appointment of guardian, injured minor employee was not required to institute proceedings within six months, but right existed to time of death (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11(b) (1) and (d).

Under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 11(b) (1), in absence of appointment of guardian under section 11(d) and by virtue of his minority, there continued to exist in injured minor employee, up to time of his death during minority, right to institute proceedings for collection of disability indemnity, and he was not required to institute proceedings within six months.

2. Master and servant 🔑388—On death of minor employee without having instituted proceedings for compensation, right to collect accrued compensation passed to dependents (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 9(b) 3).

On death of minor employee, for whom no guardian had been appointed, without having filed claim for compensation for injuries, right to collect accrued, but theretofore unclaimed compensation passed to dependents under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 9(b) 3.

3. Master and servant 🔑398—Claims of minors for death benefits held not barred by limitations, where guardian was not appointed until minors were brought into proceeding pending before commission (Workmen's Compensation Act, §§ 9(b), (3), (c), 11(d).

Claims of minor brothers and sisters of deceased employee for death benefit provided by Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 9(c), and for accrued compensation covered by section 9(b) (3), held not barred by limitations provided by section 11(d), which did not run against minors until guardian had been appointed, where appointment of minors' father as guardian was not made until minors, as parties claimant, were brought into proceeding pending before commission.

4. Master and servant 🔑398—Filing of minors' application for death benefits gave commission jurisdiction to determine claims of parents and dependents of deceased, whose claims were barred by limitations (Workmen's Compensation Act, § 11(a).

Under Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 11(a), providing that filing of application with commission for any portion of benefits shall render limitations inoperative as to all further claims of persons arising from same transaction, filing of application of minors for death benefit and accrued compensation in proceedings pending before commission gave commission jurisdiction to hear claims of all persons for compensation arising from same transaction, including claims of parents of deceased, regardless of whether latter were seasonably filed or not.

5. Master and servant 🔑417(7)—Supreme Court can only overthrow Industrial Commission's finding on question of fact, where there is no substantial evidence supporting finding.

Power of Supreme Court to overthrow finding of Industrial Accident Commission on question of fact is confined to cases in which there is no substantial evidence to support finding.

6. Master and servant 🔑405(4)—Evidence showed employment and exposure caused rheumatism, diseased heart condition, and death, which arose in course of employment.

In proceedings to recover compensation for death of employee, evidence that employment and exposure induced acute attack of rheumatism in employee, which led to diseased heart condition, which ultimately proved fatal, showed that exposure and exhaustion from work precipitated train of symptoms resulting in death, and hence Industrial Accident Commission erred in finding that employee's illness and death were not caused or precipitated by employment or injury arising out of or in course of employment.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) by K. J. Fogarty and others to recover compensation for the death of Harlan Fogarty, employee, opposed by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, employer. From an order of the Industrial Accident Commission, denying application for adjustment of claim, petitioners bring certiorari. Annulled and remanded, with directions.

Superseding opinion 269 P. 641.

Matthew A. McCullough, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

G. C. Faulkner and John J. Briare, both of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. The petition of the respondent Pacific Gas & Electric Company for a rehearing in this cause was granted solely for the purpose of elaborating upon that portion of our opinion (76 Cal. Dec. 231, 233, 269 P. 641) wherein it is determined that the application of the dependents of Harlan Fogarty for adjustment of claim was timely filed.

[1, 2] In the petition for rehearing it is urged that we overlooked the "vital feature" in our treatment of this phase of the case, viz., that "there was no valid subsisting claim to adjust." With this assertion of petitioner we cannot agree. In the interest of clarity we will express in greater detail our views upon this subject, to the end that confusion may not result from that portion of the opinion now assailed. Harlan Fogarty, while still a minor, died June 24, 1926, a victim of chronic endocarditis. As will more fully hereinafter appear, the performance of his duties while in the employ of the Pacific Gas & Electric Company from May 8 to June 3, 1924, aggravated this heart condition, and thus precipitated the train of symptoms culminating in his death. Fogarty, during his lifetime, neglected and failed to institute proceedings for the collection of the disability indemnity to which he was unquestionably entitled under the provisions of section 9 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act. St. 1917, p. 831. The right to institute such proceedings, while ordinarily lost to an employee if not exercised within six months after the date of injury (section 11 (b) (1), is saved as to a minor employee at least until the appointment of a guardian for such minor (section 11 (d). Therefore, in the absence of the appointment of a guardian and by virtue of his minority, there continued to exist in Harlan Fogarty up to the very time of his death a right to institute proceedings for the collection of the disability indemnity above referred to. Upon his death this right to collect the accrued but theretofore unclaimed compensation passed to his dependents (section 9 (b) 3). And this, without any necessity for the institution of proceedings by the minor employee during his lifetime. The act, so far as we have been able to ascertain, does not in express language designate any particular period of time within which the dependents of a deceased employee must institute proceedings for the collection of any accrued compensation, but, whatever that period might be, we need not now concern ourselves, for, as indicated in our opinion heretofore filed and hereinafter adopted, "certain of the applicants are minors, against whom the limitations of time provided by the Workmen's Compensation Act (section 11 (d) do not run unless and until a guardian has been appointed."

[3, 4] A guardian for the minor dependents of Fogarty had not been appointed, as stated in the opinion, until they were brought into the proceeding then pending before the respondent commission as parties claimant. This being so, it necessarily follows that the application of these minor dependents for the accrued compensation due the deceased was timely filed. Having thus secured jurisdiction to pass upon this claim, the commission was invested with jurisdiction to determine all claims, whether for accrued compensation or for death benefits and whether claims of the minor dependents or other dependents, for section 11 (a) of the act, as quoted in the opinion, contains the proviso that "the filing of an application with the Commission for any portion of the benefits prescribed by this Act shall render this section inoperative as to all further claims of any person or persons for compensation arising from the same transaction. * * *" By virtue of this proviso the provisions of section 11 (b) (2) of the act, so strongly relied on by petitioner, became "inoperative" as to this particular proceeding and it is unimportant, therefore, so far as the application for the death benefit is concerned, that Fogarty did not die within a year after his injury or that a disability payment had not been made or an agreement for its payment made or proceedings for its collection commenced by the deceased during his lifetime. Petitioner's contention in this respect is therefore without merit.

With this prefatory statement, we hereby adopt as the decision of the court the opinion written by the CHIEF JUSTICE, heretofore filed. It reads:

The dependents of Harlan Fogarty, deceased, are seeking to have annulled an award of the respondent commission denying their application for adjustment of claim. At the time of his death, which occurred on June 24, 1926, the deceased was a minor. Commencing May 8, 1924, and for a period terminating, by reason of his disability, on June 3, 1924, Harlan Fogarty was employed by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company as a laborer and rough carpenter on the timber flume which supplies water to one of its power houses. Before he began any actual work, but on the same day that he assumed his duties as such employee, the deceased was subjected to a thorough physical examination at the hands of Dr. W. P. Sawyer, representing the employer. The examination disclosed that the deceased at the time was a normal youth of 19 years, in apparent excellent health. The examining physician testified before the respondent commission that:

"There [was] no pathology on the whole card. It [was] one of the cleanest cards of any examination I ever made."

The deceased commenced work immediately following this physical examination. On June 2, 1924, together with other workers, he was summoned to repair a break in the flume some 84 feet in length, which interrupted the flow of water to the power house. In their endeavor to complete the repair work with all possible expedition, the men worked laboriously for many hours. One shift was engaged continuously without sleep for 18 hours, another for 16 hours, and a third, of which the deceased was a member, for 38 hours. During this prolonged period the men were subjected by day to the heat of the sun's rays and by night to the cool air. There is evidence to the effect that during the night Fogarty worked in wet clothes and shoes, and "felt pain and stiffness in both knees." By reason of exhaustion and the presence of pains in his knees and ankles, he was incapable of going to his home, some distance away when the work was done, and he remained with a fellow employee during the night of June 3d. While there he received some slight care intended to relieve his plight. He was conveyed by automobile the following day to his own home. Dr. Sawyer, who, as previously noted, had examined him, was called and found the young man to be the victim of an acute attack of rheumatism, for which he prescribed salicylates, a specific for acute rheumatism. Dr. Sawyer's medical statement, introduced in evidence, shows that the knees and ankles of the deceased were at that time swollen, hot, and tender, and that he had a pulse rate of 110 and a temperature of 103.4.

Dr. Sawyer attended Fogarty until July 10th, at which time he entered the Sutter Hospital, in Sacramento, and came under the care of Dr. J. W. James. The hospital records show that deceased had a pulse rate of 120 and a temperature of 102 on that date. Dr. James found:

"Nearly all small joints swollen and tender; heart increased in all diameters; and murmur replacing first sound. Tongue heavily coated. Patient rather stupid in action."

As to the patient's past history the record noted:

"Occasional sore throat 8 years ago; had tonsils removed. Otherwise well; present illness first serious trouble."

Fogarty remained in the hospital approximately 10 days, and then visited with an aunt for 2 weeks, continuing all the while under the care of Dr. James. It appears that some years prior to his employment by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company Fogarty had been operated upon by Dr. G. E. Chappell and had his tonsils removed. In the fall of 1924 Dr. Chappell examined him, and found that he was suffering from enlarged heart and valvular trouble, as well as weakness of the heart muscle. The doctor advised him to remain at home and to do no manual labor. The rheumatic and heart condition continuing, in October, 1925, Dr. Chappell removed certain remnants of deceased's tonsils, in the hope that it might effect a cure. On March 24, 1926, the deceased was taken to the Krull Hospital, in Sacramento, where, upon examination, Dr. Chappell found his condition aggravated, and by means of an operation removed fluid from the pleural cavity. A similar operation was thereafter performed by Dr. Brown. Fogarty was continuously nursed and cared for during the following months. He died on June 24, 1926, the death certificate giving chronic endocarditis, which is a diseased condition of the membrane lining the valves and cavities of the heart, as the cause of death.

At the conclusion of the several hearings of the dependents for adjustment of their claim, the respondent commission, on September 23, 1927, made its findings and award denying the application, and discharging the employer from all liability in connection with the death of the deceased. Among other things it was found that the death of Harlan Fogarty had not been caused or precipitated by his employment, or by any injury arising out of or in the course of such employment. The applicants' petition for a rehearing was granted and the cause resubmitted without the taking of further testimony. The findings thereafter filed declared the evidence to be insufficient to establish that the deceased had received an injury arising out of and in the course of employment, or that the employment had caused any temporary disability. It was further found that the disability complained of had not been caused by any injury arising out of and in the course of said employment, or by said employment; that the deceased died from disease, and said death had not been caused or precipitated by the employment, or by an injury arising out of or in the course of said employment; that the death of the deceased had not ensued within one year from the date of the alleged injury, and that no disability payment had been made for the injury complained of, or agreement made therefor, or proceedings for its collection commenced, and that no right, therefore, accrued to the applicants to claim a death benefit as a result of the death of the deceased.

Because of this latter finding there is first presented for consideration the question whether the application for adjustment of claim had been timely filed. Certain of the applicants are minors, against whom the limitations of time provided by the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831) § 11(d), do not run unless and until a guardian has been appointed. Therefore the respective claims of the minor brothers and sister of the deceased, both for the death benefit provided by section 9(c) and for the accrued compensation covered by section 9(b) 3 of the act, were not barred, because the appointment of their father as their guardian was not made until they as parties claimant were brought into the proceeding then pending before the commission. We are of the view that, under the provisions of section 11(a) of the act, the filing of the application of such minors gave to the commission jurisdiction to hear and determine the claims of any and all persons for compensation arising from the same transaction, including the claims of the parents of the deceased, whether the latter were seasonably filed or not. Section 11(a), supra, provides:

"Unless compensation is paid or an agreement for its payment made within the time limited in this section for the institution of proceedings for its collection, the right to institute such proceedings shall be barred; provided, that the filing of an application with the commission for any portion of the benefits prescribed by this act shall render this section inoperative as to all further claims of any person or persons for compensation arising from the same transaction, and the right to present such further claims shall be governed by the provisions of section 20(d) and section 65(b) of this act."

This court had occasion, in the case of Great Western Power Co. v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 196 Cal. 593, 602, 238 P. 662, 666, to interpret the foregoing section of the act. It is there declared:

"By both constitutional enactment * * * and legislative decree * * * the Industrial Accident Commission is vested with wide powers, to the end that the administration of legislation enacted to create and enforce a complete system of workmen's compensation 'shall accomplish substantial justice in all cases expeditiously, inexpensively, and without incumbrance of any character.' The Workmen's Compensation Act provides (sec. 17 [c]) that there shall be but one cause of action for each transaction coming within the provisions of the act. All claims brought for medical expense, disability payments, death benefits, burial expense, liens, or any other matter arising out of such transaction may, in the discretion of the commission, be joined in the same proceeding at any time. Going one step further, we see no reason why the Legislature may not have intended to provide, in the proviso to section 11 (a), that when a claim for any portion of the benefits prescribed by the act has reached the point where it is necessary or expedient to submit the matter to the decision of the Industrial Accident Commission, the whole subject-matter of the controversy, including the further claims of the applicant, or of any and all other persons, should be thereby submitted to the jurisdiction of the commission for a complete determination, provided, of course, that all claims relating to the transaction be presented within the life of the continuing jurisdiction of the commission. That, we conclude, was the legislative intent, and the effect of the proviso added to section 11 (a)."

Having reached such conclusion, we held in that case that the commission had jurisdiction to make an award in favor of a dependent grandparent of the deceased, even though it appeared that such claimant had not been made a party to the proceeding before the commission until after the expiration of the time limited for the institution of proceedings for the collection of the death benefit. It therefore follows that the respective claims of the parties hereto, both for accrued compensation and for the death benefit, may properly be determined by the commission.

[5, 6] This brings us to a consideration of the important point as to whether the illness and death of the deceased were compensable within the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act. This court is well aware that its power to overthrow a finding on a question of fact made by the respondent commission is confined to those cases in which there is no substantial evidence to support the finding. That is the exact situation now before us. The history of the case, as testified to by the witnesses for the applicants and for the employer, presents an unbroken chain of events indicative of the fact that, whatever the condition of the health of the employee had theretofore been, the exposure and exhaustion to which he was subjected precipitated the train of symptoms which culminated in his death. In Singlaub v. Ind. Acc. Comm. (Cal. App.) 262 P. 411, it is declared to be the "unquestioned law that, where the death of an employee may be traced to two causes: First, to that of a primary disease; and, secondly, to overexertion in the work in behalf of his employer in which the employee is engaged, at the time of his death, the employer or his insurer is liable. In other words, notwithstanding the previous diseased condition of the employee and in the natural consequence of which the inevitable death of the employee will ensue, if satisfactorily established that the demise of the employee, though primarily caused by his idiopathic condition, nevertheless was superinduced by overexertion of the employee arising out of his employment, the liability of the employer is fixed. As is said in Eastman Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 186 Cal. 587, 594 (200 P. 17, 20): 'If the disability, although arising from a chronic heart trouble, was brought on by any strain or excitement incident to the employment, the industrial liability still exists. Acceleration or aggravation of a pre-existing disease is an injury in the occupation causing such acceleration (citing cases).' "

To the same effect is Knock v. Ind. Acc. Comm., 200 Cal. 456, 253 P. 712, wherein it appeared from the medical testimony adduced that, while the deceased must have been affected with a previous heart affection, the conditions of his employment were such as to have precipitated his collapse sooner than would otherwise have happened.

In the case at bar an effort was made by the employer to show that the deceased employee was the victim of a latent and pre-existing rheumatic and heart condition. The evidence is in apparent conflict on this point. There is also testimony which points to a "focus of infection" as a major causative factor. There is, however, but one conclusion which can be drawn from the whole evidence, and that is that, aside from all other factors, the employment, with its consequential exposure, was the precipitating cause, and induced the acute attack of rheumatism with which Fogarty was immediately thereafter seized, and, further, that such attack not only could, but actually did, lead to the heart condition which ultimately proved fatal. It is necessary to only briefly epitomize the evidence relating to this phase of the case to demonstrate that it falls squarely within the rule of the cases previously cited.

Dr. Sawyer, the physician who examined the deceased prior to his employment by the Pacific Gas & Electric Company, and later attended him, testified that at the time he made the examination he found nothing suggesting that the deceased was then suffering from or a victim of either endocarditis or myocarditis, and that there was no doubt in his mind but that the acute attack of rheumatism was brought on by the exposure, which was the sudden cause of it. Dr. Chappell, called by the employer, testified that, with all the facts before him, he would say there was a causal connection between the prolonged period of labor, with its resultant exposure and exhaustion, and the acute attack of rheumatism suffered by the deceased. Dr. R. W. Harbaugh, assistant medical director of the respondent commission, informed the referee in the proceeding that exposure to cold or wetting or sudden changes of temperature, are among the factors in determining the onset of an attack of rheumatism; that it is generally recognized that a certain kind of heart disease is directly connected with an attack of rheumatism, and he had no doubt but that that was "what happened in this particular case."

There was much evidence as to the "major" and "minor" factors of heart disease, and some of the witnesses refused to commit themselves beyond the assertion that the strain and exposure to which the employee was subjected was only "some slight factor" in precipitating the acute and fatal attack. But the record read as a whole—and we have given it a most searching scrutiny—removes any and all doubt, and sets the case beyond the realm of argument, inference, or conjecture. The employer's own witnesses established that the deceased's employment was a factor in the precipitation of the rheumatic and heart condition which ultimately led to his death. There is not a substantial contradiction on that point. The only fair inference that may be drawn from the evidence is that, if it should be conceded that the deceased was the victim of a latent and preexisting rheumatic and heart condition, a condition which, in our opinion, was not established, the exposure and exhaustion incident to his employment accelerated his collapse. Any contrary inference is inconsistent with the verity of the record. The respondent commission, therefore, erred when it found that the deceased's illness and death had not been caused or precipitated by his employment, or by an injury arising out of or in the course of his employment.

The award is annulled, and the cause is remanded, with directions to the commission to proceed as outlined, and to further find upon the degree of dependency, in order to properly ascertain the amount of the benefits payable to the claimants.

PEOPLE v. BRYANT et al. (Cr. 3140.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 15, 1929.

Rehearing Granted Feb. 14, 1929.

1. Statutes 🔑181(1)—Legislative intent controls in interpreting statutes.

Intention of Legislature and object in mind must not be lost sight of in interpreting statutes, and, where apparent conflict or uncertainty exists or separate acts are not harmonious, courts must look to purpose of Legislature and give that construction to the various acts which reason and sense of the situation reasonably demand.

2. Criminal law 🔑1106(2)—Statute, relating to time and manner of making and filing record on appeal, held not intended to be repealed until rules should be adopted by judicial council (Pen. Code, § 1247; St. 1927, c. 620, § 4; Const. art. 6, § 1a, subd. 5).

Pen. Code, § 1247, relating to the time and manner of making up and filing the record on appeal, held not intended to be repealed by St. 1927, ch. 620, § 4, until rules contemplated by section 1 of such chapter should be promulgated and adopted by the judicial council provided for in Const. art. 6, § 1a, subd. 5, since preparation and filing of statement in section 1247 is a necessary step, not only in the perfection of a criminal appeal, but is the proper presentation of the record on such appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; K. S. Mahon, Judge.

J. F. Bryant and another were convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and they appeal. Affirmed.

Charles W. Ostrom, John Henderson Pelletier, and Elliott H. Barrett, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and John L. Flynn, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SEAWELL, J. This matter comes to us on petition for hearing after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division 1, dismissing the appeal. The appellants were jointly tried and convicted in the superior court in and for the county of Los Angeles of a felony, to wit, the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses, upon the verdict of the jury trying them, on January 27, 1928, and judgment was pronounced upon said verdict on January 31, 1928. On the day last named, they filed a written notice of appeal and also gave oral notice of appeal from the judgment and order denying their respective motions for new trials. On the following day, February 1, 1928, they filed with the clerk of the court in which the proceedings were had the following notice and request, addressed to the clerk of said court: "Please take notice that the defendants have appealed from the judgment heretofore rendered in the above entitled action, and state that in order to properly prepare the appeal, it will be necessary for them, to have a phonographic copy of the reporter's transcript, together with all the evidence taken upon the trial and of proceedings had in the case relative to testimony taken before the court at the trial of said action and, as well, the clerk's transcript as required by the Penal Code of this State, including the indictment; a copy of the minutes of the trial; a copy of other minutes of the action, including the proceedings on motion and arrest of judgment and new trial; a copy of the written charges given by the court to the jury; a copy of the instructions requested by the defendants and refused by the court, and a copy of instructions requested by defendants and modified by the court, after given; also transcript of any oral charges; a copy of the judgment and any written or printed exhibits offered in evidence at the trial of the cause, and the defendants hereby request that an order of this court be made accordingly."

It is not disputed that the record on appeal is sufficient in every respect, excepting the failure on the part of appellants to comply with those particular portions of section 1247, Penal Code, which we have indicated by symbols of emphasis and which provide that the appellant "must, within five days [upon appeal taken], file with the clerk and present an application to the trial court, stating in general terms the grounds of the appeal and the points upon which the appellant relies, and designate what portions of the phonographic reporter's notes it will be necessary to have transcribed to fairly present the points relied upon. If such application is not filed within said time, the appeal is wholly ineffectual and shall be deemed dismissed and the judgment or order may be enforced as if no appeal had been taken."

It is not contended by appellants that they complied with that portion of said statute which provides for the filing with the clerk and the presentation to the trial court of an application containing a statement of the grounds of appeal and the points upon which the appellants relied. It is appellants' contention that section 1247, Penal Code, was directly and unqualifiedly repealed by the Legislature of 1927 and was not effective at the time the appellants attempted to perfect their appeal, to wit, February 1, 1928. The Attorney General, on the other hand, contends that said section remained effective by virtue of the saving clause of section 1246, which by amendment was made a part of said section by the same act which also conditionally repealed said section 1247. Said amended section 1246 became effective in the latter part of July, 1927, and reads: "The record on appeal shall be made up and filed in such time and manner as shall be prescribed in rules to be promulgated by the judicial council. Until such rules are promulgated, the time and manner provided by statutes in force on January 1, 1927, shall govern." St. 1927, p. 1047.

By article 6, § 1a, subd. 5, of the Constitution, as amended, the judicial council may adopt or amend rules of practice and procedure for the several courts not inconsistent with laws that are in force. It is conceded that, at the time the motion was made to dismiss the appeal, the judicial council had not promulgated any rules on the subject.

Sections 1246 and 1247, Penal Code, and successive sections amended conditionally or unqualifiedly repealed are in pari materia and have to do with the preparation and perfection or dismissals of appeals and were considered in one act. There can be no doubt that it was the intention of the Legislature to continue in force the rules of procedure then in effect until such times as said procedural rules should become supplanted by a system that would better harmonize with the new order of things, which was assuming shape under the supervision and direction of the judicial council. In People v. McClellan (Cal. App.) 263 P. 841, it was held that section 1247 relates to the time and manner of making up and filing the record on appeal, and, if not complied with, the appeal would be subject to dismissal. There can be but little doubt that the Legislature regarded the subject-matter of said section as constituting a part of the procedure upon appeal, inasmuch as said section provided not only that "if such application is not filed within said time, the appeal is wholly ineffectual", but that it "shall be deemed dismissed." This language renders the act self-executing.

[1] The intent of the Legislature and the object it had in mind must not be lost sight of in interpreting or giving effect to statutes, and, where apparent conflict or uncertainty exists in the several provisions of an act, or where several separate acts promotive of a general plan or system are not harmonious or congruous, it is the duty of courts to look to the purpose or intent of the Legislature and give that construction to the various acts which the reason and sense of the situation manifestly demand. 23 Cal. Jur. 725.

"The question whether a repeal of a prior statute, absolute in terms, can be limited in its operation and effect for any reason has frequently arisen; and the decisions of the courts have been uniform, that while the language of the repealing clause must be accepted as the expression of the will of the legislature, and effect given to it according to its terms, unless it appears, although the language of the appeal was general and unqualified, that it was intended to be used in a qualified or limited sense; that whenever that intent is discovered effect must be given to it, as in the interpretation of other acts." (Authorities cited.)

"Statutes in pari materia relate to the same subject, the same person or thing, or the same class of persons or things, and are to be read together, for the reason that it is to be implied that a code of statutes relating to one subject is governed by the same spirit, and are intended to be harmonious and consistent. They are to be taken together as if they were one in law, as one statute." (Authorities cited.) Smith v. People, 47 N. Y. 330, 338.

While section 4 of chapter 620 of the Statutes of 1927 (p. 1047) purports on its face to repeal, upon the effective date thereof, section 1247 of the Penal Code, yet, if in construing said chapter 620, as a whole, it can reasonably be said that the Legislature intended such repealing clause to become effective only as of the time the judicial council might promulgate the rules contemplated by section 1 of said chapter 620, then this court may very properly disregard a literal interpretation of the repealing clause and give effect to the legislative intent. That the courts should not literally construe an express repealing clause contained in a statute, but must, when ascertainable, give expression to the legislative intent as evidenced by other portions of the same or contemporaneous statutes, has long since been judicially determined. Smith v. People, supra; State v. Moorhouse, 5 N. D. 406, 408–411, 67 N. W. 140; State v. Joyce, 307 Mo. 49, 269 S. W. 623, 625; Golden Valley County v. Lundin, 52 N. D. 420, 203 N. W. 317, 319; Hogg v. Bd. of Com'rs, 57 Colo. 463, 141 P. 478, 480; Parshall v. State, 62 Tex. Cr. R. 177, 138 S. W. 759, 764; Attorney General v. Duncan, 76 N. H. 11, 78 A. 925, 927; Indianapolis Union R. Co. v. Waddington, 169 Ind. 448, 82 N. E. 1030, 1032. The New York case above cited (Smith v. People, supra) appears to be a leading case upon the subject. The rule announced in the foregoing cases is again well stated in 26 Am. & Eng. Encyclopedia of Law (2d Ed.) 720, § 5, as follows: "A clause in a statute purporting to repeal other statutes is subject to the same rules of interpretation as other enactments, and the intent, if fairly expressed, must prevail over a mere literal interpretation clearly at variance with such intent. But even where the repealing statute is broad enough in its terms to embrace a particular earlier statute, yet if it is apparent that it is not the legislative intent to repeal such statute, a literal interpretation of the repealing act will not be adopted."

As was said in State v. Moorhouse, supra, the repealing clause must be construed "in the light of the circumstances surrounding its enactment, and also in connection with other statutes passed at the same time as part of the general scheme of legislation of which this repealing statute was only a subordinate feature."

[2] While it may be true that the statement provided for in section 1247 of the Penal Code does not, in strictness, constitute a part of the record on appeal, its preparation and filing is a necessary step, not only in the perfection of a criminal appeal but is essential to a proper presentation of the record on such appeal. Rhodes v. Sargent, 17 Cal. App. 54, 57, 118 P. 727; People v. Fleming, 166 Cal. 357, 375, 136 P. 291, Ann. Cas. 1915B, 881. This being so, it is apparent that the Legislature intended the repeal of section 1247, supra, by section 4, c. 620, Stats. 1927, to be suspended until the rules contemplated by section 1 of said chapter should be promulgated and adopted by the judicial council.

Appellants did not file with the clerk and present the application to the court, stating in general terms the grounds of appeal, etc.; nor was it contained in any record on appeal. This being so, the appeal was ineffectual and was properly dismissed if the saving clause of section 1246 was valid and applied to section 1247. No case has been called to our attention by appellants which held that an adoption of rules of procedure by reference is not permissible.

Acts and statutes, which provide that a method of procedure in effect at a designated past period of time shall be continued in force, are not uncommon, and are generally accepted as being within the power of the Legislature. The amendment of section 1246, Penal Code, and the repeal of section 1247, Penal Code, accomplished in the same act, gave notice as to the procedure that was in effect. If appellants were not informed of the adoption of rules by the judicial council in some approved method, they could have safely relied upon the procedure as it formerly stood.

From what has been said, it follows that we would not be justified in disturbing the order of the district court dismissing the appeal.

The order is affirmed.

submerged lands and to lease them on royalty basis, and merely requiring applicant for permit or lease to post notice on land and record it, surveyor general may not, under guise of regulation authorized by section 18, require service of personal notice or publication of notice on littoral or riparian owners.

3. Statutes ⇒112—Statute relieving littoral owners entering and prospecting on tidal lands from onus of trespassers held not violative of constitutional requirement that subject be expressed in title (St. 1921, p. 404, § 17, as amended, and § 17a as added by St. 1923, p. 593, §§ 1, 2; Const. art. 4, § 24).

St. 1923, p. 593, §§ 1, 2, adding section 17a to St. 1921, p. 404, amending section 17 by relieving littoral owners of onus of trespassers in entering on tide or submerged lands in prospecting for minerals, held not violative of Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring subject of act to be expressed in its title.

4. Statutes ⇒125(1)—Statute authorizing surveyor general to refuse permit to prospect on state mineral lands held invalid because subject is not expressed in title (St. 1921, p. 404, § 18a, as added by St. 1923, p. 593, § 3; Const. art. 4, § 24).

St. 1923, p. 593, § 3, amending St. 1921, p. 404, by adding thereto section 18a, authorizing surveyor general to refuse to grant permit to enter and prospect on tide and submerged lands and to lease them on royalty basis when in his judgment the work of prospecting for, developing, or extracting mineral would cause damage or loss to nearby property, held violative of Const. art. 4, § 24, in that title makes no reference to anything germane to the subject thereof.

5. Mandamus ⇒164(3)—Allegation that certain lands were within known geological structure held not to traverse allegation that, when application for prospecting permit was made, lands were not part of known geological structure (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

In proceeding for mandamus to compel surveyor general to issue permits to prospect for minerals in tidal and submerged lands, under St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, allegations of answer that certain lands "are situate within a known geological structure of a producing oil and gas field" did not traverse allegation that, when application for permit was made, such lands were not part of a known geological structure, but became such thereafter.

6. Mandamus ⇒164(3)—Answer, not unequivocally denying that petitioner for mandamus filed application for prospecting permit on date alleged by him, and contrary statements in answering petitioners' petition, pleaded latter out of court (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

In mandamus proceeding to compel issuance of permit to prospect for minerals in tide and submerged lands under St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, answer of alleged littoral owners, which did not unequivocally deny that petitioner filed his application on date alleged by him, but merely that on or about certain later dates he filed application for prospecting permit, and their petition alleging on information and belief that adverse party's petition was filed on date alleged therein, pleaded answering petitioners out of court.

7. Pleading ⇒121(4) — Positive allegation of record fact is conclusive, as against contrary allegation on information and belief.

The positive allegation of a record fact is conclusive on that issue, as against contrary allegation on information and belief made by parties having means of acquainting themselves with such fact.

8. Mines and minerals ⇒1—Minerals in tidal and submerged lands belong to state in its sovereign right.

Minerals contained in the soil covered by tidal and submerged lands belong to the state in its sovereign right.

9. Mines and minerals ⇒6—Littoral owners not complying with statutes authorizing prospecting on tidal lands cannot defeat right of citizens who have complied with statutes (Civ. Code, § 830; St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

Under Civ. Code, § 830, the proprietary rights of owner of land bordering tide water do not extend beyond ordinary high-water mark, and littoral owners who have not complied with St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, providing for permits to prospect on tidal and submerged lands, have no such right by reason of littoral ownership as would defeat right of any other citizen who has complied with statute, and they have no right of access to ocean, as against state or its grantee in exercise of a lawful use or purpose.

10. Navigable waters ⇒37(2)—State can grant preference in tidal and submerged lands to littoral owners for substantial reasons.

The state has power to grant a preference in favor of littoral owners as respects rights in tidal and submerged lands, where substantial reasons exist justifying a distinction.

11. Mines and minerals ⇒6—Littoral owner, filing application for permit to prospect on tidal lands over six months after another's prior application, had no right as against latter (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

Under St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, providing for permits to prospect for minerals on tidal and submerged lands and to lease such lands on royalty basis, littoral owner, who filed application for permit more than six months after another prior application covering same land, had no right as against prior applicant.

12. Mandamus ⇒9—That intervener had filed mandamus petition in superior court held no bar to another applicant's similar petition in Supreme Court (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

That intervener, in original mandamus proceeding in Supreme Court to compel surveyor general to issue permits to prospect for minerals in tidal and submerged lands under St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, had filed a similar petition in superior court which had not been formally disposed of, held no bar to petition of another applicant, where there was no allegation that latter was party to superior court proceeding, was served with process, or had knowledge thereof, in view of fact that intervener abandoned superior court as forum and selected Supreme Court for hearing and determination of same questions.

13. Mandamus 🔑143(2)—Delay in commencing mandamus proceeding to compel surveyor general to issue permit to prospect on tidal lands held not to estop petitioner on ground of laches (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

Where applicant for permit to prospect for minerals on tidal and submerged lands under St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, posted required notice on property in March 17, 1926, and filed his application for permit April 12, his failure to bring mandamus proceeding against surveyor general to compel issuance of permit promptly after receiving notice in March, 1927, that his application would not be granted, held not to estop him on ground of laches, where he made many efforts to convince surveyor general that he was entitled to permit and manifested a willingness to conform to any reasonable requirement that might be prescribed, and in view of doubt in surveyor general's mind as to his duties and powers under statute.

14. Mandamus 🔑141—Mandamus to cancel tidal lands prospecting permits issued to certain applicants, and grant them to others, should have been brought in superior court, instead of Supreme Court (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

Mandamus to compel surveyor general to cancel permits to prospect for minerals on tidal and submerged lands under St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, issued to one group of applicants, and grant them to another group, and that judgment be entered against parties interested in subject-matter who have had no opportunity to be heard, should have been brought in superior court, where pleadings could have been settled and disputed questions of fact found and determined, instead of in Supreme Court, and original proceeding in latter court will be dismissed.

15. Navigable waters 🔑36(1)—Common law vesting title to soil of sea in sovereign for people is law of land, except as affected by express grant, prescription, or usage.

The common law vesting title to soil of sea or arms of sea in sovereign in trust for the people is law of the land, except in so far as it may be affected by express grant, prescription, or usage.

16. Mines and minerals 🔑6—One purpose of statute authorizing prospecting on submerged lands was to give citizens opportunity to reduce to useful purpose minerals beneath ocean's bed (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

One of purposes in enacting St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, providing for granting of permits to residents of state who are citizens of United States to prospect on tidal and submerged lands and to lease such lands on royalty basis, was to give citizens an opportunity to intercept the large volumes of oil gravitating seaward to inextricable depths, and to reduce to useful purposes all gas and mineral deposits reposing beneath ocean's bed.

17. Mines and minerals 🔑4—Development of mineral resources should not be hampered by courts, except for most substantial grounds.

The development of mineral resources, of which oil and gas are the most important, is the settled policy of state and nation, and courts should not hamper this manifest policy, except for the most practical and substantial grounds

18. Constitutional law 🔑70(3)—Legislature's finding that authorizing oil wells on tidal lands would not substantially impair paramount public interest is conclusive (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

Finding of the Legislature, disclosed by enactment of St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, that there is nothing in the drilling and operation of oil wells on tidal and submerged lands in the manner provided in the statute that would substantially impair the paramount public interest in the lands and water remaining, is conclusive in such matters.

19. Constitutional law 🔑70(1)—To justify court interference with Legislature's right to alienate submerged lands, grants must impair power of succeeding Legislatures.

To justify interference by courts with right of Legislature to alienate tidal or submerged lands, it must appear that such grants do or will impair the power of succeeding Legislatures to regulate, protect, improve, or develop the public rights of navigation and fishing.

20. Navigable waters 🔑37(4)—Constitutional provisions become incorporated in grant of tidal waters.

Words of the Constitution are to be considered as incorporated in a grant or patent to tidal lands, the same as if inserted therein, and qualify grants, so that estate granted is limited to the permitted uses.

21. Mines and minerals 🔑6—License to explore and mine for minerals on tidal lands is not "grant" or "sale" prohibited by Constitution (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593; Const. art. 15, § 3).

Under St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, the license, privilege, or leasehold by which permittees are granted right to explore and mine for gas and oil does not constitute a "grant" or "sale" of tidal lands, in the sense that those terms are used in the prohibitory provisions of Const. art. 15, § 3.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Grant; Sale.]

22. Evidence 🔑10(4), 51—Court takes judicial notice of coast lines of state, and will resort to publications of commerce department describing coast.

The court will take judicial notice of the coast lines within the state, and will resort to publications issued by the Department of Commerce describing and delineating the United States coast and geodetic surveys.

23. Navigable waters 🔑37(2)—State has absolute power to alienate tidal and submerged lands unfit for navigation, commerce, or fisheries.

State has absolute right to alienate its tide and submerged lands when they are unfit for navigation, are useless as aids of commerce, and possess no substantial value as fishing grounds, and it is only where reduction of the water area amounts to a substantial interference with navigation, commerce, or fisheries that absolute power by the sovereign and its control and dominion over said lands can be questioned.

24. Navigable waters 🔑37(2)—State cannot abdicate its trust over property for people so as to leave property entirely under control of private parties, except to promote public interest.

State cannot abdicate its trust over property in which whole people are interested, like navigable waters and soils under them, so as to leave them entirely under control of private parties, except in case of parcels used in promoting interest of public therein, or when parcels can be disposed of without impairment of the public interest in what remains; but the trust in which tidal and submerged lands are held does not prevent state from reclaiming such lands from the sea where it can be done without prejudice to the public right of navigation and applying them to other purposes and uses.

25. Evidence 🔑10(1)—It is common knowledge that gas and oil strata exist in but few sections of state, and that indications thereof are easily recognized by experts.

It is common knowledge that gas and oil strata exist in but a few sections of the state, and that the geological indications are easily recognized by geologists and those familiar with subject.

26. Mines and minerals 🔑6—Statute authorizing prospecting and leasing of mineral rights in tidal and submerged lands held valid (St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593).

St. 1921, p. 404, as amended by St. 1923, p. 593, providing for granting of permits to residents of state who are citizens of United States to prospect for minerals on tidal and submerged lands and to lease such lands on a royalty basis, held valid exercise of right inhering in state by virtue of its sovereign power, and does not impinge on the state or federal Constitutions, and is not in conflict with any act of Congress or of state.

SEAWELL, J. Original applications for writs of mandamus by which the validity of chapter 303, Statutes and Amendments 1921, p. 404, and certain specific sections thereof, and also chapter 285, Statutes and Amendments 1923, p. 593, amendatory of said chapter 303, which provides for the granting of permits to residents of the state who are citizens of the United States, to enter and prospect upon tidal and submerged lands and to lease the same on a royalty basis, is assailed.

All of the petitioners herein are applicants for permits to enter and prospect for oil, oil shale, gas, phosphate, sodium, and other mineral deposits upon the several areas of public lands described in each respective application. Said lands are tidal and submerged lands situate in the vicinity of a small cove of the Pacific Ocean at Seacliff, county of Ventura, this state. Respondent, W. S. Kingsbury, surveyor general of the state of California and ex officio register of the state land office, has refused to grant the permits applied for, basing his refusal to do so upon the ground that the granting of the same would authorize the conduct of a business in and upon tidal and submerged lands which would interfere with and be destructive of navigation and the fisheries in the proximity of and within the areas described in said applications, and that the Legislature, in adopting the statute purporting to authorize the granting of said permits, exceeded its authority in attempting to provide a method by which tidal and submerged lands held by the state in trust for its inhabitants by virtue of its sovereign right and not by its proprietary right may be leased to residents of this state who are citizens of the United States or who had declared their intention to become citizens. The title of said chapter 303, Statutes and Amendments 1921, is as follows: "An act to reserve all minerals in state lands; to provide for examination, classification and report on the mineral and other character of state lands; to provide for the granting of permits and leases to prospect for and take any such minerals; to provide for the rents and royalties to be paid, and granting certain preference rights; to provide for the making of rules, regulations and contracts necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; and repealing acts or parts of acts in conflict herewith; providing for an appropriation to defray the cost of administering this act."

By the provisions of said act, all coal, oil, oil shale, gas, phosphates, sodium, and other mineral deposits in lands belonging to the state are reserved to the state and are reserved from sale except upon a rental and royalty basis, and a purchaser of any lands belonging to the state or which may thereafter become the property of the state shall acquire no right, title, or interest in or to such deposits except as in said act expressly provided. The right of such purchaser shall be subject to the reservation of said coal, oil, oil shale, etc., and to the conditions and limitations prescribed by law for the state and persons authorized by it to prospect for, mine, and remove such deposits and to occupy and use so much of the surface of said land as may be required for all purposes reasonably extending to the mining and removal of such deposits therefrom. All applications to purchase state lands filed subsequent to the passage of the act and all sales are made subject to a reservation to the state of one-sixteenth of all the coal, oil, gas, and other mineral deposits in all lands so acquired. The surveyor general is authorized to classify from time to time any or all state land for its different possible values and uses, and is authorized, upon payment to him of 50 cents per acre for each acre embraced within the boundaries of the lands proposed to be prospected, and under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to grant any person or association of persons who are qualified under the citizenship clause, or corporations, 90 per cent. of whose stockholders are likewise qualified under said citizenship clause, a prospecting permit, which shall give the exclusive right, for a period not exceeding two years, to prospect for oil or gas, not exceeding 640 acres of land wherein such deposits of oil or gas belong to the state and are not within any known geological structure of a producing oil or gas field, upon condition that the permittee shall begin drilling operations within six months from the date of the permit and shall prosecute said drilling to depths and subject to certain conditions therein required, unless for the causes therein named he is excused from so doing, which are not material to the issues before us. The said act provides that the applicant shall locate such land in a reasonably compact form according to the legal subdivisions of the public land surveys, if the land be surveyed, and in an approximate square or rectangular tract if unsurveyed, said surveying to be at the expense of the applicant. In case of prospecting permits and leases to river beds, lake beds, overflowed, tide, and submerged lands, the width or length of the prospecting permit or lease along the shore line is prescribed. If the applicant shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought a monument not less than four feet high at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for a permit will be made within 30 days after the date of posting said notice, giving the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and general description of the land covered by such permit, by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monuments as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof, in acres, he shall, during the period of 30 days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified; provided, that such applicant shall, as a part of his application for a permit, show that within 2 days after the posting of the said notice he recorded a copy of the same in the county recorder's office of the county in which the said land is situated. Within 90 days after receiving a permit the applicant shall mark upon the ground each of the corners of the tract described in the permit with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby. Where the boundaries sought to be prospected or developed are wholly or partially in river beds, lake beds, overflowed, tide, and submerged lands, the notice shall be conspicuously posted on a monument as closely to a corner of the land as possible, and shall describe the area to be developed by courses, and distances, so that the limits of the area can be easily determined. In no case shall permits or leases be granted covering tide, overflowed, or submerged lands fronting on an incorporated city or for a distance of one mile on either side thereof. In case of an application for a permit or lease covering tide, overflowed, or submerged land by any one other than the littoral or riparian proprietor, said littoral or riparian proprietor shall have six months within which to file an application for a permit or lease; but if said littoral or riparian proprietor fails to comply with the requirements of said act and its rules and regulations made in pursuance thereof, his preferential rights shall thereupon cease and be forever terminated, and the original applicant shall be permitted to proceed with his application.

Upon establishing to the satisfaction of the surveyor general that valuable deposits of oil or gas have been discovered within the limits of the land embraced in any permit, the permittee shall be entitled to a lease for one-fourth of the land embraced in the prospecting permit, but in any event he shall be granted a lease for as much as 160 acres of said lands, if there be that number of acres within the permit. If the lands are unsurveyed they shall be surveyed by the surveyor general in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by him. Such lease shall be for a period of 20 years upon a royalty basis of 5 per centum in amount or value of the production and the annual payment in advance of a rental of $1 per acre. The permittee is given a preferential right to a lease for the remainder of the land in his prospecting permit at a royalty of not less than 12½ per centum in amount or value of the production, under such other conditions as are fixed for oil and gas leases in the act, the bonus and royalty to be determined by competitive bidding or fixed by such other method as the surveyor general may by regulation prescribe. The surveyor general is given the right to reject any and all bids. Until the permittee shall apply for a lease to the one-quarter of the permit area, he shall pay to the state of California 20 per centum of the gross value of all oil or gas secured by him from the lands embraced within his permit and sold or otherwise disposed of by him or held by him for any disposition whatsoever. All permits and leases of lands shall be subject to the condition that no wells shall be drilled within 200 feet of any of the outer boundaries of the lands described in said permit or lease unless the adjoining lands have been patented or the title thereto otherwise vested in private owners, and to the further condition that the permittee or lessee will, in conducting his explorations and mining operations, use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land, or the entrance of water through wells drilled by him to the oil sands or oil-bearing strata to the destruction or injury of the oil deposits. Violations of this provision of the act works a forfeiture of the permit or lease enforceable by appropriate court proceedings.

Power is given the surveyor general, whenever the average production of any oil well shall not exceed ten barrels per day, to reduce the royalty on future production when in his judgment the well cannot be successfully operated upon the royalty fixed in the lease. Leases shall be for a period of twenty years with the preferential right in the lessee to renew the same for successive periods of ten years upon such reasonable terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the surveyor general. Section 10 provides, that "for the purpose * * * of promoting the sale of state land, and the more active cooperation of the owner of the soil, and to facilitate the development of its mineral resources the state hereby constitutes the purchaser of the soil, its agent for the purposes herein named and in consideration hereof, relinquishes to and vests in the purchaser of state lands an undivided fifteen-sixteenths of all oil and gas and the value of the same that may be upon or within any state land purchased after the passage of this act." The purchaser is authorized to sell or lease to any person, firm, or corporation the oil and gas and other minerals that may be thereon or therein upon such terms as such purchaser and owner may deem best, subject to reservations therein contained. Upon the discovery of oil or gas in paying quantities on adjoining lands, the purchaser shall within three months thereafter begin the drilling of wells upon his land, which shall be continuous as provided by appropriate rules and regulations prescribed by the surveyor general. The surveyor general shall reserve and may exercise the authority to cancel any prospecting permit or lease upon failure by the permittee to exercise due diligence and care in the prosecution of the prospecting work in accordance with the terms and conditions stated in the permit or lease which shall form a part of said instruments. No person, association, or corporation shall take or hold more than one oil or gas permit or lease; no corporation shall hold any interest as a stockholder of another corporation in more than one lease, and no person or corporation shall take or hold any interest as a member of an association or associations or a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under said act which together with the area embraced in any direct holding of a lease, or which together with any other interest or interests as a member of an association or associations or as a stockholder of a corporation or corporations holding a lease under the provisions of said act for any kind of mineral leased thereunder exceeds in the aggregate an amount equivalent to the maximum number of acres of the respective kinds of minerals allowed to any one lessee under said act. Provision is made for any number of lessees combining their several interests for the purpose of constructing and carrying on the business of a refinery, or of establishing and constructing, as a common carrier, pipe lines, or railroads to be operated and used by them jointly in the transportation of oil from their several wells, or the transportation of coal. Combinations in the form of unlawful trusts or conspiracies in the restraint of trade in the mining or selling of coal, phosphate, oil, shale, gas, or sodium are prohibited, and the leasehold in such cases is to be declared forfeited to the state. Provision is made for rights of way through all state lands for pipe line purposes, subject to certain regulations. No lease is to be assigned or sublet except with the consent of the surveyor general. Each lease shall contain provisions for the purpose of insuring the exercise of reasonable diligence, skill, and care in the operation of said leased property, and a provision for the safety and welfare of miners and the prevention of undue waste, as may be prescribed by the surveyor general, including the observance of the eight-hour work day; prohibitions against the employment of any boy under the age of 16 years or the employment of girls or women in any mine below the surface, restraint against freedom of purchase by employés, compulsory payment of wages at least twice a month, and such provisions as the surveyor general may deem necessary to insure the sale of the production of said leased lands to the public at reasonable prices, for the protection of the interests of the state, for the prevention of monopoly, and for the safeguarding of the public welfare, are made conditions of the lease.

Section 18, and other clauses of said act containing similar language, form the basis of the authority assumed by the surveyor general to enlarge upon the statutory notice required to be given by the applicant of his filing any application for a permit by providing that, in addition to the statutory notice, said applicant shall personally serve littoral owners, if they can be found within the state, and, if they cannot, then by publication in a newspaper of general circulation, much after the manner of serving summons in a civil action. This section is important by reason of the claim advanced by some of the littoral owners—based upon the effectiveness of such a rule as above referred to—that a nonlittoral owner's right to a permit and lease would not be considered if he failed to serve littoral owners with notice, as required by the surveyor general's rule. Said section 18 provides: "The Surveyor General of the state is authorized to prescribe necessary and proper rules and regulations and to do any and all things necessary to carry out and accomplish the purposes of this act, also to fix and determine the boundary lines of any structure, or oil or gas field, for the purpose of this act."

A preferential right to a permit to prospect mineral lands may, under section 4 of said act, be acquired "if the applicant shall cause to be erected upon the land for which a permit is sought a monument not less than four feet high, at some conspicuous place thereon, and shall post a notice in writing on or near said monument, stating that an application for permit will be made within thirty days after the date of posting said notice, giving the name of the applicant, the date of the notice, and such a general description of the land to be covered by such permit by reference to courses and distances from such monument and such other natural objects and permanent monument as will reasonably identify the land, stating the amount thereof in acres, he shall during the period of thirty days following such marking and posting, be entitled to a preference right over others to a permit for the land so identified; provided, however, that applicant shall, as a part of his application for a permit, show that within two days after the posting of the said notice, he recorded a copy of the same in the county recorder's office of the county in which the said land is situated. The applicant shall, within ninety days after receiving a permit, mark each of the corners of the tract described in the permit upon the ground with substantial monuments, so that the boundaries can be readily traced on the ground, and shall post in a conspicuous place upon the lands a notice that such permit has been granted and a description of the lands covered thereby; provided, however, that where the boundaries of the land sought to be prospected or developed under lease are wholly or partially in river or lake beds, overflowed, tide and submerged lands, the notice shall be conspicuously posted on a monument as close to a corner of the land as possible and shall specifically describe the area to be developed by courses and distances so that the limits of the area can be easily determined; provided further, however, that in no case shall permits or leases be granted covering tide, overflowed or submerged lands fronting on an incorporated city, or for a distance of one mile on either side thereof; provided further, however, that in case of an application for a permit or a lease covering tide, overflowed or submerged land by anyone other than the littoral or riparian proprietor, said littoral or riparian proprietor shall have six months within which to file an application for a permit or lease, but if said littoral or riparian proprietor fails to comply with the requirements of this act and its rules and regulations made in pursuance hereof, his preferential rights shall thereupon cease and forever be terminated, and the original applicant shall be permitted to proceed with his application." The foregoing is all the statute contains on the subject of notice.

Nowhere in the act is the applicant required to personally serve the littoral or riparian owner with notice of the filing of his application for a permit. Under the provisions of the act the only requirement as to notice is that the applicant post notice and within two days thereafter record the same in the county recorder's office of the county in which the land is situated, as therein specified. The surveyor general, assuming to act under the authority conferred upon him by section 18, has, by the adoption of article VII, subsections c, d, e, and f, Rules and Regulations, attempted to impose burdens upon the applicant not imposed by statute by requiring personal service of notice, and, under certain circumstances, publication of notice of the filing of an application for a permit.

[1] That a ministerial officer may not, under the guise of a rule and regulation, thought to be necessary to carry out and accomplish the purpose of an act, vary or enlarge the terms or conditions of a legislative enactment, has often been the subject of judicial decision. The very authorities cited by petitioners in support of the particular rule of the surveyor general now under consideration clearly and definitely indicate that said rule is without and in excess of his jurisdiction. Petitioners cite Hodgson v. Midwest Oil Co. (D. C.) 297 F. 273, and Leonard v. Lennox (C. C. A.) 181 F. 766. In the former of these cases, at page 276 of 181F., it is declared: "While the Leasing Act [30 USCA § 181 et seq.] itself does not provide for notice, it in effect gives the Interior Department the right to prescribe rules and regulations to carry the act into effect. Such rules and regulations were prescribed by the Land Department requiring notice to be given of all applications for leases, which regulations should be given the full force and effect of statutes, when not inconsistent with or repugnant to the law itself." (Italics supplied.) The latter case holds that: "The power of those officers under the law to adopt such a regulation is not reasonably open to question. Although powerless to adopt a regulation which is in anywise inconsistent with or repugnant to the public land laws, they possess ample power to enforce, by appropriate regulations, every part of those laws, as to which it is not otherwise specially provided." (Italics supplied.)

In U. S. v. George, 228 U. S. 14, 21, 33 S. Ct. 412, 414 (57 L. Ed. 712), it is declared: "It is manifest that the regulation adds a requirement which that section does not, and which is not justified by [sec.] 2246. To so construe the latter section is to make it confer unbounded legislative powers. What, indeed, is its limitation? If the Secretary of the Interior may add by regulation one condition, may he not add another? If he may require a witness or witnesses in addition to what [sec.] 2291 requires, why not other conditions, and the disposition of the public lands thus be taken from the legislative branch of the Government and given to the discretion of the Land Department?"

Again, in Williamson v. U. S., 207 U. S. 425, 462, 28 S. Ct. 163, 177 (52 L. Ed. 278), it is stated: "True it is that in the concluding portion of [sec.] 3 of the timber and stone act it is provided that 'effect shall be given to the foregoing provisions of this act by regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of the General Land Office.' But this power must in the nature of things be construed as authorizing the Commissioner of the General Land Office to adopt rules and regulations for the enforcement of the statute, and cannot be held to have authorized him, by such an exercise of power, to virtually adopt rules and regulations destructive of rights which Congress had conferred."

U. S. v. United Verde Copper Co., 196 U. S. 207, 215, 25 S. Ct. 222, 225 (49 L. Ed. 449), holds that: "If rule 7 is valid, the Secretary of the Interior has power to abridge or enlarge the statute at will. If he can define one term, he can another. If he can abridge, he can enlarge. Such power is not regulation; it is legislation. The power of legislation was certainly not intended to be conferred upon the Secretary."

Morrill v. Jones, 106 U. S. 466, 467, 1 S. Ct. 423, 424 (27 L. Ed. 267), declares: "The Secretary of the Treasury cannot by his regulations alter or amend a revenue law. All he can do is to regulate the mode of proceeding to carry into effect what Congress has enacted. In the present case we are entirely satisfied the regulation acted upon by the collector was in excess of the power of the Secretary. The statute clearly includes animals of all classes. The regulation seeks to confine its operation to animals of 'superior stock.' This is manifestly an attempt to put into the body of the statute a limitation which Congress did not think it necessary to prescribe."

[2] To the same effect is Waite v. Macy, 246 U. S. 606, 609, 610, 38 S. Ct. 395, 62 L. Ed. 892. In each of the foregoing cases there was provision, as in the act here involved, for the adoption of rules and regulations by a specified officer to carry into effect the purposes of the respective acts. These cases are authority to the effect that so long as the act here under consideration merely requires posting of notice by an applicant the surveyor general may not, under the guise of a regulation authorized by section 18, require the service of personal notice or the publication of notice. This rule is ineffective and cannot defeat the rights of any of the parties to these proceedings.

All the moneys received by the surveyor general under the provisions of the act from rents, fees, bonuses, and royalties accruing from the use of state school lands shall be paid into the school fund, and all other moneys shall be deposited in the state general fund.

The act concludes with the provision that, if any section, subsection, sentence, clause, or phrase of said act is for any reason held to be unconstitutional, such decision shall not affect the validity of the remaining portions of said act, etc.

[3] Prior to the passage of the amendment of section 17, chapter 285, Statutes and Amendments, 1923, littoral or riparian owners, as well as nonlittoral owners, who had entered upon tide, overflowed, or submerged lands, were regarded as trespassers. Said amendment relieved littoral owners of the onus of trespassers by adding section 17a with respect to their status, as follows: "If any littoral or riparian owner of land, without objection by the State of California or the United States of America or any of its officials, shall have entered upon tide, overflowed or submerged land, and for more than ten years next preceding the passage of this act, has been engaged in drilling the same, or has operated thereon, a producing well or producing wells, said littoral or riparian owner shall be entitled to a lease of such portion of such tide, overflowed or submerged land as may be necessary for the drilling of uncompleted wells and for the deepening of wells now producing or now being drilled that may hereafter become a producing well; provided, however, that application therefor shall be made by such littoral or riparian owner within three months after the passage of this act. [June 1, 1923.] Any such lease shall provide for the payment by the lessee of a royalty of twelve and one-half per centum in amount or value of the production. * * *"

This amendment is not open to the objection that the subject is not expressed in its title in compliance with article 4, § 24, state Constitution.

[4] Without mention of or reference to anything germane to the subject being made in the title of said amendatory act by number or otherwise, section 18a was added to the original act. That section attempts to confer authority upon the surveyor general with respect to a subject that was not included in the original act. It provides: "The Surveyor-General is hereby authorized to refuse to grant any permit or lease applied for under the provisions of this act when in his judgment the work of prospecting for, developing or extracting mineral would cause loss or damage to property near the land applied for."

The validity of this amendment is attacked on two grounds: First, that it is an attempt to delegate to the surveyor general, an executive officer, legislative power, the exercise of which is forbidden by the provisions of article 3, § 1, and article 4, § 1, state Constitution. It is asserted, under the express authority of Inglin v. Hoppin, 156 Cal. 483, 105 P. 582, that "the granting of state lands is a legislative power and prerogative," and that any act which attempts to confer such power upon an executive officer is void. Secondly, that the subject of the act is not embraced in its title. This last objection being clearly inescapable, it is not necessary to discuss the first ground of objection. Adopting the most liberal rule of construction, which we must, in the interest of protecting meritorious legislation from being declared void through inartificially drawn statutes (People v. Jordan, 172 Cal. 391, 156 P. 451; Estate of Wellings, 192 Cal. 506, 221 P. 628), it is not possible to save the section from the condemnation of the constitutional provisions cited. The purposes of the provisions of the Constitution in the premises are too familiar to lawyer and legislator to justify restatement. The reasons of the rule and its history are elaborately set out in Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 P. 251. Section 18a, being void, cannot, therefore, be considered in the determination of the rights of any of the parties to this proceeding.

The remaining, and in fact the major, law question presented by the case is pressed by respondent surveyor general and goes to the validity or effectiveness of the act in so far as it attempts to authorize the leasing of tide and submerged lands to private citizens, or authorizes the holding of said lands in any other use than in trust for a strictly public use. This question will receive attention at a later period in the consideration of the case. The substance of the act having been substantially set out, and its offending section pointed out, and the misinterpretation given another by the surveyor general having already been considered, the conflicting claims of the several petitioners, as shown by the proceedings, will receive attention.

The petitions of the several parties, while constituting separate proceedings, have been treated by the several counsel for petitioners in their briefs as presenting issues and principles of law which are largely, as to the major questions, common to all the causes or proceedings, and a decision of the rights of any one of petitioners will necessarily control to a greater or lesser degree the decision as to the others, except as to the questions of priority of rights or a failure on the part of an applicant to comply with the procedure prescribed by the act. In other words, we understand that it is the desire of all the parties to the several proceedings that all petitions be considered together and that a decision upon the main questions presented, to wit, the validity of said chapter 303, Statutes and amendments of 1921, and section 18a of said amendatory chapter 285, Statutes and Amendments of 1923, and upon all other questions presented by the pleadings or otherwise arising in which the decision made in one case may be applicable, is to be adopted as the rule of decision in such other cases and is to have the same force and effect in such other proceedings as if separately stated therein. Petitioners stand united as against the main contention of the surveyor general that the act under which each claims is invalid. Their cross-contentions among themselves are based upon certain provisions of the act, as will fully hereafter appear.

Petitioner Boone, a nonlittoral landowner, was the first one of the group of petitioners to file a petition herein. He alleges that on March 5, 1927, he caused to be erected upon the lands described in his petition a monument upon which he posted a notice in compliance with the requirements of said act; that on March 25, 1927, within the statutory period of 30 days thereafter, he filed an application for a permit to prospect upon said land for oil and gas and paid the $5 filing fee and tendered a bond in the amount fixed by the rules and regulations of the surveyor general conditioned for the faithful performance of the terms and conditions of the permit, and also tendered 50 cents per acre for each and every acre embraced in the petition for a permit, as required by law. By supplemental petition it is averred that petitioner, subsequent to the filing of the original petition, to wit, October 31, 1927, retendered said 50 cents per acre and said bond in the amount fixed by said surveyor general, and that said officer accepted said bond and filed the same in his office, but again refused to accept said tender of money computed at the rate of 50 cents upon each acre of land embraced within the petition. Said sum was deposited by petitioner in a bank of good repute to the credit of said surveyor general, as provided by section 1500, Civil Code, and notice thereof served upon the surveyor general. By the original petition it is also alleged that since the filing of the application for a prospecting permit more than six months elapsed and no littoral owner or other person applied for or received a permit to prospect the lands described in the petition herein; that petitioner possessed all of the qualifications of citizenship and complied with all of the requirements of said act and all valid rules and regulations prescribed by the surveyor general and was entitled to a permit to prospect the lands described in his petition; that he was refused such a permit on the sole ground that, in the judgment of respondent surveyor general, the work of prospecting for, developing, or extracting mineral would cause loss or damage to the property near the land described in his application. This alleged reason is founded upon section 18a, which section we have held to be void. It is further alleged, and nowhere pointedly denied, that the lands described in the Boone application were not at any of the times mentioned in said petition within any known geological structure or producing oil and gas field. By a supplemental petition Boone averred that thereafter, to wit, on November 1, 1927, said lands became and have at all times since said day continued to be a part of the known geological structure, and that on November 16, 1927, respondent surveyor general classified and declared all of the tide lands embraced in the Boone application to be within and a part of said geological structure.

[5] The Attorney General, on behalf of respondent surveyor general and the petitioners Charles M. Workman et al. and R. W. and Thelma I. Harthorn et al., whose respective applications include a large portion of the lands described in Boone's application, filed general demurrers to Boone's petition and also filed separate answers and returns to the writ. The surveyor general, answering Boone's petition, alleged that all of said lands described in the Boone petition "are situate within a known geological structure of a producing oil and gas field." This allegation does not traverse the Boone averment as to the time said lands became a known part of such structure. Continuing, it is alleged that a portion of the lands described in the petition are tide lands lying between the ordinary high and the ordinary low tide lands and the remaining portions are below the line of ordinary low tide, are continuously submerged, and form a part of the bed of the ocean, and that the state holds such lands in trust for the public uses of navigation and the fisheries; that prospecting for oil or gas thereon would interfere with navigation and the fisheries—destructive of both—and would deprive the people of the full, free, and unobstructed use of such lands and the water over the same and would impede and prevent the people of the state from the use, for any purpose, of the beach and tide land area of that portion of the Pacific Ocean included within the boundaries of said described lands; that the waters covering said lands are navigable and the granting of the petition would enable the permittee to destroy the navigability thereof and prevent the use thereof for navigation and prevent access to navigable waters of this state in violation of article 15 of the Constitution. It is also alleged that the prospecting for oil and gas or the production of oil and gas or either within the limits of the areas described would prevent and destroy fishing in the waters of said area and also in waters beyond said area and pollute them to such an extent as to render the fish therein unfit for human consumption; that the work of prospecting for, or developing or extracting, minerals on said described lands, would cause loss and damage, in the judgment of said surveyor general, to property near said described lands. Finally, it is alleged, by way of answer, that respondent is without authority to grant the permit asked for in the petition for the reason that said lands, being tide and submerged lands, constitute a part of the ocean's bed, and are held in trust for the uses of navigation and the fisheries, and there is no authority in the state of California to destroy or prevent the free and unobstructed use of such lands and the waters over them by the people, and the act in question is void in that it is violative of the state Constitution and contrary to the policy of this state and its people.

[6, 7] By way of answer, R. W. and Thelma I. Harthorn et al. allege themselves to be the owners of littoral rights in all the tide lands described in the Boone petition and that said petitioner is not such littoral landowner. It is alleged that petitioner Boone lost his rights in the premises, inasmuch as he did not comply with article VII, section 2, and its subsections, rules and regulations, adopted by the surveyor general, requiring personal service of the application for a permit. We have heretofore held such rules and regulations to be invalid, and no further discussion of that subject is necessary. Said answering petitioners do not deny by unequivocal and positive terms that Boone filed his application on March 25, 1927, as alleged by him, but allege merely that on or about July 27 or August 27, 1927, Boone filed said application for said prospecting permit. If his application was filed as late as either of the days last above mentioned, R. W. and Thelma I. Harthorn would be within the six months' period, and they would have a preference over nonlittoral claimants as prescribed by section 4, chapter 303, Statutes and Amendments of 1921. The failure to deny in positive terms that Boone filed his application as early as March 25, 1927, leaves the matter in a state of uncertainty but for the allegation in the Harthorn et al. petition, which, contrary to their answer, alleges, on information and belief, that the Boone petition was filed on or about March 25, 1927. Under the rule of construing pleadings, the petitioners have pleaded themselves out of court. Besides, they had the means of acquainting themselves with a record fact, and, having failed to do so, the positive allegation of petitioner Boone as to the fact is conclusive upon that issue. For the foregoing reasons the answering petitioners have no standing as against the Boone claim. It is lastly alleged in general terms, by way of answer, that the granting of the Boone petition would enable him to obstruct, and he would obstruct, said littoral landowners' access to the navigable water on which their lands front, and he would damage other property rights of said littoral landowners, and that the permit which Boone seeks, if granted, would be used to serve as a shield to exploit tide lands for oil and gas for private gains, and that the granting of said permit would be an invasion upon, and would impair, the natural rights of said adjoining littoral owners. The force of these allegations will be noticed hereafter.

[8-10] The Harthorn petition alleges that they took their first step to obtain said permit on October 10, 1927, and filed their application for the same on October 14, 1927. As littoral owners they would not be within the six months' period in making application following the earlier application made by Boone. The minerals contained in the soil covered by tidal and submerged lands belong to the state in its sovereign right. Littoral owners who have not complied with the provisions of the acts before us have no such right by reason of littoral ownership as would defeat the right of any other citizen who has complied with the requirements of said act. The proprietary rights of the owner of land bordering on tide water do not extend beyond the ordinary high water mark. Section 830, Civ. Code; Koyer v. Miner, 172 Cal. 448, 156 P. 1023; Henry Dalton & Sons Co. v. Oakland, 168 Cal. 463, 143 P. 721; State ex rel. Peruvian Phosphate Co. v. Board of Phosphate Commissioners, 31 Fla. 558, 12 So. 913; State v. Black Bros., 116 Tex. 615, 297 S. W. 213, 53 A. L. R. 1181. In San Francisco Savings Union v. R. G. R. Petroleum Co., 144 Cal. 134, 77 P. 823, 66 L. R. A. 242, 103 Am. St. Rep. 72, 1 Ann. Cas. 182, it was held that the absolute sovereignty of the state over the soils under tide water in the several states does not deprive the littoral owner of his right of access from his own land to the ocean as against a stranger. But this right is not given to the owner of land bordering upon the ocean shore as against the state or its grantee in the exercise of a lawful use or purpose. People v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 166 Cal. 627, 138 P. 103; Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331. It does not appear from the case presented that the right of access of littoral owners to the ocean will be cut off, but if it should be substantially impeded they would not be remediless if, in fact, they have any legal right as against the state or its agents in the premises. The littoral owners propose to do the things which they deny the right to others to do on lands that are held in trust for all the people. Their rights are prescribed by the state, which alone has the power to grant a preference, where substantial reasons exist justifying a distinction. That such a distinction may be made in favor of littoral owners is reasonable and just and has been recognized by several sister states in the adoption of acts similar to the act before us in the instant case. State ex rel. Peruvian Phosphate Co. v. Board of Commissioners, 31 Fla. 558, 12 So. 913.

Petitioners Harthorn et al. allege offers and tenders in compliance with the requirements of the act, but that the surveyor general refused to recognize their offers and tenders. The reason alleged for so doing is the same reason given for refusing the Boone permit. Both the attorney-general on behalf of the surveyor general, and Boone demurred to the petition of Harthorn et al. on general grounds, and both also answered. The demurrer and answer of the surveyor general are substantially the same as recited in the Boone petition. The demurrer interposed by Boone is good, as the petition does not state facts sufficient to authorize the granting of the writ. As to the answer, it would justify an order granting judgment upon the face of the pleadings.

Charles M. Workman demurred on general grounds and filed an answer to the Boone petition. By said answer he alleges that he and Katherine Irene Workman, Jerome W. Workman, and John Elines Workman, adult children of said Charles M. Workman, are littoral owners of a portion of the tide and submerged lands described in the Boone petition, and as such owners, and within six months after the Boone application, and prior to November 1, 1927, he, the said Charles M. Workman, with the consent of his said children, who were owners with him, as tenants in common, filed his application for a prospector's permit. The same objection which was made by other petitioners to the Boone petition, based on the ground that he did not comply with article VII, section 2, of the rules and regulations prescribed by the surveyor general requiring personal service of the application for said permit to be made upon the littoral landowner, is again repeated, but this objection is ineffectual for the reasons already pointed out. A full compliance with all the provisions of said act and the amendment and with all rules and regulations prescribed by the surveyor general with respect to the granting of a prospecting permit is alleged. The right of the state to grant a permit to a nonlittoral owner is alleged to be an invasion of the paramount inherent and constitutional right of the littoral landowners and violative of the due process clauses of the state and federal Constitutions.

Charles M. Workman also filed a petition for a permit to prospect a portion of the lands included in the Boone petition. By said petition he avers that he took his first preliminary step on August 8, 1927, and that on August 15, 1927, he filed with the surveyor general his application for a prospecting permit. He paid the filing fee and tendered the fee of 50 cents per acre for each acre included in his application, and tendered a good and sufficient bond in the amount prescribed by the surveyor general as a guaranty of good faith; but said fee and bond were rejected and said application for a permit was denied on the ground that prospecting the submerged ground described in his petition would, in the judgment of the surveyor general, cause loss or damage to property near the land described in his application. Boone demurred to the Workman petition on general and special grounds and filed an answer.

[11] Workman, in a supplemental pleading filed by him, fixed the time when he applied for a permit as of October 19, 1927, more than six months after the Boone application, and, this being so, he would have no right whatsoever as against Boone, inasmuch as his application came too late.

On March 17, 1926, H. E. Shudde, a nonlittoral landowner, caused to be erected at a conspicuous place upon the tidal and submerged lands described in his petition a monument conforming to the statutory height and size, and posted thereon the notice required by law, and performed and offered to perform and stood ready to perform all the other acts required to be performed in the order and in the manner and at the time fixed by the act governing the procedure herein. That on April 12, 1926, he filed an application for a permit to prospect the submerged lands described in his application, paid the filing fee, and tendered to said surveyor general the bond as fixed and required by him and also the fee of 50 cents per acre for each acre of land included in his application, but said surveyor general refused both tenders; that subsequently to the filing of petitioner's application, he filed, on September 24, 1926, upon the request of the surveyor general, an amended description, which is a true description of the lands described in the petition herein; that on September 13, 1927, petitioner again tendered said fee and bond to said surveyor general and that the fee was refused, but the bond was accepted and placed on file by said surveyor general; that no person claiming to be a littoral owner of said lands has within a period of six months after the filing of said amended description taken any steps or made application to obtain a prospecting permit covering any of the lands in said petition described. The surveyor general's refusal to grant petitioner said permit is based upon the grounds that petitioner not having complied with article VII, section 2, rules and regulations, requiring personal notice to be served upon littoral landowners, is not entitled to said permit and upon the further ground that the surveyor general is authorized to refuse permits to applicants when in his judgment the developing or extracting of minerals by the applicant would cause loss and damage to adjacent property. These reasons we have held to be insufficient to justify a refusal of a prospecting permit. Actual notice on the part of Shudde is alleged to have been given to said littoral landowners by the fact that the petitioner published for four successive weeks in a newspaper of general circulation published in the county of Ventura a notice of the filing of his application, and, further, because of petitioner's repeated posting of notices, at the suggestion of the surveyor general, upon the land described in his petition, and for the further reason that petitioner's application was brought to the personal notice of said littoral owners.

The answer to the petition and return to the writ of mandate filed by the surveyor general are the same in the main features as those filed by said officer in the other proceedings. Harry A. Chamberlin, who had filed an application for a prospecting permit covering a portion of the said lands described in the Shudde petition, was granted permission to intervene in the Shudde proceeding. He is a nonlittoral landowner and took his first step under the provisions of chapter 303, Statutes of 1921, on August 18, 1927, by erecting a monument upon the lands described by him. On September 14, 1927, he filed his application for a prospecting permit and on the same day tendered the filing fee computed at the rate of 50 cents upon each acre included in his application and the $5 filing fee, as prescribed by law, but the surveyor general refused to accept the application of said Harry A. Chamberlin and refused to issue him a prospecting permit. As a separate and distinct defense to the petition of Shudde and by way of further answer to Shudde's petition for a writ of mandamus, Harry A. Chamberlin, as intervener, alleges that Shudde did not within a reasonable time after the expiration of six months next succeeding his application dated April 13, 1926, apply to this court or any other court to enforce such rights as he may have been entitled to by virtue of his application, and he was guilty of bad faith and laches in not pressing his rights sooner, inasmuch as he had notice in March, 1927, that said surveyor general would not grant his application. The petition in intervention alleges that Shudde did not apply for the writ of mandamus herein until after intervener Chamberlin had applied to the superior court of the county of Sacramento to compel said surveyor general to issue to him a permit to prospect said described lands; that the petitioner Shudde did not apply for a writ of mandamus until the character of the geological structure in which said property is situated became greatly increased in value.

[12] The fact that a petition was filed in the superior court of the county of Sacramento on September 17, 1927, by intervener Chamberlin against the surveyor general for an order commanding him to issue to intervener said prospecting permit, which action has not been formally disposed of, seems to be relied on by intervener as a bar to the Shudde petition herein. We are unable to see how the filing of that proceeding in the superior court of Sacramento county could affect the rights of petitioner Shudde. The Chamberlin petition herein contains no allegation that Shudde was made a party to that proceeding or was served with any process or had any knowledge of the Sacramento county proceeding. Besides, the Sacramento county forum was voluntarily abandoned by petitioner Chamberlin, and this forum selected in its place to hear and determine precisely the same questions that were involved in the Sacramento county proceeding.

[13] In the original petition filed by petitioner Chamberlin for said writ, he avers that at the time he posted notice of his application upon said described lands there was no other notice posted upon said lands of like or similar purport; nor was there any application pending with the respondent for a permit to prospect for oil or gas upon said described lands. The petitioner admits, however, that Shudde's application was made prior to his, but attempts to avoid its force by invoking the doctrine of laches. The allegation that there was no other application pending with the surveyor general at the time Chamberlin filed his application, in the face of the averments and admissions appearing upon the face of the papers before us, amounts to but an erroneous conclusion drawn by the pleader. The Shudde application appears to conform to the provisions of the act, and the only grounds urged against his asserted right by his adversary is that the doctrine of laches estops him. The delay in commencing proceedings against the surveyor general, considering the uncertain state of mind in which that officer found himself as to his duties and powers under the act, was not so great as to justify a finding that Shudde was guilty of laches. Besides he made many efforts to convince the surveyor general that he was entitled to a permit and manifested a willingness to conform to any reasonable requirement that might be prescribed. Said petitioner Chamberlin, who, like Shudde, is not a littoral proprietor of any land along the ocean shore line, erected his monument on the lands described in the petitions of both claimants on August 18, 1927, and filed his application for said permit on September 14, 1927, a little short of a year after the Shudde application. The surveyor general from the beginning refused to recognize his application and rejected all of his tenders and offers made in an effort to bring himself within the provisions of said act.

Shudde and Hickey Bros. Company, a corporation, and the surveyor general either demurred to or filed answers or both demurred and filed answers to the Chamberlin petition upon grounds similar to those considered in other applications, which will not be set out for the additional reason that the Shudde application was filed prior to the Chamberlin application and consequently claimant Shudde has priority over claimant Chamberlin.

The joint application of Hickey Bros. Company, a California corporation, et al., claims the right to have issued to them a permit to prospect a portion of the lands embraced in the Shudde application. Said petitioners allege that they are the littoral proprietors of all the tide and submerged lands described in their petition, which includes lands described in Shudde's petition, and are the owners of all the lands abutting or fronting on the lands described by them. It is further alleged, on information and belief, that Shudde filed an application for a prospector's permit on April 12, 1926, and that said petition was accepted by the surveyor general on September 24, 1926, and that said Shudde was requested by the surveyor general to make personal service upon all the littoral proprietors of tide and submerged lands in compliance with the rule and regulation which we have herein declared void as being in excess of the authority of the surveyor general, but that Shudde refused and neglected to make such personal service. It is also alleged that the surveyor general refused to consider or recognize their application, which in every respect complied with the provisions of law and the rules and regulations prescribed by the surveyor general in such cases provided. The application of Hickey Bros. Company et al. was filed October 14, 1927, more than six months after the Shudde application, and as to the lands included in the latter's application, it came too late. Harry A. Chamberlin, whose petition herein has been considered, intervened in this proceeding (Hickey et al.), as he did in the Shudde proceeding, setting forth his claims upon substantially the same grounds as are set out in the pleadings in the other proceeding. Shudde and the surveyor general demurred, and the latter filed an answer. It is unnecessary to notice specifically the substance of said demurrers and answers, other than to say that the objections raised therein, if not already disposed of by what has been said, will be amply covered in the course of this decision.

The seventh and last petition for a writ of mandamus filed herein is the petition of Kittie C. Ballard, J. C. Ballard, Jessie Ballard Daggs, and Jean Ballard Saxby. Claiming to be the owners as tenants in common of lands littoral to tide and submerged lands situated in the Pacific Ocean, petitioners applied for a prospecting permit on October 10, 1927, and their application was rejected by the surveyor general for the reason, as expressed in his correspondence with the representatives of petitioners, that he entertained a doubt as to the constitutionality of the act authorizing the issuance of said permits, the validity of which act being then pending in the courts for decision. Four months prior to petitioner's application for a permit, permits had been granted to Neil C. Needham and R. N. Ferguson, respectively, upon applications made by them to prospect for oil and gas a portion of the lands included in the application of Kittie C. Ballard and her associates. Wilbur C. Finch applied for a permit on June 12, 1927, to prospect other lands included in the subsequent Ballard application; but his application is alleged to be pending for decision in the office of the surveyor general. Neither Needham, Ferguson, nor Finch are owners of lands littoral to the tide lands described by them.

Kittie C. Ballard and her associates insist that the permits issued to Needham and Ferguson are invalid, for the reason that said littoral proprietors were not personally served with notice, nor in lieu thereof served by publication, as provided by the rules and regulations prescribed by the surveyor general, and, this being so, they are entitled to the permit as prayed for. This question has been disposed of adversely to petitioners' contention. None of the parties whose interests as permittees will be affected by this proceeding have appeared except Finch, whose application was filed prior to the Kittie C. Ballard petition. Neither Needham nor Ferguson, or the assignees of either, has been joined in the action, nor does it appear that either was served with process or had any kind of notice of the commencement of this proceeding or the hearing thereof. Finch, by his demurrer, which is both general and special, raises the question of several actions being improperly united; for example, an action for the revocation of permits heretofore issued with an action to compel the issuance of a permit to petitioners herein; further, that petitioners, being but private citizens, are not the proper parties, nor have they the authority to maintain an action to revoke said permits, implying that such a suit may be maintained only upon the relation of the state. The point is also made that the permittees are necessary parties to the action. The answer denies that said petitioners are or were at any time mentioned in said petition the owners as tenants in common or otherwise of any real property adjoining or littoral to any of the lands embraced in any of the applications referred to as the Needham, Ferguson, and Finch applications. It is affirmatively alleged by the answer that a strip of land not owned by petitioners and in which they claim no interest lies between the uplands claimed by petitioners to be owned by them and the tide lands embraced in the permits issued to Needham and Ferguson, including also the tide lands described in Finch's pending application. The allegation which uniformly appears in the various petitions, to the effect that on November 1, 1927, all of the tide and submerged lands in controversy became a part of the known geological structure of a producing oil and gas field by reason of the fact that a well drilled thereon began to produce oil on or prior to November 1, 1927, and that on November 16, 1927, the surveyor general classified and declared said tide lands herein described or referred to as lying within and being a part of said known geological structure, is repeated and seems to be conceded to be true. Finch alleged that petitioners did not at any time prior to November 16, 1927, actually tender to the surveyor general the bond required by the rules and regulations prescribed by said officer, nor any portion of the prospecting fee. Finch alleges that assignments of the permits sought to be revoked were made by permittees Needham and Ferguson, with the approval of the surveyor general, and points out the omission of said assignees as parties, and insists that they are necessary parties to this proceeding. He also, by way of answer, alleges the pendency of an action brought by him in the superior court of the county of Sacramento to compel the surveyor general to grant him a permit upon the application heretofore mentioned, but he does not plead said action by way of abatement of the present action, nor does he make any request that the present action abate by reason of the pendency of said other proceeding.

The specific claim stressed in the Ballard petition (S. F. No. 12766) is that the adversary claimants did not observe the rule prescribed by the surveyor general as to the service of notice upon littoral proprietors. If that was the only justiciable question in the case, it would be decided against petitioners on what has already been said. But the Ballard petitioners claim to be littoral proprietors and allege that their application was made within six months subsequent to the filing of the Needham, Ferguson, and Finch applications. If that is true, they may have rights by virtue of section 4 of said act. That they are littoral proprietors, however, is disputed, and that they complied with the provisions of the law in other respects is denied.

[14] It is obvious that the pleadings in this proceeding should have been settled and the disputed questions of fact found and determined by the superior court of this state, a tribunal constituted and provided with the appropriate machinery for hearing and determining both questions of fact and law reasonably expeditiously. We are asked to command the surveyor general to cancel permits issued to one group of applicants and grant them to another group, an order which can only be made after a judicial determination of disputed issues of fact. In addition to this and the settling of pleadings, we are asked to enter judgment against parties interested in the subject-matter who have had no opportunity to be heard. For obvious reasons the Kittie C. Ballard et al. petition for a writ of mandamus (S. F. No. 12766) must be and is hereby dismissed and petitioners are remitted, if, after what has been said, they are so advised, to an appropriate forum to litigate such questions as are not concluded by this decision. That neither time nor labor have been conserved by permitting any of the petitioners herein to come into this court in the first instance is forcefully illustrated by the elaborate and laborious statement which the many issues and cross-contentions raised by adversary claimants and numerous amici curiæ have made necessary.

Boone and Shudde have alleged a strict compliance with the provisions of the act by setting forth, step by step, the course pursued by them and have kept their tenders good. The other adversary claimants alleged in general terms a compliance with the provisions of said act or a refusal on the part of the surveyor general to treat with them.

Those petitioners claiming to be owners of littoral rights herein, in making their several applications to the surveyor general for permits, did not base their claims upon the preference given to littoral owners by said act, but followed the procedure prescribed for nonlittoral claimants in making their applications, and it was in this court that they set up for the first time claim to a preference by virtue of being littoral owners. Some of the respective owners of lots littoral to said tide lands pooled their interests. Objection is made to this method of attempting to acquire such rights as being without statutory warrant. In view of our conclusions on other controlling points which conclude them as permittees, it becomes unnecessary to consider the rights of several owners to pool their interests.

[15] We now turn from the consideration of the adverse claimants, inter se, to a consideration of the objections made to the act on constitutional grounds by the Attorney General on behalf of the surveyor general and the state of California, which are supplemented by exhaustive briefs presented by amici curiæ supporting the action of the surveyor general in his refusal to grant the permits sought to be obtained by these proceedings. Several hundred pages of briefs are devoted to discussions of the title in the soil of the sea or arms of the sea, which at common law was vested in the sovereign in trust for the people. The common law, or law of England, upon this subject was brought to this country by our early ancestors and continues to be the law of the land except so far as it may be affected by express grant, by prescription or usage. In the leading case of Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 331, Mr. Justice Gray made an exhaustive examination of the entire subject, and, after reviewing the laws of many states, he thus summarized the result of his examination: "The foregoing summary of the laws of the original states shows that there is no universal and uniform law upon the subject; but that each state has dealt with the lands under the tide waters within its borders according to its own views of justice and policy, reserving its own control over such lands, or granting rights therein to individuals or corporations, whether owners of the adjoining upland or not, as it considered for the best interests of the public. Great caution, therefore, is necessary in applying precedents in one state to cases arising in another."

[16] We do not deem it necessary to pursue the question of the title to tide lands to the extent that the subject has been discussed by counsel, for the reason that the act does not purport to divest the state of its title to any part of its tide lands, but merely grants to its permittees a license or privilege of extracting minerals from the soil, the ownership of which is held in its proprietary right, for a term of years, upon an acreage and royalty basis. It is clear that one of the purposes of the Legislature by the enactment of said chapter 303, Statutes and Amendments 1921, p. 404, was to give to the citizens an opportunity to intercept the large volumes of oil gravitating seaward to inextricable depths, and to reduce to useful purposes oil, gas and mineral deposits reposing beneath the ocean's bed. The commercial value of these subterranean products is enormous. The contribution made to commerce and the varied industries of the world and to the comfort of the race by the modern intensive development of the oil and gas industry is not surpassed, if it is equaled, by any other of the natural agencies or physical forces which are contributing to the material welfare of mankind, including electrical energy. Gasoline is the power that largely moves the commerce of nations over lands and sea; it furnishes much of the power necessary to the manufacturer, agriculturist and miner, as well as power needful in the reclamation of swamp and overflowed land and in the irrigation of arid and waste land. It is the only power that is practical for aeroplane navigation. Gasoline is so closely allied with state and national welfare as to make its production a matter of state and national concern. If it can be said of any industry that its output is "in aid and furtherance of commerce and navigation," and its production "a public benefit," the production of gasoline, by reason of the motive elements that inhere in it and its universal use and adaptability to varied uses and the convenient and portable form in which it may be confined, would entitle it to a high classification in the scale of useful, natural products. It is a mover of commerce and fills the office of "a public benefit." The government has recognized it as a necessary naval supply and has fostered and encouraged exploration for mineral deposits and the development of oil fields wheresoever found to exist. The state Legislature, by adopting the act before us, recognized the use of gasoline and oil to be practically indispensable to the needs of rapid, expanding industry and commerce.

[17] The federal government from its earliest organization, has consistently adopted acts containing the most liberal terms as inducements to engage its citizens in the exploration and development of its mineral resources. In fact, the development of the mineral resources, of which oil and gas are among the most important, is the settled policy of state and nation, and the courts should not hamper this manifest policy except upon the existence of most practical and substantial grounds. Our state act was fashioned after an act adopted by Congress in 1920, known as the Federal Leasing Act, and the two acts are very similar in every important feature.

None of the lands involved in these proceedings front upon any incorporated city, nor are they situated upon a harbor, bay, inlet or estuary. Neither are they within the inhibitions of the distance limitations or the sale and grant clauses of article 15, § 3, state Constitution, which provides: "All tide lands within two miles of any incorporated city or town of this state, and fronting on the waters of any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet, used for the purposes of navigation, shall be withheld from grant or sale to private persons, partnerships, or corporations."

The license or privilege authorizing the permittee to prospect and mine tide lands is denominated by the act a lease, but in practical effect it strongly partakes of the character of a contract to prospect or mine said tide lands on a share or percentage basis. In no sense does the state part with title to its tide lands. More than this, it expressly "reserves from sale except upon a rental and royalty basis" all coal, oil, oil shale, phosphate, sodium and other mineral deposits in lands belonging to the state, and persons authorized by said act to prospect for, mine and remove such deposits are restricted to as small a portion of the surface area as may be reasonably required for mining and removing such deposits. In this respect the instant case is widely different from Illinois Central R. Co. v. People of the State of Illinois, 146 U. S. 452, 13 S. Ct. 118 (36 L. Ed. 1018), the case frequently cited by respondent, surveyor general, and the amici curiæ in sympathy with his position. In the case last cited the state undertook to grant into exclusive private ownership 1000 acres of the submerged beds of Lake Michigan, constituting a large acreage of the city of Chicago's water front, freed of any public easement. This was clearly a deprivation of the enjoyment of every right for which said lands were held in trust by the state, as pointed out in the following excerpt from said decision: "The control of the state for the purposes of the trust [that is, the trust for the people of the state that they may enjoy the navigation of the waters, carry on commerce over them and have the liberty of fishing therein free from interference of private parties] can never be lost, except as to such parcels as are used in promoting the interests of the public therein, or can be disposed of without any substantial impairment of the public interest in the lands and waters remaining. * * * It is grants of parcels of lands under navigable waters, that may afford foundation for wharves, piers, docks and other structures in aid of commerce, and grants of parcels which, being occupied, do not substantially impair the public interest in the lands and waters remaining, that are chiefly considered and sustained in the adjudged cases as a valid exercise of legislative power consistently with the trust to the public upon which such lands are held by the state." (Italics supplied.)

[18, 19] With full knowledge of the subject, the Legislature found that there was nothing in the drilling and operation of oil wells conducted in the manner provided by the statute that would substantially impair the paramount public interest in the lands and water remaining, and upon a consideration of the case we find nothing that would justify us in holding that the finding of the Legislature, which is conclusive in such matters (People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 138 P. 79), is not fully supported by the facts. To justify an interference by courts with the right of the Legislature to alienate tide or submerged lands, it must appear that such grants do or will impair the power of succeeding Legislatures to regulate, protect, improve, or develop the public rights of navigation and fishing. Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 P. 277. It cannot be seen that the legislation in the instant case will embarrass immediate or remote legislation.

By the provisions of the act the state reserves a supervisory control over the entire subject-matter and ample provision is made for a cancellation of the lease or privilege upon a violation of any of its numerous terms designed for the protection of the state. But aside from the precautionary steps taken by the state to safeguard the public's interests, the law vouchsafes ample protection to the paramount rights of the public in the absence of express statutory provisions on the subject.

[20, 21] "The words of the Constitution are to be considered as incorporated in the grant or patent [granting tide lands] the same as if inserted therein. They become a part of it and qualify it, so that the estate granted is limited to the permitted uses." Forestier v. Johnson, 164 Cal. 24, 127 P. 156. So, in the instant case, should said permittees offer any substantial interference incompatible with navigation, fishing, or commerce, the state and federal government would have the unquestionable right to abate it. The license or privilege or leasehold by which the permittees are granted the right to explore and mine for gas and oil does not constitute a grant or sale of tide lands in the sense that those terms are used in the prohibitory provisions of article 15, § 3, state Constitution. In San Pedro, etc., R. R. Co. v. Hamilton, 161 Cal. 610, 119 P. 1073, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 686, it was held that a lease made to a corporation by the city of San Pedro of tide lands was valid and did not come within the inhibitory provisions of the Constitution forbidding the granting or sale to private persons, partnerships, or corporations of tide lands within two miles of any incorporated city or town and fronting on any harbor, estuary, bay, or inlet used for the purpose of navigation. The relations of the state with its permittees or lessees in the instant case do not create a superior estate in said tide lands than was created by the lease entered into by the city of San Pedro and said corporation.

The surveyor general is constituted the agent of the state by the act under consideration, as he is made its agent in numerous acts providing for the sale of salt marsh, tide, and other public lands, to carry out and accomplish the purposes of the act and to that end he may make all rules and regulations not in conflict or inconsistent with the provisions of said act. His powers in the way of regulation and administration are many, and the legislation conferring them is to be given full force and effect when enacted according to the constitutional mandate and when not in conflict with the express provisions of said act. By chapter 227, Statutes and Amendments 1923, p. 452, the Attorney General, the chairman of the state board of control, and surveyor general are constituted a commission to lease to the highest responsible bidder any land belonging to the state of California and dedicated to a public use where such lands contain, in the judgment of said commission, oil, gas, and other hydro-carbons in commercial quantities. The act is but another illustration of the policy of the state with respect to the extraction of its minerals from state lands and was unquestionably passed to remove the obstacle pointed out in McNeil v. Kingsbury, 190 Cal. 406, 213 P. 50. In that case McNeil applied for a writ of mandate in this court to compel the surveyor general to issue to him a prospecting permit, under the provisions of the identical act attacked by respondent surveyor general, to prospect for oil upon the grounds of the Norwalk State Hospital for the Insane at Norwalk, Cal. The petition was denied on the grounds that it was not intended by the Legislature that said act should apply to lands already devoted to a public use.

[22] A copy of a photograph taken January 23, 1928, twenty-four hours after high tide, showing the section of the ocean shore line upon which the tide lands in controversy abut, is appended to the briefs of Boone and Shudde. That the photograph is a true representation of the situation is admitted. It shows a precipitous, mountainous upland facing in crescent shape the open sea. A number of oil derricks are erected upon the highlands and several derricks and other structures appear to be erected upon the beach near the point where the surf extends its flow under normal conditions. The beach which skirts the shore is very narrow. The narrow shelf of the beach at the foot of the cliffs is occupied by the tracks of the Southern Pacific Railroad. Paralleling the railroad is the state highway, which for a considerable distance is built over tide lands upon a causeway. There is no wharf or landing structure of any kind erected in the vicinity. The court is invited to and will take judicial notice of the coast lines within the state and will also resort to publications issued by the department of commerce describing and delineating the United States coast and geodetic surveys. The coast in question is not a harbor, or haven, nor does it afford natural facilities for the landing of vessels. It is asserted, and not contradicted, that the record of the rise and fall of the tide at this point shows that the tide ebbs upon occasions a distance of seven hundred or eight hundred feet from the mean high-tide line and the sea is too heavy for small vessels to weather and too shallow to float large ones. It may be said of the situation that the coast line at the point in question is an unnavigable portion of a vast body of navigable water, and the use to which the state proposes to devote the soil, from a practical point of view, would not be incompatible with, or in "derogation of its governmental trust to preserve needed navigable waters for the benefit of its people." Bolsa Land Co. v. Burdick, 151 Cal. 254, 90 P. 532, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 275. No claim is made that the shallows, shoals or depths of the area in question are valuable for fishing purposes.

[23] No uncertainty can exist as to the rights of the state to absolutely alienate its tide and submerged lands when they are unfit for navigation, are useless as aids of commerce and possess no substantial value as fishing grounds. The policy of this state is and has always been to encourage its citizens to devote waste and unused lands to some useful purpose. The power of the state to absolutely alienate lands perpetually covered by water has been upheld by all courts of the nation, state and federal, where the land so covered was severed from the main body by harbor and other improvements in such manner as to leave the remaining waters of no substantial use to navigation or commerce. It is only in those cases where the reduction of the water area amounts to a substantial interference with navigation and commerce or the fisheries that the absolute power of alienation by the sovereign and its control and dominion over said lands can be questioned.

In Eldridge v. Cowell, 4 Cal. 80, this court had before it the rights of an owner of a water lot, which he held, as did many other owners of lots similarly situated, under an alcalde grant and by the act of the Legislature of this state passed in March, 1857. Said lots were a part of a water district which had been cut off from the main waters of the San Francisco Bay by the construction of harbor improvements and sold into private ownership. The area known as the water district composed a large portion of the business district now lying north of Market street and east of Montgomery street. The plaintiff Eldridge was the owner of one of said water lots. He brought an action to enjoin the defendant from obstructing the navigation to his lot by mooring and anchoring store ships and making embankments in front of his lot. The defendant was the owner of the lot upon which the store ship was anchored. In denying plaintiff relief, this court said: "She [the state] holds the complete sovereignty over her navigable bays and rivers, and although her ownership is, by the law of nations, and the common and civil law, attributed to her for the purpose of preserving the public easement, or right of navigation, there is nothing to prevent the exercise of her power in certain cases to destroy the easement, in order to subserve the general good, which, when done, subjects the land to private proprietorship."

The rule to be kept in mind, and which is recognized by every case bearing on the subject, including Illinois Central R. R. v. Illinois, supra, the case chiefly relied upon by the surveyor general, and from which we freely quote, is that the state has the unquestionable right to alienate its tide and submerged lands subject to the "trust in which they are held for the people of the state that they may enjoy the navigation of the waters, carry on commerce over them, and have liberty of fishing therein free from the obstruction or interference of private parties."

In the case last cited the question was, as stated by the author of the opinion, Mr. Justice Field, "whether the legislature was competent to thus deprive the state of its ownership of the submerged lands in the harbor of Chicago [comprising a considerable portion of Lake Michigan], and of the consequent control of its waters; or, in other words, whether the railroad corporation can hold the lands and control the waters by the grant, against any future exercise of power over them by the state." The extent of the submerged lands conveyed in fee to a private corporation, comprising 1,000 acres, is especially emphasized; the court observing that the harbor is of immense value to the people of the state of Illinois in the facilities it affords to its vast and increasing commerce. The area of the submerged area proposed to be ceded to the private corporation embraced more than three times the area of the outer harbor, and not only included all of that harbor but embraced adjoining submerged lands which, in all probability, would be included in the harbor. The arrivals and clearings of vessels at the port of Chicago is commented upon and the shipping and tonnage of vessels is shown to be enormous. As stated in the opinion, the ownership of the navigable waters of the harbor and of the lands under them was a subject of public concern to the whole people of the state. The opinion holds that such a vast area, including practically the whole of an important state harbor, could not be alienated by the state and placed in the hands of a private corporation created for a purpose not compatible with the trust for which it was held. But the opinion does recognize the alienability of such lands "in those instances mentioned of parcels used in the improvement of the interest thus held, or when parcels can be disposed of without detriment to the public interest in the lands and waters remaining." (Italics supplied.) It was the passing of practically the entire acreage of the lands of the harbor covered by tide waters, quite a portion of which is perpetually submerged, into private ownership to be devoted to a use that would be wholly inconsistent with and an impairment of the interest of the public in said lands and the use of the remaining waters for any uses which the law forbade. "Grants of parcels of lands," the opinion observes, "under navigable waters, that may afford foundation for wharves, piers, docks and other structures in and of commerce, and grants of parcels, which being occupied, do not substantially impair the public interest in the lands and waters remaining" are "sustained in the adjudicated cases as a valid exercise of legislative power consistent with the trust to the public upon which such lands are held." The opinion states that no instance exists where, as by the case presented, the harbor of a great city and its commerce have been allowed to pass into the control of any private corporation.

The rights of the several states as to the ownership of and control over tide and submerged lands within their borders is thus stated in the Illinois Central Railroad Case: "* * * The ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tide waters, within the limits of the several states, belong to the respective states within which they are found, with the consequent right to use or dispose of any portion thereof, when that can be done without substantial impairment of the interest of the public in the waters, and subject always to the paramount right of Congress to control their navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce with foreign nations and among the states."

[24] The state cannot abdicate its trust over property in which the whole people are interested, like navigable waters and soils under them, so as to leave them entirely under the use and control of private parties, except in the case of parcels used in promoting the interest of the public therein, or when parcels can be disposed of without impairment of the public interest in what remains.

Nothing is said in Illinois Central R. R. v. Illinois that would indicate that the uses to be made of the tide lands in the instant case by the agents or permittees of the state in extracting oil minerals from the ocean beds under its control and regulation would substantially impair the public interest in or use of the vast remaining area of the ocean.

The trust in which tide and submerged lands are held does not prevent the state from reclaiming tide and submerged lands from the sea where it can be done without prejudice to the public right of navigation and applying them to other purposes and uses. As said in Ward v. Mulford, 32 Cal. 365: "There are large tracts of salt marsh lands, of which the land in suit is an example, which are covered and uncovered by the flow and ebb of the neap tides, and therefore belong to the state by virtue of her sovereignty, which are of no possible use for the purposes of navigation, but may be valuable for agricultural or other purposes if reclaimed from the tides. Such lands the state may undoubtedly grant in private ownership for the purposes of reclamation and use, for by such a course no right of the public to their use for the purposes of navigation would be prejudiced. On the contrary, the right of navigation, in many cases, might be subserved by such reclamation."

Shively v. Bowlby, 152 U. S. 1, 14 S. Ct. 548, 38 L. Ed. 33, a more recent case than the Illinois Central Railroad Case, in making a most profound review of all the leading cases of the federal courts on the subject, quotes approvingly from Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 11 S. Ct. 838, 35 L. Ed. 428, as follows: "With regard to grants of the government for lands bordering on tide water, it has been distinctly settled that they only extend to high water mark, and that the title to the shore and lands under water in front of lands so granted enures to the state within which they are situated, if a state has been organized and established there. Such title to the shore and lands under water is regarded as incidental to the sovereignty of the state—a portion of the royalties belonging thereto, and held in trust for the public purposes of navigation and fishery—and cannot be retained or granted out to individuals by the United States. Such title being in the state, the lands are subject to state regulation and control, under the condition, however, of not interfering with the regulations which may be made by congress with regard to public navigation and commerce. The state may even dispose of the usufruct of such lands, as is frequently done by leasing oyster beds in them, and granting fisheries in particular localities; also, by the reclamation of submerged flats, and the erection of wharves and piers and other adventitious aids of commerce. Sometimes large areas so reclaimed are occupied by cities, and are put to other public or private uses, state control and ownership therein being supreme subject only to the paramount authority of congress in making regulations of commerce, and in subjecting the lands to the necessities and uses of commerce. This right of the states to regulate and control the shores of tide waters and the land under them is the same as that which is exercised by the Crown in England. In this country the same rule has been extended to our great navigable lakes, which are treated as inland seas; and also, in some of the states, to navigable rivers, as the Mississippi, the Missouri, the Ohio, and, in Pennsylvania, to all the permanent rivers of the state; but it depends on the law of each state to what waters and to what extent this prerogative of the state over the lands under water shall be exercised."

"In the yet more recent case of Illinois

Central Railroad v. Illinois, (1892), which also arose in Illinois, it was recognized as the settled law of this country that the ownership of and dominion and sovereignty over lands covered by tide waters, or navigable lakes, within the limits of the several states, belong to the respective states within which they are found, with the consequent right to use or dispose of any portion thereof, when that can be done without substantial impairment of the interest of the public in such waters, and subject to the paramount right of congress to control their navigation so far as may be necessary for the regulation of commerce. 146 U. S. 387, 435-437, 465, 474 [13 S. Ct. 110, 111, 112, 126].

* * * * * * * *

"Notwithstanding the dicta contained in some of the opinions of this court, already quoted to the effect that congress has no power to grant any land below high water mark or navigable waters in a territory of the United States, it is evident that this is not strictly true."

The principle announced by the federal courts is reaffirmed in Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 P. 277. It was held in that case that as a general proposition the state has full power to alienate lands into private ownership which are covered by the daily flux and reflux of the tides subject only to the paramount public rights where capable of reclamation without detriment to the public right, but that the town of Oakland had no power to alienate its entire water front into private ownership unless such power was conferred by the Legislature, and that the act of the Legislature ratifying and confirming the ordinances of the town of Oakland applied exclusively to the local laws of the town and not to ordinances which were mere grants or attempted grants of the lands of the corporation, which were in effect attempted conveyances of the property interest of the town in its waterfront lands. In other words, the intent to alienate did not appear. The right of the state to alienate its tide and submerged lands by statute where the intent of the statute is clearly expressed or necessarily implied was again reaffirmed by this court in People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 597, 138 P. 79, 88, wherein it is said: "When the state, in the exercise of its discretion as trustee, has decided that portions of the tide lands should be thus excluded from navigation and sold to private use, its determination is conclusive upon the courts; but statutes purporting to authorize an abandonment of such public use will be carefully scanned to ascertain whether or not such was the legislative intention, and that intent must be clearly expressed or necessarily implied. It will not be implied if any other inference is reasonably possible. And if any interpretation of the statute is reasonably possible which would not involve a destruction of the public use or an intention to terminate it in violation of the trust, the courts will give the statute such interpretation."

Upon an examination of the numerous decisions of the American courts holding that lands covered by navigable waters are held in aid of and for the promotion of commerce, navigation, and fishing, it will be found that superadded to the uses of commerce, navigation, and fishing, when the uses in the case at hand to which the lands are to be devoted are not strictly within the narrow definition of any or all of said terms, said decisions employ such phrases as uses for the "public welfare," "parcels of land as are used in promoting the interests of the public," suggesting that when great public interest may be subserved by the alienation of parcels of tide and submerged lands the state's determination of the question in favor of alienation will not be disturbed by the courts.

In the instant case the state does not part with title to its lands, but withholds them from sale and also reserves an interest in said minerals mined on shares. No part of the lands from which said minerals are extracted is alienated into private ownership, nor is any legal right of the littoral owner invaded. No harm can come to fisheries under the protective provisions of the act, as it must be presumed that the provisions of the act will be observed, and, if not observed, the general laws enacted for the protection of fish and sea life against the pollution of waters by penalizing persons or corporations, who cause or are responsible for deleterious substances escaping into the public waters of the state, are amply sufficient to protect sea life against serious injury or destruction.

Nor is there any substantial cause of alarm lest the 1200 miles of our sea coast will be barricaded by "a forest of oil derricks," which will interfere with commerce or navigation. The state may at any time remove structures from the ocean erected by its citizens, even though they have been erected with its license or consent, if it subsequently determines them to be purprestures or finds that they substantially interfere with navigation or commerce. People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 138 P. 79; Illinois Central Railroad v. Illinois, supra.

[25] But aside from this it is a matter of common knowledge that gas and oil strata exist in but a few sections of the state, and the geological indications are easily recognized by geologists and those familiar with the subject. It is not probable that those who are financially able to bear the heavy expense of drilling oil wells and meeting the other heavy expense attendant upon prospecting for oil and gas will be so inane as to engage in expensive experiments except in those localities where oil and gas will probably be found in commercial quantities. It is also a matter of common knowledge, to which our attention has been called by all parties to these proceedings, that the state has already granted permits to private persons or corporations to prospect for oil and gas in the waters of the Pacific Ocean near the locality where the lands in question are situated, and that oil wells are now and for some years past have been in full operation. No serious, if any, complaint of improper operation to the detriment of commerce, navigation, or the fisheries has been made to the state or federal government. It is presumed that the operation of all wells for which permits are herein sought will be operated in as efficient and scientific manner as those now in operation. The Legislature before adopting the act before us fully considered all questions of fact and policy germane to the subject, and found that oil wells could be operated in the soil of the ocean without substantially impairing any of the rights which said lands are held in trust for the benefit of the state.

In concluding, it may be helpful to observe that Florida, Texas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and other states have adopted statutes strikingly similar to our statute, in recognition of the public benefit that will accrue to the commonwealth by the developing of the phosphates, gas, oil, and other mineral wealth which lie beneath submerged lands, and in no instance have such statutes conferring the same powers upon private parties and corporations as our act confers been condemned upon the constitutional grounds which are here urged against our state statute. A few of the cases which are somewhat illuminating are: State v. Board of Phosphate Commissioners, 31 Fla. 558, 12 So. 913; State v. Black River Phosphate Co., 32 Fla. 82, 13 So. 640, 21 L. R. A. 189; State v. Gerbing, 56 Fla. 603, 47 So. 353, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 337; Smith v. Wixie Oil Co., 24 Fla. 691, 101 So. 24; Wemple v. Eastham, 150 La. 247, 90 S. E. 637; State v. Black Bros., 116 Tex. 615, 297 S. W. 213, 53 A. L. R. 1181; Taylor v. Commonwealth of Virginia, 102 Va. 759, 47 S. E. 875, 102 Am. St. Rep. 865.

[26] We are satisfied that the state act under consideration is a valid exercise of a right which inheres in the state by virtue of its sovereign power. It does not impinge upon the state or federal Constitutions and is not in conflict with any act of Congress or the state of California.

Its provisions are reasonable, easily understood, and no injustice will result if they are in good faith complied with. The reasons upon which respondent surveyor general based his refusal to grant a prospecting permit to K. E. Boone, case No. S. F. 12707, being deemed insufficient, and no good cause being otherwise shown why the writ should not issue as prayed for, the prayer of petitioner Boone is granted, and the surveyor general is commanded to issue to said petitioner Boone a permit to prospect the lands described in his petition, provided said Boone has kept his tender good and stands ready to comply with the provisions of said act as herein construed.

A similar order is made as to H. E. Shudde, case No. S. F. 12708, as is directed to be entered in the Boone case. As to Charles M. Workman, No. S. F. 12728; Hickey Bros. Company et al., S. F. 12729; R. W. and Thelma Harthorn et al., No. S. F. 12730; Harry A. Chamberlin, S. F. 12743; and Kittie C. Ballard et al., No. S. F. 12766—applicants for permits to prospect the submerged lands described in the Boone and Shudde applications, respectively, none of said applicants having shown a right superior or prior to that of Boone and Shudde, said petitions, except the petitions of Boone and Shudde, are hereby denied and the proceeding in each case is dismissed. A separate order will be filed in each case.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; RICHARDS, J.; CURTIS, J; PRESTON, J.; LANGDON, J.

SHENK, J. I dissent. The statute declared valid by the majority opinion throws open the entire sea coast of California (with the exception of limited areas adjacent to municipalities) for exploration and possession for the development of oil and gas by private parties. This means that from Mexico to the Oregon line a strip of tide and submerged land 3 miles in width and nearly 1,200 miles in length, including the tide and submerged lands along the harbors, bays, estuaries, coves, inlets, and navigable streams and surrounding the coastal islands, is made available for one of the purposes contemplated by the statute. In my opinion the act, in its operation as to all of said lands, is inconsistent with the trust on which the state holds title to the same for the benefit of all of the people of the state for navigation and fishery. The effect of the main opinion is to compel the surveyor general to issue a prospecting permit and subsequent lease to any qualified person, association, or corporation upon compliance with the formalities prescribed in the act. The 1923 statute (Stats. 1923, pp. 593–595) sought ineffectually to vest in the surveyor general a discretion to refuse a permit when in his judgment the prospecting or development work would cause injury or damage to property near the land applied for, and littoral owners are, by the judgment in this case, relegated to the trial courts to adjust their rights in the first instance. This latter circumstance may be of minor importance, but it indicates the mischief engendered by the act in provoking litigation. My objection to the statute is placed on broader grounds.

It is the firmly established law of this state that the title to lands lying between the lines of ordinary high and low tide, as well as the lands within any bay and harbor and covered by its waters, is in the state, in trust, however, for the public purposes of navigation and fishery. In the early case of Ward v.

Mulford, 32 Cal. 365, 372, this court said: "The land which the state holds by virtue of her sovereignty, as is well understood, is such as is covered and uncovered by the flow and ebb of the neap or ordinary tides. Such land is held by the state in trust and for the benefit of the people. The right of the state is subservient to the public rights of navigation and fishery, and theoretically, at least, the state can make no disposition of them prejudicial to the right of the public to use them for the purposes of navigation and fishery, and whatever disposition she does make of them, her grantee takes them upon the same terms upon which she holds them, and of course subject to the public rights above mentioned." This doctrine was again declared and emphasized in the case of People v. California Fish Co., 166 Cal. 576, 138 P. 79, and the series of cases in the same volume dealing with the subject. In People v. California Fish Co., supra, at page 584, this court quoted with approval from Illinois C. Ry. Co. v. Illinois, 146 U. S. 452, 13 S. Ct. 118 (36 L. Ed. 1018), defining the title held by the state in trust, as follows: "It is a title held in trust for the people of the state that they may enjoy the navigation of the waters, carry on commerce over them, and have liberty of fishing therein freed from the obstruction or interference of private parties. * * * The control of the state for the purposes of the trust can never be lost, except as to such parcels as are used in promoting the interests of the public therein, or can be disposed of without any substantial impairment of the public interest in the lands and waters remaining." The law of this state, as to the nature of the state's title in and to tide lands, is so definitely settled as to render unnecessary a review or citation of cases from other jurisdictions.

I am in accord with the contentions of the respondent that the proposed use of such lands is not a public use and is inconsistent with the trust under which the title to the lands is held by the state. The petitioners contend that the right to determine whether the particular use is compatible with the public right is a matter for legislative determination. I deny the right of the Legislature finally to determine that all of the tide and submerged lands along the Pacific Coast of California may be used for any private purpose requiring the building of structures which would impede the free access of water craft, large or small, to the shore line, or which would prevent the free use of the shores of the sea and its adjacent waters for the purpose of fishery. I am convinced that the statute in question is in excess of the powers of legislative control over such trust property. There are many authorities to the effect that in the proper exercise of legislative control limited areas of tide and submerged lands may be set apart from the public domain in aid and promotion of the trust purposes, and even for private purposes, upon proper segregation. If it could reasonably be said that the Legislature has granted to these particular petitioners the permits applied for, it might follow that the court would be bound by the implied legislative finding that the proposed use of the lands in question would not be inconsistent with the public trust. But I am unable to accede to the claim that the court is bound by an alleged implied finding of the Legislature to the effect that, with no substantial impairment of the public right, all of the tide and submerged lands of the state may be used for this private purpose, which of necessity involves the building and maintenance of structures and obstructions on such lands. It is not a sufficient answer to say that the oil and gas bearing tide and submerged lands of the state are confined to very limited areas. Future development may disclose otherwise. And if all of this trust property may be set apart for one private purpose, why may it not for another? I am not impressed with the argument that if the applicants for the permits and leases do not extract the oil and gas from the state's tide and submerged lands, the littoral owners may do so, and the state's treasury thus be deprived of the modest royalty of 5 per cent. In my opinion the state should not engage in a wholesale surrender of this particularly protected public right for any such consideration or for any reason not involving a public emergency.

The tide and submerged lands of the state constitute a great public highway, whose use for navigation and fishery is analogous to that of the ordinary vehicular highway for public travel. The use of the latter is open to all with well-known guaranties against obstruction for private purposes. The former should be equally available to all for navigation and fishery, excepting, of course, that where not useful for the public purpose it may be altered to meet changing conditions and in a way not inconsistent with the trust. As to the right of fishery, no one may successfully maintain that the tidal waters will not be contaminated by the proposed operations and the fish be driven to deeper channels. The statute does not contemplate that the waters of the ocean will not be so despoiled. The act only requires that the permittees and lessees "use all reasonable precautions to prevent waste of oil or gas developed in the land." It is argued that the necessary structures to be built upon the trust property will not prevent reasonable access to the leased lands by those members of the public who may desire to navigate the waters over the leased lands or to fish therein. If this be true, it is so from a theoretical standpoint only. From a practical standpoint I believe that the occupation of lands under such a lease and operations thereunder would effect a substantial deprivation of the public right of navigation and fishery, just as an obstruction in a public highway would impede public travel.

It is claimed that, because of the expanse of the state's coast line, the applications for permits involved herein are of relative unimportance. The answer is that the main opinion establishes the rule as to all of the tide and submerged lands held by the state. My objection goes to what may be done under the statute and to relegating the entire question to one of legislative policy.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petitions for rehearings herein are denied. The record herein as presented by the pleadings and by the briefs of the parties to these several proceedings shows that every question of law involved in each and all thereof was finally submitted to this court for decision and has been properly decided; that as to any issues of fact which have arisen in the course thereof the determination of those depended upon matters of record in the offices of state officers, or were matters of which the court could take judicial knowledge without the necessity of a reference, and that the decision in all of these matters was embraced in the order of submission herein, and has been properly and fully determined by the decision heretofore filed herein. We are satisfied that the decision on the question of littoral rights, wherein such rights were made an issue in the respective petitions, conforms to and follows, the decisions of the United States Supreme Court and our own court on said question. This question was argued and given full consideration in our opinion.

95 Cal. App. 270

CITY OF OAKLAND v. DE GUARDA et al. (Civ. 6401.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 3, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⟹348—City suing on street improvement contractor's bond as trustee for property holders need not allege how it became trustee.

If city is trustee for property holders within assessment district, it became such by reason of statute under which it instituted suit as such on street improvement contractor's bond, and hence was not required to allege in what manner it became trustee.

2. Municipal corporations ⟹348—Property holders need not be named, nor amounts of their assessments specified, in complaint of city suing for breach of street improvement contractor's bond (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 369, 382).

City being only party entitled to sue for breach of street improvement contractor's bond, under which it is only obligee by reason of statute and bond itself, in absence of statute giving such right to property owners, it was not necessary to join them as parties plaintiff, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 369, 382, nor to name them or specify amount of respective assessments and amount to which each is entitled in complaint alleging that city was suing on their behalf.

Appeal from Superior Court; Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

On petition for rehearing. Petition denied, and last paragraph of former opinion (272 P. 779) stricken out.

Leon E. Gray, former City Atty., Preston Higgins, City Atty., and Homer W. Buckley, Deputy City Atty., all of Oakland, for appellant.

Heller, Ehrman, White & McAuliffe and F. Whitney Tenney, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. [1] The appellant has asked for a rehearing, complaining particularly of that portion of the opinion heretofore filed which states that the complaint is uncertain in that it does not state in what manner the city became trustee for the property owners, and that portion of the opinion which intimates that the complaint should be amended so as to state the names of the various property holders, together with the amounts of their assessments and the amounts which they would be entitled to receive from the respondent. The portions of the opinion referred to were not necessary to the decision. If the city is correct in its theory that it is a trustee for the property holders within the assessment district, it became such by reason of the statute under which the proceedings were instituted, and it was not necessary for the pleader to allege matters of law. As the city is the only obligee under the bond, both by reason of the statute and by reason of the wording of the bond itself, the city is the only party entitled to sue for a breach of the bond, unless by statute this right has been given to the property owners. No statute conferring such privilege upon the property owners has been called to our attention.

[2] It is therefore of no concern of the surety company as to who are the legal owners of the property within the assessment district, as to the amount of their respective assessments, or as to the amount that they would individually be entitled to receive from the surety company. It was not necessary to join the property owners as parties plaintiff (sections 369, 382, Code Civ. Proc.), and the allegation that the city was suing on behalf of the legal owners of the property within the assessment district is an allegation of a matter of the public record which may be ascertained by the surety company upon a search of the public records. It would serve no purpose to have these parties named in the complaint, and it would be equally futile to require the city to specify the amount of the respective assessments and the amount which the individual owners would be entitled to receive under the judgment.

The petition for rehearing is therefore denied, but all the last paragraph of the opinion heretofore filed, commencing with the words "But as a matter of abundant caution," and closing with the words "on the second cause of action," is stricken out.

KROLL et al. v. RASIN. (Civ. 6254.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1928.

1. Trial 🔑260(8)—In death action, refusal of instruction, substantially covered by instructions given, held not ground for reversal.

In action for death resulting from automobile accident, refusal of instruction, denying plaintiff's recovery if death was just as likely to have been occasioned by negligence of third party, held not ground for reversal, where substance of such requested instruction was fully covered by instructions given.

2. Evidence 🔑505—Witness' testimony in automobile accident case, as to whether appearance of radiator indicated violent impact, held properly excluded.

In automobile accident case, refusal of trial court to permit examination of witness, as to whether appearance of radiator indicated blow of great violence, on ground that question called for conclusion of witness, held not error, especially where damage sustained by car was not confined to radiator, and where witness was permitted to state actual condition of radiator.

3. Witnesses 🔑275(6)—Disclosure on direct examination of defendant as adverse witness, that he had used intoxicants, held not to warrant cross-examination whether he was intoxicated, where plaintiff made no such claim (Code Civ. Proc. § 2055).

In automobile accident case, in which there was no contention that defendant was under influence of liquor at time of collision, trial court did not err in refusing to permit his own counsel to cross-examine him as to whether he was under influence of liquor, though on defendant's direct examination, when called as an adverse witness under Code Civ. Proc. § 2055, it appeared that he had taken two drinks of whisky on the day of the accident.

4. Appeal and error 🔑216(2)—Failure to present additional instructions to trial court, or indicate desire for clearer instructions, precludes complaint on appeal that instructions were inadequate.

Party who desires fuller and more elaborate instructions should prepare them and present them to the trial court, or indicate his desire that further instructions be given, and, on failure to do so, cannot complain for the first time on appeal that the instructions were inadequate.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Warren V. Tryon, Judge.

Actions by Alva Bell Kroll and others against Emil Rasin. Judgments for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Myrick & Deering and Scott, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hadsell, Sweet & Ingalls, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. Henry Bell, aged 62 years, and his wife, Alma Bell, aged 54 years, were run down and killed while walking across East Fourteenth street, Oakland, and their children, all of whom but one had attained majority prior to the happening of the accident, joined in bringing two actions for damages on account of the death of each parent. The two cases were tried together before a jury, and a verdict of $7,500 was rendered in each case, but on motion for a new trial each verdict was reduced to $3,750, and, from the judgments entered for those amounts, the defendant has appealed.

The accident happened about 7 o'clock in the evening on East Fourteenth street at its intersection with Thirty-Eighth avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Bell started from the north curb of East Fourteenth street to walk southerly across the street in the regular pedestrian path, but soon after leaving the curb they were struck simultaneously by an automobile traveling westerly along East Fourteenth street. Mrs. Bell's body was hurled upon or near the street car tracks in the middle of the street, and Bell's body was found some 25 or 30 feet distant westerly.

There are four different automobiles referred to in the evidence, and the testimony as to the manner in which the accident happened and as to which of two of the automobiles first struck Bell and his wife is in sharp conflict. Two witnesses testified that it was a Ford sedan, which the defendant Rasin admittedly was driving, that first struck the couple. The testimony of one of these witnesses was to the effect that as the sedan struck the couple a woman screamed, and he saw the woman's body roll over toward the car tracks, and that the man's body seemed to drop off the left fender of the Ford. The other witness testified that he also saw the Ford sedan strike them, and that, although he did not pay so much attention to what became of the woman's body after the impact, he heard the scream and saw Bell's body fall off the fender or the bumper on the front of the Ford sedan. These two witnesses further testified that after the impact the Ford sedan pulled into the curb and stopped about 75 feet or more beyond the point of the collision. Two other witnesses testified that Bell and his wife were struck by a large touring car traveling at a high rate of speed, which hurled Mrs. Bell off to the left between the rails of the street car track and carried Mr. Bell forward on the bumper for a short distance when he dropped to the pavement; that as Mrs. Bell lay between the car tracks another automobile apparently accompanying the first sped along and ran over her body; and that, while Bell was trying to raise himself from the ground, the defendant Rasin came along in his Ford sedan and ran over him.

The evidence further shows without dispute that following closely behind the Ford was another automobile, a Chandler car, which was being driven by one Harris, and that before Harris could stop his car he also ran over the body of Bell. Harris was joined as a party defendant to the actions, but at the opening of trial the actions as to him were dismissed.

Defendant Rasin testified in effect that he did not know that he had struck any one. He admits, however, that his lights were lit at the time, and that he could see clear across the street both ways. He also testified that he did not hear any scream, and that the reason he pulled into the curb and stopped was that he felt his car "shimmying," and that when he alighted from his car he saw a man lying on the pavement some distance to the rear of his car, close to the curb. The evidence further shows that the front end of Rasin's sedan suffered considerable damage. The radiator was bent in and broken, and there was a trail of water on the pavement extending from the rear of the sedan to the place where the impact occurred. The bumper was bent back an inch at a point about six inches to the left of the center and thrown out of alignment about four inches to the left. The left headlight was bent backward, and the hose between the radiator and engine was ruptured. On the left-hand side of the hood and on the radiator, directly under the radiator cap, there were finger smears, and there were small fibres of clothing on the tip of the left front fender.

[1] In view of the foregoing conflict in the evidence, defendant proposed two instructions, designated in the record as defendant's proposed instructions 53 and 54, to the effect that, if from the evidence it was "uncertain" as to whether the death of Mr. and Mrs. Bell was caused by the negligence of the defendant or of some unknown automobile driver, or if it was "just as likely" to have been occasioned by the negligence of one as the other, defendant was entitled to a verdict. The court refused to give said instructions, and its refusal is assigned as error. Plaintiffs urge several objections to the form of both instructions which may have more or less merit, but, aside from such objections, we find no cause for reversal in the refusal of the court to give said instructions for even assuming that they correctly stated the law, the substance thereof was covered by two other instructions proposed by defendant, which the court gave. They are designated in the record as instructions numbered 38 and 39, and read as follows:

"If you find from the evidence that Mr. and Mrs. Bell, the father and mother respectively of the plaintiffs in this action, were struck by an automobile which preceded that driven by the defendant Rasin, and were hurled to the roadway directly in front of Mr. Rasin's machine, and that in the exercise of ordinary care Rasin did not see the body of either of them, and unwittingly ran over one or more of them, and that in so doing he was acting in good faith and the exercise of such care as an ordinary prudent person would exercise, then your verdict must be in favor of said defendant."

"You are instructed that upon the question as to whether the defendant should or should not have seen Mr. Bell, the father of the plaintiffs, when he was lying prostrate upon the ground and endeavoring to arise therefrom, if you find such to be the fact, you are not at liberty to indulge in any speculation or conjecture but in determining whether or not he, the defendant, was in the exercise of ordinary care, you must rely solely upon the evidence produced in this case, and if you find that there is not evidence showing that he failed to exercise ordinary care, that is the care of a reasonably prudent man, then your verdict must be in favor of the defendant."

Moreover, in addition to the foregoing instructions, the jury was fully instructed upon the subjects of burden of proof and preponderance of evidence. Therefore all of the elements contained in said instructions numbered 53 and 54, which were refused, were embodied in the court's charge.

[2] The defendant called as a witness an automobile repair man who, after testifying that he examined the condition of the Ford sedan some time following the accident, was asked the following question: "Can you state from the appearance of the radiator whether or not any blow of great violence had been struck it?" Plaintiffs objected to the question as calling for the conclusion of the witness and as being incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The objection was sustained, the court stating that the question called for the conclusion of the witness; and, commenting further upon the matter, the court said that the witness would be permitted to state the condition in which he found the radiator, "whether it was jammed back or in what condition," but that the question as to whether or not it had been struck a blow of great violence was one for the jury. Following the suggestion of the court, the witness was then asked to state in detail the condition in which he found the radiator, which he did. Defendant assigns the ruling sustaining the objection as error, contending that "it was important for the defendant to show that the injury done to the Ford was not such as could be anticipated had the Ford run into the two people and hurled one to the left and carried the other forward," as testified by plaintiffs' witnesses. We find no merit in the point, for the reason that the undisputed testimony shows that all of the damage sustained by the Ford was not confined to the radiator, and, in any event, the question of the anticipated injury which a Ford might sustain by striking two people as described by plaintiffs' witnesses was, as the trial court stated, to be determined by the jury.

[3] Plaintiffs called defendant as an adverse witness, under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and during the direct examination it was developed that about 4:30 o'clock on the day of the accident he had taken two drinks of whisky. On cross-examination he was asked by his own counsel: "Were you at all under the influence of liquor at the time?" The court, on objection of plaintiffs, ruled that the question was not permissible. We find no error in the ruling. It was not charged in the complaint, nor asserted at the trial, so far as our attention has been called, that defendant was under the influence of liquor at the time of the collision, the only testimony on that point having come from the defense, which was to the effect that the defendant was sober. Moreover, and in any event, the question of defendant's sobriety would relate only to the issue of the negligent operation of his automobile, and he makes no point on this appeal as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the conclusions reached by the jury on that issue.

[4] Further contention is made that, in view of the fact that all of the plaintiffs but one were adults at the time of the happening of the accident, the instructions to the jury as to the measure of damages were too broad in their meaning. An examination of the instructions will show, however, that they are in the usual form, and, if the defendant desired fuller and more elaborate instructions on this subject, he should have prepared and presented the same to the court, or in some manner made known to the court his desire for clearer and more definite instructions; and, having failed to do so, he cannot complain for the first time on appeal. Townsend v. Butterfield, 168 Cal. 564, 143 P. 760. Moreover, defendant makes no claim that the amount of damages finally awarded, and for which judgment was entered, is excessive.

The judgments are affirmed.

UNITED STATES FIDELITY & GUARANTY CO. v. MATTHEWS et al.★

(Civ. 3662.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 29, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1929.

1. Subrogation 🔑7(4)—Administrator's surety paying debt owing by administrator to estate became subrogated to remedy of estate against administrator who was heir (Civ. Code, § 2848).

Under Civ. Code, § 2848, entitling surety satisfying principal's obligation to enforce every remedy which creditor then has against principal to extent of reimbursing surety for expenditures, surety of administrator paying debt owing by administrator to estate became subrogated to every remedy estate had against administrator who was heir.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑294—Administrator's debt to estate may be set off against share in estate.

Indebtedness owing to estate by administrator may be set off against administrator's distributive share of estate on distribution.

3. Descent and distribution 🔑84—Heirs of estate, in absence of will, may contract respecting estate or convey same subject to administrator's possession for administration purposes (Civ. Code, § 1384).

Under Civ. Code, § 1384, heirs of estate, in absence of will, may enter into contracts with respect to estate or convey interest therein subject to possession of administrator for purposes of administration.

4. Descent anud distribution 🔑119(1)—Heirs take title to property of estate subject to liens of administration covering debts, family allowances, funeral, and administration expenses (Civ. Code, § 1384).

Under Civ. Code, § 1384, heirs of estate, in absence of will, take title to property subject to liens of administration which cover payment of debts and funeral expenses and family allowances and expenses of administration.

5. Judgment 🔑785(1)—Subrogation 🔑36—Lien of assignee for value of administrator's share in estate held superior to lien of subsequent judgment against administrator paid by his surety or to surety's right of subrogation to rights of estate against administrator.

Where administrator assigned interest in estate to bank at time when there was no showing that any portion of debt owing by administrator to estate was in existence, and assignee paid valuable consideration therefor in ignorance of any indebtedness by administrator if then existing, lien of assignee on distributive interest of administrator in estate was superior to lien of subsequent judgment against administrator paid by surety on administrator's bond or to any right resulting to surety by subrogation of right of estate against administrator to set off debt against administrator's distributive share.

6. Limitation of actions 🔑167(1)—Lien created by assignment of administrator's share in estate held not barred by limitation, where assignee sued on note secured by assignment before note was barred by limitations.

Where assignee of administrator's distributive share in estate brought suit on promissory note to secure which assignment was made before running of statute of limitations against note, limitations did not run against lien existing by virtue of assignment.

7. Limitation of actions 🔑167(1)—Lien is not extinguished by lapse of time so long as principal obligation is kept alive.

A lien is not extinguished by lapse of time so long as principal obligation is kept alive.

Appeal from Superior Court, Lassen County; H. D. Burroughs, Judge.

★Superseded by opinion of Supreme Court 279 P. 655.

Action by the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company against N. G. Matthews, personally and as administrator of the estate of Thomas W. Wilson, deceased, and another. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Horace W. B. Smith and P. R. Lund, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

J. E. Pardee, of Susanville, for respondents.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. This case was brought up on the judgment roll alone. The facts, which are not disputed are briefly these: Thomas W. Wilson died intestate on June 18, 1920, in Lassen county, leaving as his heirs three children, including George W. Wilson. On August 2, 1920, the said George W. Wilson was appointed administrator of deceased's estate. He qualified and gave bond with Cady and Spaulding as sureties. On March 3, 1921, said George W. Wilson borrowed from the Growers' Bank of San José $2,600, and as security for its payment gave his promissory note to said bank and an assignment of all his interest in said estate and all fees and commissions accruing to him as such administrator, the note being made payable six months after date. A copy of this assignment was filed in the superior court of Lassen county with the papers of said estate on October 27, 1921.

On September 12, 1921, the sureties, Cady and Spaulding, on application therefor, were released from said bond, and said administrator filed a new bond with appellant as sole surety thereon.

On June 27, 1922, the said Growers' Bank assigned to defendant Bank of Lassen County the said note and assignment of interest of said George W. Wilson in said estate, and on September 25, 1922, the said last-named assignment was filed in said superior court with the papers of said estate.

On January 8, 1924, on the application of said Bank of Lassen County, George W. Wilson was removed as said administrator, and defendant N. G. Matthews was appointed administrator of said estate in his stead. On April 9, 1924, said Matthews, as said administrator, began an action against George W. Wilson for an accounting of his administration of said estate, and as a result of that action judgment was rendered against said Wilson for the sum of $637.39 on his first bond and for $2,249.77 on his second bond. Appellant paid said last-named amount and took an assignment of said judgment from the said administrator.

Appellant seeks by this action to have the court adjudge that it is entitled to the priority and preference in the payment of its said assigned judgment, out of the distributive share of said George W. Wilson. Therefore the matter presented for determination by this appeal is whether, upon the distribution of said estate, appellant, by virtue of its assigned judgment, shall first be paid out of the distributive share of said George W. Wilson, or whether the respondent, by virtue of the assignment of the distributive share of said Wilson, shall first be paid out of same. It is conceded that the distributive share of said Wilson will not be more than sufficient to pay one or the other of said claims.

[1, 2] Section 2848 of the Civil Code provides that a surety, upon satisfying the obligation of the principal, is entitled to enforce every remedy which the creditor then has against the principal to the extent of reimbursing what he has expended. By the payment of this debt owing by the said heir, George W. Wilson, to said estate, appellant became subrogated to every remedy the said estate had against the said George W. Wilson, by virtue of said debt. Appellant contends that the estate, or rather the administrator acting for the estate, has the right to set off this indebtedness owing to the estate by the administrator, against the distributive share of the said George W. Wilson, upon the distribution of said estate. The authorities generally support this conclusion, and such has been decided to be the law of this state by recent decisions of the Appellate and Supreme Courts.

In the case of In re Clary's Estate, 253 P. 778, Plummer, J., in a decision rendered by the appellate court, Third district, reviewing the authorities bearing on this question, said, "The right of retainer or set-off is recognized as applicable upon distribution in this state;" and upon a rehearing in the Supreme Court, 264 P. 242, the Supreme Court adopted and affirmed the said decision of the appellate court. No question of priorities was involved in this case. If, therefore, there were no priorities to be determined, it is apparent that appellant would be entitled to have its said judgment retained out of the distributive share of the said George W. Wilson upon the distribution of said estate.

Appellant maintains that by reason of the fact that, during his administration of the estate of said Thomas W. Wilson, the said George W. Wilson became indebted to said estate by withholding funds belonging to said estate, the right of the estate to retain or set off such funds so withheld, from or against the distributive share of said George W. Wilson, takes precedence over all liens or assignments of said distributive share. Appellant cites no decision of the courts of this state in support of this proposition. The only case that has been brought to the attention of this court that deals directly with this proposition is that of In re Smith, 108 Cal. 115, 40 P. 1037, cited in respondent's brief. In that case Smith died leaving a will devising his property to his children and grandchildren. Two of his sons, John A. and William R., were appointed executors of his will. John A. died pending the administration, and at the time of his death he had in his hands $247.15 belonging to said estate. Upon distribution of the estate the court did not deduct this sum from the distributive share of the said John A. The administrator appealed from the decision of the trial court. In the course of its opinion in that case the court said: "John A. held the estate's money as trustee, and upon his death, being indebted to his beneficiary, the estate, its position became no better than that of any other creditor, unless it was able to pursue the precise trust fund." While that portion of this decision, to the effect that the sum owing by the deceased executor, could not be set off against, or retained from his distributive share as an heir of the estate, has been overruled in Re Clary's Estate (Cal. App.) 253 P. 778, the part quoted has not since been passed upon either by the Supreme or Appellate Courts of this state.

[3, 4] Section 1384 of the Civil Code provides that both real and personal property of deceased, where there is no will, passes to the heirs of an estate, subject to the control of the probate court and to the possession of the administrator for the purposes of administration. And they may enter into contracts with respect thereto, or convey same subject to the possession of the administrator for the purposes of administration. Cal. Jur. vol. 9, p. 478. The heir takes the title to the property subject to the liens of the administration which cover the payment of the debts and funeral expenses, the family allowances and expenses of administration. Cal. Jur. vol. 9, p. 472. That no lien exists against the distributive share of the heir growing out of his indebtedness to the estate was declared in the case of Estate of Polito, 51 Cal. App. 752, 197 P. 976. In that case the administratrix sought to have a judgment recovered by the estate against an heir, set off or deducted from the heir's distributive share. It appeared that a prior judgment had been rendered in favor of a creditor of the heir. The trial court decision was in favor of the judgment creditor, from which the administrator appealed. In its opinion the appellate court said: "It would seem that the trial court acted correctly in refusing to accede to the petition of appellant herein, since it appears from the record herein that the respondent, Sarah A. McCurdy [the judgment creditor], had obtained and duly docketed a judgment against said John L. Polito [the heir], for the sum of $4,452.45, which had thus become a first lien upon the interest of said John L. Polito in such real estate, and that this lien was prior to the lien which the estate had acquired upon said interest by its judgment thereafter obtained. We are directed to no provision of law and to no decision of the courts of this state which purport to give to an estate in the course of its administration a lien upon the undivided interest of the heirs or devisees in the real property of said estate arising out of the fact that such heir or devisee may be indebted to said estate."

Appellant, in its brief, has cited cases from other jurisdictions which it claims supports its contention that it is entitled to priority in the distributive share of George W. Wilson upon distribution of the estate. One of the cases relied upon by it to sustain this contention is that of In re Baily's Estate, 156 Pa. 634, 27 A. 560, 22 L. R. A. 444, but in that case the obligation of cosureties toward each other and contribution between cosureties was involved, and it was mainly because of the relationship that existed between them as cosureties that the court held that a debt due the estate from one of them was entitled to priority over an assignment by that one of his interest as one of the heirs of the estate. Another case largely relied upon by appellant is the case of Clapp v. Meserole, 1 Abb. Dec. (N. Y.) 362; Id., 38 Barb. (N. Y.) 661. In this case it appears that two of the heirs were appointed executors of the estate of their deceased father, and that the father had made an advancement to each of $10,000, and, in addition, they were indebted to him upon a mortgage. The will provided that the advancements were to be deducted from the distributive share of each. Some six years after their appointment as executors they assigned their distributive shares to the plaintiff Clapp. He necessarily took the assignment with knowledge of the provisions of the will and the existence of the mortgage. Upon the final accounting it was found that the distributive share of each of the two sons was less than the advancements, and upon this state of facts the court affirmed the judgment giving priority to the estate. Nor does the case of Ford, Administrator, v. O'Donnell, 40 Mo. App. 51, also cited by appellant, support his contention. In that case the administrator sought to have a debt owing by the son to his father set off against the distributive share of the son in his father's estate. The court held in that case that the debt owing by the son to his father had priority in the distribution of the sons' distributive share, over an assignment by the son of such share, but based its reason for so holding upon the fact that the debt was in existence at the time of the assignment.

[5] In the case under consideration there is no showing that any portion of the debt owing by George W. Wilson to the estate of his father was in existence at the date he made the aforesaid assignment. George W. Wilson was appointed administrator of his father's estate on August 2, 1920, and the assignment of his interest in the estate was made on March 3, 1921. On October 28, 1921, the said George W. Wilson filed his annual account of his administration and same was allowed and approved, and it was not until his final account was presented in 1924 that it was discovered that he was indebted to the estate.

The trial court found that of the indebtedness of George W. Wilson to said estate, $637.39 accrued against him during the period of his first bond, that is, during the period commencing August 2, 1920, and ending November 10, 1921; but there is no showing that any portion of this debt accrued prior to the assignment by George W. Wilson of his interest in the said estate. Apparently the assignor of respondent bank took the assignment from George W. Wilson in good faith, paid valuable consideration therefor, in ignorance of any indebtedness owing by said Wilson to said estate, if in fact such indebtedness existed at that time, of which no proof had been offered.

The trial court found that the lien of respondent on the distributive interest of George W. Wilson in said estate is prior and superior to the lien of plaintiff's judgment, or of any right that may have resulted from subrogation, and, in the opinion of this court, it was justified in so doing.

[6, 7] In its reply brief the appellant raises the point that the lien of respondent is extinguished by the provisions of section 2911 of the Civil Code. However, appellant admits that, prior to the running of the statute of limitations against the promissory note, to secure which the assignment was made, respondent bank commenced an action against the said George W. Wilson for the collection of said note. This being true, limitation would not have run against the lien existing by virtue of the assignment. A lien is not extinguished by lapse of time so long as the principal obligation is kept alive. Worth v. Worth, 155 Cal. 599, 102 P. 663; Weinberger v. Weidman, 134 Cal. 599, 66 P. 869.

The judgment is affirmed.

GALLY v. WYNNE et al. (Civ. 6369.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 5, 1929.

1. Contracts 🔑167—All applicable laws in existence when agreement is made necessarily enter into and form part thereof.

All applicable laws in existence when an agreement is made necessarily enter into it and form part of it as fully as if they were expressly referred to and incorporated in its terms.

2. Sales 🔑116, 391(5)—On seller's breach of sale contract buyer had right to rescind and recover amount paid thereon, notwithstanding provision for damages; "extinguished" (Civ. Code, § 1688).

On seller's breach of contract for sale of fixtures, good will, and lease of premises, buyer had right to rescind and recover amount paid thereon, without regard to provision of agreement for a deduction of certain amount from purchase price in case of seller's violation of agreement, since under Civ. Code, § 1688, in case one party rescinds the other party may also rescind and contract is thereby "extinguished," which means to put out, quench, stifle, as to extinguish a fire or flame.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second and Third Series, Extinguish.]

3. Good will 🔑7—Evidence held to sustain finding that seller breached provision of agreement relative to conduct in selling merchandise after sale of fixtures and good will.

In action to recover money paid as part of purchase price for fixtures, good will, and lease of premises, evidence held to sustain finding of seller's breach of contract whereby they agreed in conducting sale of merchandise not to use the terms "going out of business" or "quitting business."

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. O. Moncur, Judge.

Action by E. Gally against M. K. Wynne and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

A. S. Newburgh, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Herbert Choynski and Sidney Rhein, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff, as assignee of M. Berman, commenced an action against the defendants to recover a judgment for moneys had and received. The defendants answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings of fact in favor of the plaintiff, and from a judgment entered thereon, the defendants have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Heretofore the defendants were the lessees and were conducting a drygoods store at 111 Powell street. Being desirous of going out of business, they arranged to conduct a sale of their merchandise and at the same time they entered into a contract with M. Berman, under the terms of which they agreed to sell, and M. Berman agreed to buy, the "fixtures, good will and the lease of the premises." The purchase price was $3,500, of which $750 was paid down when the agreement was entered into March 1, 1927. Attached to the agreement was an inventory. Two or three days after the agreement had been executed the defendants executed a writing in which they agreed that in conducting their sale they would not use "the terms going out of business or quitting business but to use substantially the following: Lease and fixtures sold. Every garment in this shop must be sold by March 31st. In the event I violate any part of this agreement I agree to deduct $500 from the purchase price of $3,500." The latter paper was also dated March 1, 1927, but the evidence shows it was executed and delivered a few days subsequent. It was the contention of the plaintiff that almost immediately after delivering the writings above mentioned the defendants proceeded to place on their store large signs having thereon such expressions as, "Positively closes April 15th"; that thereby they greatly reduced, if they did not destroy, the value of the good will; that on April 6th the plaintiff therefore served notice of rescission and demanded the return of the $750 theretofore paid by him on the purchase price; that the deposit was not repaid and that the plaintiff is entitled to sue therefor.

[1, 2] The defendants call attention to the fact that the several writings related to the same matters between the same parties and were made as part of substantially one transaction and are to be taken together. Thereupon they call attention to the fact that the paper last executed contained a provision that, if the defendants violated its terms, they agreed to deduct $500 from the purchase price. The defendants then argue that the remedy of the plaintiff was to proceed and comply with all of the terms of the contract and deduct $500 from the purchase price. They do not cite any authority supporting their contention. The covenant that $500 might be deducted from the purchase price was not a covenant authorizing the defendants to breach their contract. True it is that in the papers executed by the parties they expressly inserted a provision for liquidated damages. It is well-settled law that all applicable laws in existence when an agreement is made necessarily enter into it and form a part of it as fully as if they were expressly referred to and incorporated in its terms. 13 C. J. p. 560; Marshall v. Wentz, 28 Cal. App. 540, 542, 543, 153 P. 244. Therefore it is patent that the statutes regarding the measure of damages are implied terms in many contracts. No reason appears why expressly inserting a clause regarding damages would have any different operation than the implied insertion of a clause on that subject. Where, as here, one party to a contract admittedly breaches it, the other party is entitled to treat the vendor's breach as an abandonment and himself abandon the contract and sue at law to recover what he has paid in an action for money had and received. Glock v. Howard & Wilson Colony Co., 123 Cal. 1, 10, 55 P. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17. In other words, if one party rescinds the other party may also rescind, and when a rescission has thus been made the contract is "extinguished." Civ. Code, § 1688. That word means, "To put out, quench, stifle, as to extinguish fire or flame." Cent. Dict. If the contention of the defendants is sound, it would seem to follow that the right to rescind never exists.

[3] It is further contended by the defendants that they did not breach the contract. However, they candidly state that the testimony is conflicting, nevertheless they proceed to state as they claim the evidence as favorable to the plainfiff as his testimony will permit. True it is that the oral testimony was not very direct nor satisfactory, but photographs of the signs used were introduced in evidence. One sign was "Fixtures and lease sold, positively closes Friday night, April 15th." Moreover, there was evidence that that particular sign was put up after the plaintiff had rescinded and that other signs had theretofore been put up and supplanted from time to time. The record as made does not warrant this court in disturbing the findings made by the trial court. We find no error in the record.

an exception to the act, unless it clearly appears that the provisions of the exception are so intimately connected with the general provisions that the legislative body would not have enacted the general provisions without the exception.

4. Municipal corporations 🔑111(4)—General provisions of ordinance requiring closing of butcher shops Saturday evenings and Sundays to prevent sale of meat without inspection held not invalidated by void provision permitting sales by Kosher markets (Const. art. 11, § 11; St. 1921, p. 1269).

Invalidity of special provision of ordinance permitting Kosher meat markets to keep open Saturday evenings and Sunday mornings held not to render invalid general provisions of ordinance enacted pursuant to Const. art. 11, § 11, and St. 1921, p. 1269, requiring butcher shops to close on Saturday evenings and Sundays, so as to prevent sale of meat without inspection by public authority.

Application by Alfred J. Hennessy for writ of habeas corpus, prayed to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City and County of San Francisco, Cal., to secure the release of Harry Gatsios from custody on the charge of violation of an ordinance regulating the sale of meat. Writ denied, and prisoner remanded.

Alfred J. Hennessy and Virgil J. Garibaldi, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., Henry Heidelberg, Deputy City Atty., Matthew Brady, Dist. Atty., Isidore Golden, and August L. Fourtner, Deputy Dist. Attys., and Leo A. Cunningham, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Harry Gatsios is the proprietor of a butcher shop in the city and county of San Francisco, where meat, inspected by authorized inspectors under the inspection laws and regulations, is sold. He was taken into custody upon the complaint that he had violated ordinance No. 6157, new series, of the municipality, in that on Saturday, December 3, 1927, between the hours of 7 and 8 o'clock p. m., he sold and offered for sale at his shop certain uncured and uncooked meats, contrary to the provisions of the ordinance, which reads as follows:

"Section 1. It shall be unlawful for any person, firm, partnership, association or corporation, within the city and county of San Francisco, to sell or offer for sale any uncured or uncooked meats from any established place of business in the city and county of San Francisco for the purpose of sale and delivery to dealers or consumers or for the purpose of any delivery, or to keep open for business any place of business where any uncured or uncooked meats are sold or offered for sale, or permit such place to be kept open for business, or to receive at such place of business, any uncured or uncooked meats, except between the hours of 7 o'clock a. m. and 6 o'clock p. m. on days other than Sunday, New Year's day, Washington's birthday, Decoration day and Christmas day, or to sell or offer for sale within the city and county of San Francisco any uncured or uncooked meats, except at and from an established and fixed place of business at which said meats are regularly inspected by state and municipal inspectors; provided, however, that in case of a holiday falling on Saturday, the place of business hereinabove defined may be kept open between the hours of 7 o'clock a. m. and 12 o'clock noon.

"And provided further that any place of business where strictly Kosher meats are sold or offered for sale may be kept open on Saturdays from sundown until 10 o'clock p. m., and on Sundays from 7 o'clock until noon. And be it further provided that all emergency cases be left to the discretion of the Health Officer of the city and county of San Francisco.

"Section 2. Every person, partnership, association, firm or corporation violating any of the provisions of this ordinance or by doing any act or thing herein declared to be unlawful shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than fifty dollars, nor more than two hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the city prison for not more than six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

It is contended on behalf of the prisoner that the ordinance is unconstitutional and void for the reason that the proviso therein "that any place of business where strictly Kosher meats are sold or offered for sale may be kept open on Saturdays from sundown until 10 o'clock p. m. and on Sundays from 7 o'clock a. m. until 12 noon" creates as against those who do not sell or offer for sale Kosher meats at their places of business (his shop being of that class) an arbitrary and unreasonable discrimination.

The ordinance attempts to discriminate between "places where Kosher meats are sold or offered for sale" and places where such meats are not on sale; and, according to its provisions, dealers in Kosher meats may sell between sundown and 10 o'clock p. m. on Saturdays and between 7 o'clock a. m. to noon on Sundays; while other dealers must close their shops from 6 o'clock p. m. on Saturday until 7 o'clock on Monday morning.

[1] The state law governing the slaughter of animals and the inspection of meat (Stats. 1921, p. 1269) gives to the director of agriculture general supervision of slaughter houses within the state, the object being to insure a supply of wholesome meat, and for this purpose he is authorized to employ competent inspectors. Notwithstanding that general superintendence in such matters is given the director of agriculture, the statute also permits cities and counties to provide by ordinance for local supervision and to make inspection by their own inspectors. Slaughtering on Sundays and legal holidays is prohibited except by special permit, the work on other days being confined between the hours of 7 o'clock a. m. and 8 o'clock p. m., but no attempt is made by the statute to regulate the hours of business of markets. The purpose of such ordinances as the one in question is the protection of public health, and the provision thereof regulating the hours of business of shops and markets where the products sold are subject to inspection by public authority, is to prevent evasion of the law during the hours when such inspectors are not on duty. An ordinance of this character will be upheld as a valid exercise of the police power if its requirements are not unreasonable and its provisions do not discriminate in favor of or against particular persons or classes of persons as to whom no reasonable basis of discrimination exists.

The first objection does not obtain here, but the ordinance by the exception noted above does discriminate between meat called Kosher, that is, the flesh of animals killed according to the Hebrew ritual, and the flesh of animals not so killed. It appears that according to the ritualistic practice mentioned, slaughtering is intrusted to those skilled in the handling of the instruments used for that purpose and instructed in Jewish laws and usages in the same connection, the object being to prevent as far as possible the distribution of meat considered ceremonially unclean as well as that which by reason of disease is unfit for human consumption. The latter purpose is accomplished for the whole community by the inspection laws; and it is not contended that greater protection to health is afforded by the Kosher method than by that followed in the preparation of other meats, both being designed to remove from the carcass of the animal as much of the blood as possible, the difference in practice between the two being that by the Kosher method the arteries of the neck are severed while the animal is yet conscious, and by the other the same arteries are severed after the animal has been rendered unconscious.

As stated, the ordinance divides butcher shops into two classes, viz., those where "strictly Kosher meats are sold or offered for sale" (this classification by implication including shops were both Kosher and other meats are sold), and those where only meats other than Kosher are sold or offered for sale. Those forming the first class are permitted to do business on Saturday nights and Sundays, while to the second class this privilege is denied, notwithstanding that no material difference in the quality of the meats or the conditions under which the same are prepared or distributed is claimed to exist.

[2] The source of the power of municipalities to enact ordinances of this character is found in section 11 of article 11 of the Constitution; and while the provisions of section 11 of article 1 of the Constitution in regard to the uniformity of laws does not apply to municipal ordinances (Hellman v. Shoulters, 114 Cal. 146, 44 P. 915, 45 P. 1057; In re Zhizhuzza, 147 Cal. 328, 81 P. 955), nevertheless the power conferred is limited by section 21 of the latter article, which reads: "No special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted which may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the Legislature, nor shall any citizen, or class of citizens, be granted privileges or immunities which, upon the same terms, shall not be granted to all citizens." As was said by the court in the case of In re Blois, 179 Cal. 291, 176 P. 449: "This latter section * * * has been given direct application to * * * ordinances" by "which attempts have been made to discriminate in favor of or against particular persons or classes of persons as to whom no reasonable basis of discrimination can be seen to exist; and in all such cases the courts * * * have uniformly held such attempted legislation to be void."

As held in Martin v. Supreme Court, 194 Cal. 93, 227 P. 762, the classification must not be arbitrarily made for the mere purpose of classification, but must be based upon natural or constitutional distinctions.

[3, 4] In the present case the facts shown furnish no reasonable basis for the classification attempted to be made, and the result is the granting of a privilege to one class from which the other is arbitrarily excluded. The invalidity of the exception, however, does not necessarily affect the validity of the remaining portion of the ordinance. The supervisors had the power to adopt as a police measure an ordinance closing meat markets on Sunday and after nightfall on Saturday. Aside from the exception the ordinance is complete, is not unreasonable and applies without discrimination to all shops where uncured or uncooked meats are sold. It is the rule that when a proviso in the nature of an exception to an act is invalid the general provisions of the statute are not invalidated thereby unless it clearly appears that the provisions of the exception are so intimately and inherently related to and connected with the general provisions to which the exception relates that the legislative body would not have enacted the former without the latter. People v. Monterey Fish, etc., Co., 195 Cal. 548, 234 P. 398, 38 A. L. R. 1186. The evident object of the board was to regulate for inspection purposes the hours during which the business of selling uncured and uncooked meats might be carried on, which object is accomplished without the invalid exception. The latter was not so intimately or inherently connected with the general provisions of the act nor did it enter so entirely into its scope and design as to indicate the intention that the general provisions should not be effective or would not have been adopted without it. Under such circumstances, though the exception be treated as a nullity, the balance of the act, under which the prisoner is held in custody, is not affected. Ex parte Gerino, 143 Cal. 412, 77 P. 166, 66 L. R. A. 249.

It is ordered that the writ be discharged, and that Harry Gatsios be remanded to the custody of the chief of police of the city and county of San Francisco.

FINANCIAL INS. CORPORATION v. BROCKTON et al. (Civ. 5544.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 8, 1929.

1. Replevin ⚷100(1)—Where court found plaintiff not entitled to possession in claim and delivery, it was unnecessary to settle rights as between plaintiff and named defendant.

In action of claim and delivery of automobile, brought against named defendants and fictitious defendants, judgment for one answering as fictitious defendant held not erroneous on ground that there was no disposition of case as between plaintiff and defendant originally named, since any relief to which plaintiff might be entitled depended upon right of possession, and findings were against it in that regard.

2. Replevin ⚷23—In claim and delivery, court may render judgment for one answering as defendant sued under fictitious name without obtaining leave to intervene.

Court held to have jurisdiction to enter judgment in action of claim and delivery in favor of one who answered as defendant sued under fictitious name, as against contention that such defendant was not original party to action and had not obtained leave to intervene, especially where no objection was made at trial.

3. Replevin ⚷107—Money judgment without alternative of delivering automobile held not erroneous in claim and delivery, where parties stipulated delivery could not be had.

In action of claim and delivery of automobile, judgment for payment of money without ordinary alternative of delivery of automobile held not erroneous, where parties stipulated on commencement of action that automobile was sold and delivery could not be had and that judgment should be certain sum in lieu of delivery.

4. Replevin ⚷106—In claim and delivery, judgment for defendant for stipulated value of automobile held not erroneous, notwithstanding partial payment by another.

In action of claim and delivery of automobile, awarding judgment to one defendant for stipulated value held not error, notwithstanding that, owing to partial payment having been made to it by another, it may not actually have been out such amount of money in transaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action of claim and delivery of an automobile, brought by the Financial Insurance Corporation against Robert C. Brockton and various fictitious defendants, in which the A. I. Lasker Corporation answered as one of the fictitious defendants. Judgment for the Lasker Corporation, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George W. Fenimore, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

D. M. Potter and A. J. Getz, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. This appeal relates to the ownership of an automobile which, so far as is here involved, originally belonged to a distributing company known as Don C. Smith, Incorporated. On June 20, 1924, the Sunset Moon Company, which was a dealer in automobiles, without being the owner or in possession of the automobile in question, entered into a conditional sale contract of the automobile with Brockton, one of the defendants herein. On the same day the Sunset Moon Company assigned its interest in the conditional sale contract to Financial Insurance Corporation, a corporation, the plaintiff herein. On application made to the division of motor vehicles by the Financial Insurance Corporation, accompanied by a report of sale of the automobile by the Sunset Moon Company, the division of motor vehicles issued its certificate of ownership of the automobile to Financial Insurance Corporation and Brockton. Four days later, to wit, on November 24th, the Sunset Moon Company orally agreed with the A. I. Lasker Corporation (one of the defendants herein) to the effect that the latter corporation purchase the automobile for cash from Don C. Smith, Incorporated (which latter corporation before that time had never parted with either the ownership or the possession of the automobile), and that thereupon the Sunset Moon Company would purchase it on a conditional sale contract from the A. I. Lasker Corporation—which agreement was carried out and the automobile was first delivered by Don C. Smith, Incorporated, into the possession of the Lasker Corporation, which latter corporation thereupon delivered it to the Sunset Moon Company, and which last-named company in turn delivered it to Brockton. On the same day an application for certificate of ownership of the automobile was made to the division of motor vehicles by the Lasker Corporation, accompanied by a report of sale of same by Don C. Smith, Incorporated; the result being that a certificate of ownership was also issued by the division of motor vehicles to the Lasker Corporation. Brockton having failed to make payment for the automobile as provided in the conditional sale contract entered into between him and the Sunset Moon Company, which contract had been assigned to the plaintiff, Financial Insurance Corporation, an action in claim and delivery was brought by the latter corporation against Brockton and various fictitious defendants for the recovery of the automobile; or, in the event that its delivery could not be had, for its value. The Lasker Corporation answered the complaint as one of the fictitious defendants named therein. On the trial it was stipulated that on the commencement of the action, under process issued by authority of the court, the Financial Insurance Corporation had taken possession of the automobile, sold it to some one not a party to the action, and that the value of the automobile was $1,200. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant Lasker Corporation and against the plaintiff Financial Insurance Corporation for the sum of $1,200, and the appeal herein is from such judgment.

[1] Appellant's contention that the judgment is erroneous because it makes no disposition of the case as between the plaintiff and Brockton is completely met by the facts that the action was for claim and delivery; that any relief to which the plaintiff might be entitled necessarily depended upon its ownership or right of possession of the automobile; and, as the findings of the trial court were against the plaintiff in that regard, it was unnecessary for the court, in that kind of an action, to settle the respective rights as between the plaintiff and Brockton.

[2] Appellant also suggests that the Lasker Corporation was not an original party to the action, and, as it had not obtained leave to intervene therein, the trial court was without jurisdiction to render the judgment of which complaint is made. However, the record herein shows that by the complaint "Richard Roe Company" was made a fictitious defendant; and the answer of the Lasker Corporation shows that it appeared in the action, answered the complaint, and demanded affirmative relief as the defendant sued under the said fictitious name. In addition thereto, until the appeal herein was taken, no objection of any sort was ever made by the plaintiff to the appearance made by the Lasker Corporation in the manner in which it did appear, and the case was tried on the theory that the decision of the controversy depended entirely upon a determination of whether the plaintiff or the Lasker Corporation was the legal owner of the automobile. In such circumstances, appellant's contention is without merit.

[3] A further claim is presented by appellant to the effect that as the judgment was for the sum of $1,200, without the ordinary alternative of a delivery of the automobile to the Lasker Corporation, the judgment is void. On the trial of the action the parties stipulated that on the commencement of the action the automobile had been delivered by the sheriff of Los Angeles county to the plaintiff; that the plaintiff thereupon sold the automobile; that delivery thereof could not be had; and that in case judgment should be against the plaintiff, in lieu of delivery of the automobile the judgment should be in the sum of $1,200—the stipulated value of the automobile at the time it was taken by the sheriff. It is therefore clear that at this time appellant is in no position to complain of the form of the judgment in that regard.

[4] Appellant also urges the point that the evidence was insufficient to support the several findings made by the trial court to the effect that the Lasker Corporation, and not the plaintiff, was the owner and entitled to the possession of the automobile. It would serve no useful purpose to herein set forth the evidence upon which such findings were made. Suffice it to say that, in the opinion of this court, the findings to which attention has been directed are amply supported by the evidence adduced on the trial of the action. Such being the conclusion by the trial court, its further action in awarding a judgment to the Lasker Corporation for the stipulated value of the automobile was without error, notwithstanding the fact that owing to a partial payment having been made to it by the Sunset Moon Company the Lasker Corporation may not actually have been out of pocket that amount of money in the transaction.

Appellant's final contention that the Lasker Corporation was guilty of negligence in the purchase of the automobile is equally without merit. The evidence satisfactorily shows that at the time it purchased the automobile it had no knowledge or notice of any fact sufficient to put it on inquiry as to the position occupied by the plaintiff in the matter. On the other hand, as shown by the evidence, the negligence of plaintiff was clearly established.

STREFF v. GOLD MEDAL CREAMERY CO.

GOLD MEDAL CREAMERY CO. v. STREFF et al.

(Civ. 3637.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 27, 1928.

1. Sales 🔑89—Buyer accepting milk after expiration of contract held liable for contract price.

Buyer continuing to accept deliveries of milk after expiration of contract, without suggesting change in terms or price, impliedly agreed to extension of contract, and hence was liable for contract price, not merely market value, of milk thereafter delivered.

2. Sales 🔑441 (2)—Conflicting testimony as to oral agreement to furnish milk of certain quality warranted finding that there was no warranty.

Conflicting testimony as to oral agreement, contemporaneous with written contract for sale of milk, to furnish milk of certain quality, justified finding that there was no warranty.

3. Sales 🔑437 (2)—Where express warranty is pleaded, evidence of implied warranty is inadmissible.

Where an express warranty is pleaded, evidence of an implied warranty will not be permitted.

4. Appeal and error 🔑1056 (5)—Exclusion of testimony as to bacteria tests and value of milk as delivered and warranted held not prejudicial, where court found on sufficient evidence that there was no express warranty.

Where the court found on sufficient evidence that there was no express warranty of grade of milk sold, exclusion of testimony as to bacteria tests and value of milk as delivered and warranted was not prejudicial, especially where buyer admitted that milk was merchantable.

5. Sales 🔑272—Implied warranty of merchantability does not require goods of first or even average quality (Civ. Code, § 1768).

Implied warranty of merchantability under Civ. Code, § 1768, does not require that goods sold be of first quality or even as good as average.

6. Sales 🔑288 (2)—Buyer accepting deliveries for over five months, with knowledge that milk was not as guaranteed, cannot prevail in defense based on such guaranty in action for price.

Buyer accepting deliveries of milk for over five months, with knowledge that it did not meet requirements of alleged guaranty of quality, cannot prevail in defense based on such guaranty in action for price.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by F. C. Streff against the Gold Medal Creamery Company, which filed counterclaims and a cross-complaint against plaintiff, individually, and plaintiff and another as copartners, doing business under the name of California Dairy. From a judgment for plaintiff and cross-defendants, defendant and cross-complainant appeals. Affirmed.

John G. Munholland, and Lane & Lane, all of Long Beach, for appellant.

Denio, Hart, Taubman & Simpson, of Long Beach, for respondent.

TUTTLE, Justice pro tem. This is an action upon a written contract to recover $1,780.30, alleged to be due on account of 4,685 gallons of milk sold defendant. Judgment went for plaintiff in the sum of $1,764.72, and this appeal is prosecuted therefrom.

The complaint is in the ordinary form for milk sold and delivered between the dates of October 1, 1924, and November 8, 1924. The answer denies the allegations, and then proceeds, in 14 pages, to set up three counterclaims. The first of these sets up an express and agreed warranty as to the quality of the milk sold. It is alleged that between June 1, 1924, and November 8, 1924, plaintiff delivered milk to defendant which was not in accord with the terms of said warranty, and that defendant was thereby damaged in the sum of $1,929.81. The second counterclaim is based upon a breach of the contract in reference to the delivery by plaintiff of the names of certain customers to defendant. It is stated that plaintiff refused to deliver such names, and that he continued to solicit the business of said customers after the sale of the good will of the business to defendant. $1,800 is asked on account of this item. The third counterclaim is in reality a cross-complaint. The claim is made that plaintiff, after the sale of the good will of his milk business to defendant, continued to solicit his old customers, and started up, in the City of Long Beach, a rival concern under a fictitious name. There is a prayer for judgment in the sum of $2,432.81, and for an injunction restraining plaintiff from soliciting said customers.

The court found against defendant upon all the issues raised in his answer and cross-complaint. We are of the opinion that these findings are supported by the evidence.

A brief statement of the facts will shed considerable light upon the situation. On May 31, 1924, while plaintiff was the owner of a dairy and milk route, he entered into the following contract with defendant:

"Frank G. Streff and wife, Lou E., agrees to sell and Gold Medal Creamery Company agrees to buy the following described property:

"By J. H. Chamnes, Pres.,
"Purchaser."

On June 1st defendant took possession of said dairy, and plaintiff commenced to deliver the milk referred to in said contract, and continued to deliver the same up to November 8th. It is admitted that the contract expired upon October 1st, but defendant continued to accept deliveries of said milk in the usual manner until November 8th. Upon that date defendant refused to pay plaintiff for the milk delivered after October 1st, and plaintiff thereupon ceased to make further deliveries.

[1] The court allowed plaintiff the contract price for the milk delivered after the expiration of said contract, and defendant contends that only the market value of said milk should have been allowed. While the contract may have expired upon October 1st, defendant continued thereafter to accept deliveries without any suggestion of a change in the terms or price, and under such circumstances we hold that the trial court was justified in finding that the contract price should prevail, even though the contract had expired. While no formal extension of the contract was entered into, by the undisputed acts and conduct of the parties, such an extension was put into effect, and impliedly agreed upon.

[2, 3] At the trial defendant was permitted to introduce testimony upon an oral agreement between the parties, contemporaneous with said written contract, to the effect that plaintiff agreed to furnish milk of a certain quality, to wit, grade A. Plaintiff denied that there was any such conversation or agreement. Upon this testimony the court was justified in finding, as it did, that there was no warranty of any character. Furthermore, where an express warranty is pleaded, evidence of an implied warranty will not be permitted. Kullman, Salz & Co. v. Sugar, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 725, 96 P. 369.

[4, 5] Certain rulings of the court are attacked in respect to proof of bacteria tests of the milk to establish its grade. The court having found, upon sufficient evidence, that there was no express warranty, the question as to whether or not the milk was class A is utterly immaterial, and no prejudice resulted from the ruling. Furthermore, defendant admitted in open court that the milk was merchantable. There was nothing in the contract to show that any special grade or quality of milk was to be furnished. The requirement of merchantability, assuming there was an implied warranty as to merchantability under section 1768 of the Civil Code, does not require that the goods be of first quality, or even that they shall be as good as the average of goods. Kenney v. Grogan, 17 Cal. App. 527, 120 P. 433, quoting Williston, Sales.

Error is predicated upon the refusal of the court to admit testimony showing the value of the milk as delivered and as it would have been, had it complied with the warranty set up by defendant. As the court found there was no express warranty as pleaded by defendant, no prejudice could result from such ruling.

[6] Other points are raised by appellant, but they are of minor importance and without merit. The crux of the whole matter is that defendant accepted deliveries of this milk for over five months. During all this time it had knowledge of the fact that the milk did not meet the requirements of their alleged guaranty. Such conduct should and does preclude them from prevailing in their defense which is based upon such guaranty, assuming that the existence of the same had been upheld by the trial court. 22 Cal. Jur. 983, § 60; Union Oil Co. v. Purissima Oil Co., 181 Cal. 479, 185 P. 381.

LANE et al. v. SAN DIEGO ELECTRIC RY. CO. (Civ. 3649.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 29, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⟹671(9)—Finding, that maintenance of street car tracks on sidewalk in front of plaintiff's property did not interfere with access to property, held not sustained by evidence.

In action to enjoin maintenance of street car tracks, finding, that plaintiffs were not prevented from having free ingress or egress over their property by reason of construction of tracks, held not sustained by evidence showing car tracks seriously interfered with access to plaintiffs' lot, and showing damage by running of street cars over sidewalk in front of plaintiffs' business house.

2. Highways ⟹85—Abutting owner on highway has private rights arising from ownership of property, regardless whether he owns fee of highway.

Abutting owner on highway has public right enjoyed in common with other citizens, and private rights arising from ownership of property contiguous to highway not given to public generally, regardless whether fee of highway is in him or not.

3. Eminent domain ⟹85—Abutting landowner on public highway has easement, which cannot be damaged or taken away without due compensation.

Abutting landowner on public highway has special right of easement and user in public road for access purposes, which is property right which cannot be damaged or taken away from him without due compensation.

4. Municipal corporations ⟹669, 670—Abutting landowner on street can disturb street and sidewalks, if necessary and done in reasonable manner.

Abutting landowner on public highway in municipality has limited right to disturb highway and sidewalks by reason of business or household exigencies, but such use must be necessary and reasonable, and obstruction cannot exist for long periods each day.

5. Municipal corporations ⟹669—Obstruction of abutting owner's access to public street constitutes "private and public nuisance" (Civ. Code, §§ 3479–3481).

Under Civ. Code, §§ 3479–3481, obstruction of abutting owner's access to public street constitutes "private" as well as "public nuisance."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Private Nuisance; Public Nuisance.]

6. Municipal corporations ⟹671(1, 5)—Abutting owner may sue in damages, or for injunction, for impairment of private easement in street in front of property (Code Civ. Proc. § 731).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 731, injury to use of street, which impairs abutting owner's private easement in street in front of, and adjacent to, his property, amounts to injury giving one right to maintain action for damages, or for injunction.

7. Eminent domain ⟹106—Street railroad held not justified in taking plaintiff's property without compensation, by constructing tracks over sidewalk, seriously affecting access to property.

Street railroad held not justified in taking plaintiff's property without compensation, by construction of loop tracks in front of plaintiff's property, resulting in running of street cars over sidewalk in front of property, seriously affecting access to property and causing damage thereto.

8. Municipal corporations ⟹671(7)—That continued use of street car tracks, obstructing access to abutting property, would ripen into prescriptive right, entitled owner to injunction against maintaining tracks, regardless of present damage.

That continued use of street car tracks in front of abutting landowner's property, obstructing access to property, would eventually ripen into prescriptive right, held sufficient to entitle abutting owner to enjoin maintenance of tracks, regardless of present damage.

9. Municipal corporations ⟹671(7)—Maintenance of street car tracks, obstructing access to abutting landowner's property, held private nuisance, entitling owner to injunction against maintaining tracks where no great public or private mischief would ensue.

Maintenance of street car tracks in front of abutting landowner's lots, obstructing access thereto and destroying special easement for purpose of ingress and egress to lots, and operation of street cars over sidewalk in front of owner's property, constituted private nuisance unreasonable and unlawfully interfering with owner's access to lot, entitling him to enjoin maintenance of tracks where violation of right was substantial, and issuance of injunction would not produce great public or private mischief.

plication for a permanent injunction, restraining the defendant from maintaining its car tracks and operating its cars across the sidewalk and the street immediately adjacent thereto in front of their building.

The defendant owns lots 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, block 38, La Jolla Park, in the city of San Diego. The plaintiffs own the adjoining lots 7 and 8. All the lots face west on Fay street, with uniform frontage of 25 feet, except lot 1, which has a frontage of 24 feet. The defendant operates a single-track electric street railway along Fay street, but maintains a double track in front of block 38, the westerly track being "intended as a holding track * * * upon which cars could be spotted, or placed," the double track being at the northerly terminus of the line. Prior to any controversy between the parties, the defendant erected a substantial passenger depot on its said lots. In June, 1924, it commenced the construction of a loop consisting of an extension of the easterly track in a right-hand curve around the depot and back to the easterly track at the intersection thereof with the south line of lot 8 extended. The plaintiffs made seasonable objection to the construction of the loop in front of their property during the progress of the work, and they commenced this action prior to the completion thereof, but the defendant proceeded to complete the loop, and has thereafter used it for the purposes intended. Following the loop in the reverse order of that stated, it leaves the easterly track at the southerly line (extended) of lot 8, and, curving to the right, the right-hand rail intersects the curb in front of lot 7 at a point 5½ feet south of the north line (extended) of lot 7, and continues in such a course across the sidewalk that the side of a street car moving over the loop passes within 3½ feet of the corner of that lot, the overhang of the street car around the curve being about 3 feet to the right of the right-hand rail. The defendant constructed a culvert over the gutter at the curb in front of lots 6 and 7, the southerly end thereof extending to about the middle of the curb line in front of lot 7. The sidewalk is 14 feet in width, and the distance from the east rail of the main track to the curb is about 17 feet.

On the plaintiffs' lots, occupying the whole of the front thereof on Fay street, is a one-story brick and tile building used as a garage, the entrance thereof for vehicles being immediately south of the dividing line between lots 7 and 8. There is a door in the northwest corner of the building, opening on Fay street. The building was so planned that the front part thereof, on lot 7, "could be rented as a separate small store." It was constructed of sufficient strength "to carry two additional stories in the front part."

The evidence shows without contradiction, and a map introduced in evidence, which respondent concedes "correctly shows the situation," demonstrates that an average automobile or truck cannot be parked in front of lot 7 while a street car is passing over the loop in front of that lot. Defendant's engineer of maintenance and construction testified that, even if the southerly end of the loop were connected with the west track directly west of the present connection, it would not be possible to park an automobile of greater length than 10 feet in front of lot 7 during the passage of a car over the loop. The defendant introduced evidence to the effect that, at the time of the trial, cars passed over the loop at half-hour intervals, but there appears to be nothing to prevent the use of a greater number of cars in the future. In so far as it lies within its power, the city of San Diego has authorized the maintenance of the loop in its present location. The court found: "It has not been established by the evidence that either plaintiffs, or any lessees, or patrons of plaintiffs, are prevented from having free ingress, egress or regress to, on or from the property or buildings upon the property of plaintiffs by reason of the construction of said electric street railway turn-out track or the operation of electric street cars thereover."

[1] It is clear from what has been stated that this finding is contrary to the uncontradicted evidence, which demonstrates that access to lot 7 is substantially and seriously interfered with by the operation of cars over the loop, and it appears, not only from the uncontradicted testimony of the witnesses, but also from the application of common knowledge to the physical facts shown by the map referred to, that the maintenance of the loop in its present location, and the operation of cars thereover, will substantially depreciate the market value of plaintiffs' property. It requires no proof beyond the bare statement of the situation to show that the regular running of street cars over the sidewalk in front of a business house will cause damage.

[2, 3] "An abutting owner has two kinds of rights in a highway, a public right which he enjoys in common with all other citizens, and certain private rights which arise from his ownership of property contiguous to the highway, and which are not common to the public generally; and this regardless of whether the fee of the highway is in him or not. * * * An abutting landowner on a public highway has a special right of easement and user in the public road for access purposes, and this is a property right which cannot be damaged or taken away from him without due compensation." 29 C. J. 547; Fairchild v. Oakland & Bay Shore Ry. Co., 176 Cal. 629, 169 P. 388; Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, 152 Cal. 123, 92 P. 70, 125 Am. St. Rep. 47; Smith v. Southern Pacific R. App. 346, 83 P. 1082, 1085.

[4] "An abutter has a limited right to obstruct the roadway and sidewalks in a municipality by reason of his business or household exigencies, as, for example, by teams and vehicles permitted to stand in front of his property for a reasonable time. * * * And an abutting owner may use the street as for the purpose of loading and unloading goods or merchandise, or transporting his goods or other portable articles to and from his property, but such uses must be necessary and reasonable and the abutting owner cannot obstruct the street for long periods each day." 44 C. J. 956.

"The owner of a lot abutting upon a public street has by reason of such ownership a special easement in such street for the purpose of ingress and egress which is property as fully as the lot itself." Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, supra.

[5, 6] "Anything which is * * * an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property, * * * is a nuisance." Civ. Code, § 3479. "A public nuisance is one which affects at the same time an entire community or neighborhood, or any considerable number of persons." Civ. Code, § 3480. "Every nuisance not included in the definition of the last section is private." Civ. Code, § 3481. The obstruction of an abutting owner's access to a public street constitutes a private as well as a public nuisance. Cushing-Wetmore Co. v. Gray, supra. "An action may be brought by any person whose property is injuriously affected, or whose personal enjoyment is lessened by a nuisance, as the same is defined in section thirty-four hundred and seventy-nine of the Civil Code, and by the judgment in such action the nuisance may be enjoined or abated as well as damages recovered therefor." Code Civ. Proc. § 731. "Any injury to the use of the street which impairs plaintiff's private easements in the street in front of and adjacent to his lot amounts to an injury giving plaintiff, as an abutting owner, the right to maintain an action for damages or for an injunction." Strong v. Sullivan, 180 Cal. 331, 333, 181 P. 59, 60 (4 A. L. R. 343); Sala v. City of Pasadena, 162 Cal. 714, 717, 124 P. 539; Wilcox v. Engebretsen, 160 Cal. 288, 299, 116 P. 750; Danielson v. Sykes, 157 Cal. 686, 691, 109 P. 87, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1024; Williams v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 150 Cal. 592, 594, 89 P. 330. Respondent relies on a few decisions from other jurisdictions. It is deemed sufficient to say that such decisions are in conflict with the California cases cited herein, and that the latter appear to be in harmony with the great weight of authority. In Fairchild v. Oakland & Bay Shore Ry. Co., supra, it is said that an abutting property owner's right of action for any special or peculiar damage caused by obstruction in a street, not suffered by other property owners, "is precisely one of those rights of action for the damaging of property which, if it did not exist before, came into existence by virtue of our constitutional amendment granting a recovery for the damage as well as for the taking of property for public use."

[7, 8] In Frost v. City of Los Angeles, 181 Cal. 22, 31, 183 P. 342, 346 (6 A. L. R. 468), it is said, quoting 2 Beach, Injunctions, § 1067: "When an injunction to restrain a nuisance will produce great public or private mischief, a court of equity is not bound to grant it merely for the purpose of protecting a technical unsubstantial right." In this case the plaintiffs' right is neither technical nor unsubstantial, but a valuable property right. Neither will the issuance of an injunction "produce great public or private mischief." It does not appear that it would be at all difficult or would involve great expense to so locate an equally serviceable loop as to avoid damage to the plaintiffs' property. But, whatever its necessities were, it was not justified in taking the plaintiffs' property without compensation. Smith v. Southern Pacific R. Co., supra. No public mischief would be produced, even by the abandonment of the southerly connection of the loop, because such change would merely necessitate the switching of the trolley for the return trip, or once every half hour. The fact that the continued use of the southerly end of the loop will eventually ripen into a prescriptive right is a sufficient ground, regardless of any question of present damage, to entitle the plaintiffs to an injunction. Danielson v. Sykes, supra.

[9] Findings numbered 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, and 28, made by the trial court, are vacated and stricken out, and the following finding is hereby made by this court and substituted for and in the place of those stricken out: "The plaintiffs, by reason of their ownership of said lots 7 and 8, have a special easement, for the purpose of ingress and egress to and from said lots by themselves, their lessees and patrons, in that part of the east half of Fay street which lies in front of their said lots; and the maintenance of said turnout track in front of said lots, in the location now occupied by it, and the operation of street cars thereover constitute a private nuisance injuriously affecting said lot 7 and unreasonably and unlawfully interfering with such ingress and egress to and from said lot, and the continuance thereof will ripen into a prescriptive right and title unless such maintenance and operation be enjoined."

The conclusions of law made by the trial court are vacated and set aside, and the following conclusion is drawn and substituted in the place of those set aside: "The plaintiffs are entitled to judgment as prayed for in their supplemental complaint."

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment, on the findings as herein amended and modified, in favor of the plaintiffs for the relief prayed for in their supplemental complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; F. A. Leonard, Judge.

Thomas Perea was convicted of selling intoxicating liquor, and he appeals. Affirmed.

H. E. Thompson, of San Bernardino, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. The contention of appellant is that he was not accorded a speedy trial to which he was entitled under article 1, § 13, of the Constitution, nor a trial within the time provided in sections 681a, 1050 (added by St. 1927, pp. 1045, 1036), and 1382 of the Penal Code.

Section 681a is general in its terms and directory merely. It requires that all proceedings in criminal cases shall be had and determined at the earliest possible time.

Section 1050 reads as follows: "The court shall set all criminal cases for trial for a date not later than thirty days after the date of entry of the plea of the defendant. No continuance of the trial shall be granted except upon affirmative proof in open court, upon reasonable notice, that the ends of justice require a continuance. No continuance shall be granted for any longer time than it is affirmatively proved the ends of justice require. Whenever any continuance is granted, the court shall enter in its minutes the facts proved which require the continuance. Criminal cases shall be given precedence over civil matters and proceedings. If any court is unable to hear all criminal cases pending before it within thirty days after the respective defendants have entered their pleas, it must immediately notify the chairman of the judicial council."

Section 1382 reads as follows: "The court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution to be dismissed in the following cases:

"1. When a person has been held to answer for a public offense, if an indictment is not found or an information filed against him, within thirty days thereafter.

"2. If a defendant, whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial within sixty days after the finding of the indictment, or filing of the information."

[1] If section 1050 is mandatory the defendant is entitled to a reversal and a dismissal of the case. If it is directory merely, then the failure to comply with its terms does not entitle him to such relief. We are of the opinion that the section is directory merely. The reasoning in Gillis v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 265 P. 360, is applicable and convincing in this regard.

[2] Section 1382 is mandatory, and defendant would be entitled to a reversal thereunder for failure to bring him to trial within 60 days after the filing of the information, except that the trial was postponed upon his own application within that period. Therefore he is entitled to no relief under that section.

The defendant is not entitled to relief under article 1, § 13, of the Constitution, under the authority of In re Matter of Tirey L. Ford on Habeas Corpus, 160 Cal. 334, 116 P. 757, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 882, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1267.

[3] Finally, the appellant contends that the trial court erred in refusing to give an instruction, which is set out on page 28 of the clerk's transcript. He makes no mention of this point, however, in his argument. The proposed instruction calls attention specifically to a particular witness, calling him by name, and directs the jury that under certain circumstances it should receive his testimony with great caution. There is no claim that the trial court did not properly instruct the jury in its general instructions on the credibility of witnesses; and the defendant was not entitled to have an instruction as to the credibility of a particular witness. Jones v. Southern Pacific Co., 74 Cal. App. 10, 239 P. 429; Thomas v. Gates, 126 Cal. 1, 58 P. 315. No merit in the appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

96 Cal. App. 183

PEOPLE v. NYE. (Cr. 1718.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 8, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑300—Refusing change of plea of not guilty to set up insanity held not abuse of discretion on affidavit containing only hearsay (Pen. Code, § 1016 as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148).

Denial of motion to change plea of not guilty to plea of not guilty by reason of insanity held not abuse of discretion, under Pen. Code, § 1016, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1148, where affidavit on which motion was based was composed entirely of hearsay, and no physician testified as to defendant's sanity or furnished affidavit regarding it; hearsay statement of one person not constituting sufficient prima facie evidence of insanity.

2. Criminal law 🔑311—All persons are presumed sane until contrary is proved.

General rule is that all persons are presumed to be sane until the contrary is proved.

3. False pretenses 🔑7(1)—Conviction for grand theft of loan held sustained as to defendant procuring deeds by fraud and subsequently obtaining loan under false claim of title.

In prosecution for grand theft, evidence, that defendant procured deeds by fraudulently representing to grantor that they were leases, and thereafter obtained loan by placing incumbrance on the property under false claim of title, justified conviction of defendant for grand theft, as to count based on taking property of corporation from which loan was obtained and to which deed of trust was given.

4. Larceny 🔑5—Deeds procured by fraudulent representations held worthless and not to sustain conviction for grand theft of deeds.

Count of information, charging grand theft of grant deeds, held not sustained by evidence, that defendant obtained deeds by fraudulently representing to grantor that they were leases, since, under such circumstances, there was no delivery, and deeds were worthless, and were not subject of larceny.

5. Criminal law 🔑800(1)—Instructions defining fraud held not erroneous as isolated or unwarranted in prosecution for grand theft, where court required proof that loan was obtained by false representations.

In prosecution for grand theft, based on defendant's procurement of loan under false claim of title, instructions defining fraud and false pretenses held not erroneous as isolated or unwarranted, where court required state to prove beyond reasonable doubt that defendant procured loan under false representations.

6. Criminal law 🔑878(4)—Conviction under count charging grand theft of loan obtained under false claim of title held not void as repugnant to conviction on count on fraud in procuring deeds.

In prosecution for grand theft, in which first count of information charged grand theft as to deeds procured by defendants by fraud, and second count charged grand theft as to proceeds of loan obtained by giving trust deed, as security under false claim of title, counts held not repugnant, so as to render void conviction returned under second count.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Ora Nye was convicted of grand theft, and he appeals. Reversed in part and affirmed in part.

Ralph W. Eckhardt, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank Richards, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

CRAIG, J. Certain real property in the county of Los Angeles, which admittedly belonged to one Anna B. Dorn, was deeded by her to Jean Harvey, who thereafter borrowed $4,000, giving a promissory note secured by deed of trust upon one of the parcels thereof. It appearing that Jean Harvey and the defendant were one and the same person, she was charged by information, consisting of two counts, with having committed grand theft, in that, on or about March 16, 1928, the defendant unlawfully took away two deeds of the total value of $14,000, personal property of Anna B. Dorn, and that on or about the same date she unlawfully took $4,000 of the personal property of the Title Guaranty & Trust Company and Mary White. Appellant was convicted upon both counts, and, a motion for new trial having been denied, she appealed from the judgment and from the ruling upon said motion.

The people having confessed error as to the first count, we shall first consider the second count of the information. It appears that Mrs. Dorn had agreed to lease certain real property to appellant, who presented herself under the name of Jean Harvey, and introduced to the owner a young man, who gave the name of J. Harvey, as her son; that Jean Harvey and the purported son prepared and obtained Mrs. Dorn's signature upon two deeds which they stated to her were an original and copy of the proposed lease. Said deeds were recorded, and at appellant's solicitation a broker obtained for her a loan from Mary White of $4,000 which was placed in escrow with the Title Guaranty & Trust Company with a promissory note and deed of trust signed "Jean Harvey," and "J. Harvey." The trust company's check for $4,000, less the expenses of the escrow and other charges, was delivered to appellant, payable to Jean Harvey, and appellant indorsed it and signed a receipt therefor, in the same name. The check passed through the usual channels of exchange, and was paid. Following the filing of criminal charges, appellant appeared and furnished bail, but, when the trial was called she was not present, and, a continuance then being granted, her bail was forfeited, and a bench warrant issued for her arrest. She was thereafter located in the state of Michigan and returned to Los Angeles by officers.

[1, 2] After a plea of "not guilty" was entered, the defendant, upon motion for permission to change it to "not guilty by reason of insanity," presented the affidavit of her attorney, wherein it was averred that she had been considered by relatives to be insane, and that a reputable physician expressed his opinion that, upon the facts, subject to verification by personal observation and examination, reasonable grounds were presented for believing Ora Nye probably insane. The trial court heard the motion and affidavit, but denied the motion upon the ground that there was "no showing of any insanity in the affidavit." Appellant's first asserted ground for reversal is that this latter ruling was erroneous.

Section 1016 of the Penal Code, as amended in 1927 (St. 1927, p. 1148), provides that the court may, for good cause shown, allow a change of plea in such a case. The affidavit was composed entirely of hearsay, and no physician testified as to the defendant's sanity or furnished affidavit in that respect. "Good cause" is not defined by the statute, but it has been held that the court may in its sound legal discretion determine whether or not good cause is shown by the evidence before it. Ex parte Bull, 42 Cal. 196; Christensen v. Anderson, 24 Tex. Civ. App. 345, 58 S. W. 962; People v. Sessions, 10 Abb. N. C. 192, 62 How. Prac. [N. Y.] 415. In at least one instance it was said to be exclusively within the discretion of the trial court. Kendall v. Briley, 86 N. C. 56. Since all persons are presumed to be sane until the contrary is proved (People v. Williams, 184 Cal. 590, 194 P. 1019; People v. Loomis, 170 Cal. 347, 149 P. 581), we think it would constitute grave injustice to hold the hearsay statement of one person sufficient prima facie evidence of insanity, without proof to the contrary.

[3] It is contended by appellant that the judgment is not supported by the evidence. From the evidence heretofore recited, and many other facts and circumstances adduced by the people, much of which is uncontradicted by the defendant, who did not testify, it appears that she falsely claimed title to real property upon which she and a confederate placed a lien as security for the repayment of $4,000. Jean Harvey, or J. Harvey, identified as Ora Nye by the people, appears by oral and documentary evidence to have obtained from Mary White said sum of money by placing in escrow with the title company a promissory note and deed of trust constituting a lien upon the property of Anna B. Dorn, who was 82 years of age. It further appears from the testimony of a deputy district attorney that the defendant before her commitment freely and voluntarily made a statement to him in the presence of witnesses, who also testified, as follows: "She stated that she and her son had gone out to Mrs. Dorn, that the lady she had spoken of as Mrs. Dorn was really the old lady Mrs. Dorn, that they had talked to her about leasing this property for six months; that they had written two deeds, one for the property at 240 North Burlington and one for the property at the beach—I think it was Hermosa Beach. That they had taken these two * * * deeds to Mrs. Dorn, representing to her that one of them was an original lease and one was a copy of the lease; that Mrs. Dorn had signed both of the deeds and that they had later placed an incumbrance on the Burlington street property, receiving $5,000; and then I showed her a lease that had a torn piece where the signature was on the righthand side of the lower portion. * * * I asked her who wrote this signature where the torn place is, and she said her son had written the name of Mrs. Dorn there. I asked her if this wasn't delivered back to her so that Mrs. Dorn would have no suspicion about being deeds on the place, and she said that was the reason." We think that the evidence amply supports the verdict and judgment upon the second count of the information.

[4] In the first count of said information it was charged that the defendant committed the crime of grand theft by unlawfully taking away from Anna B. Dorn a certain grant deed covering real property in the city of Los Angeles of the value of $12,000, and a certain grant deed covering real property in the city of Hermosa Beach of the value of $2,000. Upon the record before us it is at once obvious that the deeds were obtained by fraud, and hence that there was no "delivery," and title did not pass. In such event the deeds were worthless, and could not be made the basis of a charge of grand theft. People v. Sewall (Cal. App.) 265 P. 1040. The verdict and judgment upon the first count are therefore without foundation, and the judgment and order denying motion for new trial must to that extent be reversed.

[5] It is argued that two instructions were given which were isolated and "without any attempt to connect them with the crimes charged," and that this was reversible error. They read as follows:

"The court instructs the jury that deception deliberately practiced for the purpose of gaining an unfair advantage of another is fraud. Goods obtained by such practices are obtained by fraud. One deprived of his property by such means is defrauded."

"The court instructs the jury that a false pretense is such a fraudulent representation of an existing or past fact, by one who knows it not to be true, as is adapted to induce the person to whom it is made to part with something of value; and such pretense need not be such as cannot be guarded against by common prudence. And such pretense need not be in words, but may be gathered from acts and conduct of the party."

Appellant insists that there was no evidence warranting the giving of the instruction first quoted, and that the error was intensified by the giving of the latter. We do not construe the instructions referred to by appellant as being isolated or unwarranted. The trial court instructed at appellant's request, as follows: "The court instructs you that the people are required to show beyond a reasonable doubt, in order to convict the defendant under count two of the information, that the defendant procured such alleged loan of $4,000 upon representations which she knew to be false; and if the evidence fails to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the security which she tendered and which was accepted for said loan was fictitious and valueless, and unless the evidence further shows beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant knew that such security was fictitious and valueless, and unless the evidence further shows beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant represented such security as being true and genuine, your verdict must be not guilty under count II."

The jury having found from the evidence that the defendant fraudulently, by deliberate deception and fraud, obtained money, as alleged in the information, upon security which she knew to be fictitious and valueless, representing it to be true and genuine, we are cited to no authority requiring a reversal upon a record such as that here presented.

[6] Finally, it is appellant's contention that counts I and II of the information are repugnant, and that both verdicts are void, because verdicts upon counts I and II would be repugnant. The first count charged a theft of the deeds from Mrs. Dorn, and the second count charged theft of the $4,000 from the trust company and Mary White. It is argued that the deeds being void, because the apparent grantor did not intend to part with the title, appellant received nothing, and hence could not be guilty of theft of more than worthless paper. The fact that the deeds were worthless, and were known to the defendant to be of no value, was amply supported by the evidence, and was so found by the jury. Such fact in itself, as we have observed, does not constitute legal grounds for prosecution in such a case. This being true, there is no conflict or repugnancy between two valid counts, but there is, for that reason, strong legal and evidentiary foundation for a conviction upon the charge of theft of the money, as charged in the second count.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed as to the first count, and affirmed as to the second count of the information.

GRIMES v. MERCED COUNTY.★

(Civ. 3413.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 29, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1929.

1. Levees and flood control 🔑32—Statute relating to refund of balance remaining in annual fund of water protection district held inapplicable in action for repayment of assessment, because project was abandoned (Protection District Act, §§ 17, 20½).

Protection District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6174) § 20½, relating to refund of balance remaining in annual fund of water protection district, where there are annual assessments under section 17, held inapplicable in action in assumpsit for repayment of an assessment levied by water protection district, on ground that project was abandoned.

2. Taxation 🔑537—Where consideration for levying tax has failed, absence of statute will not deprive claimant of remedy to recover assessment (Pol. Code, § 4468).

Where consideration for levying of tax has wholly failed, absence of statute applying to subject-matter will not deprive claimant of remedy for recovering assessment paid, since under such circumstances common-law rule furnishes relief, under Pol. Code, § 4468.

3. Levees and flood control 🔑32—Members of board of water protection district hold its funds as trustees for taxpayers.

Members of board of water protection district, who are authorized to organize and operate protection district, levy, collect, and expend funds for improvements therein, are mere agents for that district, and hold its funds as trustees for property owners and taxpayers who have contributed to cause.

4. Limitation of actions 🔑95(1)—Statute of limitations will not bar recovery of assessment for water district improvements within reasonable time after knowledge of abandonment.

Statute of limitations will not bar a recovery of an assessment for water protection district, where improvements contemplated are abandoned and recovery is sought within rea-

Where assessment is collected by duress, it may be reclaimed, even though it was not paid under protest.

8. Trial 🔑396(6)—Where plaintiff was entitled to repayment of assessment in assumpsit, finding that plaintiff complied with provisions of inapplicable statute was immaterial (Protection District Act, § 20½).

Where plaintiff was entitled to repayment of water protection district assessment, in action of assumpsit where project was abandoned, finding that plaintiff complied with provisions of Protection District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6174) § 20½, which was inapplicable, in filing her claim for refunding of assessment, was immaterial.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1071(5)—Where judgment is supported by findings on material issues, other findings on unessential issues become harmless, though erroneous.

Where judgment is adequately supported by findings on material issues, other findings on unessential issues become harmless, and, even though they be erroneous, will furnish no ground for reversal of judgment.

10. Levees and flood control 🔑26—In action for repayment of water protection district assessment on abandonment of project, defendant county could not have credit for money illegally expended in employment of labor without advertising for bids as required (Protection District Act, § 26).

In action for repayment of water protection district assessment on abandonment of project, where board of supervisors had expended $2,292.65 in employment of day labor for purpose of clearing land in district, without having advertised for bidders as required by Protection District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6174) § 26, expenditure was illegal and could not avail to credit defendant county.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; J. C. Needham, Judge.

Action for repayment of water protection district assessment by Lydia M. Grimes against the County of Merced. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

F. M. Ostrander, Dist. Atty., and Stephen P. Galvin, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Merced, for appellant.

F. W. Henderson, of Merced, for respondent.

THOMPSON, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff in a suit in assumpsit for the repayment of an assessment levied by a water protection district of Merced county, on the ground that the proposed improvements for which the district was organized and the purpose for which the assessment was levied were abandoned.

Prior to 1920 the board of supervisors of Merced county organized the Bear Creek protection district of that county, pursuant to the protection district statutes of California of 1895, and subsequent amendments thereto (Deering's General Laws 1923, p. 2488), for the purpose of improving the natural water courses therein. July 18, 1920, an assessment was regularly levied on all the property within this district, by means of which $7,588 was collected, and paid into the county treasury and assigned to the special Bear Creek protection district fund. The respondent owned lands within the limits of this district, upon which she was assessed the sum of $357.58, which thereupon became a lien upon her property. For failure to pay this tax the property was sold in June, 1921, to the state for the delinquent assessment. In September, 1925, respondent redeemed this property from sale, paying the previous assessment, with costs and penalties, amounting in the aggregate to $684.73. This sum was paid into the Bear Creek protection district fund. Immediately upon levying said assessment in 1920, the board adopted plans and specifications for improving the water courses in said district. Advertisements for bids for the performance of the proposed work were twice published, but no bids were received. The board was therefore unable to make any contract for the proposed work. The assessment fund of $7,588 proved inadequate. It would have required $20,000 to execute the plans for which the assessment was levied. The board, however, proceeded to cut brush and clear some of the land by the employment of day labor, for which it expended the sum of $2,292.65. The entire project was abandoned and for nearly four years nothing further was done to carry out the plans for which the district was organized and the assessments collected. The sum of $5,295.35 still remains in this trust fund of the Bear Creek protection district.

Respecting the abandonment of the proposed project Mr. Pebley, chairman of the board, testified as follows:

"Q. Was the work done? * * * A. No, sir. * * *

"Q. * * * I believe you said you advertised twice and got no bids? A. Yes, sir. * * * The reason there were no bids received was * * * (because) they could not do the work for the amount of money that was appropriated. * * * (It would cost) in the neighborhood of $20,000.00. * * *

"Q. Has there been, at any time since (then) an attempt to go on with the work? * * * A. No, sir, there has not, for the reason * * * that the work could not be done for that (amount). It would mean considerable hardship upon the taxpayers of that district. * * *

"Q. That fund has been inactive since April, 1922? A. I presume that is so.

"Q. The reason (for that) is, that the board plans to do no work in that district? A. Yes. * * *

"Q. The board has done nothing since? A. No, sir."

September 5, 1925, the respondent filed a verified claim with the board for the refunding of the assessment which she paid to redeem her property. This claim was rejected January 5, 1926, and this suit was commenced March 26, 1926. Upon trial the court found that the project had been abandoned, as follows: "That by reason of the inadequacy of said fund for said purpose, said board * * * did * * * wholly abandon * * * all work and * * * proposed improvements within said protection district." Thereupon judgment was rendered in favor of the respondent for the sum of $684.73.

The appellant contends that (1) the findings and judgment are contrary to law and are not supported by the evidence; that (2) the respondent failed to comply with provisions of section 20½ of the Protection District Act (Deering's Gen. Laws 1923, Act 6174), or with section 3804, Political Code; and (3) that the statute of limitations has barred her action.

[1] Section 20½ of the Protection District Act of California provides: "Assessments levied and collected under the terms of this act, if unused, and unapplied for a period of one year after the day on which said assessments become due and payable, may be refunded by the board of supervisors in the manner provided by law for the refund of state and county taxes." The ordinary method of procedure for procuring the refund of state and county taxes is found in section 3804 of the Political Code, which provides: "Any taxes, penalties or costs * * * paid more than once, or * * * erroneously or illegally collected, or * * * in excess of the actual cash value of the property," or erroneously assessed upon "improvements on real estate not in fact in existence, * * * may * * * be refunded by the county treasurer. * * * No order for the refund of taxes, penalties or costs under this section shall be made except upon a * * * claim therefor, verified by the person who has paid said tax, * * * which * * * claim must be filed within three years after the making of the payment sought to be refunded." It is apparent that neither of these sections apply to the present case. This action was not tried upon the theory, nor was there any evidence to support the contention that the assessment in question was illegally or erroneously levied or collected, or that the respondent sought to recover an unused portion of an annual fund which was required to be expended within the period of a year. Section 17 of the act does authorize the board of supervisors to provide for the levying and expenditure of annual assessments, when the total amount required is too large to be raised in a single year. Evidently section 20½ does contemplate the refunding of any balance remaining in such annual fund; but the evidence clearly shows that no such plan was ever adopted by the board in the present case. The section is therefore not applicable. Upon the contrary, this suit was evidently maintained upon the theory that the respondent was forced to contribute her assessment to a trust fund which was collected pursuant to statute and held for the specific purpose of improving the water courses in the Bear Creek protection district, which project, together with all work and improvements thereon, was wholly abandoned. The complaint alleged and the court found that, by reason of the inadequacy of the fund provided, the board wholly abandoned all work and improvements within the district.

[2-5] There is no statute in California with respect to the authority or procedure for recovering an assessment erroneously held under such circumstances as this case presents. Where a statute exists which prescribes the procedure for recovering taxes or assessments which have been illegally levied and collected, or withheld from the owner, that statute prevails; but, where the consideration for the levy has wholly failed, the absence of a statute applying to the subject-matter will not deprive the claimant of his remedy. Under such circumstances the common-law rule furnishes relief. Section 4468, Pol. Code. The members of the board who are authorized to organize and operate a protection district, levy, collect, and expend funds for improvements therein, like the trustees of a reclamation district or a swamp and overflow district, are the mere agents of that district and hold its funds as trustees for the property owners and taxpayers who have contributed to the cause. They are bound to expend this money so intrusted to them only in the manner and for the purposes authorized by law. Miller & Lux v. Batz, 142 Cal. 447, 450, 76 P. 42. Nor will the statute of limitations bar a recovery which is sought within a reasonable time after knowledge of the abandonment is acquired. Miller & Lux v. Batz, supra; Bradford v. Chicago, 25 Ill. 349. Since the purpose for which the district was organized and for which the assessment was levied was abandoned, the consideration for the creation of the fund failed, and the respondent is therefore entitled to recover her proportion of the money which remains in the treasury of the district. Bradford v. Chicago, supra; McConville v. St. Paul, 75 Minn. 383, 77 N. W. 993, 43 L. R. A. 584, 74 Am. St. Rep. 508; Strickland v. City of Stillwater, 63 Minn. 43, 65 N. W. 131; Valentine v. St. Paul, 34 Minn. 446, 26 N. W. 457. In the case of Bradford v. Chicago, supra, it was held that a special assessment which had been levied and collected for the purpose of opening and improving a street was subject to recovery by the owner of the fund in an action in assumpsit, when the work was abandoned and the consideration had failed. It was there said: "The money raised by them is held in trust * * * to be devoted to the particular purpose of benefit intended. It does not become a part of the general revenue, and may not be diverted from the improvement in view. * * * It is clear, therefore, that if the [sole] object in view should be abandoned, an action for money had and received would lie to recover back the money on the assessment." In the case of State v. Holmes, 162 Minn. 173, 202 N. W. 440, it is said: "When money is taken under a special assessment and the improvement not made and the money is kept, there is a failure of consideration."

[6-9] The appellant has cited a number of cases in support of the well-recognized rule that a voluntary payment of taxes which have been illegally levied or collected precludes the right of recovery. These authorities, however, have no application, for the reason that the assessment in the present case was neither illegally levied nor illegally collected. Upon the contrary, a different rule is invoked, to wit: The abandonment of the project and the failure of consideration. The question of voluntary payment is not involved. When the purpose of an assessment is abandoned and the consideration fails, the owner of money which constitutes a part of the trust fund is entitled to recover his proportion, whether it was voluntarily or involuntarily paid. Morover, the authorities are fairly uniform to the effect that a payment which has been enforced by an officer armed with legal process, or by means of forced sale of property for delinquent taxes, will be deemed to have been made by duress. 25 R. C. L. 456, § 412. When an assessment is collected by duress, it may be reclaimed, even though it was not paid under protest. 3 Cooley on Taxation (4th Ed.) 2584, § 1297; Newberry v. Detroit, 184 Mich. 188, 150 N. W. 838. While it is true that the immediate consideration for the payment of the assessment in the present case was to secure a reconveyance of title, nevertheless the sale of the property to the state, in the first instance, was conducted pursuant to the statutory process of enforcing the payment of the assessment. The district obtained the benefit of this sale. The money was paid into the district fund. On account of the abandonment of the project it was not expended, but remains on hand for no purpose whatever. The trust failed through no fault of respondent. The money belongs neither to the state, the county, nor the district. It would be a denial of justice to hold that the owner of this money is without a remedy merely because she was forced to pay it through duress. Since, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, this remedy of an action in assumpsit lies at common law, it is immaterial that the court also found that the respondent complied with the provisions of section 20½ of the act in filing her claim for the refunding of the assessment. When the judgment is adequately supported by findings upon the material issues, other findings upon unessential issues become harmless, and, even though they be erroneous, will furnish no ground for a reversal of the judgment. 2 Cal. Jur. 1028, § 612.

[10] The appellant contends that under no consideration may the respondent recover more than her pro rata of the $5,295.35 which remained in the district treasury after the payment of $2,292.65 which was expended in the employment of day labor for the purpose of clearing the land. Regarding this amount which was expended for day labor, Mr. Pebley, the chairman of the board, testified:

"Q. Following the failure of the board to receive bids, * * * did the board attempt to do any work in the channel of Bear creek? A. We did.

"Q. And what was that? A. They cut willows and burned brush.

"Q. Was that done by day's work? A. Yes (it was done by) day's labor.

"Q. What is the total amount paid for cutting willows? (Mr. Ostrander, attorney for appellant, answering): A. The amount is the difference between the sum collected ($7,588) and the sum now in the fund."

The appellant, however, was not entitled to credit for the sum of $2,292.65, for the reason that it was illegally expended and wrongfully diverted from the district fund, contrary to the provisions of the statute. Section 6 of the Protection District Act provides that: "All work which shall exceed an estimated cost of $1,000.00, shall be advertised and let to the lowest bidder." Section 26 of that act specifies the procedure required for contracting for the work, including the publication of notices and the awarding of bids to the lowest responsible bidder. A contract for the clearing of the land was not so awarded, and since the cost exceeded the limitation prescribed by statute for the performance of day labor, this expenditure was illegal and may therefore not avail to credit the appellant in this action.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment should be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

PEOPLE v. HECTOR. (Cr. 1509.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1928.

Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Jan. 28, 1929.

1. Criminal law ⟹1134(3)—Question of law held not presented for review because inference of innocence might be reasonably drawn from the circumstances reasonably justifying jury's inference of guilt.

Where the circumstances are such as to reasonably justify the inference of guilt, as found by the jury, the fact that an inference of innocence might likewise be reasonably drawn therefrom does not present a question of law for review.

2. Homicide ⟹244(1), 248—Conviction of assault with deadly weapon, as against defenses of shooting at a dog, and shooting in self-defense, held justified by the evidence.

Conviction of assault with deadly weapon, in order to escape from officers when they discovered defendant about to commit a theft, and informed him of their identity, as against defenses that he shot only at a dog, and that he shot at the officers in self-defense, believing he was about to suffer serious bodily injury as the victim of a robbery by them, held justified by the evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Leon E. Gray, Judge.

Andrew H. Hector, charged as Ed Hector, was convicted of assault with a deadly weapon, and he appeals. Affirmed.

A. A. Montagne, of Oakland, and Russell Scott and Scott & Pioda, all of Oakland, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Lionel Browne, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

KNIGHT, J. The appellant, Andrew H. Hector, was charged by information with having committed the crime of an assault with a deadly weapon with intent to murder, and with two prior convictions for burglary. Besides admitting the prior convictions, he entered two pleas, not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity. The trial upon the first issue resulted in a verdict of guilty of an assault with a deadly weapon, and, upon the trial on the issue of his sanity, the jury found him "sane at the time the offense charged in the information was committed." The appeal is taken from the judgment of conviction, and no point is made in appellant's briefs with regard to the trial on the issue of sanity.

The crime of which appellant was convicted is alleged to have been committed on H. O. Fisher, who was a police officer. Appellant admits having fired a shot from the loaded revolver he was carrying on his person, but claims, first, that he shot at a dog which was about to attack him; and secondly, that, even though he shot at the officer, the circumstances under which the shooting took place justified him in shooting in self-defense.

The essential facts appearing from the evidence in support of the verdict are as follows: Fisher and a fellow officer named Tice, who were in civilian clothes, were patrolling the streets in an automobile, and, while driving slowly along Twentieth street near Franklin street in Oakland on May 29, 1928, at about 10:15 o'clock at night, saw two men, who afterwards proved to be appellant and a companion named Shepherd, on the south side of Twentieth street between Franklin and Broadway, feeling the handles of the automobiles parked along there and looking inside of them. Tice got out at Franklin street and watched them, walking toward them. In the meantime Fisher turned around and came back up the street to Twentieth and Franklin, and, as he did so, the two men crossed Twentieth street to the north side thereof behind Fisher's automobile, and went over to the northwest corner of the intersection of Franklin and Twentieth streets, and then crossed diagonally to a parking station which was situated on the east side of Franklin street about 50 feet south of Twentieth. Fisher picked up Tice and drove into the parking station, and turned his headlights on the two men, who were standing by a small car in the station. As the lights fell on the men, they ran to the front of the small car, and Officer Tice jumped out of the police automobile and said: "Throw up your hands, boys, and stand still—I am a police officer," or words to that effect. He walked towards them, and appellant started to run between the cars. Tice called to him to stop, and instantly Shepherd tried to draw a pistol, but Tice took it away from him and placed him under arrest. In the meantime Tice called to Fisher that appellant was running toward the back of the lot and to go after him; whereupon Fisher got out of the car and took up the pursuit of appellant, firing a shot at him as he ran. Appellant, then being about 25 feet from a fence in the back of the lot, fired back. He kept running toward the fence and Fisher fired another shot at him, and, just as appellant made his escape over the fence, he fired a second shot at Fisher. Thereupon Fisher returned to the automobile, and with Tice and Shepherd started to find appellant. They overtook him on Nineteenth street, and he crossed to and went down Alice street. The officers drove near the curb and flashed their spotlight on him, and he dodged behind an automobile parked there and drew his pistol. Having Shepherd with them, the officers proceeded on to the nearest telephone to report the matter to the Central Station and call for assistance. Thereafter a search was made in the vicinity for appellant, but he was not found. Later in the evening five police officers, including Tice and Fisher, went to appellant's room in the Eureka Hotel on Seventh street, and one of them knocked on the door. Appellant from within asked "Who is it?" and the officer said: "Some friends that want to talk to you." Appellant replied: "Wait till I put my trousers on and I will open the door." Immediately following this remark Officer Tice, who in the meantime had gone down the hall, saw a figure disappear over the sheds at the rear of the hotel. The officers then forced their way into the room and found that appellant had made his escape through the open window. Subsequently they searched a rooming house on Sixth street, and, although appellant did not room there, he was found lying on a bed in one of the rooms. Upon searching the bed, the police found a pistol which resembled the one used by the appellant earlier that evening. It was in the bed in a position about opposite appellant's knees, and contained four loaded cartridges and one empty. He was thereupon placed under arrest.

Appellant became a witness in his own behalf, and, according to his testimony, the shooting occurred as follows: He stated that he was riding with Shepherd in the latter's automobile, and, that when they reached a point opposite the parking station, they stopped and went in there looking for a lavatory; that, as they reached the rear of the lot, a car drove in from the street and the driver threw the headlights on them; that some one jumped out of the car and said, "Throw up your hands or I will shoot you," or something to that effect, but, on account of the lights, appellant could not see whether or not the men were in uniform. Immediately, he said, he ran for the rear fence, and, as he jumped the fence, two shots were fired in his direction; that, as he landed on the other side of the fence, a large dog raised up in a vicious manner as if to bite him, and that he put his pistol down close to the dog's head and fired one shot, and then ran on. He further stated that he ran away because he believed he was about to be "held up," and that later, when he was overtaken down the street, he tried to get out of the way because he thought the same people were after him who had shot at him in the parking station.

On cross-examination, and by way of impeachment evidence, it was shown that in 1920 appellant was convicted of burglary in San Francisco and served three years in San Quentin; that in June, 1923, he was convicted of burglary in Santa Barbara county and served five years in the same prison; and that during the week preceding his present trial he was convicted in Alameda county of robbery.

It is apparent that three distinct theories were presented by the foregoing evidence: First, that appellant did not shoot at the officer at all; secondly, that, not being a wrongdoer himself, he believed he was about to suffer serious bodily injury as the victim of a robbery, and therefore shot in self-defense; and, third, that he was engaged in the commission of a crime or an attempt to commit one, and that, in order to escape arrest, he shot at the officer who was about to apprehend him.

[1] As said in People v. Martinez, 20 Cal. App. 343, 128 P. 952, afterwards quoted approvingly in People v. Mitsunaga (Cal. App.) 266 P. 1020: "Where the circumstances are such as to reasonably justify an inference of guilt, as found by the jury, the fact that an inference of innocence might likewise be reasonably drawn therefrom does not present a question of law for review by an appellate court any more than does a verdict based upon direct conflicting evidence; * * * and it is only where the evidence obviously does not warrant the inference of guilt that the court will interfere."

[2] Here, the members of the jury, being the sole judges of the facts and of the credibility of the witnesses, doubtless rejected the story told by appellant and found in accordance with the testimony relied upon by the prosecution, and, in our opinion, the evidence is legally sufficient to sustain their conclusion, for, briefly stated, it shows that appellant, at 10 o'clock at night, having been twice convicted of burglary and carrying a loaded pistol, which in itself constituted a felony (Stats. 1923, p. 695), was discovered by police officers in the pursuit of their duty tampering with a number of automobiles parked along a public street, from which it may be fairly inferred that appellant was about to commit a theft; that, after being informed of the identity of the officers, and called upon to halt, he shot at one of them in order to escape. Clearly, under such circumstances, it cannot be successfully maintained that he shot in self-defense.

The judgment is affirmed.

(Civ. 6250.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 6, 1929.

Venue ⚷22(3)—Complaint, alleging conspiracy in lease of municipal dock to corporation of another county, stated as respected venue cause of action against corporation (Code Civ. Proc. § 395).

Complaint, alleging conspiracy between city officers and corporation of another county to prevent others from using municipal dock pursuant to lease of dock and facilities to such corporation with rights and privileges to do all stevedoring and freight handling thereon, held to state a cause of action as against the corporation so as to preclude the transfer of the case, under Code Civ. Proc. § 395, to county wherein city officials resided, particularly in view of probability that any omissions in complaint could be supplied by amendment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by the Richmond Terminal Corporation against the Parr Terminal Company and others. From an order transferring the case to another county, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

M. H. Peterson, of San Francisco, for appellant.

T. H. Delap, of Richmond, for respondents Chandler and others.

Morrison, Hohfeld, Foerster, Shuman & Clark, of San Francisco, for respondents Parr Terminal Co. and others.

Thomas M. Carlson, of Richmond, for respondent City of Richmond.

BARNARD, Justice pro tem. This is an action for damages brought against fifteen defendants, consisting of Parr Terminal Company, a corporation, with its principal place of business in the city and county of San Francisco; Fred D. Parr, residing in said city and county; the city of Richmond, a municipal corporation, located in Contra Costa county; and twelve individual defendants, sued both individually and as officers and agents of the said city of Richmond, all being residents of Contra Costa county. The action having been filed in the city and county of San Francisco, a change of venue to Contra Costa county was demanded by the twelve individual defendants resident therein, on the ground that the only defendants resident in the county where the action was filed are Parr Terminal Company, a corporation, and Fred D. Parr, its president; that the two last named are improperly joined as defendants, for the reason that the complaint does not state a cause of action against them, or either of them; that as to them the cause of action attempted to be set up is fictitious and a mere pretense; and that they were joined as defendants for the sole purpose of having the action tried in the city and county of San Francisco. The two San Francisco defendants and the city of Richmond filed their written consent to the change of venue asked for.

This is an appeal, based upon a bill of exceptions, from an order transferring the case to Contra Costa county, holding that the complaint did not state a cause of action against the said Parr Terminal Company, a corporation, or the said Fred D. Parr, and that the action should have been commenced in and should be tried in Contra Costa county.

Under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure, if the said Parr Terminal Company, a corporation, and Fred D. Parr, or either of them, were properly made defendants, the order appealed from must be reversed. If they were proper defendants, no other question remains. In the case of McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 155, at page 159, 211 P. 17, 19, the court said: "If the complaint in the instant case attempts, in apparent good faith, to state a cause of action against the corporation defendant, the individual defendant, Watt, did not have the right to have the place of trial changed to the county of his residence. The sufficiency of the complaint and the good faith of the pleader are not to be denied, upon a motion for a change of venue, unless, at first blush, it can be clearly seen and said that the allegations of fact concerning the corporation defendant are in nowise related to the facts alleged and relied upon as a cause of action against the defendant, Watt, and would not, in any event, or in any view of the case warrant the inference that the corporation was a party to the fraud. * * *"

The rule being as above, it is apparent from reading the complaint herein, not only that it does not appear from the allegations thereof that the two San Francisco defendants are entirely unrelated to the facts and incidents relied upon as a cause of action against those defendants residing in Contra Costa county, but that it does appear therefrom that an attempt has been made, in apparent good faith, to state a cause of action against them as well as the other defendants.

Briefly, the complaint alleges that the city of Richmond, pursuant to rights given said city by certain acts of the state Legislature, and subject to certain limitations, conditions, and trusts contained in said acts, made certain harbor improvements, including the construction of what is known as Municipal Dock No. 1, together with certain warehouse and trackage facilities; that the same were used for many years for the benefit of the general public until October 18, 1926, the city council of the city of Richmond, by ordinance, and in violation of the trusts imposed by the state Legislature, leased said dock and facilities for a term of years to the Parr Terminal Company, a corporation, with many rights and privileges, including the right to do all stevedoring and freight handling thereon; that on November 8, 1926, the said city council passed an ordinance giving to the Parr Terminal Company the exclusive right to handle all freight on said dock, and directing the chief of police of said city to exclude all persons from said dock or warehouses, except employés of the city and employés of said corporation; that by direction of the city manager of said city, plaintiff was notified of this action and of the date when the operations "so authorized" would begin; later plaintiff was notified that Parr Terminal Company desired to take possession at an earlier date than that named, and still later was informed by the mayor and city manager of said city that plaintiff could not continue its work on said dock, either as consignee of goods, or otherwise, and that Parr Terminal Company was in exclusive control; that for a long time prior to November 8, 1926, plaintiff had been engaged at said dock in the stevedoring and freight handling business, receiving goods consigned to it, and loading them for shipment; that on the morning of November 9, 1926, plaintiff and its employés were forcibly prevented from entering said dock by locked gates and policemen armed with shotguns, and plaintiff was notified by the police captain in charge that no one on behalf of plaintiff would be admitted to the dock for any purpose whatever, without the permission of Parr Terminal Company being first had and obtained; that at said time there was a large quantity of goods on said dock, consigned to plaintiff and requiring its attention; that the said city of Richmond, its said city council, the said Parr Terminal Company, and the said Fred D. Parr have conspired together and taken all possible means to prevent the delivery of goods at said Municipal Dock No. 1 and consigned to plaintiff, and to prevent plaintiff having any access to said dock; and that the said Parr Terminal Company and Fred D. Parr have sought to induce the Southern Pacific Railroad Company not to deliver goods to the Santa Fé Railroad Company for transportation to this dock if said goods were consigned to this plaintiff, and have told shippers that no goods consigned to plaintiffs would be permitted to be handled at said dock, nor would they be handled there unless they were consigned to Parr Terminal Company; that by such and other and similar acts plaintiff's business has been destroyed, with allegations of damage.

The bill of exceptions sets forth certain affidavits used on the hearing of the motion, setting forth the facts as to the residence of the parties as above stated, and alleging on the information and belief of the respective affiants that a good cause of action was, or was not, set up as against the Parr Terminal Company, a corporation, and Fred D. Parr.

Much of the argument of respondent is directed to the proposition that plaintiff cannot finally prevail on the merits of the case. This may or may not be true, but is not in issue here. The ultimate rights of the plaintiff and the Contra Costa county defendants are not involved in this proceeding. Johnson v. Benton, 73 Cal. App. 571, 575, 239 P. 63. The record shows no attack on the sufficiency of the complaint as to those defendants. The only question here is as to the connection, or lack of connection, of the San Francisco defendants with the matters and things alleged in the complaint, in order to determine the proper place of trial of the action on its merits. In this regard, taking the complaint as it now stands, it can hardly be said to appear at first blush therefrom that the Parr Terminal Company and Fred D. Parr had no connection with the incidents alleged as a cause of action. The reasonable inference from the complaint is that those defendants had a not inconsiderable part in the activities complained of.

Assuming, then, as we must for the purpose of this proceeding, that a cause of action is stated against the other defendants, and bearing in mind the rules of law above referred to, we cannot say that the facts alleged show clearly, or at all, that the Parr Terminal Company and Fred D. Parr are in no wise related to, or involved in, any such cause of action so existing. On the contrary, they would appear to be proper parties defendant in order to determine the controversy.

A further proper consideration is the possibility of amendment. As the court further said in McClung v. Watt, supra, at page 160 (211 P. 19): "Conceding these allegations to be faulty in form, and in a measure vague and indefinite and somewhat ambiguous, nevertheless, when considered in conjunction with the remaining allegations of the complaint, even though they be strictly construed, it cannot be said that they are so inherently and utterly devoid of merit as to be radically insufficient upon which to found a cause of action. * * * It is enough, however, upon the hearing and determination of the demand for a change of venue, that the cause of action purported to be stated against the corporation defendant was apparently pleaded in good faith and is not, prima facie, so glaringly and vitally defective as to be beyond correction by amendment." The language of the court, above quoted, might well have been used in the instant case. If it be true, as claimed by respondent, that the "plentiful averments of conspiracy" in the complaint, respecting the defendants Parr Terminal Company and Fred D. Parr, are deficient in that they merely allege attempts by said defendants to drive away and destroy plaintiff's business, and fail to allege that these attempts met with success, still a large part of the injuries complained of may have been caused by such acts of these particular defendants, and it is not unreasonable to suppose the omissions may be supplied by amendment. In our opinion the complaint attempts in good faith to state a cause of action against all the defendants, including those in San Francisco, and it is not so glaringly defective as to be obviously beyond the possibility of correction by amendment. McClung v. Watt, 190 Cal. 155, 211 P. 17; Mills v. Brown (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 636.

The foregoing makes it unnecessary to consider other points raised.

For the reasons stated the order appealed from is reversed.

WILSON v. BROWN et al. (Civ. 3655.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 4, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 2, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 4, 1929.

1. Partnership 🔑87—Agreement that portion of partners shall bear all losses of capital is competent.

Parties to partnership may agree that all partners shall participate in profits, but that only a portion of them shall bear the losses of the original capital.

2. Partnership 🔑53—Finding of partnership under defendants' agreement to finance purchase of subdivision, sharing profits with plaintiffs selling lots, held justified (Civ. Code, § 2404).

Finding of existence of partnership for purpose of subdivision of tract and sale of lots held justified under evidence of agreement of defendants to finance purchase of property and subdivision, and of plaintiffs to do the work of selling lots, dividing profits, notwithstanding testimony of plaintiff that she had no money to lose in the transaction, since liability for losses fell on all partners under Civ. Code, § 2404.

3. Partnership 🔑108—One partner may sue others for conversion of partnership property without previous accounting.

Where some of partners have excluded another and have appropriated partnership property to their own use, the other partner may treat the matter as a conversion and sue offending partners and recover personal judgment without any accounting or disposition of former partnership assets, in cases where there are no outstanding liabilities of creditors.

4. Partnership 🔑108—Partner held entitled without previous accounting to personal judgment against others refusing plaintiff's share of profits, where partnership debts had been paid.

One partner, on refusal of other partners to share profit realized from plan for subdivision and sale of tract or to recognize his interest, held entitled to recover personal judgment against other partners without previous accounting, settlement, and disposition of partnership assets, where debts of partnership had been paid.

5. Partnership 🔑344—Personal judgment against remaining partners held warranted, where unpaid contract for procuring water for subdivision was entered into by defendants after excluding plaintiff from partnership and plaintiff was charged to extent of benefit received.

In suit for partnership accounting, based on defendant's exclusion of plaintiff and withholding of plaintiff's share of profits realized from subdivision of tract and sale of lots, plaintiff's recovery of personal judgment was warranted, notwithstanding unpaid contract entered into by defendants for procuring water supply for subdivision, where contract was made after exclusion of plaintiff from partnership and plaintiff was charged with probable cost to the extent that she benefited by the water system.

6. Evidence 🔑591—Court did not err as to defendants in charging plaintiff, in partnership accounting suit, with share of cost of water system, based on defendant's estimate.

In partnership accounting suit, court's action in charging plaintiff with her full share of cost of water system purchased by defendants for subdivision, based on defendant's own estimate, held not improper as to defendants, though testimony of one of defendants indicated that cost of system would exceed that amount.

7. Partnership 🔑78—Plaintiff excluded from real estate partnership held entitled to judgment for reasonable value of lots converted by copartners, though proceeds of sale thereof were not collected.

In suit for partnership accounting, based on defendant's exclusion of plaintiff from her share of profits realized in subdividing tract and selling lots in subdivision, plaintiff, treating defendant's appropriation of partnership property as conversion, was entitled to judgment for reasonable value of lots converted, though proceeds of sale of lots remained in part uncollected.

8. Partnership 🔑78—Members of partnership sued for conversion of lots by excluded partner could not deny price obtained for lots was their reasonable value.

Defendants sued by remaining member of partnership, whom they excluded, for reasonable value of lots in partnership subdivision, converted by defendants, could not complain that price for which they sold the lots was not their reasonable value.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Albert Lee Stephens, Judge.

Action by C. Myrtle Wilson against Harvey C. Brown, C. A. Clement, and Alexander Hursh. Judgment for plaintiff and defendants, except first-named defendant, appeal. Affirmed.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

Kelby & Lawson and Samuel M. Garroway, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Daze, Mitschrich & Noll, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHIELDS, Justice pro tem. This appeal arose from facts of which the following is a sufficient statement: Plaintiff and the defendant Brown were associated together in various real estate activities. While so associated a tract of land near Elsinore, in the county of Riverside, was called to their notice, and they took an option for the purchase from its owners, each paying one-half of the cost of the option. The defendants Hursh and Clement were copartners engaged in real estate operations. Plaintiff interviewed the latter defendants with the view of having them purchase the Elsinore property held under the above option, and, after conferences and inspection in which all four of the parties participated, the defendants Hursh and Clement purchased the property with the understanding that they were to finance the purchase and subdivision of the tract and that Brown or Brown and plaintiff Wilson were to do the work of selling it. In consideration of their part in the business defendants Hursh and Clement were to have 60 per cent. of the profits, and the defendant Brown, or the defendant Brown and plaintiff, according to the different contention of the parties, was or were to have the remaining 40 per cent. After the enterprise had been well entered upon, but before any of the property had been sold, defendants Hursh and Clement purchased all interest in the enterprise and the property, of the defendant Brown, and denied any interest of the plaintiff in the property, or any right on her part to participate in its sale, or the profits resulting therefrom. She thereupon began this action to have it adjudged that a partnership had existed in the ownership of the Elsinore property and in the business of its sale; that the partnership had been dissolved; claimed that she was a partner therein; that her interest was a one-fifth interest; and asked for an accounting and a division of partnership assets according to the respective interests of the partners. At the trial the court found the existence of the partnership; that the plaintiff was entitled to have it dissolved; that the defendants "did wrongfully, maliciously and without the consent of the plaintiff" apply property of the partnership to their own use; that the defendants Clement and Hursh "did conspire to defraud the said plaintiff of her rightful and proportionate share of said copartnership money and property" in the manner and to the extent set forth in a certain referee's report, which was made a part of the findings of the court, and then proceeded to award the plaintiff a judgment against the defendants for $3,319.97 out of cash and contracts of sale received by defendants; a number of the lots of the partnership tract remaining unsold of the value of $5,230 and "certificates, bonds and deeds" out of securities and contracts taken by the defendant on account of sales of lots by them, amounting to $5,245, making a total judgment in favor of plaintiff of $13,794.97.

[1, 2] On appeal from this judgment appellants contend, first, that the court erred in finding the existence of a copartnership in favor of the plaintiff. This finding is so substantially supported by the evidence that a recital or restatement of it seems unnecessary. But appellants insist that certain testimony of the plaintiff herself renders this finding erroneous. On cross-examination, when interrogated as to what had been the agreement between the parties as to sharing such losses as might be sustained by the business, plaintiff answered:

"Mr. Clement, you know, and Mr. Hursh were financing the proposition, so Mr. Brown and I weren't investing any money, and we had no money to lose in this connection.

"Q. In the event Mr. Clement and Mr. Hursh lost by it? A. It was their loss.

"Q. You were not to lose anything? A. I was not to lose anything."

This testimony is not inconsistent with the existence of a partnership. In partnership agreements it is usual to provide for an equal sharing of profits and losses, "but if parties are so disposed, they are competent to agree that all the partners shall participate in the profits, while a portion shall bear all the losses of the original capital." Gray v. Palmer, 9 Cal. 616, 639.

It will be observed that plaintiff does not say that there was an agreement that she should not be liable for any losses which the partnership might sustain. Her statement amounted to no more than an expression of her opinion as to her liability as a copartner. Had losses been sustained, and the partnership continued, she would have been unpleasantly informed as to the error of her opinion. Section 2404 of the Civil Code provides that "an agreement to divide the profits of a business implies an agreement for a corresponding division of its losses, unless it is otherwise expressly stipulated." As the partnership was sufficiently proven, and as in the agreement out of which it grew it was not "otherwise expressly stipulated," plaintiff's liability for her share of possible losses existed to the degree necessary to sustain the finding of a partnership. 20 Cal. Jur. 692.

[3, 4] Appellants complain that no personal judgment should have been rendered against them until the affairs of the partnership had been settled and the partnership assets had all been disposed of. That is the general rule. Nakamura v. Kondo, 65 Cal. App. 211, 223 P. 425; Clark v. Hewitt, 136 Cal. 77, 68 P. 303. But while "in general a judgment may not be entered against a partner in a suit for an accounting until all of the assets have been marshaled and made to bear the burden of the copartnership liabilities, in cases where there are no liabilities to settle except as between the partners themselves, such course is not necessary." Shuken v. Cohen, 179 Cal. 279, 176 P. 447. Where, as in this case, some of the partners have excluded another and have appropriated the partnership property to their own use, the latter may treat the matter as a conversion and, without any accounting or disposition of the former partnership assets, sue the offending partners and recover against them a personal judgment in the amount of his damage. Moropoulos v. C. H. & O. B. Fuller Co., 186 Cal. 679, 200 P. 601. In the case before us the record shows that the debts of the partnership had all been paid before the commencement of the suit and that it was a proper case in which to render a personal judgment, provided such judgment was correctly arrived at.

[5] Appellants contend that at the time the personal judgment was rendered against defendants there was an outstanding obligation of the partnership which was not settled and against which the defendants were not protected. They insist that until this obligation was met that a personal judgment was premature. They refer to a contract entered into by the defendants to supply a water system to the partnership subdivision. This contract was made by defendants after they had excluded plaintiff from the partnership and after the same had been thereby dissolved. The contract was made by the defendants, and was their contract, and not that of the partnership. But this contract by the defendants undoubtedly enhanced the value at which lots had been sold and entered into the receipts from which plaintiff was given her partnership share. To the extent that she benefited by it she should have borne its probable cost. This was required of her by the judgment.

[6] Defendants themselves furnished an estimate of the probable cost of the "water system," and placed it at $3,141.80. This sum was deducted by the referee from the proceeds of sale in the hands of the defendants before such proceeds were divided, and thus plaintiff was charged with her full share of it. This estimate was accepted by the referee as the probable cost of the entire "water system" from figures furnished by the defendants themselves, which apparently included not alone the well, but the entire pumping equipment. The sufficiency of the allowance for this item does not appear to be questioned except where the defendant Clement testified that "the estimated cost of the water system will probably exceed the amount of $3,141.80." This is too vague a statement to contradict defendants' own estimates, upon which the court acted in arriving at its judgment.

[7, 8] In making its division of the partnership between the parties hereto it appears that there was a surplus of cash, derived from partnership assets, in the hands of the defendants, and that there were "accounts receivable" in the hands of the defendants derived from the sale of lots theretofore made. These accounts receivable were treated by the court as cash and were counted as such in the calculations by which the court reached the conclusion that the plaintiff was entitled to the cash portion of her judgment for $3,319.97. Appellants complain that this was erroneous, as the sums represented by "accounts receivable" might not be collected, or that their collection might be attended by a loss. This contention cannot be sustained. It was found in this case that defendants had wrongfully and maliciously appropriated property of the partnership, of which the lots represented by these "accounts receivable" were a part. Plaintiff was entitled, therefore, treating this as a conversion, to a judgment for the reasonable value of the lots so converted. Defendants cannot complain that the price for which they had sold them was not their reasonable value.

Other contentions made by the defendants do not seem to require discussion. Through their own acts they precipitated a condition in which it was difficult to define with exactness the respective rights of the parties. The judgment arrived at seems equitable and just, under the facts found, and, as it is without error, it should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

MAYER et al. v. WEST et ux.★

CALKINS et al. v. MAYER et al.

(Civ. 6284.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 28, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 26, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser ⚷296—Vendor may recover possession in ejectment from purchaser who repudiates contract.

Vendor may recover possession in ejectment from purchaser in possession who repudiates contract, since, even if vendor cannot perform because of failure of title, purchaser cannot retain possession and refuse to perform.

2. Vendor and purchaser ⚷299(3)—Purchaser, relying or equitable defense in vendor's ejectment action, must make out complete equitable title and right to possession in pleading.

When purchaser relies on equitable defense in vendor's ejectment action, his answer or other pleading must make out complete equitable title and right to possession thereunder, equivalent to bill in equity for specific performance.

3. Vendor and purchaser 🔑299(1)—Purchaser, appealing to equity to defend him against legal title to land of which he is in possession must pay or offer to pay price.

Purchaser, who appeals to court of equity to defend him against legal title to land of which he is in possession, must do equity by paying or offering to pay price which he agreed to pay.

4. Vendor and purchaser 🔑170—Purchasers' tender of note and trust deed in accordance with escrow instructions held not full compliance with contract, where vendor was unable to give clear title.

Where vendor was unable to give deed conveying clear title, purchasers held not to have fully performed contract on their part by tendering to title company promissory note and trust deed in accordance with escrow instructions, while retaining possession and failing to make payments.

5. Payment 🔑17—Debtor's note, if not paid, does not constitute payment without express agreement.

Note of debtor, if not itself paid, does not constitute payment, unless received by creditor under express agreement to accept it as absolute payment.

6. Vendor and purchaser 🔑299(2)—Vendor held entitled to bring ejectment without tendering deed, where purchaser failed to make payments.

Vendor held not prevented from bringing ejectment against purchaser by fact that no deed was tendered, where purchaser in possession failed to make payments.

7. Vendor and purchaser 🔑299(4)—Finding that vendor did not have title held not inconsistent with findings that he was owner in ejectment action against purchaser.

In vendor's action in ejectment, finding that title to property involved was not in vendor held not inconsistent with finding that vendor was owner on date of sale contract, and finding that he subsequently conveyed interest in property to another, since latter findings mean actual ownership, as distinguished from record title.

8. Trial 🔑398—Judgment cannot stand, if material findings are inconsistent, but will be affirmed, if they can be reconciled.

Although judgment cannot stand where material findings are inconsistent, it will be affirmed if findings can be reconciled.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1071(1)—In vendor's ejectment action, any error in finding that vendor had conveyed interest to another held immaterial.

In vendor's ejectment action against purchaser any error in making finding that vendor had conveyed interest to another held immaterial, where such other was brought into case on suggestion of purchaser's attorney, and purchasers alleged that he had acquired interest with knowledge of contract.

10. Appeal and error 🔑1036(2)—Judgment will not be reversed for misjoinder of parties, unless error was prejudicial.

Judgment will not be reversed on appeal for misjoinder of parties, unless party complaining has been misled to his prejudice, or error otherwise appears to be injurious.

11. Vendor and purchaser 🔑299(4)—Vendor, suing purchaser in ejectment, held entitled to money judgment for amount purchaser had collected as rent (Code Civ. Proc. § 740).

In ejectment, vender held entitled to money judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 740, for amount which purchasers in possession had collected as rent, which amount court found to be value of use and occupancy of property.

Appeal from Superior Court of Los Angeles County; William C. Doran, Judge.

Action by Irene Mayer and another against William Holmes West and wife, in which C. C. Calkins and another filed a cross-complaint against Irene Mayer and others. From the judgment that a certain contract be conceled, cross-defendants William Holmes West and wife appeal; from an order denying a motion for a different judgment, cross-complainants appeal. Affirmed on cross-defendants' appeal. Reversed, with directions, on cross-complainants' appeal.

W. W. Kaye, of Los Angeles, for cross-complainants.

John C. Packard, of Los Angeles, for cross-defendants.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. Two appeals are presented on the record herein, one taken by William Holmes West and Dora May West, cross-defendants, from the judgment adjudging that a certain contract be canceled and annulled, and the other taken by cross-complainants C. C. Calkins and W. W. Kaye from the order denying their motion for an order that another and different judgment be entered, identically the same in form as the one entered, but with the additional provision that the cross-complainants should have and recover from the cross-defendants William Holmes West and Dora May West the sum of $2,000, being the amount fixed by the court as the value of the use and occupation of the premises involved in the action during the time the same were unlawfully withheld from cross-complainants.

On February 26, 1920, Calkins, being the owner of the property involved, entered into an agreement to convey the same to West, at which time an escrow was made with the Los Angeles Title Insurance Company. By this escrow West agreed to pay $3,700 for the property, payable $700 on delivery of a deed by Calkins within 30 days, which amount was deposited in escrow with the title company; $1,200 by trust deed given by West and wife to secure a note for that amount, payable $25 a month, with interest at 7 per cent. per annum; and the balance of $1,800 to be assumed by West in the payment of a mortgage which then covered the property. Calkins was unable to give a deed and certificate of clear title within 30 days, and accordingly, on April 15, 1920, he and West entered into a written agreement, wherein the terms of payment were recited in harmony with the escrow, and wherein it was further stated that an action "was filed on the 16th day of February, 1920, to quiet title to said property, and a certificate of title is to be furnished at the termination of said suit, or as soon thereafter as the said title company can do it, and not later than 15 days after the case was decided by said court." On July 22, 1920, Calkins and West indorsed a further writing upon this agreement limiting the time as follows: "It is further agreed that said agreement relative to last clause set out therein shall not extend beyond April 1, 1921." Subsequent to February 26, 1920, West and wife entered into possession of the property, and thereafter undertook to sell it to Irene Mayer, plaintiff herein, who brought this action for specific performance, or, if such relief were not obtainable, then for damages. She obtained a judgment for damages against West and wife, which judgment has been satisfied, and therefore that phase of the case is not involved on this appeal.

West and wife paid to Calkins the installments of $25 per month to and including February 26, 1921, and also paid interest on the contract to that date. They also paid the interest on the mortgage of $1,800 to and including June 17, 1923, but failed and neglected to make any further payments to Calkins, either of principal or interest, on the purchase price, or to pay any further sums, either as principal or interest, on the mortgage. As a result, an action to foreclose such mortgage was commenced on August 30, 1923. Calkins was unable, as he testified, to deliver a clear deed on April 1, 1922, for the reason that the action to quiet title was still pending, and adverse claims against the property were being asserted until as late as October 30, 1924. Not being able to deliver a clear title to the property as required according to the escrow or within the time extended by the agreement, Calkins demanded of West either that he deliver possession of the property or make payments according to the terms of the contract. In answer to the question why he did not continue to make payments after April, 1921, West stated: "Because the contract calls for him to have the title perfected. Then I paid up until this time, and told him that, any time he would furnish title, I would pay him up and go on with it."

The record shows that in April, 1920, West and wife were put in possession of the property involved by Calkins under the agreement of sale; that the Wests were required to pay $1,900, $700 of which was to be paid upon the furnishing of a certificate of title, and the balance in installments of $25 per month; that Calkins was unable to furnish a certificate of title as agreed upon until October, 1924; that the Wests have not paid the $700, it having merely been deposited with the escrow, and have paid but $200 of installments which matured during the first year; that they failed to make any payments since February, 1921; that they failed to pay the mortgage indebtedness of $1,800, and as a result foreclosure proceedings were instituted; that at the time of the trial, which was more than four years after delivery of possession, Calkins had received but $200 of the purchase price, the Wests claiming that by tendering a note and trust deed to the title company they were excused from further performance; that during a greater portion of the time since the property was delivered West received rent amounting to $50 per month, and failed to apply the same, either in payment of the purchase price or in reduction of the mortgage indebtedness.

The court found that cross-defendants William Holmes West and Dora May West had repudiated their contract, and that cross-complainants C. C. Calkins and W. W. Kaye are entitled to possession of the premises, and that the value of the use and occupation of the premises from March 1, 1922, the date West and wife took possession of the premises from plaintiff Irene Mayer to the date of the trial, is the sum of $2,000. The cross-complaint of Calkins and Kaye states a simple cause of action for the recovery of possession of the property, together with the value of its use and occupancy. The answer of West and wife to such cross-complaint denies that since January 1, 1921, cross-complainants have been or now are the owners of the property described, and alleges as a further defense that cross-defendants have been in the open, notorious, exclusive, uninterrupted, and adverse possession of the property during all the time in such answer mentioned, holding the same adversely to cross-complainants and all other persons for more than five years. They also plead as a defense the statute of limitations, and that another action is pending. This latter defense and the defense of the statute of limitations are not argued in the briefs, and we are therefore not called upon to consider them. People v. Woon Tuck, 120 Cal. 297, 52 P. 833; People v. McLean, 135 Cal. 309, 67 P. 770.

[1-3] It is elementary that a vendor may recover possession in ejectment from a vendee in possession who repudiates his contract. Woodard v. Hennegan, 128 Cal. 293, 60 P.

769; Coates v. Cleaves, 92 Cal. 427, 28 P. 580; Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 241; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 14, 27 P. 942, 49 Am. Rep. 679. If a vendor is unable to perform because of failure of title, the vendee cannot retain possession and refuse to perform. Whatever cause of action he may have for the purchase money which he paid is another matter; it constitutes no defense to the present action. Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 103, 103 P. 329; Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 531, 91 P. 498; Worley v. Nethercott, 91 Cal. 512, 27 P. 767, 25 Am. St. Rep. 209; Haile v. Smith, 128 Cal. 415, 60 P. 1032. When a vendee relies upon an equitable defense his answer or other pleading must make out a complete equitable title and right to possession thereunder, equivalent to a bill in equity for specific performance. Wallace v. Maples, 79 Cal. 433, 21 P. 860; Arguello v. Bours, 67 Cal. 450, 8 P. 49; Miller v. Fulton, 47 Cal. 146; Bruck v. Tucker, 42 Cal. 352.

In the present case West and wife by their pleading denied the ownership of Calkins and alleged title in themselves by adverse possession. In Woodward v. Hennegan, supra, the court says: "The defendant having by his answer repudiated the contract, and having refused to pay the balance due, the plaintiff can maintain the present action to recover possession. * * * The defendant could have set up in his answer the agreement to convey, his willingness to perform and offer to perform on his part by paying the balance found to be due, and the court, by its decree, could have, while giving the plaintiff the amount due, also fully protected the rights and equities of defendant." One who appeals to a court of equity to defend him against the legal title to land, of which he is in possession, must do equity by paying or offering to pay the price which he agreed to pay. Hicks v. Lovell, supra; Eastman v. Plumer, 46 N. H. 464. When a vendee abandons his purchase and repudiates his contract, the vendor is not bound to resort to a court of equity for relief, but may sue in ejectment. Keller v. Lewis, 53 Cal. 118.

[4, 5] Appellants West and wife contend that, when Calkins was unable to give a deed conveying a clear title on April 1, 1921, they, by tendering to the title company a promissory note and trust deed in accordance with the escrow instructions, had fully performed the contract on their part. In Gervaise v. Brookins, supra, which was an action in ejectment, where the vendor had conveyed the property prior to the making of the agreement involved, where the purchasers were let into possession and had paid $3,000 on the purchase price of $15,000 before they discovered that their vendor could not give title, and where the balance of the purchase price was made by giving promissory notes payable on or before a certain date for ten consecutive years, the court says:

"Brookins has not unconditionally refused to make the payments. Before the installment of 1904 became due, Lillian M. Book told him that she did not expect him to make further payments until she could secure title or arrange to have the same conveyed to him. He thereupon offered to pay all the notes immediately, upon the condition that he should, concurrently, receive a conveyance of the land transferring to him the title therein, and he refused to make any payment, except upon that condition. Each installment being made payable on or before the date named, at his option, he had the right to declare it all due and to make an offer of full performance at any time. He was entitled to the performance of this concurrent condition and he had a right to make his own offer dependent thereon. Civ. Code, § 1498. * * * His offer was therefore a good offer of performance under the law and the contract, and he is not in default unless he has become so by reason of his retaining possession while refusing to make payments and accept such title as his vendor can give. * * * It appears to be well established that, under such circumstances, the vendee cannot retain possession of the land, while neglecting to pay the price when due, and that the failure of the title does not give him the right to continue in possession by merely keeping good an offer to perform on his part conditioned upon performance by the vendor.

"The reasons for this rule are thus stated by the Supreme Court of the United States in Burnett v. Caldwell, 9 Wall. 293 [19 L. Ed. 712]: 'If the contract stipulates for possession by the vendee, or the vendor puts him in possession, he holds as a licensee. * * * The case comes within the category of a license. In such cases, the vendee cannot dispute the title of the vendor any more than the lessee can question the title of his lessor. * * * Upon default in the payment of any installment of the purchase money, the possession becomes tortious and the vendor may at once begin ejectment.' In that case the court further held that the fact of want of title in the vendor, and the fact that the vendee had paid a large part of the price, were alike immaterial as defenses to an action of ejectment by the vendor. * * * In Rhorer v. Bila, 83 Cal. 54, 23 P. 275, upon similar facts, the court says: 'A purchaser cannot remain in possession of lands under a contract and at the same time refuse to pay the purchase price. * * * So long as the purchaser retains possession he waives all previous objections, whether of defect of title or delay in completing it; and is bound to accept title according to the terms of the contract if offered while he still retains possession.' * * * If, on the other hand, the purchaser chooses not to rescind, but to retain possession under the contract, he can do so only on the condition that he pays the purchase money and interest according to the contract."

In Garvey v. Lashells, supra, the court holds: "If a perfect title was to be conveyed, and the vendor is unable to give such a title, the vendee has appropriate remedies, but he cannot keep both the property and the purchase money." Here West and wife, while retaining possession of the property, failed to pay the $700 and also the payments of principal and interest on the $1,800 mortgage, and also the $25 monthly installments after the first year. The tender of the note and trust deed was not a full compliance with these terms of the contract. Nor does the note of a debtor, if not itself paid, constitute a payment unless received by the creditor under an express agreement to accept it as absolute payment. Menzel v. Primm, 6 Cal. App. 204, 91 P. 754; St. Clair v. Joos (Cal. App.) 265 P. 968.

[6] Cross-defendants West and wife contend that, if the time for delivery of a deed by Calkins should be considered as being extended until the last installment of the $1,200 fell due in December, 1924, yet ejectment would not lie because no deed was tendered. A number of cases are cited to this point, but their facts do not parallel the issues here presented. In Hicks v. Lovell, supra, the court says: "'The refusal of one party to perform his contract,' says the Supreme Court of New York, in Graves v. White, 87 N. Y. 465, 'amounts on his part to an abandonment of it. The other party therefore has a choice of remedies. He may stand upon his contract, refusing assent to his adversary's attempt to rescind it, and sue for a breach, or in a proper case for a specific performance, or he may assent to its abandonment, and so effect dissolution of the contract by the mutual and concurring assent of both parties. In that event he is simply restored to his original position.' * * * Neither party, thereafter, could invoke its terms or protection as against the other; and the plaintiff was at liberty to maintain ejectment to recover the possession of the land to which he had a legal title."

In our opinion the evidence sufficiently supports the findings on this issue, and therefore, under the authorities from which we have quoted, the judgment appealed from by cross-defendants and appellants William Holmes West and Dora May West, adjudging that the contract be canceled and annulled, should be affirmed.

[7, 8] There is no merit in the contention of cross-defendants that finding VIII is inconsistent with findings I and III. Finding VIII finds: "The title to the real property involved in this action was not in the cross-complainants, C. C. Calkins and W. W. Kaye, or either of them. That neither of said cross-complainants C. C. Calkins or W. W. Kaye were at that time in possession, nor could said C. C. Calkins or W. W. Kaye, or either of them, convey to the cross-defendants, William Holmes West and Dora May West, or either of them, or to any other person whomsoever, the said real property until about October 30, 1924, for the reason that the title to the said real estate at said time did not stand of record in the name of either cross-complainants and was the subject of an action to quiet title."

Finding I finds "that on or about the 26th day of February, 1920, the cross-complainant being then the owner of that certain tract of real property (describing the property) entered into an agreement for the sale of the said property to defendant William Holmes West," and finding III finds "that subsequent to the 26th day of February, 1920, the cross-complainant C. C. Calkins conveyed to the cross-complainant W. W. Kaye an undivided one-tenth interest in said property."

It is true, as urged by cross-defendants, that where material findings are inconsistent the judgment cannot stand, but it is also the rule that if the findings can be reconciled the judgment will be affirmed. From a reading of the findings it is apparent that finding VIII, "That the title to the real property involved in this action was not in cross-complainants," has reference to the record title, while finding I, "that on or about the 26th day of February, 1920, the cross-complainant being then the owner of that certain tract of real property," is a finding of actual ownership. In other words, the court found that in February, 1920, cross-complainant Calkins was the owner of the property, although the title did not stand of record in his name, and therefore a clear title could not be conveyed until October 30, 1924, when the action to quiet title was disposed of.

[9, 10] It is true there is no evidence to support the finding that Calkins conveyed a one-tenth interest to Kaye, yet, if there were error in making such a finding, it is not material. Cross-complainant Kaye was brought into the case on motion of plaintiffs and on the suggestion of the attorney for cross-defendants, and in the seventh special defense of cross-defendants it is alleged that cross-complainant Kaye acquired his interest with knowledge of the contract between Calkins and West. Furthermore, there was at most a misjoinder of parties, and it is well settled that a judgment will not be reversed on appeal for such misjoinder, unless the party complaining has been misled, to his prejudice or the error otherwise appears to have been injurious. Asevado v. Orr, 100 Cal. 300, 34 P. 777; Hirschfeld v. Weill, 121 Cal. 14, 53 P. 402.

[11] Cross-complainants C. C. Calkins and W. W. Kaye complain that the court erred in not entering judgment in their favor for $2,000, which the court found to have been collected by William Holmes West and Dora

May West as rent from the time of their entry into possession of the property, and which amount the court found to be the value of the use and occupancy of such property, claiming that the conclusions of law are inconsistent with the findings of fact.

The court found that, at the time cross-defendants William Holmes West and Dora May West entered into possession under the agreement, cross-complainant C. C. Calkins was the owner of the property; that cross-defendants paid to cross-complainant Calkins $200 principal, and no more; that cross-defendant William Holmes West since March 1, 1922, has occupied the premises and that the rental value of the premises from that date to June 1, 1925, was the sum of $2,000; that the value of the use and occupation of the premises from March 1, 1922, to June 1, 1925, is the sum of $2,000; that ever since March 1, 1922, the cross-defendants have held possession of the premises adversely to cross-complainants; that cross-defendants have not performed the terms of the contract under which they held possession excepting that they made payment of the sum of $200, and have made a portion of the payments of the interest on the mortgage indebtedness assumed by them. The conclusions of law which follow these findings determine that the cross-complainants are entitled to a judgment canceling the contract and also a judgment for the recovery of possession of the premises, but such conclusions of law do not adjudge that the cross-complainants are entitled to judgment against the cross-defendants for the recovery of $2,000, found to be the value of the use and occupation of the premises.

In Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 238, the court declares: "When, therefore, the defendants, after they had obtained possession lawfully substituted repudiation of the contract and refusal to comply with its terms, * * * they divested themselves by their wrongful act of the equitable estate which they had acquired under the contract, and became trespassers or tenants at will against whom their repudiated vendors could maintain ejectment." "In an action for the recovery of property, where the plaintiff shows a right to recover at the time the action was commenced, * * * the plaintiff may recover damages for withholding the property." Code Civ. Proc. § 740.

Rents and profits may be recovered by one entitled to possession when claimed in an action in ejectment, being limited to such as accrued subsequent to the ouster alleged, or, in other words, the occupation of the one holding possession against the owner. Young v. Howell, 14 Cal. 468; Hannan v. McNickle, 82 Cal. 122, 23 P. 271. In Sievers v. Brown, 34 Or. 459, 56 P. 173, 45 L. R. A. 644, the court uses this language: "It has been held that a purchaser in possession of real property under the vendor's license cannot be evicted so long as he offers to perform the conditions of his agreement (Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 238); but, if he refuses to comply therewith, the vendor may treat him as a tenant at will (Harris v. Frink, 49 N. Y. 24, 10 Am. Rep. 318), and he thereby becomes liable to the vendor for the reasonable value of the use of the premises for the time during which he continues in possession after he abandons the agreement [citing cases]. The application of this rule would render plaintiff liable to defendant for the reasonable rent of the land from the time the relation of vendor and purchaser was abrogated by the former's refusal to keep his agreement."

Under the findings of the court the conclusion follows as a matter of law that cross-complainants are entitled to judgment for $2,000, found by the court to be the value of the use and occupation of the premises.

The judgment, adjudging that the contract be canceled and annulled, is affirmed, and the order denying cross-complainants Calkins' and Kaye's motion made under section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to vacate the judgment and to enter a judgment identically in the same form, but with the additional provision that cross-complainants have and recover from cross-defendants William Holmes West and Dora May West the sum of $2,000, being the value found by the court of the use and occupation of the premises, is reversed, with direction to the trial court to enter judgment accordingly.

PEOPLE v. HAMPTON. (Cr. 1748.)

1. Criminal law 🔑763, 764(9)—Instruction that law reduces homicide to manslaughter when committed in heat of passion held reversible error as directing conviction for manslaughter under statute making homicide excusable when so committed (Pen. Code, § 195).

In prosecution for homicide occurring during fight whereby deceased was knocked unconscious and died, instruction that, if homicide was committed in heat of passion, excited by quarrel, sudden, and of sufficient violence to amount to adequate provocation, law would reduce crime to that of manslaughter, in effect directed jury to find defendant guilty of manslaughter, and was reversible error under Pen. Code, § 195, providing homicide is excusable when committed in heat of passion or on sudden combat.

2. Homicide ⚷297—Defendant, knocking deceased to sidewalk, causing death, held entitled to instruction on excusable homicide (Pen. Code, § 195).

Where evidence showed that defendant struck deceased when reprimanded for his conduct, and knocked deceased down, causing his head to strike sidewalk, from which he died, defendant was entitled to have submitted to jury question whether homicide was excusable when committed in heat of passion on sudden provocation or on sudden combat, within Pen. Code, § 195.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Frank C. Collier, Judge.

Frank Hampton was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Reversed.

Shaeffer & Weldon, of Santa Maria, for appellant.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and James S. Howie, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Clarence C. Ward, Dist. Atty., and Beatrice M. Warner, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Santa Barbara, for the People.

HOUSER, J. Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of the crime of manslaughter.

Briefly, it appears that, as defendant was about to enter a certain pool hall, he "took off his hat, waved it around and let out a yell." A man by the name of Moat, who was standing near the rear of the pool hall, and who remonstrated with defendant on account of his conduct, was struck by defendant on the mouth and nose. Defendant then walked toward a man named Wesley Blake, with whom he was on friendly terms, and who was leaning against a counter about ten feet from the entrance to the pool hall. Blake said to defendant, "Frank, you had no right to hit Moat." After a few hot words had passed between them, possibly accompanied by a threatening attitude on the part of Blake, defendant knocked Blake down. The testimony was conflicting as to whether as Blake was rising, or after he had risen and had advanced toward defendant, and had attempted to and did strike him, defendant again struck Blake. The blow received by Blake at that time knocked him backward out of the front door of the pool hall, where he fell; his head struck the sidewalk, from the effect of which he became unconscious and died on the following day.

On the trial of the action the district attorney made the statement to the court that the prosecution would not attempt to prove defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, but would ask the jury to determine whether defendant was guilty of the crime of manslaughter.

Section 195 of the Penal Code includes the following provision:

"Homicide is excusable in the following cases: * * *

"2. When committed by accident and misfortune, in the heat of passion, upon any sudden and sufficient provocation, or upon a sudden combat, when no undue advantage is taken, nor any dangerous weapon used, and when the killing is not done in a cruel or unusual manner."

Defendant's request for an instruction to the jury as to when or in what circumstances a homicide is excusable in the law was by the court refused. Such requested instruction was as follows:

"Homicide is excusable in the following cases:

"When committed by accident and misfortune in the heat of passion upon any sudden and sufficient provocation or upon a sudden combat when no undue advantage is taken or any dangerous weapon used and when the killing is not done in a cruel or unusual manner, and if you find from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the homicide was committed by the defendant at the time and place mentioned in the indictment and that such homicide was committed by the defendants by accident and misfortune in the heat of passion upon any sudden and sufficient provocation or upon a sudden combat when no undue advantage was taken or any dangerous weapon used and the killing was not done in a cruel and unusual manner, then you are instructed that the defendant is excused in the eyes of the law and your verdict should be 'Not guilty.'"

One of the instructions given to the jury (not at the request of defendant) included the following language:

"And when the mortal blow, though unlawful, is struck in the heat of passion, excited by a quarrel, sudden and of sufficient violence to amount to adequate provocation, the law, out of forbearance for the weakness of human nature, will disregard the actual intent, and will reduce the offense to manslaughter. In such case, although the intent to kill exists, it is not that deliberate and malicious intent which is an essential element in the crime of murder."

[1, 2] In the instruction given to the jury it will be noted that the words "struck in the heat of passion, excited by a quarrel, sudden and of sufficient violence to amount to adequate provocation," are nearly identical with certain words occurring in section 195 of the Penal Code to which attention has been directed; but that, instead of advising the jury that where death was the result of such circumstances the homicide might be excusable the trial judge instructed the jury that the legal effect was that "the law out of forbearance for the weakness of human nature, * * * will reduce the offense to manslaughter." The gist of such instruction was the direct contrary to that part of the law contained in section 195 of the Penal Code, in that by such statute "homicide is excusable * * * when committed * * * in the heat of passion, upon any sudden and sufficient provocation, or upon a sudden combat, when no undue advantage is taken," etc. Considering the evidence in the case, it is apparent that to instruct the jury that, if the homicide in question was committed "in the heat of passion, excited by a quarrel, sudden and of sufficient violence to amount to adequate provocation," merely had the effect of reducing the crime to that of manslaughter, to all intents and purposes was a direction to the jury to find the defendant guilty of that crime. Self-defense and excusable homicide constituted the several defenses of defendant to the charge preferred against him; and the statute, as hereinbefore pointed out, enumerates and describes generally what conditions will be sufficient to excuse the commission of a homicide. Although the trial court gave to the jury certain instructions relating to the crime of manslaughter generally, as well as to what constituted justifiable homicide, in no instruction given to the jury were the rights of defendant attempted to be protected so far as the defense of excusable homicide was concerned. From even the brief summary of the evidence hereinbefore set forth, to say nothing of its amplification as shown by the reporter's transcript of the proceedings had before the trial court, it is manifest that circumstances were present at the time the homicide was committed which would fairly entitle defendant to have submitted to the jury for its determination the question of whether such homicide was excusable in the law because possibly committed as described in the statute to which reference has been had. People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 22 P. 157, 549; People v. Stokes, 11 Cal. App. 759, 106 P. 251.

It appearing that at least in such respect defendant was prejudiced in his substantial rights, it is ordered that the judgment be, and it is, reversed.

LAGORIO et ux. v. YERXA et al.★
(Civ. 6579.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 2, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 31, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 28, 1929.

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑185—Contract, wherein time was of the essence, held breached by purchaser's failure to pay monthly installments required.

Under contract for sale of realty, wherein time was made of the essence, and providing that, if payments in contract should be in default for over a certain period, all moneys theretofore paid should become forfeited and retained by vendor, and that agreement itself should be void, contract was breached by purchaser's failure to pay monthly installments, and hence contract was at an end.

2. Quieting title 🔑37(1)—Purchaser, to defeat forfeiture, because vendor accepted payments after maturity, should specially plead such defenses.

Purchaser, seeking to prevent forfeiture of contract, because vendor accepted payments on purchase price after time fixed by agreement of parties, should have specially pleaded such defense.

3. Abatement and revival 🔑40—Plea of prematurity must be specially pleaded.

Plea, that an action has been prematurely brought, is in nature of a dilatory plea, which must be specially pleaded to be available as a defense.

4. Quieting title 🔑44(2)—Admitting original contract without requiring proof of supplementary agreement held not error, wherein defendants claimed under contract of sale (Code Civ. Proc. § 1854).

In action to quiet title, wherein defendants claimed equitable title under contract of sale, admitting the original contract without requiring plaintiff to offer supplementary agreements between the parties, held not error, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1854, since, if there were any supplementary agreements between the parties, they should have been produced by defendants.

5. Usury 🔑18—Land contract held not loan, and hence not usurious, because providing for 24 per cent. interest on taxes, assessment, and insurance which purchasers failed to pay (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii).

That contract for sale of property, when construed under Civ. Code, § 1643, provided for payment of 24 per cent. per annum on taxes, assessments, and insurance, if purchasers failed to pay them, did not make contract usurious under Usury Law (St. 1919, p. lxxxiii), where requirement was simply one of the conditions of the contract under which purchasers agreed to purchase, and since contract did not grow out of a loan or forbearance of money.

written contract of sale and purchase between plaintiffs and defendants. The action was commenced October 18, 1926, and tried by the court March 3, 1927. Judgment went for plaintiffs, and the defendants appeal.

At the trial plaintiffs offered, and the court received, in evidence conveyances vesting title to the lands in controversy in them. They thereupon rested their case. Over the objection of plaintiffs, counsel for defendants then offered, and the court received, in evidence a letter dated July 16, 1924, written by the plaintiff V. Lagorio to one Theodore Gier, in which the writer stated that the defendant Thomas E. Yerxa, the purchaser under the contract of sale of the lands described in the complaint, was not in default under the terms of said contract. With the reception in evidence of this letter, defendants closed their case. In rebuttal, Girard N. Richardson testified, without objection, that no payments had been made under the contract since June, 1926, and that the payments provided for were $5,000 per month, the total amount due thereon to be paid on or before January 1, 1927, and that at the time of the trial there were 10 monthly payments overdue. He further testified that the total purchase price was $70,000, of which amount the defendants had paid $32,000. Over the objection of the defendants, the court received in evidence the original contract between the parties. The defendants' objection was upon the ground that there were three or four supplemental agreements. In reply to the objection the court said: "They are introducing those they desire. If you want to introduce the others you may do so." Counsel did not take advantage of this offer, merely replying to the court: "I have not the original in my possession."

It is provided in the contract that time is of the essence of the agreement, and, should any sums of principal or interest or any other payments provided for in the contract be in default for a period of 30 days, all moneys theretofore paid shall become forfeited and retained by the first party as liquidated damages for the breach of the agreement, and the agreement itself shall be void.

[1, 2] Appellants' first contention is that, respondents having accepted payments on the purchase price long after the maturity dates recited in the contract, they cannot forfeit the appellants' interest in the property without giving notice of their intention to require strict performance in the future and allowing a reasonable time thereafter to perform before filing suit to quiet title. Stevinson v. Joy, 164 Cal. 279, 128 P. 751; Webber v. Herbert, 46 Cal. App. 83, 188 P. 819.

Under the terms of the contract the total sum of $70,000 was due on or before November 26, 1925. From the testimony of witness Richardson, it appears that payments were accepted as late as June, 1926, but it further appears from the uncontradicted evidence of the same witness, which was admitted without objection, that the amounts and times of payment had been changed to $5,000 per month, and that at the date of the commencement of the action there were 3 unpaid monthly installments. Such being the case, there is no evidence in the record that plaintiff accepted payments after the time fixed by the agreement of the parties, and the claim is therefore not well founded. Furthermore, to have availed themselves of such a defense, it should have been specially pleaded. 32 Cyc. 1316; Pennie v. Hildreth, 81 Cal. 127, 22 P. 398; Price v. Sixth District Agricultural Ass'n, 201 Cal. 503, 258 P. 387; 22 Cal. Jur. § 36, p. 158; Verbeck et al. v. Clymer et al., 202 Cal. 557, 261 P. 1017.

[3] The next error assigned is based upon the claim that, as the full amount was not due under the terms of the contract until January 1, 1927, the commencement of the action on October 18, 1926, was premature. This is answered by our previous holding that the contract was breached by appellants' failure to pay the monthly installments, and therefore the contract was at an end. Furthermore, in Verbeck et al. v. Clymer et al., supra, it is said: "It is well settled that the plea that an action has been prematurely brought is in the nature of a dilatory plea which must be specially pleaded in order to be available as a defense." In the case at bar there is neither pleading nor proof to sustain the claim.

[4] It is next assigned as a ground of reversal that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence the original contract without requiring the respondents to offer certain supplementary agreements between the parties, it being the contention of appellants that the original contract "was a partially superseded fragment of the entire contract instead of the whole contract." The only evidence before the court that there were any other contracts is the testimony of the witness Richardson that the terms of payment were changed to $5,000 per month, the entire sum to be paid on or before January 1, 1927. There was also some conversation between the attorneys which would indicate that there were some other agreements in existence. When the objection was made the trial court stated to counsel for the appellants, "If you want to introduce the others you may do so," to which counsel replied, "I have not the original in my possession." No offer was made to introduce the so-called supplementary agreements. Section 1854 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides as follows: "When part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other; when a letter is read, the answer may be given; and when a detached act, declaration, conversation or writing is given in evidence, any other act, declaration, conversation, or writing, which is necessary to make it understood, may also be given in evidence."

We are of the opinion that the court was right in admitting the contract in evidence, and, under the above section of the Code, any supplementary agreements between the parties should have been produced by the appellants, if they were of sufficient importance to have affected the transaction.

[5] It is further claimed that the contract is in violation of what is commonly referred to as the "Usury Law" (Stats. 1919, lxxxiii). This claim is based upon the following provision of the contract: "It is agreed that all taxes and assessments on said real property subsequent to the first instalment of the current fiscal year, to whomsoever assessed shall be paid by said second party, who shall also keep the buildings on said land insured for at least the sum of four thousand ($4,000.00) dollars, payable in case of loss to said first party, and if any of said sums of taxes, assessments or insurance are not so paid by said second party and are paid by said first party, the same shall be repaid by said second party on demand in like gold coin with interest at the rate of two per cent (1%) per month and no deed of said land shall be given until such last named payment shall be made." It will be noted that the written portion of the foregoing provision of the contract provides for 2 per cent. per month interest, and that the figures provide for 1 per cent. per month. It is contended that this ambiguity must be construed in accordance with the rule that, where written words conflict with figures, the presumption is that the figures were typographical errors, and that the written words will control in the absence of a contrary intention. Payne v. Commercial Bank, 177 Cal. 68, 169 P. 1007. Hence, appellants say, this court must construe that the interest provision is at the rate of 24 per cent. per annum and contrary to said law, and, as a necessary sequence, under section 2 of said act, the contract is void as to any provision for interest, and, the full amount under the terms of the contract not being due until January 1, 1927, the action was prematurely brought. But, as we have already held, if the action was prematurely brought, it should have been met by plea in abatement.

We are of the opinion that counsels' contention is disposed of by the opinion in Verbeck et al. v. Clymer et al., supra, where it is held that the Usury Law applies only to cases of a loan or forbearance of money, and does not apply to a bona fide transaction of purchase and sale. This decision cites with approval the following language from 39 Cyc. p. 526: "It is manifest that any person owning property may sell it at such price and on such terms as to time and mode of payment as he may see fit, and such a sale, if bona fide, cannot be usurious, however unconscionable it may be." The case also approves the following principle stated in 27 R. C. L. pages 213, 215: That the first element of a usurious transaction is that there be a loan or forbearance of money, for, if there is neither, there can be no usury. In 39 Cyc. 953, it is said: "When an excessive rate of interest is made payable only in case of default in payment of the principal, the higher rate is not for the use of the money, but imposed as a penalty for nonperformance of the contract. By his own act the debtor may relieve himself of the excess payment. Whether such penalty for the nonperformance of the contract is held enforceable or not, all authorities are agreed that the contract is not usurious, but remains a valid and enforceable obligation against the debtor." In the case at bar, giving full effect to counsels' claim that the contract provides for payment of 24 per cent. per annum on taxes, assessments, and insurance, which, under the terms of the contract, appellants may fail to pay, it is simply one of the conditions of the contract under which defendants agreed to purchase. The contract does not grow out of a loan or forbearance of money, and therefore is within the principle announced in the Verbeck Case, supra. Counsel for respondent also cites section 1643 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "A contract must receive such an interpretation as will make it lawful, operative, definite, reasonable, and capable of being carried into effect, if it can be done without violating the intention of the parties." To give effect to the ambiguity, in accordance with the view of counsel for appellants, would do violence to the foregoing section of the Code, and it would seem in the present case that the ambiguity should be interpreted in the light of this section. It appears from an examination of the record that the trial court's attention was not directed to said ambiguity.

We are not unmindful of the fact that this contract, which calls for the payment of some $70,000 of which sum the defendants have paid $32,000, forfeits the money so paid, but courts are not authorized to relieve parties from the harshness of a contract which has been freely and voluntarily entered into. There is nothing in the present case which would authorize the court in setting aside or extending the terms of the contract.

The judgment must be affirmed, and it is so ordered.

HISS v. MULHOLLAND et ux. (Civ. 5345.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 3, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 24, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 4, 1929.

1. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Rulings involving questions of fact supported by substantial evidence may not be disturbed on appeal.

Rulings involving questions of fact which are supported by substantial evidence may not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Brokers 🔑44—Vendor and purchaser 🔑18(4)—Owner granting option to purchase property and commission if option was exercised could not terminate option nor agreement for commissions before expiration of option.

Under written agreement granting exclusive option to purchase property and providing for payment of commission in event of exercise of option, owner had no right to terminate or repudiate option nor agreement to pay commissions prior to expiration of term of option.

3. Brokers 🔑65(4)—Plaintiff's agency to find purchaser for defendant and agency for others to acquire property held not inconsistent, where plaintiff dealt with defendant at arms' length.

Where plaintiff and defendant dealt at arms' length in fixing purchase price of property under contract granting plaintiff option to purchase and providing for commissions to plaintiff in event of exercise of option, and plaintiff informed defendant that he had client who wished to purchase property in neighborhood, there was nothing inconsistent between plaintiff's agency for others to purchase property and agency for defendant to find purchaser, nor was there any confidence violated sufficient to preclude plaintiff's recovery of commission on exercise of option.

4. Brokers 🔑65(4, 5)—Agent may purchase property for himself or others, where owner authorizes sale at fixed price with right of agent to receive excess.

When owner authorizes sale by agent at fixed price made to him, with understanding that agent shall be entitled to any excess thereover, agent may without violating any trust relationship purchase property on own account or act as agent of others in acquiring property.

5. Brokers 🔑65(4)—Plaintiff granted option to purchase property and commissions if exercising option could recover commissions, though option was assigned as step in procuring purchaser.

Under agreement granting plaintiff exclusive option to purchase property and providing for commissions in event option was exercised, assignment of option to purchase to another, with reservation of right to commissions, as step in procurement of purchaser, held not to preclude plaintiff from recovering commissions on ground that defendants were entitled to plaintiff's services and that purchaser was not found until after assignment.

6. Brokers 🔑84(1)—Plaintiff could recover commissions on procuring purchaser, though not proving price set by defendant before any relation existed between parties was fair.

Where defendant fixed own price for property under agreement granting option to purchase and right to commissions if option was exercised, and defendant did not claim confidential relations existed between parties at time option was obtained, defendant could not claim fraud respecting amount of purchase price, and plaintiff was not precluded from recovering commissions on procuring purchaser on ground that no evidence was offered to show purchase price was fair, just, and equitable.

7. Brokers 🔑85(9)—In action to recover commissions for procuring purchaser at price fixed by defendant, evidence that property was worth more was immaterial.

Where defendant fixed own price for property under agreement granting option to purchase and right to commissions if option was exercised, and defendant did not claim confidential relations existed between parties at time option was obtained, evidence by defendant that property was valued in excess of amount stipulated in agreement was immaterial.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1071(3)—That findings on portions of defense were unsupported held not ground for reversal, where finding against indispensable portion of defense was supported (Code Civ. Proc. § 475).

Where finding against portion of defense without which defense must fail was amply supported by evidence, it is not ground for reversal, if findings as to other portions of defense were not supported by evidence under Code Civ. Proc. § 475.

9. Appeal and error 🔑1071(1)—Error in finding against appellant on particular issue is not prejudicial if appellant obtains all relief to which he would have been entitled.

Any error in finding against appellant on particular issue is without prejudice to him if judgment gives him all relief to which he would have been entitled had finding thereon been in his favor.

Action by B. H. Hiss against Gus Mulholland and wife. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

William Ellis Lady, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Bernard G. Hiss and Wm. P. Boland, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CRAIL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action for the recovery of a commission alleged to be due under an agreement between plaintiff and the defendants, involving also an option for the sale of the defendants' real property. The defendants on February 29, 1924, for a consideration of $200 in hand paid, executed a written agreement whereby they gave the plaintiff the exclusive right or option until March 10, 1924, to purchase their property. The agreement further provided that it should inure to the benefit of the assigns of the second party, and provided for a broker's commission as follows: "First party agrees to pay B. H. Hiss as commission in the event of the exercise of the option five (5%) per cent. of the total purchase price to be paid through and at the close of escrow." The plaintiff, on March 3, 1924, assigned the foregoing option to one J. J. O'Regan, reserving to himself the commission to become due in the event of the exercise of the option, and, according to the testimony of plaintiff, this was before the tender of a letter from defendants to plaintiff, which is set out in abbreviated form as follows: "March 3, 1924. I hand you herewith my check for $200, being the amount you handed me on February 29, 1924, in connection with the document signed by me and my wife and I hereby cancel and terminate the relation created at the time of the signing of said document. I do not intend to sell the property and your authority to find a purchaser is hereby terminated and canceled. I likewise rescind said document. I would not care to sell the property for the reason that I feel it is worth much more than $18,000, and inasmuch as you took this document in the form you prepared it but for the purpose of finding a purchaser, I feel you have no right as optionee or as agent now to find a purchaser. I will not transfer the property." Within the time specified in the option J. J. O'Regan notified defendants of his election to purchase the property pursuant to the terms of the option and deposited the purchase price in escrow as therein required, but defendants refused to proceed. Thereupon this action was commenced. The defendants filed an answer in which, after denying several allegations of the complaint, they set up a special defense, as follows: That on February 29, 1924, while plaintiff became and was the agent of defendants as aforesaid, plaintiff induced the defendants to execute said option at the sale price of $18,000, whereas at the time the property was worth $30,000, of which fact defendants were not aware until the 2d or 3d of March, 1924; that thereupon they inquired of plaintiff if he had taken any steps to exercise the option, who said that he had not and that he had not found a purchaser; that thereupon defendants rescinded the option, giving the plaintiff the letter above set out; that the agency created by said option was for no definite period of time and that they terminated it before plaintiff exercised it or found a purchaser; that the option and the contract for a 5 per cent. commission were not severable. There was another affirmative and separate defense set out in paragraph V of defendants' answer, but the trial court found against the defendants on all the allegations set up in said paragraph.

This is a companion case to Hiss v. Sutton (Cal. Sup.) 264 P. 748. The plaintiff is the same in both cases, the defendants are owners of adjoining properties, and the options and contracts for fees are similar.

[1] Appellants set out 16 grounds for reversal of the judgment, several of which have groups of subdivisions. Ten pages of appellants' long brief are required merely to state the points for reversal. It would serve no useful purpose to set them out in full or to take them up one at a time, provided we are able to cover them in groups and thus more expeditiously state the grounds of our decision. Many of the points are covered by the decision in Hiss v. Sutton, supra, and are decided adversely to appellants. Others involve questions of fact which are supported by substantial evidence and may not be disturbed on appeal. Another involves a conclusion of law which is supported by the findings of fact. All of such points have been considered and the grounds for our decision regarding them are stated above. The remaining points will receive more detailed consideration herein.

[2] It is the contention of appellants that the agency between the parties was an oral agency and was for no particular length of time. The agreement to pay the 5 per cent. commission was in writing and was made for a valuable consideration, and the contract was to pay a commission in the event of the exercise of the option, which right extended for a period of ten days. The defendants had no right to terminate or repudiate the option nor the agreement to pay the commission to become due in the event of the exercise of the option prior to the expiration of its term.

[3, 4] Appellants next contend that plaintiff was the agent of others for the purpose of acquiring the property at the very time defendants orally appointed plaintiff their agent to find a purchaser, and that plaintiff had been directed to obtain the property at the best price obtainable, to take an option in his own name, and to pay no more money than was necessary, such money being provided by the other parties, of which defendants had no knowledge, and to which they never consented, and that plaintiff cannot recover because the agencies were antagonistic. It will be observed that this involves a chain of facts each one of which it would be necessary for appellants to establish before the defense would be a sufficient one. Each and all of the facts, however, were found against appellants by the trial court. We mention this contention specifically because it runs all through appellants' brief. It is the one upon which they chiefly rely for reversal. The amount of the purchase price was fixed by appellants at the time the parties were dealing at arms' length. There was never any suggestion from the plaintiff that the price be reduced. The option to purchase ran in the name of plaintiff, and here again the parties were dealing at arms' length. The plaintiff testified that upon his first approach to the defendants he told them that he had a client who wished to purchase property in the neighborhood, and on cross-examination the defendants admitted this. Furthermore, there was nothing inconsistent in the relationship as claimed and no confidence violated. It is doubtless true that, where an agent is employed to obtain for his principal the highest possible price for property, fiduciary relations arise out of such employment which preclude the agent from becoming the purchaser or acting for others and unduly profiting to the injury of the employer. But where an owner authorizes the sale by an agent at a fixed price net to him, with the understanding that the agent shall be entitled to any excess thereover, the agent may, without violating any trust relationship, purchase the property on his own account or act as the agent of others in acquiring the same. Allen v. Dailey (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 404.

[5] Appellants also contend that plaintiff cannot recover for the reason that defendants had a right to expect and receive the personal efforts of plaintiff, and before he found a purchaser he transferred the instrument to Mr. O'Regan, who had no right to act for defendants, and that it was not until after such transfer that a purchaser was found. But no services were expected of plaintiff other than the finding of a purchaser on the terms provided in the option, and plaintiff found such purchaser. The assignment to Mr. O'Regan was only an assignment of the option to purchase. The plaintiff reserved the right to his commission and continued his personal efforts to produce a purchaser. The assignment of the option was a step in the procurement of a purchaser.

[6, 7] It is next contended by appellants that at a time when a confidential relation existed between the parties the plaintiff obtained the option from defendants, and that no evidence was offered or received on behalf of plaintiff that the purchase price was fair, just and equitable. But such a defense involves fraud, and there are no allegations of fraud respecting the amount of the purchase price; no claim of misrepresentation or concealment. There could be none, because the defendants fixed their own price for the property before any relation existed between the parties. There is no allegation even that a confidential relation existed at the time the option was obtained. On the contrary, the allegation is that the option was obtained and the relation was created on the same day, i. e., February 29, 1924; and, again, that "the agency (was) created by the option"; and these allegations are made only in and as a part of a paragraph in which the defense set up is that the contract was terminable at any time and that therefore the defendant had a legal right to terminate the relation of agent, which he did because he discovered the value of the property was greater than he thought when he made the plaintiff his agent. It is not even alleged that the plaintiff, at the time the contract was entered into, knew the value of the property was greater. There is no merit in such contention. For these reasons, also, the offer of defendants to prove the value of the property to be $30,000 was immaterial. The trial court made findings of fact covering all material allegations in the pleadings and the findings were supported by sufficient evidence.

[8, 9] As heretofore stated, the trial court made a finding against defendants as to all allegations in paragraph V of defendants' separate defense. Appellants contend that this finding as to several of the allegations contained in said paragraph is not supported by the evidence. However, the finding against defendants' allegation that at the time plaintiff became the agent of defendants neither of them had any knowledge that plaintiff was the agent of other persons for the purpose of purchasing the property and at no time consented that plaintiff might so act is amply supported by the evidence, and without a finding for defendants on this allegation this defense fails. Under such circumstances it is not ground for reversal if findings as to other portions of the defense are not supported by evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 475. Any error in finding against an appellant on a particular issue is without prejudice to him if the judgment gives him all the relief to which he would have been entitled had the finding thereon been in his favor. 2 Cal. Jur. p. 1029; Pugh v. Moxley, 164 Cal. 374, 128 P. 1037.

There was no prejudicial error committed by the trial court in its rulings on the admission of evidence. As heretofore stated, the case is largely controlled by the case of Hiss v. Sutton, supra.

Judgment affirmed.

Action by J. Rosenbaum against First Doe Luce and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Reversed.

T. F. Draper, of San Francisco, for appellants.

Milton A. Nathan, of San Francisco, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. Plaintiff sued to recover damages to his stock of goods, which was injured by seepage of water from the premises occupied by the defendants. The cause was tried by the court sitting without a jury and resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff in the sum of $1,147.50. The defendants have appealed on a typewritten record.

The plaintiff was the lessee of a storeroom on the first floor of a five-story building, situated on Polk street, in the city and county of San Francisco. The defendants were lessees of the four upper stories of the same building. The plaintiff conducted a suit and cloak business and the defendants an apartment house, subletting the separate apartments to separate subtenants. On the morning of July 7, 1927, when plaintiff opened his place of business, he found that water had seeped through the ceiling of his store and damaged his stock in trade. Upon investigation it was found that water had come from the floor of apartment No. 219 on the second floor of the building. A plumber was called by the defendants, who examined the plumbing in this apartment and found it free from defect. He then voluntarily went to the basement under plaintiff's store and found the drainpipe into the sewer stopped up. He removed the obstruction and the water flowed from the pipes without further leakage.

The complaint alleged that the carelessness and negligence of the defendants "consisted and consists in their failure to prevent the seepage of water through the floor dividing and separating the premises of plaintiff from the premises of said defendants." The trial court found that the defendants "supervised, maintained and used said premises, including said plumbing and plumbing appurtenances, or fixtures, so negligently and carelessly" that water seeped through the floor and damaged plaintiff's stock of goods.

The finding of negligence is not supported by any competent evidence, and the respondent seeks to support the judgment solely upon the application of the doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur." In support of this theory, respondent cites two pieces of evidence—one of which is supported by the record, while the other is not. He first cites the opinion of one of the appellants, given as a witness, that the water backed up and overflowed in the basin of the apartment because the drainpipe under the store of respondent was stopped up. He then states that the evidence shows that the washbasin and the drainpipe in the basement were both under the exclusive control of appellants, and follows this with the statement that "neither of the parties to this action rented, used, or controlled that basement." The evidence shows without conflict that the basin and the apartment were under the control of a subtenant of appellants and that the drainpipe was located under the store of respondent, and that appellants had neither supervision nor control over it.

That none of the elements necessary for the application of the "res ipsa loquitur" doctrine are present seems too plain for argument. The case is on a par with White v. Spreckels, 10 Cal. App. 287, 101 P. 920, where this doctrine is fully discussed and the cases are cited. Particularly applicable to the case here is the citation from Ryan v. Fall River Iron Wks., 200 Mass. 188, 86 N. E. 310, where it is said: "When the precise cause is left to conjecture and may be as reasonably attributed to a condition for which no liability attaches as to one for which it does, then a verdict should be directed against the plaintiff." Here the overflow occurred in an apartment over which appellants had no control; the plumbing in the apartment was inspected and found free from defect; the opinion was expressed that the overflow was caused by a stoppage in the drainpipe under respondent's store; if this was so, the respondent may have been equally responsible for the condition.

In the recent opinion in Olson v. Whitthorne & Swan Co. (Cal. Sup.) 263 P. 518, our Supreme Court said: "To render the doctrine applicable 'it must be shown that the instrumentality causing the injury was under the control of the defendant and that the injury was caused by some act incident to that control,' and the injury 'must be of such a nature that it ordinarily would not have occurred but for the defendant's negligence.' 19 Cal. Jur., 708, 710. It does not apply 'where an unexplained accident might have been caused by plaintiff's negligence, or been due to one of several causes, for some of which the defendant is not responsible.' 19 Cal. Jur., 710, 711."

There is no evidence in this record tending to show that the instrumentality causing the injury was under the control of the appellants, or that they were guilty of any act of commission or omission causing or contributing to the injury. On the other hand, the case is merely one of an unexplained accident which might have been caused by respondent's own negligence.

The judgment is reversed.

In re MERRILL.

SCHUTZ et al. v. MERRILL.

(Civ. 3612.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 28, 1928.

1. Schools and school districts ⚷53(1)—Qualified county electors, listed on great register used in preceding general election, and still residing in precinct, could vote for school trustees at March election (Pol. Code, §§ 1041, 1043, 1044, 1083, 1094, 1120, 1121, 1593, 1598; Const. art. 2, § 1).

Under Pol. Code, §§ 1044, 1083, 1094, 1120, 1121, 1598, and Const. art. 2, § 1, qualified electors of county, whose names appeared on great register used in preceding general election, and who were still residing in precinct, had legal right to vote for school district trustees at election held in March, 1928, under section 1593, though such elections are neither general nor special elections within sections 1041, 1043.

2. Elections ⚷10½—Constitutional right to vote cannot be denied, in absence of plain prohibitory statute as to method of exercising right (Const. art. 2, § 1).

The right to vote, given by Const. art. 2, § 1, is not to be denied, in absence of plain prohibitory provision of Code as to method of exercising such right.

Appeal from Superior Court, Colusa County; Ernest Weyand, Judge.

Action by H. H. Schutz and another against A. P. Merrill, contesting the latter's election as trustee of Pierce Joint Union High School District. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Rutledge & Rutledge, of Colusa, for appellants.

Albert E. Sheets, of Sacramento, and Chas. K. Atran, of Portland, Or., for respondent.

PLUMMER, J. As stated by appellant, this action involved but one question, to wit: Whether a voter at a school election held on March 30 of the year 1928 was required to be on the great register for the year 1928 and to have registered during the year 1928, 30 days prior to such election, or whether it was sufficient that the voter had registered and his name was on the registration roll of what has been called in the pleadings the old register, or the register used at the previous general election.

At the election held for school trustees of Pierce joint union high school district on March 30, 1928, the respondent received 390 votes. The appellant J. M. Peart received 385 votes. It was stipulated at the trial that, of the 390 votes received by the respondent, 11 were cast by persons who had not registered during the year 1928, but were all properly registered on what is called the old register, or the register used at the previous general election. One vote was cast for the respondent, conceded to have been illegal by reason of the disqualification of the voter.

The trial court held that the 11 persons whose names properly appeared upon the old register, and who possessed the necessary qualifications provided by law, were qualified voters and entitled to cast their ballots for school trustee in said district on the 30th day of March, 1928.

By stipulation, all of the preliminary matters necessary to sustain a contest and present the question as to the legality of the votes contested, were presented to the trial court. We have, therefore, only to deal with the legal questions involved.

[1] By section 1593 of the Political Code it is provided that an election for school trustees must be held in each school district on the last Friday of March of each year, and by section 1598 of the Political Code the necessary qualifications of an elector to vote at a school election are set forth as follows: "Every elector, resident of the school district, who is a qualified elector of the county, and who is registered in the precinct where the election is held at least thirty days before the election, may vote thereat."

Section 1083 of the Political Code fixes the qualifications constituting a qualified elector of a county, to wit: "Every native citizen of the United States, every person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under or by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he or she claims his or her vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, and who has conformed to the law governing the registration of voters, shall be a qualified elector at any and all elections held within the county, city and county, city, town, or district within which such elector resides." This section, in prescribing the qualifications of an elector of a county, specifically states that such an elector, conforming to the requirements of the section, shall be a qualified elector at any and all elections, not only those held within the county, city and county, state or town, but also of the district within which the elector resides. The particular election is not specified; it simply reads, "all elections." There are no limitations in the section as to general, special or primary elections, but vouchsafes the right to vote at all elections held in the district, city, town, or county where the elector resides. If a qualified elector, under the terms of section 1083 of the Political Code, then, according to the wording of section 1598 of the Political Code, the elector has a right to vote at any election for school trustee in the district in which he resides.

It is contended, however, that other sections of the Code limit the exercise of the right of suffrage in school elections, even though a voter may be entitled to vote at the county election or at a municipal election. In this behalf, our attention is directed to a proviso contained in section 1094 of the Political Code relating to registration of voters. This proviso reads as follows: "Provided, that where any general or special municipal election, or any other special election, including any primary election and all special elections to vote for officers, or upon or for or against any proposition or question authorized to be submitted to a vote, is held on or after the first day of January and before the first day of April of any even-numbered year, the original affidavits of registration and indexes used in the last general state election, in any county or city and county in this state, together with the original affidavits of registration since the last election, and supplemental indexes, showing all additional registrations, changes and corrections made since the registration for the last general election, completed to and including the thirty-first day prior to said election then being held, may be used at such election to determine the persons entitled to vote thereat." This proviso, however, does not purport in terms to limit, add to, or detract from the qualifications of electors specified in the sections of the Political Code which we have heretofore cited. The proviso has for its purpose the setting forth of a guide or method or means to be used by the election officers in determining whether any particular person is or is not entitled to vote at the election being held. The Code sections which we have cited, all being parts of the same Political Code, and not a single one of the sections quoted purporting, either in terms or by any intendment whatever, to amend, change, or alter the terms of any other section, they must all be read together and harmonized. With such reading it is evident that, if one is entitled to vote at an election in the county which includes the district in which he resides, he is likewise entitled to vote at all elections held in the district in which he resides, including election for school trustees. There is no escaping the conclusion that the challenged voters in this case all possessed the right to vote at any election held in the county and in the precinct in which they were residing, and it is likewise unescapable that the words "all elections" includes school elections, or elections for school trustees.

Again, it is urged that the Code provides only for general elections, special elections, and municipal elections, and does not mention the elections referred to in section 1593 of the Political Code, pertaining to the election of school trustees. In this particular our attention has been called to sections 1041, 1043, and 1044 of the Political Code. Section 1041, supra, reads: "There must be held throughout the state, on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, in the year 1880, and in every second year thereafter, an election, to be known as the general election." Section 1043, supra, is as follows: "Special elections are such as are held to supply vacancies in any office, and are held at such times as may be designated by the proper board or officer." And section 1044, supra, sets forth that: "Except in the particulars or cases otherwise provided for in the Constitution or laws of the state or by the provisions of a freeholder charter duly adopted or amended pursuant to the Constitution of this state, all municipal elections, where the same are held separate from state elections, and all elections held under the authority of section eight of article eleven of the Constitution, to elect boards of freeholders, or to vote upon proposed charters, or upon amendments to existing charters, and all other special elections, including all special elections to vote upon or for or against any proposition or question authorized to be submitted to a vote, shall be conducted under the provisions of sections 1044, 1120, 1121, 1133, and 1151 of this Code." Section 1121 contains a reference to the registration that shall be used when the election is held on an even-numbered year prior to the 1st day of April thereof. If the election is held prior to the 1st day of April, the old register with supplemental registrations may be used. If the election is held after the 1st day of April of any even-numbered year, then the section requires the use of the registration or affidavits of registration, etc., which have been had during the even-numbered year when the election is being held. Section 1120, supra, is only an additional provision relating to the qualifications of electors as mentioned in section 1044 of the Political Code, and explicitly states that: "Every person who was a qualified elector at the general state election immediately preceding the holding of any of the elections mentioned in section 1044 of this Code, and who was registered as required by law as a qualified elector of any one of the precincts which together composed the special election or consolidated election precincts, and who continues to reside within the exterior boundaries of such special election or consolidated election precinct, until the time of holding of the election provided for and held under said section 1044, shall be entitled to vote at said election, without other or additional registration except as provided in the second paragraph of this section." The second paragraph refers simply to the dividing line when the old and the new registrations must be used. It thus appears, again, from section 1120 of the Political Code that any one who is a qualified elector residing in the election precinct where the election is being held, and who is registered according to the law requiring registration for the previous general election, may vote. This second reading, in connection with section 1083, supra, giving such a person a right to vote at all elections, reinforces the right of the elector to vote at a school election.

It is further argued that, as the Legislature has defined two kinds of election, to wit, by section 1041 of the Political Code, a general election, as the election held on the first Tuesday after the first Monday of November, etc.; and, further, by section 1043, designated special elections as: "Special elections are such as are held to supply vacancies in any office, and are held at such times as may be designated by the proper board or officer"; and, as elections for school trustees are neither general state elections nor special elections, the Code provisions which we have cited do not apply. We may admit that the definition used by the Legislature in section 1043 of the Political Code, referring to special elections, does not in terms include an election held under the provisions for the election of school trustees. It may likewise be admitted that section 1041, supra, describing a particular election, which is held in November, as the general election, cannot apply to the election held for the choosing of school trustees. This does not necessitate the holding, however, that the Legislature intended, by the sections which we have quoted, to exclude, from participation in the election of school trustees, persons who are qualified under the terms of section 1083 of the Political Code to vote at all elections, as provided for in that section, including county, city, town, or district within which such elector resides.

That the words "general election," as used in the proviso contained in section 1094 of the Political Code, may have a broader meaning than the use made of the word in section 1041 of the Political Code, is sanctioned in the case of People v. Town of Berkeley, 102 Cal. 298, 36 P. 591, 23 L. R. A. 838. We quote from the opinion on page 306 thereof (36 P. 593): "The election held on May 8, 1893, was the annual election provided for by law for the election of municipal officers, and, in our opinion, it was a general election at which the question of reorganization might properly be submitted. It is true that the words 'general election' are ordinarily used to designate one at which state and county officers are elected, but we know of no provisions in the Constitution or statutes limiting them to such an election. Two classes of elections only are spoken of, general and special; and a regular annual municipal election cannot be included in the latter class, but must be treated as a general election."

The views which we have taken as to the application of section 1083 of the Political Code to the case at bar are supported in the case of Falltrick v. Sullivan, 119 Cal. 613, 51 P. 947. The court in that case, referring to section 1083 of the Political Code, and the right of a voter to vote at a school election being the same as that required for electors of a county, uses the following language: "Section 1083 of the Political Code, as it stood before the amendment of 1893, simply required that the name of the voter 'shall be enrolled on the great register of the county.' This provision was amended in 1893 by adding the words, 'fifteen days prior to an election.'" (This provision has also been added to, as we have stated, but does not change the application.) "Under the title, 'Election for School Trustees,' the Political Code, section 1598, provides: 'Every qualified elector of the county, who has resided in the district for thirty days next preceding an election, may vote thereat.' Under these provisions, it is clear that, if the five persons above named were not qualified electors of the county, they were not entitled to vote for school trustees, enrollment on the great register fifteen days before an election being essential." These sections have been amended since the decision in the case of Falltrick v. Sullivan, supra, but the essential requirement is still the same, to wit: To vote at a school election the elector must be a qualified voter in the county. Section 1098, Political Code, reads exactly the same. Section 1083 of the Political Code has been amended since the decision in the case of Falltrick v. Sullivan, supra, more clearly specifying what constitutes a voter within a county, but section 1598, providing that such a voter may vote at an election held by the choosing of school trustees, is unchanged. The opinion in the case of Falltrick v. Sullivan, supra, further holds: "School trustees are required to be elected annually on the first Friday in June, and it is obvious that the old register must remain for all purposes required by law before the completion of the new register, and the board of supervisors have no authority to declare it canceled before the registration is completed. It should be added that the five persons alleged to have voted illegally for respondent were not enrolled upon the great register alleged to have been canceled." In that case, although the election was then held in June, and now held in March, if the voter had complied with all the requirements of the law relative to placing his name upon the old registration list, he would have been entitled to vote.

[2] Again, the right to vote in this state is a constitutional right, and is not to be denied, unless there is a plain provision of the Code, relative to the method of exercising that right, which prohibits. Section 1 of article 2 relative to the right of suffrage, so far as applicable here, reads: "Every native citizen of the United States, every person who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under or by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro, and every naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such ninety days prior to any election, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he or she claims his or her vote ninety days, and in the election precinct thirty days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law." Here, by express language, all elections are referred to, not simply municipal, not simply county, not simply city, not simply district, but all elections, and it cannot be logically argued that, if one is entitled to vote at all elections held in the city, town, county, or district in which he is a resident, and at which he would be entitled to vote under the registration laws to which we have referred, such a person is not entitled to vote for school trustees at an election held for such purpose.

We do not deem it of any particular importance whether the election for school trustees held on the last Friday in March of each year all over the state is a general election or a special election, or a general election for the special purpose of electing school trustees. The sections which we have quoted clearly vouchsafe the right to vote at such election to any one who is a qualified elector, for any other of the purposes mentioned in the Code provisions. While not necessary to so hold in order to sustain the judgment of the trial court in this case, we may mention the fact that, in the case of Pass School District v. Hollywood District, 156 Cal. 416, 105 P. 122, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 485, 20 Ann. Cas. 87, the opinion refers to "school district" in the following language: "School districts of this state are public quasi municipal corporations." Citing Hughes v. Ewing, 93 Cal. 414, 28 P. 1067; Kennedy v. Miller, 97 Cal. 429, 32 P. 558. "Subject to such constitutional limitations as may exist, the power of the Legislature over these public municipal corporations is plenary," etc. Thus, the inference may readily be drawn that the Legislature, in speaking of municipal elections, intended to include what the courts have held to be, or referred to as, "quasi municipal corporations," which would bring school elections within the literal wording of the provision contained in section 1094 of the Political Code.

The Code provisions which we have cited, when read together, we think lead clearly and unavoidably to the conclusion that the electors of the county, whose names appeared upon the great register used at the preceding general election, who were still residing in the precinct in which the election was being held, had a legal right to cast their ballots for school trustees at the election held on the last Friday in March, 1928, and that the trial court was correct in so holding.

The judgment is affirmed.

GALWEY v. PACIFIC AUTO STAGES, Inc.★

(Civ. 6511.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1929.

1. Automobiles 🔑160(1)—Pedestrian and automobile have equal rights on highway.

Neither pedestrian nor automobile has superior right on highway, and conduct of both must be regulated by this rule.

2. Automobiles 🔑217(5)—Ordinary care of pedestrian, attempting to cross street after looking for approaching vehicles, must be determined in light of attending circumstances.

Where pedestrian looks for approaching vehicles before proceeding over crossing, question, whether he is negligent in attempting to cross street under rule of ordinary care, must be determined by consideration of attending circumstances.

3. Automobiles 🔑245(8)—Stage driver's compliance with Vehicle Act held question for jury, in action for injuries to child struck by auto stage while crossing street (Vehicle Act, § 113, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30).

In action for injuries sustained by minor child struck by auto stage while attempting to cross street, question, whether driver of stage complied with requirements of the Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553), § 113, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30, as to care in driving and rate of speed, held for jury.

4. Automobiles 🔑245(40)—Whether automobile accident occurred in residence district held question for jury, in action for injuries, under evidence that signs prescribing residence district speed limit had been posted in locality (Vehicle Act, § 116 and § 114, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1437, § 31; Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15).

In action for injuries to child struck by auto stage while attempting to cross street, question, whether point at which accident occurred lay within residence district, as defined in Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 554), § 114, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1437, § 31, limiting speed to 20 miles an hour in residence district, held for jury, where signs were placed in district limiting speed limit under section 116; it being presumed that official duty was regularly performed under Code of Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15.

5. Automobiles 🔑246(31)—Instruction, permitting recovery from defendant, for negligence in operation of auto stage causing injury to pedestrian, held not misleading, where recovery was made conditional on plaintiff's freedom from negligence.

In automobile accident case, instruction, with regard to defendant's duty in operating its auto stage, as related to safety of pedestrians, permitting recovery for negligence which proximately caused injuries, held not erroneous as misleading, where it was required that plaintiff should be free from negligence.

6. Trial 🔑296(4, 5)—Omission of definition in instruction on due care held not prejudicial, where matter was covered by other instructions.

Instruction, that plaintiff in crossing street was "chargeable only for the exercise of a due amount of care," held not prejudicial for failure to define terms, where defect, if any, was cured by other instructions covering the omitted matter.

7. Trial 🔑256(1)—One desiring fuller instruction should prepare instruction for trial court or express desire for fuller instructions.

Party who desires fuller and more elaborate instruction is under duty to prepare and present the same to the trial court, or to indicate his desire for further instructions.

8. Automobiles 🔑245(91)—Child's recovery, under last clear chance doctrine, for injuries from contact with auto stage, held question for jury.

Child's right of recovery, under last clear chance doctrine, for injuries sustained from collision with auto stage in crossing street, held properly submitted to jury under doctrine of last clear chance, in view of defendant's testimony as to good condition of lights and brakes.

9. Negligence 🔑72—Omission or unwise choice of person suddenly put in perilous position is not of itself contributory negligence.

If plaintiff is suddenly put in peril without having sufficient time to consider all the circumstances, his omission of some precaution, or his unwise choice, is not of itself contributory negligence.

10. Trial 🔑260(1)—Refusal of instruction fully covered by instructions given is not ground for reversal.

Refusal of instruction requested is not ground for reversal, where instruction so refused is fully given by the court.

11. Damages 🔑46—Minor suing for injuries held entitled to reasonable expense incurred for necessary hospital and physicians' services, where sole surviving parent was not able to pay such expense and made no promise to do so (Civ. Code, § 36).

Minor, suing by next friend for injuries sustained in automobile accident, held entitled to recover reasonable expense necessarily incurred for hospital and physicians' services, where it was clear that mother, who was only surviving parent, was unable to pay expenses and made no promise to do so, and services were necessary to save plaintiff's life, for which he would be liable to extent of their reasonable value under Civ. Code, § 36.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Action by Ernest Galwey, by guardian ad litem, against the Pacific Auto Stages, Inc. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Hampton Hoge, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis Oneal, Maurice J. Rankin, and S. F. Holstein, all of San Jose, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This action was brought by Ernest Galwey, a minor, through Hannah Galwey, his mother and guardian ad litem, to recover damages from appellant corporation for personal injuries. A jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, and, from the judgment entered thereon, the corporation has appealed.

It is claimed that the verdict is unsupported, and that the court erred in its rulings upon the admissibility of certain testimony, in its instructions to the jury, and by refusing other instructions offered by appellant.

The accident which caused the injuries occurred at about 8:30 o'clock p. m. on August 2, 1925, at a point on Lincoln street, between Benton and Franklin streets, in the city of Santa Clara. At this point Lincoln street runs north and south, and the cross streets mentioned east and west. The plaintiff was aged about 11 years, and was skating or walking upon roller skates at the time of the accident. According to his testimony, he left his home which was situated to the east of Lincoln street, and skated west along the sidewalk on Franklin street to Lincoln; thence north along the east side of Lincoln to a point where the sidewalk ended, and from there walked to the corner of Benton street. The width of Lincoln street between the curbs is 49 feet, a strip in the center 20 feet in width being paved. After reaching the corner the plaintiff turned west to cross Lincoln street, and stepped from the curb into the unpaved strip east of the paved portion of the street. Before attempting to cross the pavement he looked to the north and south. A car approaching from the south passed him, and he saw the lights of another car coming from the north. While plaintiff did not so testify, the circumstances fairly support the inference that the latter car was the stage operated by appellant. This car was then distant from one-half to three-fourths of the length of the block, the block referred to being that between Benton and Fremont streets, to the north, which was shown to be 310 feet in length. Believing that he had time to cross in safety, he made the attempt, and when he had passed over the paved portion and reached the unpaved strip along the west side of Lincoln street he was struck and injured by the automobile stage. Plaintiff was unable to describe in detail the manner in which the accident happened other than as stated above, but denied that he stumbled and fell in front of the stage, as testified by certain of appellant's witnesses, or that he stepped from behind another car immediately into the path of the stage, as testified by others. The plaintiff's leg was crushed in such a manner as to make an amputation necessary. Although no bones were broken, a description of the injuries by a physician in attendance immediately after the accident, and who testified that earth and gravel were ground into the wounds made by the wheels of the stage, tends to support the conclusion that the collision occurred after the plaintiff had reached the unpaved strip adjoining the westerly curb of the street.

The driver of the stage testified that the accident happened about 110 feet south of Benton street; that the plaintiff suddenly appeared from behind a car traveling north, being, when first seen, from 8 to 10 feet distant; that the speed of the stage from Benton street south was from 12 to 15 miles an hour, and that the plaintiff, when in front of the stage, stumbled and fell under the wheels. His testimony in the above respects was corroborated by several witnesses called by appellant. He also testified that he applied the foot and emergency brakes when about 8 feet from the plaintiff, and that the stage, which was 23 feet in length, traveled from 25 to 30 feet before stopping. It further appears from his testimony, that it was dusk, but not dark, at the time; that his lights were such that he could see a distance of 150 feet; that the brakes of the stage were in good condition, and that the nearest car in front and traveling in the same direction was from 50 to 75 feet away. According to a witness for the plaintiff, the latter, after the collision, was lying near the west curb of the street about two stage lengths south of the property line on Benton street and about 2 feet north of the rear of the stage. The witness also testified that the wheels of the stage were then entirely off and to the west of the paved portion of the street. Whether the plaintiff was thrown or carried for any distance by the stage is not disclosed in the evidence, none of the witnesses having observed the effect of the collision in this respect. If, however, the testimony of the plaintiff as to the point where he attempted to cross the street was true, namely, at the corner of Benton street, then it is clear that he was carried for at least two stage lengths, as shown by the testimony of his witness as to where he was found.

[1-3] Appellant contends that the evidence shows that its driver was not negligent. While the greater number of witnesses testified for appellant, and their testimony, if believed by the jury would have been sufficient to establish this contention, nevertheless from the testimony of the plaintiff as to the place where he attempted to cross the street, and his precautions in looking for approaching vehicles before the attempt was made, together with that of the witness who testified as to where he was found after the collision, a jury might reasonably find that the accident occurred at the place claimed by the plaintiff; that the latter used due care for his own safety, and that the driver—who testified that the stage stopped over 100 feet south of the intersection, and also that at a speed of 15 miles per hour it could have been stopped within 40 feet—was either driving at a greater speed than he admitted, or that he failed to apply the brakes at the time and place claimed by him. Neither a pedestrian nor an automobile has a superior right on the highway, and the conduct of both must be regulated by this rule (Burgesser v. Bullock's, 190 Cal. 673, 214 P. 649); and where a pedestrian looks for approaching vehicles before proceeding, and sees none which appear to be dangerously close, the question, whether he was negligent in attempting to cross, under the rule that he is bound to use ordinary care for his own safety, must be determined by a consideration of all the attending circumstances (Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., 189 Cal. 335, 208 P. 125; Mann v. Scott, 180 Cal. 550, 182 P. 281); and in the present case this question, with that as to whether the driver of the stage complied with the provisions of the Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 553, § 113, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1436, § 30), requiring the operators of motor vehicles to drive the same in a careful and prudent manner, and at a rate of speed not greater than is reasonable and proper, having due regard to the traffic, surface and width of the highway, were for the jury, and, under the evidence, were properly submitted for its determination (Burgesser v. Bullock's, supra; Reaugh v. Cudahy Packing Co., supra; Mardorf v. Penniman, 68 Cal. App. 696, 230 P 12).

[4] The court instructed the jury that, if it found from the evidence that the place where the accident occurred was in a residence district, then the defendant was required to drive its stage at a speed not exceeding 20 miles per hour in that district; and that, if it found that defendant drove its stage at a speed in excess of 20 miles per hour it was guilty of negligence, and, if such negligence was the proximate cause of the injuries received by the plaintiff, it was its duty to find for him. Appellant contends that there was no evidence that the place of the accident was within a residence district within the meaning of the Vehicle Act (St. 1923, p. 554. § 114, as amended St. 1927, p. 1437, § 31), and that the instruction was consequently erroneous.

A residence district was defined by the Vehicle Act as "the territory contiguous to a public highway which is on the line of said highway not mainly devoted to business where for not less than a quarter of a mile the dwelling houses and business structures on such highway average less than 100 feet apart"; further, that "no territory shall be deemed to be within a business or residence district unless sign-posted as provided in this act;" and section 116 of the same act provided that "the board of supervisors of any county and the city council, board of trustees or other legislative body of a city or town wherein any public highway lies within a residence district shall cause metal signs to be conspicuously placed on every such highway at the boundary lines of such residence district, etc., * * *," the size and color of the signs being described, and further providing that the same be inscribed with the words "20 miles speed limit." As stated by appellant, no direct evidence as to the character of the district where the accident happened was adduced. It was, however, stipulated by the parties that the board of trustees of the city of Santa Clara had, by an ordinance duly adopted, ordered that signs of the above description be erected on the street mentioned, and that pursuant thereto such signs were placed. In addition it was testified that a sign of the character described was in place to the north of the scene of the accident at the time the same occurred. It was the duty of the trustees of the city, if the highway lay within a residence district, to cause the sign mentioned to be erected; and, it being presumed that official duty has been regularly performed (Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subd. 15), there was thus evidence sufficient to justify the submission of the question of the character of the district to the jury.

[5] By another instruction the jury was instructed with regard to the duty of appellant to operate its stage with due regard for the safety of pedestrians, and was told that if it found from a preponderance of the evidence that the defendant was guilty of negligence which proximately caused the injuries to the plaintiff, it must find for him, provided it also found that he was free from negligence. Later in the same instruction the first proposition was repeated, the qualification respecting plaintiff's freedom from negligence not being referred to again. Appellant claims that this was misleading, but with this contention we cannot agree, as the jury, there and elsewhere in the instructions, was fully advised that, unless the plaintiff's conduct was free from negligence contributing to the injury, he could not recover.

[6] Appellant also complains that by instruction 7 the court stated that the plaintiff in crossing the street was "chargeable only for the exercise of a due amount of care," without defining what was meant by a due amount of care. Any defect in this respect, however, was fully cured by instructions 11 and 27, by which the jury was instructed as to the degree of care required of children of the age of the plaintiff, and further, that, if it found that he failed to exercise the care of an ordinarily prudent person of his age, acting under like circumstances, and that his failure to do so proximately contributed to the accident and his resulting injuries, if any, then he could not recover.

[7, 8] Two instructions on the doctrine of the last clear chance were given. Appellant complains that there was no evidence in the case which would justify these instructions, and, further, that the same were faulty in that the jury was not told that, before the doctrine could apply, it must find that the plaintiff was oblivious to the impending peril, or in a position of danger from which, by the exercise of ordinary care, he could not extricate himself.

These instructions were brief but correct statements of the last clear chance rule, and followed similar instructions approved in the following cases: Esrey v. Southern Pacific Co., 103 Cal. 545, 37 P. 500; Ilardi v. Central Cal. Traction Co., 36 Cal. App. 489, 172 P. 763; London G. & A. Co. v. Southern Pacific Co., 53 Cal. App. 599, 200 P. 805. In Townsend v. Butterfield, 168 Cal. 564, 143 P. 760, refering to a like instruction, the court said: "If the defendant desired a fuller and more elaborate instruction on the doctrine of the last clear chance, it was his duty to prepare and present the same to the court, or in some way make known to the court the lack of a clearer instruction and his desire for a better definition of the rule." While the driver testified that he applied the brakes and swerved the stage to the right immediately upon perceiving the dangerous position of the plaintiff, nevertheless the evidence justified the giving of this instruction. The lights of the stage were such that the driver could see 150 feet in advance, and this, in connection with his testimony as to the speed of the stage, and the time required to stop after the application of the brakes, were facts from which the jury might infer that, contrary to his testimony, he did see the perilous position of the plaintiff at a time when he could, by the exercise of ordinary care, have avoided the accident. Wahlgren v. Market St. Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 657, 665, 62 P. 308, 64 P. 993; Hoy v. Tornich, 199 Cal. 545, 250 P. 565; Varcoe v. Lee, 180 Cal. 338, 181 P. 223; Chappell v. San Diego, etc., Ry. Co., 201 Cal. 560, 258 P. 73.

[9] Appellant further complains of an instruction in which was stated the rule as to the care required of one placed in sudden peril, and following which the court said: "I instruct you that in this case, if you find from the evidence that the plaintiff was suddenly put in peril without having sufficient time to consider all the circumstances, he is excusable for omitting some precaution or making an unwise choice under this disturbing influence; and I instruct you that if he acted as a reasonably prudent boy of his age would have acted under the circumstances which were then presented to him he is not guilty of contributory negligence, and is not responsible for the accident." It is contended that the instruction ignored the question whether the plaintiff's position of peril was due to his own negligence. As an abstract proposition the statement of the rule contained in the first portion of the instruction was correct (Randolph v. Hunt, 41 Cal. App. 739, 183 P. 358); and an instruction substantially the same as the quoted portion was approved in Hammond v. Pacific Electric R. R. Co., 32 Cal. App. 756, 164 P. 50, wherein it was held that the instruction did not purport to say that a person in sudden peril by his own negligence is relieved from the imputation of contributory negligence, but stated the principle that an unwise choice under such peril is not of itself contributory negligence. Moreover, the jury was elsewhere repeatedly told that there could be no recovery against the defendant, unless the plaintiff himself was free from contributory negligence.

[10] Certain instructions offered by appellant, were refused, one directing a verdict for the defendant, and the other charging that at the place of the accident the maximum limit of speed authorized by law was 35 miles per hour, and a third, that the plaintiff could not recover if guilty of contributory negligence, however slight.

There was no error in the above, as there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of appellant to justify the submission of the case to the jury. Further, the question, whether the place of the accident was within a residence district, where the maximum limit of speed was but 20 miles per hour, was likewise one for its determination; and the third instruction so refused was fully covered by others given by the court.

[11] Appellant also objects to an instruction, in substance, that, if the jury found for the plaintiff in damages, then he was also entitled to recover such reasonable expense as he had necessarily incurred for hospital and physicians' services, not exceeding the amount alleged in the complaint. It is claimed that the mother of plaintiff was liable for his necessities, including medical attention; that the expense incurred was chargeable to her and could not be recovered in this action.

It is clear that the mother, who appears to have been the only surviving parent of the plaintiff, was not able to pay the expenses, and that she made no promise to do so. The services were necessary in order to save the life of the plaintiff, and for which, to the extent of their reasonable value, he would be liable (Civ. Code, § 36). Under the circumstances shown they were recoverable in the present action. Aubel v. Sosso, 72 Cal. App. 57, 236 P. 319; McManus v. Arnold Taxi Co., 82 Cal. App. 215, 255 P. 755.

We find no merit in the contention that the trial court erred in its rulings on the admissibility of certain evidence. The evidence was sufficient to sustain the findings of the jury, and the record discloses no error which would justify a reversal of the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

WEARE v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR IMPERIAL COUNTY. (Civ. 6418.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 4, 1929.

Justices of the peace ⟹160(3)—Notice of appeal from judgment for defendant in justice's court, timely served and filed, held to give superior court jurisdiction, though unsigned.

Notice of appeal from judgment entered in favor of defendant in justice's court, served and filed within due time, held sufficient to give superior court jurisdiction, though not signed by attorney for plaintiff or at all, statute providing for such appeals not in terms requiring that notice of appeal be signed, and since, so far as appearing from petition to prohibit review, notice of appeal may have been filed by plaintiffs themselves or their attorneys.

Application for writ of prohibition by C. F. Weare to be directed to the Superior Court in and for Imperial County to prohibit respondent from hearing an appeal from justice's court. Writ denied.

C. F. Weare, in pro. per.

PER CURIAM. In an action in the justice's court of Brawley township, wherein petitioner, Weare, was defendant, a judgment was entered in his favor. Thereafter, and within due time, a notice of appeal was served and filed. It is admitted that this notice was sufficient in all respects, except that it was not signed by the attorney for plaintiff, or at all. Petitioner moved the superior court to dismiss said purported appeal on the ground that the purported notice of appeal was insufficient to give the superior court jurisdiction of the cause. The court denied that motion, and set the case down for trial, and said court, unless prohibited from so doing, will proceed to a hearing and determination of the cause.

The statute which provides for such appeals does not in terms require that a notice of appeal be signed. So far as appears from the petition herein, the notice of appeal may have been filed and served by the plaintiffs themselves, or by their attorney. In our opinion, the stated facts are not sufficient to sustain the claim of petitioner that there is no pending appeal and that respondent court is without jurisdiction of said cause. In reaching this conclusion, we have not failed to consider the decision in Prescott v. Salthouse, 53 Cal. 221 (cited by petitioner), and the later cases, Harrigan v. Bolte, 67 Cal. xix, 8 P. 184; Anglo Cal. Trust Co. v. Oakland Railways, 191 Cal. 387, 216 P. 578, and Starkweather v. Eddy, 196 Cal. 73, 235 P. 734.

The petition is denied.

STANDARD DREDGING CO. v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. et al. (Civ. 6536.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1928.

1. Process 🔑87—Complete jurisdiction in action to recover and quiet title was obtained by personal service on corporation, having in its possession within court's territorial limits the fund, amounting to seizure, and service by publication on nonresident claimants.

Personal service on the corporation, having within the territorial limits of the court the fund, to quiet title to and to recover which the action was brought, was equivalent to a seizure of the fund, giving jurisdiction of the res, so that, with service on the nonresident claimants by publication and mailing of copy, as directed by order of court, the court had complete jurisdiction.

2. Bills and notes 🔑166—Notes by their terms subject to trust agreement held not negotiable under law in force when they were issued (Civ. Code, § 3088).

Notes payable to bearer, but providing that they are subject to terms of certain trust agreement, whereby in case of any of enumerated defaults they may be declared payable forthwith, held not negotiable under Civ. Code, § 3088, as in force January 1, 1915, when they were issued.

3. Constitutional law 🔑190—Notes nonnegotiable when issued cannot be made negotiable by subsequent legislation.

Notes being nonnegotiable under the law in force when they were issued they cannot be made negotiable by subsequent law; otherwise the Legislature would itself make a contract for the parties.

4. Principal and agent 🔑137(1)—Owner of nonnegotiable notes held not estopped to claim ownership against purchaser from its agent.

The notes owned by plaintiff being nonnegotiable, it is not estopped to deny the authority to sell them of its agent, who did so, and to assert its ownership, unless it appears that it clothed him with some authority to do so, and so not where his authority in the first instance was limited to pledging them to a bank, and according to the record his authority to do anything with them, other than return them to plaintiff, ceased when he received them from the bank, on the loan from it being paid with money furnished by plaintiff, and plaintiff thereafter demanded them from him, but never received them.

5. Evidence 🔑235—Declarations against interest by possessor of nonnegotiable note held admissible against his successors.

Declarations of one made while in possession of notes held admissible as declarations against interest of one in possession of personal property against his successors in interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Claude F. Purkitt, Judge.

Action by the Standard Dredging Company against the Title Insurance & Trust Company and another. From adverse judgments, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Elliott B. Davis and George F. Snyder, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Ralph H. Spotts, Charles I. Baker, L. L. Otis, and H. C. Allen, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent Title Ins. & Trust Co.

Leon A. Clark, of Oakland, for respondent Morgan.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This is an action brought by plaintiff, who is appellant herein, for money held by defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company, as a fund for the redemption of certain collateral trust notes, and to quiet title to the fund as against the other defendants. The collateral notes were issued by North American Dredging Company of Texas. The Title Insurance & Trust Company, a California corporation, of Los Angeles, was the trustee holding the collateral by which the notes were secured, which were by their terms payable at the office of the Title Insurance & Trust Company in Los Angeles.

The complaint alleges that ever since the 1st day of January, 1915, the plaintiff has been the owner of seven of these collateral trust notes, which are numbered respectively 104, 105, 210, 211, 394, 428, and 565; that notes numbered 104, 105, 210, and 211 are for the principal sum of $1,000 each, that notes numbered 394 and 428 are for $500 each, and that note numbered 565 is for $125; that the aggregate amount of the principal and accrued interest of the seven notes is $9,000; that all of the notes have matured, and that the defendant North American Dredging Company of Texas has deposited with defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company a fund in the sum of $9,000 for the purpose of redeeming these collateral trust notes, which sum is still held by the Trust Company. The complaint further alleges that the plaintiff is the owner of this fund. It is further alleged in the complaint that on February 18, 1915, the plaintiff delivered all of these notes to the defendant George C. Morgan, Jr., at Oakland, Cal., as its agent, with instructions to negotiate and secure a loan for the plaintiff and to use the notes as security therefor; that at the same time Morgan agreed in writing with the plaintiff that, in the event such loan should not be negotiated, he would thereupon return the notes to plaintiff; that Morgan never negotiated the loan, and never returned the notes; that at the time Morgan came into the possession of the notes he was a resident of Alameda county, Cal., but that for several years last past he has been absent from the state; that the notes 210 and 211 are in the possession of the defendant Mrs. Kendall Morgan.

By the complaint, plaintiff offers to give the defendant Title Insurance Company such indemnity as the court may deem proper and asks judgment against the Trust Company for the amount of the fund, upon giving such indemnity as the court may direct, and prays that plaintiff's title to the fund be quieted as to the other defendants. The summons and complaint were served on the defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company on February 17, 1925, and it filed its answer May 1, 1925. The defendants Mrs. Kendall Morgan and George C. Morgan, Jr., both resided out of the state of California; the former residing in Detroit, Mich., and the latter in Springfield, Mass.

After defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company had been served and filed its answer, the plaintiff filed an affidavit for publication of summons and secured an order directing that service be made on defendants Mrs. Kendall Morgan and George C. Morgan, Jr., by publication of the summons, which summons was thereafter published and mailed in accordance with the order of the court. The answer of defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company alleges that the security held under the trust agreement, at the request of the North American Dredging Company of Texas, was reconveyed to such company, and released under such trust agreement, upon deposit by it of a fund to redeem these notes; that the Trust Company held this fund pursuant to a trust agreement for the account of the legal owner and holder, or owners and holders, of the notes and respective interest coupons and for payment to such person or persons upon due surrender of such notes and coupons to defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company for cancellation. Mrs. Kendall Morgan appeared and filed an answer and cross-complaint, alleging her ownership of notes 210 and 211 for $1,000 each, and praying judgment against defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company for the amount of the principal and accrued interest. The plaintiff and the Trust Company filed answers to the cross-complaint of Mrs. Kendall Morgan.

The case came on for trial on January 18, 1926. On the day of the trial the defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company filed an amendment to its answer, setting up therein that George C. Morgan, Jr., is a necessary party to the action; that he is not within the state of California, and therefore the court has no jurisdiction of any property or any choses in action belonging to such defendant. At the conclusion of the evidence the defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company moved the court for a nonsuit, on the ground that the court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. The court granted the motion for nonsuit, and entered judgment in favor of Mrs. Kendall Morgan on her cross-complaint against Title Insurance & Trust Company for the amount of the principal and accrued interest of the two notes held by her, and quieting her title to the two notes and the amount of principal and interest due as against the plaintiff. $3,547 of the fund deposited by the North American Dredging Company has been deposited with the trial court by stipulation of respective counsel, pending the outcome of this appeal; such being the amount of the judgment in favor of the defendant Mrs. Kendall Morgan. From both the judgment of nonsuit and the judgment in favor of Mrs. Kendall Morgan, plaintiff has appealed.

[1] Appellant urges that the court has jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action; that the fund was within the state of California and in the possession of the defendant Title Insurance & Trust Company, which defendant had been served and had filed its answer; that this service and appearance conferred jurisdiction of the subject-matter; and that the service thereafter by publication gave jurisdiction of George C. Morgan, Jr., for the purpose of disposing of the fund.

The question presented by this objection is not a new one in this state. In State of California v. Security Savings Bank, 186 Cal. 419, 426, 199 P. 791, 794, the court quotes the following from Cooper v. Reynolds, 77 U. S. (10 Wall.) 317, 19 L. Ed. 931: "So also while the general rule in regard to jurisdiction in rem requires the actual seizure and possession of the res by the officer of the court, such jurisdiction may be acquired by acts which are of equivalent import, and which stand for and represent the dominion of the court over the thing, and in effect subject it to the control of the court. Among this latter class is the levy of a writ of attachment or seizure of real estate, which being incapable of removal, and lying within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, is for all practical purposes brought under the jurisdiction of the court by the officer's levy of the writ and return of that fact to the court. So the writ of garnishment or attachment, or other form of service, on a party holding a fund which becomes the subject of litigation, brings that fund under the jurisdiction of the court, though the money may remain in the actual custody of one not an officer of the court"—and follows with the announcement of the rule: "The service of the summons on the bank is, under the doctrine thus established, the equivalent of a seizure of the property of each depositor in his account with the bank and gives the court jurisdiction over it to the same extent as in cases in garnishment and other proceedings quasi in rem."

This case went to the United States Supreme Court (Security Savings Bank v. California, 263 U. S. 282, 44 S. Ct. 108, 68 L. Ed. 301, 31 A. L. R. 391), and in discussing the question here presented that court says: "Seizure of the deposit is effected by the personal service made upon the bank. Provident Institution for Savings v. Malone, 221 U. S. 660 [31 S. Ct. 661, 55 L. Ed. 899, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1129]. Thereby the res is subjected to the jurisdiction of the court. Compare Miller v. United States, 11 Wall. 268, 297, 298 [20 L. Ed. 135]; Alexandria v. Fairfax, 95 U. S. 774, 779 [24 L. Ed. 583]. The service upon the bank has the same effect as had service of the injunction in Pennington v. Fourth National Bank, 243 U. S. 269 [37 S. Ct. 282, 61 L. Ed. 713, L. R. A. 1917F, 1159], or the service upon the garnishee in Harris v. Balk, 198 U. S. 215, 223 [25 S. Ct. 625, 49 L. Ed. 1023, 3 Ann. Cas. 1084], or the application for administration of the debt due an absentee in Cunnius v. Reading School District, 198 U. S. 458 [25 S. Ct. 721, 49 L. Ed. 1125, 3 Ann. Cas. 1121], or the levy of the writ and return of the fact to the court on attachment of the real estate in Cooper v. Reynolds, 10 Wall. 308."

In Jellenik v. Huron Copper Mining Co., 177 U. S. 1, 20 S. Ct. 559, 44 L. Ed. 647, the court says: "The stock held by the defendants residing outside of Michigan who refused to submit themselves to the jurisdiction of the circuit court being regarded as personal property, the act of 1875 must be held to embrace the present case, if the stock in question is 'within the district' in which the suit was brought. Whether the stock is in Michigan so as to authorize that state to subject it to taxation as against individual shareholders domiciled in another state, is a question not presented in this case, and we express no opinion upon it. But we are of opinion that it is within Michigan for the purposes of a suit brought there against the company—such shareholders being made parties to the suit—to determine whether the stock is rightly held by them. * * * The corporation being brought into court by personal service of process in Michigan, and a copy of the order of court being served upon the defendants charged with wrongfully holding certificates of the stock in question, every interest involved in the issue as to the real ownership of the stock will be represented before the court."

In First National Bank of Broken Baw v. Bank of Horatio, 161 Ark. 259, 255 S. W. 881, in an action to cancel certificates of deposit brought in the county in which the bank holding the funds represented thereby was situated against nonresident defendants, the court held that constructive service was sufficient to bring the nonresidents into court since the action was quasi in rem or in the nature of a suit in rem, and the situs of the action was, therefore, the place where the fund was located.

Respondent relies principally on the holding in Belcher v. Chambers, 53 Cal. 635, quoted in Mudge v. Steinhart, 78 Cal. 34, 20 P. 147, 12 Am. St. Rep. 17, as follows: "The state, having within her territory property of a nonresident, may hold and appropriate it to satisfy the claims of her citizens against him, and her courts may inquire into his obligations to the extent necessary to control the disposition of such property; and in such a case service of summons by publication, or other form authorized by the law of the state, is sufficient to inform the nonresident of the object of the proceedings, provided the court obtains jurisdictions of the property by seizure, or some equivalent act, in rem, or in the nature of a proceeding in rem, the object being to enforce proceedings against the property."

In the Belcher Case, however, personal service was not had upon the defendants composing the banking firm of Page, Bacon & Co., holders of the funds due upon the certificates of deposit, but service was made on all defendants by publication, and defendant Bacon, whose property was seized under execution, being a resident of the state of Missouri. Belcher v. Chambers and State v. Security Savings Bank are, therefore, not analogous. If, however, it be held that they are, the more modern rule that the service of summons upon the bank holding the property is equivalent to a seizure of such property, has succeeded the early rule announced in the earlier case, if such rule, under the circumstances in the present case, was so announced.

Respondent argues that as State v. Security Savings Bank was an action under a statute providing for the escheat of unclaimed bank deposits, it is not in point here. We are not in accord with this view and see no difference in principle in the two cases. Furthermore, from the language used in State v. Security Savings Bank, it is apparent that the court in announcing the rule did so for future guidance. Under the decisions from which we have quoted we are of the opinion that the court erred in granting the nonsuit.

[2] On the appeal from the judgment in favor of respondent Mrs. Kendall Morgan it may be said that the collateral notes transferred to her by her husband, who received them from George C. Morgan, Jr., were not negotiable, being issued January 1, 1915, before the present Negotiable Instruments Law was enacted. The notes are payable to bearer and contain a provision that they are "subject to the terms and conditions contained in the trust agreement dated January 1, 1915, and executed between the company and the Title Insurance & Trust Company, as trustee, and all the rights of the holder thereof are subject to the provisions of said trust agreement." Article VIII of the trust agreement covers "Default and Remedies," and contains provisions not certain of fulfillment. Thus section 2 of the article provides: "If one of the events of default shall occur, the trustee may, and upon the written request of the holders of twenty-five per centum (25%) in amount of the notes issued hereunder then outstanding shall, by notice in writing delivered to the company, declare the principal of all notes issued hereunder, then outstanding, to be due and payable forthwith." Section 3088 of the Civil Code, as in force January 1, 1915, reads as follows: "A negotiable instrument must be made payable in money only and without any condition not certain of fulfillment, except that it may provide for the payment of attorney's fees and costs of suit, in case suit be brought thereon to compel the payment thereof."

Popp v. Exchange Bank, 189 Cal. 296, 208 P. 113, disposes of this question. There the court says: "The next contention of the plaintiff is that the bonds in question are not negotiable. We think this proposition must be sustained. The bonds were issued apparently in the state of New York on January 1, 1912. They are payable to the bearer, or to the registered holder in case the bonds be registered, and on their face they show that they are secured by a mortgage or trust deed upon real property, and they become due on January 1, 1962. The record does not show that they were ever registered. They are precisely similar in all respects to the bonds under consideration in Kohn v. Sacramento, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 1, 141 P. 626, and Crocker National Bank v. Byrne, 178 Cal. 329, 173 P. 752. In each of those cases bonds of that description were held to be nonnegotiable under the law of California in force in 1912, and the proposition must be considered as settled. The result is that the defendant cannot protect itself upon the rule, applying to negotiable instruments only, that where the holder thereof has by delivering the instrument to a third person clothed him with an apparent title thereto, and such third person disposes of it to an innocent purchaser, such purchaser obtains title as against the true owner, although the person to whom it was delivered had no authority to make a sale thereof. Chase v. Whitmore, 68 Cal. 547, 9 P. 942."

[3] While it is true that the Legislature, by an act which took effect on August 8, 1915, so amended our Code with relation to negotiable instruments as to make the notes here negotiable, the law in force at the time the contract is made must apply with respect to its interpretation, "otherwise the Legislature would itself make a contract for the parties." 1 Daniel on Negotiable Instruments, § 871; Popp v. Exchange Bank, supra.

[4] The notes in question being nonnegotiable, in order that plaintiff be estopped from denying the agent's authority to sell or dispose of them, it must appear that plaintiff had clothed its agent, George C. Morgan, Jr., with some authority to do so. According to the record the authority of George C. Morgan, Jr., to do anything with the collateral trust notes, other than to return them to plaintiff, ceased when he received the notes from the bank, upon the loan being paid with money furnished by plaintiff. His authority in the first instance was limited to pledging them to the Bank of Los Gatos. The plaintiff demanded them from him but never received them. Upon the record in its present state plaintiff is not, therefore, estopped to assert ownership. Chase v. Whitmore, 68 Cal. 545, 548, 9 P. 942. In the cases cited where the owner has been held estopped to claim property sold or pledged by an agent, the agent had either actual authority to pledge or to sell, or indicia of ownership, and in Wenban Estate, Inc., v. Hewlett, 193 Cal. 675, 227 P. 723, which respondent asserts "conclusively answers appellant's contention and its reliance on the Popp Case," Hewlett, as shown by the records of the corporation, was the actual owner of the stock transferred by him.

[5] We are of the opinion that the court should have admitted the declarations of defendant George C. Morgan, Jr., made while in possession of the notes, as the declarations against interest by one in possession of personal property are admissible against his successors in interest. Smith v. Goethe, 159 Cal. 628, 636–638, 115 P. 223, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 1205.

Under the view we have taken, it is unnecessary to discuss appellant's exception to the ruling of the court sustaining the objection to the introduction in evidence of the note and collateral agreement for which the notes in question were pledged as security, as the objection was sustained upon the theory that the coupon notes were negotiable, and that the court had no jurisdiction of George C. Morgan, Jr.

The judgments are reversed and the cause remanded.

CARROLL v. CENTRAL COUNTIES GAS CO. (two cases). (Civ. 3666, 3667.) ★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 6, 1929.

1. Death 🔑69—As respects recovery for daughter's death, proof of her attitude towards parent held permissible.

In action for damages for death of daughter, for purpose of showing loss to parent, it would be proper to permit introduction of testimony indicating attitude of deceased daughter towards parent and relations that existed between them.

2. Appeal and error 🔑1058(2)—Excluding proof of deceased daughter's attitude towards parent held harmless, as regards recovery for her death, in view of other proof.

In action for daughter's death, refusal to permit parent to show attitude of daughter toward him held harmless, where he was permitted to show that daughter was industrious and affectionate, and that she at times earned money and turned it over to him, and there being no question of excessive or insufficient damages.

3. Evidence 🔑552—Hypothetical question to engineers, coupling with inquiry regarding established engineering practice general custom prevailing throughout country, held objectionable.

Hypothetical question to engineers, whether method of constructing gas line across creek was in accordance with established engineering practice and general custom prevailing throughout the country in similar lines and crossing similar streams, held objectionable.

4. Negligence 🔑124(3)—Specific practice of others cannot be admitted as an excuse for alleged negligent act of defendant.

Where no contractual relations exist, and where there is no assumption of risk, the specific practice of others cannot be admitted as an excuse for the alleged negligent act of defendant.

5. Negligence 🔑62(3)—Proximate cause of injury may be laid in first negligent act, notwithstanding succeeding negligent act of another which should have been anticipated.

Even if negligent act is succeeded by a disconnected act of negligence of another person, and which results in injury to a third person, if original negligence was such that in ordinary and natural course of events second negligent act should have been anticipated as reasonably likely to happen, proximate cause of injury may be laid in first negligent act.

6. Appeal and error 🔑1170(9)—Trial 🔑194(16)—Instruction, that act of driver was independent act of third person, resulting in death of occupant when automobile was driven off bridge, held to invade province of jury, and required reversal under conflicting evidence (Const. art. 6, § 4½).

In action for damages for death of occupant of automobile, which, when driven off bridge, fell upon gas pipe, causing it to break and gas therein to be allegedly thrown upon occupants of automobile, instruction, wherein trial court determined as a matter of law that act of driver of automobile was the independent act of a third party, held erroneous as invading province of jury and to require reversal, under Const. art. 6, § 4½, where evidence was sharply conflicting upon material matters.

7. Trial 🔑250—Instruction regarding exemplary damages should not have been given where not called for by pleadings or evidence.

In action for death from automobile accident, instruction regarding exemplary damages should not have been given where not called for by pleadings or evidence.

Appeals from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Actions by Geneva Carroll, by her guardian ad litem, T. L. Carroll, and by R. P. Carroll, against the Central Counties Gas Company. From judgments for plaintiffs, and orders denying new trials, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed, and new trial granted.

E. J. Emmons, of Bakersfield, and G. L. Aynesworth, of Fresno, for appellants.

O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller, of Los Angeles, and Power & McFadzean, of Visalia (John A. Powell and Pierce Works, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. By stipulation the above two cases were tried together, the evidence offered and proceedings had in said trial applying to each of them, except the evidence as to the measure of damages.

These actions were brought by appellant, Geneva Carroll, for injuries sustained by her, and by R. P. Carroll, for the death of his daughter Belva Carroll, as they allege in their complaints, when the automobile in which the two women were riding as guests, ran off of a bridge and fell upon a gas pipe owned and operated by respondent, causing the pipe to crack or break and the gas flowing therein to escape therefrom, and become ignited and inflict serious burns upon the hands, face, and body of appellant, Geneva Carroll, and to so seriously burn the said Belva Carroll as to cause her death. The sole ground upon which appellants claim the respondent was guilty of negligence was that the pipe line, at the point where the accident occurred, was constructed, maintained, and operated in a negligent manner by respondent. Respondent denied the negligence, and set up contributory negligence on the part of appellants. The jury returned a verdict for respondent. Appellants filed motion for new trials; same were denied, and judgment in each case rendered in favor of defendants. Appellants appealed from the orders denying new trials and from the judgments.

The evidence on the part of appellants was to the effect that on the evening of December 10, 1926, four young boys and girls, among whom were appellant, Geneva Carroll, and deceased, Belva Carroll, were traveling in an automobile from Exeter to Visalia; one of the boys, John Ingram, was driving; that as the automobile approached the bridge, and while some 70 or 80 feet from its west end, they met a car, and Ingram swerved to the side of the road to let it pass; that the right-hand wheels of his automobile went off of the paved part of the road and ran that way for some distance before he could get them back on the paved part of the road; that, when some 20 or 30 feet from the west end of the bridge, he succeeded in getting the two right wheels upon the paved part of the road, but in doing so the automobile swerved to the left side of the road; that he turned the automobile to the right again, and it struck the north side of the bridge, broke through a wooden railing, and fell upon and broke the gas pipe and landed on top of the broken gas pipe in the bed of the creek; that the injuries to all of the occupants of the automobile, and the deaths of three of them, was caused by burns from the flame of the ignited gas that came from the broken gas pipe. Defendant produced evidence to the effect that none of the wheels of the automobile left the paved part of the highway in approaching the bridge, and that the gas did not ignite; that the gas pipe was not broken or cracked, so as permit gas to escape therefrom, except at the east end of the bridge, and that the fire that burned the occupants of the car was not caused by burning gas.

[1, 2] Appellant, R. P. Carroll, contends that the court erred in refusing to permit him to show the attitude of his deceased daughter Belva to him.

It is well settled that damages may be alleged for the pecuniary loss following the deprivation of society, comfort, and protection of a deceased child. Rocca v. Tuolumne County Electric Light & Power Co., 76 Cal. App. 569, 245 P. 468; Griffey v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 58 Cal. App. 509, 209 P. 45; Parsons v. Easton, 184 Cal. 764, 195 P. 419; Beeson v. Green Mountain G. M. Co., 57 Cal. 38. For the purpose of showing such loss, it would be material and proper to permit the introduction of testimony indicating the attitude of deceased toward her father and the relations, affectionate or otherwise, that existed between them.

However, the court did permit appellant R. P. Carroll to offer testimony to the effect that his daughter Belva was industrious and affectionate, and that she at times earned money and always turned it over to her father.

In view of the fact that there is no question of excessive or insufficient damages before the court, we do not believe that the action of the court in excluding further evidence of the attitude of Belva toward her father resulted in any prejudice to appellant R. P. Carroll.

[3, 4] The next contention of appellants is that certain evidence was improperly admitted by the court. Three witnesses were produced by respondent who, after qualifying as mechanical and constructive engineers, and stating that they were familiar with the crossing at Deep creek where the accident occurred, were each asked the following question by respondent attorney: "Q. I'll ask you to state whether or not the method in which this line was constructed and in which it crossed Deep creek at the point where this accident occurred, was in accordance with recognized and established engineering practice and general custom prevailing throughout the United States in similar lines and crossing similar streams?" To which question appellants' attorney objected upon the ground that the question was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial. The court overruled the objection, and each of the witnesses answered that it was. The uncontradicted evidence was: That the pipe line extended across the creek from buttress to buttress a distance of 54 feet; that it was 5 feet from the north side of the bridge, and 1 foot lower than the floor of the bridge, and about 6 feet above the bed of the creek; that the gas pipe was a 3-inch steel pipe and carried a pressure of from 60 to 80 pounds; that the gas pipe was enclosed within a 7-inch casing, the casing being disconnected at the ends, and was placed around the gas pipe only for the purpose of protecting it from the weather and to prevent the heat of the sun from expanding it; that there were no supports to said gas pipe other than the buttresses at each side of the creek, and that along the sides of the bridge was a wooden railing about 30 inches high, composed of 2 by 4 timbers. It was upon these facts that appellants founded their claims that respondent was guilty of negligence. The question as framed was objectionable in that it coupled with the inquiry regarding the recognized and established engineering practice, the general custom prevailing throughout the United States in similar lines and crossings of similar streams. Where no contractual relations exist, and where there is no assumption of the risk, as in the case where the relation of master and servant is concerned, the specific practice of others cannot be admitted in testimony as an excuse for the alleged negligent act of the defendant. Phoenix Assurance Co. Ltd. of London et al. v. Texas Holding Co., 81 Cal. App. 61, 252 P. 1082. The standard of care required of persons under given circumstances is not to be established by proof that others have been in the habit of acting in a certain manner. Rudd v. Byrnes, 156 Cal. 636, 105 P. 957, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 20 Ann. Cas. 124.

[5] The more serious matters calling for the consideration of the court upon this appeal are the two instructions given by the trial court at the request of respondent, and referred to by appellants in their brief as instructions A and B. Respondent's instructions were not numbered. The instructions referred to as A and B are as follows:

"(A) Even though you find defendant was negligent, still if you find that the injury complained of would not have resulted except for the independent negligent act of the owner of the automobile, then I instruct you that such independent act breaks the chain of causation and that your verdict must be in favor of the defendant."

"(B) The law considers only the direct cause and not the remote cause of an event. Ordinarily, even where one is negligent, but where no injury results except through the independent act of a third person, the first party is not liable for such injuries. The first party is only liable if he ought reasonably to have foreseen the occurrence of such independent act, and to have guarded against it. In the case at bar, if you find the defendant was not negligent in maintaining its gas pipe, then your verdict must be for the defendant. If, however, you should find that defendant was negligent, still the act of the owner of the car was an independent act of a third person, and you cannot find defendant liable for resulting injuries, unless you also find that defendant. in the exercise of ordinary care, ought reasonably to have anticipated the occurrence of such independent act and have provided against it."

In effect, these two instructions virtually directed a verdict for the respondent.

We think the court erred in instructing the jury as it did by said instructions A and B, that the act of the driver of the automobile was an independent act of a third person. In the case of Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co., 74 Cal. App. 303, 240 P. 53, Finch, P. J., delivered the opinion of the court, and collated therein many of the decisions of this state bearing upon this question. Relative to the independent act of a third person operating to relieve a defendant from the consequences of his own negligent act, the court said: "Respondent contends that, if it be conceded that it was guilty of negligence in the maintenance of its pipe-line, such negligence was not the proximate cause of the alleged injury, but that 'the act of the automobilist who forced the car in which plaintiff was riding off the road was the proximate cause of the injury.' The defendant's negligence, however, was continuous in its nature, existent at all times up to the moment of the injury. Under a state of facts not distinguishable in legal effect from those here involved, it is said: 'The independent wrongful act, to constitute the proximate cause by displacing the original primary cause, must be so disconnected in time and nature as to make it plain that the damage occasioned was in no way a natural or probable consequence of the original wrongful act or omission. * * * The original act of negligence, the primary causation, may be in its nature so continuous that the concurrent wrongful act precipitating the disaster will in law be regarded not as independent, but as conjoining with the original act to create the disastrous result.'" Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 P. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134; Marton v. Jones, 44 Cal. App. 299, 186 P. 410; Parkin v. Grayson-Owen Co., 25 Cal. App. 269, 143 P. 257.

Even if the negligent act is succeeded by a disconnected act of negligence of another person, and which results in injury to a third person, if the original negligence was such that, in the ordinary and natural course of events, the second negligent act should have been anticipated as reasonably likely to happen, the proximate cause of the injury may be laid in the first negligent act. Sawyer v. Hooper, 79 Cal. App. 395, 249 P. 530; Feeney v. Standard Oil Co., 58 Cal. App. 587, 209 P. 85; 12 R. C. L. 913.

[6] If respondent did in fact maintain its gas pipe line in such close proximity to the bridge as to endanger the lives or safety of the public traveling thereon, then such maintenance was a continuing negligence, and, under these circumstances, respondent would be charged with the duty of anticipating the natural and ordinary consequences of its negligence. Hale v. Pacific Tel. & Tel. Co., 42 Cal. App. 55, 183 P. 280. The question, of whether or not the act of the driver of the automobile was the independent act of a third person, was a question of fact for the jury. There is no evidence in this case that warranted the trial court in determining as a matter of law that the act of the driver of the automobile was the independent act of a third party. By so declaring in these two instructions the court invaded the province of the jury.

This court is of the opinion that the aforesaid errors seriously prejudiced the substantial rights of the appellants. There is a sharp conflict in the evidence upon material matters, and this court cannot say that the jury was not influenced in rendering its verdict for respondent by reason of said errors. Therefore, the provisions of section 4½ of article 6 of the Constitution cannot be invoked for the purpose of upholding the said judgments.

[7] As it will be necessary to have a retrial of these cases, the court suggests that, inasmuch as no facts are set forth in the complaint calling for punitive or exemplary damages, and no evidence offered under any such claim by appellants, the instruction regarding exemplary damages should not have been given. The motion for a new trial should have been granted.

The orders denying motions for new trials and the judgments are reversed.

S. C. INGRAM, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. CENTRAL COUNTIES GAS COMPANY (a Corporation), Defendant and Respondent.

(Civ. 3668, 3669.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 7, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 6, 1929.

Appeals by plaintiffs from judgments of the Superior Court of Tulare County, Frank Lamberson, Judge, in actions for damages for personal injuries. Reversed.

E. J. Emmons, of Bakersfield, and G. L. Aynesworth, of Fresno, for appellants.

O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller, of Los Angeles, and Power & McFadzean, of Visalia (John A. Powell and Pierce Works, both of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. By stipulation of the parties the above two cases, upon the evidence produced and instructions given in the cases of Geneva Carroll, etc., v. Central Counties Gas Co. and R. P. Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co. (Cal. App.) 273 P. 875, this day decided, were submitted to the same jury that tried said last-named cases. The jury returned verdicts in favor of respondents. Appellants filed motions for new trials, which were denied, and judgments were rendered in favor of respondent. From the orders denying their motions for new trials, and from said judgments, defendants have appealed.

For the reasons set forth in the opinion of this court in the aforesaid cases, orders denying motions for new trials and the judgments in these two cases are reversed.

CHRISTOPHEL, County Treasurer, v. RILEY, State Controller, et al. (S. F. 13044.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1929.

1. Drains 🔑85—Provision permitting landowners in drainage district to tender district warrants in payment of assessment is valid and mandatory on county treasurer (St. 1927, pp. 1505, 1509, §§ 3, 13; St. 1919, p. 1111, § 54).

St. 1927, p. 1509, § 13, permitting landowners within boundaries of drainage district to present district warrants in payment of assessments levied under section 3, and St. 1919, p. 1111, § 54, is valid, and makes county treasurer's receipt of warrant in payment of assessment mandatory.

2. Constitutional law 🔑70(1)—Court will not, by construction, confer on ministerial state officers authority not given by statute.

Court, in interpreting powers vested by Legislature in ministerial officers of state, will not by construction confer upon such officers authority which Legislature has seen fit to withhold.

3. Mandamus 🔑118—County treasurer held not entitled to mandamus to require state officers to give credit for warrant which county treasurer was required to accept in payment of drainage district assessment (St. 1919, p. 1111, § 54; St. 1927, pp. 1505, 1509, §§ 3, 13; Pol. Code, § 3865; Code Civ. Proc. § 1085).

County treasurer, required to accept warrants of drainage district in payment of assessments levied by district under St. 1919, p. 1111, § 54, and St. 1927, pp. 1505, 1509, §§ 3, 13, held not entitled to mandamus to require state controller and treasurer to credit him with amount of warrant under Pol. Code, § 3865, requiring county treasurers to settle with state controller and pay over to state treasurer all moneys in their possession belonging to the state, since mandamus lies only to compel performance of duty resulting from office under Code Civ. Proc. § 1085, and duty of state officers in this respect is not provided for by statute.

Application by Frank P. Christophel, as County Treasurer of the County of Sacramento, for writ of mandate prayed to be directed by Ray L. Riley, as State Controller, and Charles G. Johnson, as State Treasurer. Writ denied.

Stephen W. Downey, Downey, Brand & Seymour, and Frederick H. Pierce, Jr., all of Sacramento, for petitioner.

Devlin & Devlin, of Sacramento, amici curiæ.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Robert W. Harrison, Chief Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Petition for writ of mandate, to compel the respondents, as controller and treasurer, respectively, of the state of California, to credit petitioner, as treasurer of Sacramento county, with the amount of a certain warrant tendered by a landowner to, and accepted by, petitioner in part payment of Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6, levied upon landowners in the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district.

The Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district is a state agency, legally created, and the management and control thereof is vested in the reclamation board of the state of California. On November 6, 1917, the board adopted and determined upon a project known and designated as "Sutter-Butte By-Pass Project Number Six." By resolution, said board authorized and approved the imposition of an assessment, totaling $8,144,327.33, upon such lands of the drainage district as would be benefited by the contemplated project, and separate assessment lists were duly forwarded to the county treasurer of each county where any of the lands so assessed were situate. This assessment was validated in a proceeding instituted in the superior court of Sutter county, three judges sitting, and the judgment was affirmed by this court. In re Sutter-Butte By-Pass Assessment No. 6, etc., 191 Cal. 650, 218 P. 27.

A bond issue, with the proceeds of which the reclamation board proposed to defray the expenses of the project for which the assessment had been levied, proving unsuccessful, the Legislature authorized the board, in its discretion, to order the cancellation of the issue, and to call for the payment of the assessment whenever it appeared that the bonds had not been sold within a year from their issuance. Stats. 1919, c. 520, § 54, p. 1111. In 1927, the Legislature passed an emergency measure known as the "Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District Refunding Act," in which, among other provisions, it was made the duty of the reclamation board to cancel all proceedings taken in connection with the bond issue relating to project No. 6, and to take certain steps looking to the levying of a supplementary assessment No. 6 upon all the lands within the drainage district. Stats. 1927, c. 774, § 3, p. 1505. It was further provided in the act (section 13, p. 1509) that any owner or holder of lands within the boundaries of the district whose lands were subject to assessment No. 6 or the supplemental assessment should have the right to present to any officer authorized by law to collect such assessment warrants of the district issued in connection with project No. 6 prior to the effective date of the act, May 26, 1927, and it was made the duty of such officers to accept such warrants in payment, at their face value, plus accrued interest, on account of such assessment.

In accordance with the provisions of these legislative enactments, the reclamation board, on January 25, 1928, made its order canceling all unsold bonds of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district based upon and secured by the Sutter-Butte by-pass assessment No. 6, and directed the payment of the assessment in semiannual installments of a specified amount. Thereafter, an owner of certain lands in Sacramento county subject to such assessment tendered to the petitioner, in part payment of his obligation, a warrant of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district issued in connection with said project No. 6. Petitioner accepted the warrant, together with certain cash, and credited the particular assessment as having been paid. Subsequently, the respondents, in selling accounts with the county treasurer, declined to accept the warrant from petitioner, and this mandamus proceeding was thereupon instituted.

[1-3] The statute makes it mandatory upon the petitioner, as county treasurer, to receive at full face value, and accept in lieu of so much cash, any warrant of the drainage district tendered by a landholder in payment of the assessment on his land. It is the settled law of this state that such a provision is valid. Hershey v. Reclamation Dist. No. 730, 162 Cal. 401, 405, 122 P. 1074. The important question for our consideration is whether or not the respondents state controller and state treasurer, have any duty to perform in the matter. If they have not, no writ should issue, for mandamus lies only to compel the performance of an act which the law specially enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust, or station. Code Civ. Proc., § 1085. While this court will go to all reasonable lengths in interpreting the powers vested by the Legislature in the ministerial officers of the state, in order to give effect to the laws and subserve the ends of justice, it will not by construction confer upon such officers authority which the Legislature has seen fit to withhold. San Francisco, etc., L. Co. v. Banbury, 106 Cal. 129, 135, 39 P. 439. County treasurers are required to "settle with the [state] controller, and pay over to the [state] treasurer all moneys in their possession belonging to the state." Pol. Code, § 3865. Warrants are not money. While, in certain transactions, they may be made to represent money, they are not money. There is not to be found any provision of law in the general statutes relating to the state treasurer which makes it the duty of that officer to accept warrants as cash in settling with county treasurers. The Refunding Act, supra, which makes it the duty of the county treasurer to accept the warrants as cash at their face value, plus accrued interest, when tendered in payment of the assessments levied in connection with project No. 6, contains no other provision even remotely relating to the matter. There seems to have been a clear omission on the part of the Legislature to provide for the further disposition of the warrants after their receipt by the county treasurer. The precise situation is well presented by the plea of the Attorney General, representing the respondents here, that, if this court grants the writ prayed for, and compels the state officers to accept this particular warrant in settling with the petitioner, it should go further and tell respondents what to do with the warrant when they have it. We are not inclined to assume that burden. In view of the clear omission of any provision in the Refunding Act declaring what the action of the state officers should be in such a case, we feel the question is one which should be referred to the Legislature which is now in biennial session. The matter is one for its consideration rather than for this court.

The petition for the writ is denied.

FIRST TRUST & SAVINGS BANK OF PASADENA v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY.
(L. A. 8171.)

As Modified Feb. 15, 1929.

1. Taxation ⚿866 — Beneficiary's estate had equitable interest, until corpus of trust was paid to beneficiary's executor in accordance with trust, as regards taxation.

Under trust providing for payment by trustee of income to beneficiary and on her death for payment of corpus of trust to beneficiary's executor, estate, as the successor in interest of beneficiary, had equitable interest in trust property until corpus was paid over to executor, as regards taxation of estate's interest in the trust.

2. Taxation ⚿866—Estate of beneficiary of trust, corpus of which was payable to beneficiary's executor, held taxable as equitable owner of property before executor was appointed and received property.

Under trust providing income should be paid to beneficiary for life and on her death entire corpus of trust was to be paid to her executor, beneficiary had equitable interest therein, and her estate was taxable as equitable owner of property before executor was appointed and received corpus of property.

3. Taxation ⚿904—Irregularity in taxing solvent credits of estate instead of beneficial interest held no ground for recovering taxes.

That taxes were collected from estate on solvent credits of estate, rather than on beneficial interests of estate, held no ground for recovery of taxes as not assessable on solvent credits, since action is in equity and taxes cannot be recovered for mere irregularity.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles S. Burnell, Judge.

Action by the First Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena against the County of Los Angeles. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 262 P. 355.

Everett W. Mattoon, W. Sumner Holbrook, Jr., Edward T. Bishop, Co. Counsel, J. A. Tucker, Deputy Co. Counsel, and Woodward M. Taylor, Deputy Co. Counsel, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

J. W. Morin, of Pasadena, and James S. Bennett, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment allowing recovery of taxes paid by the plaintiff as executor of the last will of Caroline Dillingham. Her estate consisted of a substantial interest as beneficiary under a trust in which a Wisconsin company was trustee. The terms of the trust were that the trustee should hold the corpus of the trust, and invest and reinvest the same, paying over the income to the beneficiary, and upon her death the entire corpus of the trust was to be paid to her executor.

The will of decedent was admitted to probate and the respondent was appointed executor thereof on March 7, 1922. The trustee subsequently sold the capital stock constituting the trust fund and remitted the proceeds to the executor. The first Monday in March of the year 1922 fell on the 6th, the day before the executor was appointed. Some time thereafter the assessment was levied.

[1, 2] The question presented by the appeal is whether the interest which the estate had in said trust on March 6, 1922, was taxable. The estate, as the successor in interest of Caroline Dillingham, also had an equitable interest in the trust property until the corpus was paid over to the executor. In the case of Estate of Dillingham, 196 Cal. 525, 238 P. 367, involving this same trust, it was held that this equitable interest constituted taxable property in this state for the purpose of inheritance taxation. It has been held that the rules of construction with reference to the use of the word "property," in our Inheritance Tax Law (St. 1921, p. 1500) are applicable to the same term in the laws governing the levy and collection of an ordinary property tax. Chambers v. Mumford, 187 Cal. 228, 201 P. 588, 42 A. L. R. 342. It follows, therefore, that the estate was taxable as the equitable owner of the property involved here even before the executor was appointed and received the corpus of the property. Upon that question, the case of City of St. Albans v. Avery, 95 Vt. 249, 114 A. 31, would also be persuasive here, but the reasoning of that case need not be relied upon as a precedent, since this court has passed upon the very trust in question here for the purposes of inheritance taxation in the Estate of Dillingham, supra, and it has been held that the same rule and reasoning is applicable upon the question involved here.

[3] But it is insisted by respondent that the assessment here did not purport to be one upon the beneficial interest of the estate, but upon solvent credits of said estate. Technically, the position of respondent is sound, but this is an action in equity, and, as stated in Steele v. San Luis Obispo, 152 Cal. at page 787, 93 P. 1021: "The rules based upon the maxim that he who seeks equity must do equity are applicable in suits to recover taxes paid. The idea upon which such a suit is predicated is that the county or municipality has received that which in justice it ought not to retain, and, therefore, when the proceedings have been simply irregular, the action will not lie." In the case of Pierce v. Santa Barbara Co., 40 Cal. App. 302, 180 P. 641, it was said: "In actions, such as the present one, to recover taxes, as well as in actions to enjoin or set aside tax deeds, the law is that when there is a moral obligation to pay the tax, it cannot be revoked on account of some technical defect rendering the assessment void."

The judgment is reversed.

DORRIAN v. CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO. (Civ. 6393.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 29, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1929.

1. Quieting title ⚷44(1)—Plaintiff, in action against city to quiet title, had burden to show that father as source had actual possession when statutes relinquished lands to occupants (St. 1858, p. 52).

Plaintiff, in action against city to quiet title to land formerly used as street, and recover damages for withholding possession from plaintiff, had burden to show that father, under whom she claimed title, was in actual possession of the property when the Van Ness Ordinance, St. 1858, p. 52, providing for the relinquishment of lands within city to persons in actual possession, with certain exceptions and reservations, was passed, including streets and other public places.

2. Quieting title ⚷44(4)—Evidence held to sustain finding, in action to quiet title, that plaintiff had no title (St. 1858, p. 52).

Evidence, in action to quiet title and to recover damages for withholding possession, held to sustain finding that plaintiff had no title, since father, under whom she claimed title, never had title to the property in question through possession when the Van Ness Ordinance, St. 1858, p. 52, relinquishing certain lands to persons in possession, was passed.

3. Quieting title ⚷44(2)—Evidence, showing ownership of lands bordering tract to which title was sought to be quieted, held inadmissible to prove possession or title to tract.

Evidence, in action against city to quiet title to land and to recover damages for withholding possession from plaintiff showing ownership by common reputation of lands adjacent to tract to which title was sought to be quieted, held inadmissible to prove possession or title to such tract.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Mary Keenan Dorrian against the City and County of San Francisco. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Bordwell, Mathews & Wadsworth and O. S. McConnell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John J. O'Toole, City Atty., and Walter A. Dold, Asst. City Atty., both of San Francisco, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant and respondent, the city and county of San Francisco, in an action brought by plaintiff and appellant, Mary Keenan Dorrian, to quiet title to, and recover damages for withholding possession of, certain lands in San Francisco, which land was formerly a public street known as Ash street.

Ash street was near the center of the block of land in San Francisco, now occupied by the city hall, having run parallel to McAllister and Fulton streets between Polk street and Van Ness avenue. The street was 35 feet wide and 384 feet in length. The record does not disclose when this property was first used as a public street. It was conceded that Ash street came into existence as a public street by use and not by dedication or action on the part of the municipal authorities. It was recognized as a public street at least as early as 1858 in conveyances covering property adjacent thereto, and was apparently used and recognized as a public street until 1913.

Although the action was not brought to trial until 1924, the complaint was filed in 1918. The statute of limitations was not pleaded, as the action was commenced within five years after the formal abandonment of Ash street as a public street in 1913.

Appellant is the sole surviving heir of her father, John Keenan, who died in 1858, and appellant's claim is based upon her contention that said John Keenan was the owner of the property described in the complaint at the time of his death. Appellant's case was apparently tried on the theory that John Keenan obtained title through the so-called "Van Ness Ordinance" hereinafter referred to. On this appeal it is contended that testimony shows without contradiction that appellant is the owner of the property, and that the adverse findings on the issue of ownership are not supported by the evidence.

The issue of ownership was tried solely upon various stipulations of counsel and the testimony of Henry E. Monroe. In view of these stipulations it will be unnecessary to go exhaustively into the interesting history of the source of title.

It was stipulated that in 1853 the city was the owner in fee of this property and the lands adjacent thereto. In that year one Francis Quail executed a deed purporting to convey to John Keenan a large tract of land, including the land in question. It was not contended that this deed vested in Keenan anything more than such squatter's rights, if any, as Quail may have had. No conveyance of any of this land was ever made by the city to either Quail or Keenan. For convenience, we will hereafter refer to the large tract of land covered by the Quail deed to Keenan as the "Keenan tract."

In 1855, the so-called "Van Ness Ordinance" was passed in San Francisco. There were in fact two ordinances, which were subsequently ratified by the Legislature on March 11, 1858. Stats. 1858, p. 52. The first of these ordinances, known as ordinance No. 822, provided for the relinquishment of certain lands within the city of San Francisco, which came to the United States through the Mexican conquest, to persons in actual possession, with certain exceptions and reservations including streets and other public places. The actual possession referred to was "actual possession thereof by themselves or tenants on or before the first day of January," 1855; "provided such possession has been continued up to the time of the introduction of this ordinance in the common council, or, if interrupted by an intruder, or trespasser, has been, or may be, recovered by legal process." The second of these ordinances, known as ordinance No. 845, provided for the furnishing, through a commission, of a recommendation for a plan of streets. This map was subsequently prepared, and became known as the Van Ness map. Ash street was not delineated upon the Van Ness map.

Shortly after Keenan's death in 1858 his heirs conveyed to others certain property adjacent to Ash street. In each instance the property conveyed was described as running to and along the line of Ash street, but did not include any part of Ash street, nor was any part of Ash street ever conveyed by the Keenans. Ash street was used as a public street until the formal abandonment shortly before the erection of the new city hall.

Mr. Monroe, the vice president and chief counsel of the California Pacific Title Insurance Company, was called as a witness by appellant for the purpose of establishing ownership by common reputation. After considerable discussion between court and counsel, the testimony of Mr. Monroe was admitted over the objection of counsel for respondent, who subsequently made a motion to strike all of this testimony. This motion was not ruled upon, the court no doubt deeming a ruling immaterial, in view of the decision in favor of respondent. As appellant's position on this appeal is based mainly on this evidence, we will briefly set forth the substance of Mr. Monroe's testimony.

Mr. Monroe testified: That the abstract of title showed that the successors of John Keenan had conveyed the property on either side of Ash street, and that there was nothing of record to show that any one else had deeded this property. That the Keenan title had always been recognized as a good source of title to all of the Keenan tract, and that the records did not disclose any controversy. That title men, searchers of records, and abstract men, as far as his knowledge of any titles in San Francisco went, back to 1890, recognized the Keenan tract as a valid source of title. That the Keenans never received any deed from the city. That, of course, his knowledge came from an examination of records in the last 25 or 30 years and from information he got from older title men, since deceased. That he remembered going over the origin of different claims with these men, but wouldn't specifically say the Keenan tract. That he could not say, in his conferences with these title men, the question of the validity of the title of the Keenan tract was ever brought up or doubted. All the old searchers and attorneys recognized and laid down a principle that these old claims, where there was no dispute at all, were to be accepted as a source of title. That, as far as the record went, there was no dispute over the Keenan tract. These old possessory claims were accepted by the abstract companies and searchers and were passed along without any question. That city deeds were required by them after the Supreme Court decided that it was necessary in order to establish title of record. These were obtained up to the time of the fire, and since then the board of supervisors refused to grant any more city deeds. That searchers had recognized the title to the Keenan tract without any city deed. That there are no suits of record involving the possession of the Keenan tract, and nothing in his records to show any possession or confirmation of possession in Keenan. That the only evidence recognizing possession officially would be a city deed, and there was no city deed.

There is some difficulty in determining from the transcript and the appellant's briefs whether appellant claims title under the provisions of the Van Ness Ordinance or whether appellant claims title without relying upon that ordinance. On this appeal counsel lays stress upon the presumptions set forth in subdivisions 11 and 12 of section 1963 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Subdivision 11 provides a presumption "that things which a person possesses are owned by him." Subdivision 12 provides a presumption "that a person is the owner of property from exercising acts of ownership over it, or from common reputation of his ownership." Counsel's opening brief is largely devoted to setting forth the evidence on which counsel claims to have proved possession, exercise of acts of ownership, and common reputation of ownership. Assuming that there was competent evidence proving or tending to prove these facts, the result would be that the proof of these facts would give rise to a disputable presumption of ownership. Ordinarily such proof and the resultant presumption would not compel the conclusion of ownership in the party making such proof as against the admitted ownership of the other party prior thereto. Here the parties stipulated that the city was the owner in 1853, and that no conveyance of the property was made by the city at any time, and we are satisfied that in this case appellant's claim, if any, is dependent upon the Van Ness Ordinance.

[1] In order to divest the city of title and prove title in John Keenan under the provisions of the Van Ness Ordinance, the burden was upon the plaintiff to show that John Keenan was in actual possession of the property herein referred to on or before January 1, 1855, and continued in possession until the introduction of the ordinance. "There is no presumption that any portion of the land covered by the ordinance was or was not in the actual possession of any one during this period; but, in any legal proceeding in which the fact whether a particular parcel of land was or was not then held in actual possession becomes material, it must be established by that party who relies upon the fact as an affirmative issue in support of his claim or defense. (Code Civ. Proc. sec. 1981.)" Goodwin v. Scheerer, 106 Cal. 690, 696, 40 P. 18, 19.

[2] Appellant concedes that there was no direct evidence of actual possession by Keenan of the property involved in this action and referred to as Ash street. In fact there was no direct evidence to show that Quail or Keenan was ever in actual possession of any portion of the so-called Keenan tract. But it is contended that the property described in Quail's deed was always known as the Keenan tract, and that "the historical fact that the property embracing Ash Street was publicly and notoriously known as Keenan Tract is 'justly entitled to the highest consideration' and furnished 'a just inference' that John Keenan was in possession of the land covered in the Quail deed and was owner thereof." Assuming, but not deciding, that a just inference would be furnished by such testimony, there is no evidence showing that any property was publicly or notoriously known as the Keenan tract in 1855 or at any other time. All that is shown is that Mr. Monroe and counsel on the trial referred to the property described in the Quail deed as the Keenan tract. Mr. Monroe did not testify that this tract was known, publicly or otherwise, as the Keenan tract in 1855 or at any other time, or that he ever discussed this particular tract with any one. Furthermore, we are here concerned with the property formerly embraced in Ash street, which property, so far as is affirmatively shown by the record, was at least as early as 1858 publicly and notoriously known as Ash street, and was used as a public street until 1913. Stress is laid upon the fact that Ash street was not delineated on the Van Ness map. At most, this could only tend to show that Ash street was not a street at the time the map was made, but would not relieve appellant from affirmatively proving that Keenan was in actual possession of the land at the time referred to in the Van Ness Ordinance. Proof of possession by Keenan in 1855 of the property described in the complaint, and known as Ash street was essential to plaintiff's claim of ownership by virtue of the Van Ness Ordinance, and the evidence is insufficient to prove such possession, and leaves this question of possession to conjecture and speculation. We conclude that the appellant failed to sustain the burden of proving her ownership of the property, and that the evidence was sufficient to sustain the findings adverse to appellant on this issue.

We do not wish to be understood as deciding that possession or ownership may be proved by common reputation of ownership in a case of this kind, or that the evidence offered was competent evidence to prove common reputation. The authorities are not entirely in accord. For the reasons above set forth, we do not deem it necessary to discuss the authorities cited by counsel dealing with these questions.

[3] It should be further noted that any common reputation of ownership or exercise of acts of ownership, which it may be claimed that the testimony tended to show, related to adjacent land in the so-called Keenan tract and not to Ash street, the property here involved. Such testimony cannot be relied upon to prove possession in 1855 of the property herein involved and referred to as Ash street, nor to establish the title thereto.

The judgment is affirmed.

MUSTO v. GROSJEAN et al. (Civ. 6544.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 10, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 9, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 11, 1929.

1. Contracts 🔑173—Mutual covenants going to entire consideration are mutual conditions and dependent.

Mutual covenants going to the entire consideration are mutual conditions, and dependent.

2. Mortgages 🔑25(5)—Default of vendor in improving premises as covenanted, where not sole consideration for mortgage by purchaser, was partial failure of consideration.

Where covenant by vendor to improve premises was not sole consideration for mortgage by purchaser to vendor, default of vendor in carrying out covenant constituted partial failure of consideration, for which mortgagor could be adequately compensated in damages.

3. Contracts 🔑173—Covenant going only to part of consideration, breach of which is compensable in damages, is independent covenant.

When covenant goes only to part of consideration and breach may be compensated in damages, it is to be regarded as independent covenant.

4. Mortgages 🔑25(5)—Vendor's default in not performing covenant, constituting part of consideration for purchaser's mortgage to vendor, did not bar foreclosure.

Where covenant by vendor to improve premises was only part of consideration of mortgage by purchaser to vendor, default of vendor did not bar action to foreclose mortgage.

5. Mortgages 🔑489—Mortgagee obligated to make improvements, agreeing not to collect interest pending improvements, held not precluded from recovering interest on foreclosure, where mortgagor in effect recovered cost of improvements.

Where mortgagee agreed that interest on mortgage was not to be payable pending improvements to be placed on property by mortgagee, but action to foreclose purchase-money mortgage was brought after principal sum of debt had matured, and mortgagor counterclaimed for cost of improvements which was allowed by court as against judgment for mortgage debt, mortgagor could not claim mortgagee was not entitled to interest on mortgage after in effect obtaining judgment for cost of improvements.

6. Executors and administrators 🔑224—Counsel fees in foreclosing mortgage held not allowable against estate of mortgagor, unless claim was first presented to administratrix (Code Civ. Proc. § 1500).

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1500, counsel fees could not be allowed on foreclosure of mortgage against estate of mortgagor unless claim based on mortgage had first been presented to administratrix.

7. Mortgages 🔑460—Burden of proving cost of improvement to have been made by mortgagee, held on mortgagor claiming damages therefor on foreclosure.

Where making of improvements to be placed on premises by mortgagee was not condition precedent to right to foreclose purchase-money mortgage, burden of proving cost of making improvements as part of damages claimed by mortgagors rested on mortgagors.

8. Witnesses 🔑144(9)—Mortgagee held competent to testify in foreclosure by assignee against mortgagor's administratrix (Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3).

In suit by assignee of mortgagee to foreclose mortgage, brought against administratrix of mortgagor's estate, mortgagee was competent to testify as witness, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1880, subd. 3.

9. Mortgages 🔑489—Mortgagee, waiving interest to compensate mortgagor for delay in not making improvements, held not liable for rent which mortgagor might have received in addition to cost of improvements on foreclosure.

Where mortgagee, required to make improvement on premises, agreed that interest was not to be payable pending making of improvements, and intended that any loss due to delay in making improvements was to be compensated by deferring interest payments on mortgage, mortgagor, on foreclosure of mortgage, could not claim amount for loss of rent which he might have received had property been improved in addition to cost of making improvements.

10. Damages 🔑68—Mortgagors' damages for mortgagee's failure to improve premises held uncertain, precluding recovery of interest thereon prior to judgment (Civ. Code, § 3287).

In suit to foreclose mortgage, in which mortgagors counterclaimed for damages resulting by mortgagee's failure to make improvements as agreed, damages suffered by mortgagor were unliquidated and uncertain and not capable of being made certain within Civ. Code, § 3287, and hence interest thereon could not be recovered prior to judgment.

11. Vendor and purchaser 🔑201—Under contract entitling purchaser to improve premises and apply cost on mortgage debt if vendor failed, action by purchaser was wholly optional.

Under contract by vendor to improve premises, providing that, if vendor failed to fulfill contract, purchaser should have right to do so or cause premises to be improved and apply cost on mortgage debt, action by purchaser was wholly optional.

12. Limitation of actions 🔑149(2)—Supplemental agreement by vendor deferring interest payments on mortgage pending completion of improvements held unequivocal acknowledgment of obligation to complete improvements, taking case out of statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1).

Where vendor agreed to complete improvements on premises by December 15, 1919, supplemental agreement postponing payment of interest on mortgage to vendor pending completion of work was unequivocal acknowledgment by vendor of obligation to pay for improvements, sufficient to show continuing contract and take case out of statute of limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 337, subd. 1).

13. Mortgages ⚷256—Assignment of nonnegotiable note secured by mortgage, and mortgage referring to contract obligating mortgagee to make improvements, held part of one agreement, and did not prejudice mortgagor's defense existing before notice of assignment (Civ. Code, § 1459).

Where note secured by mortgage was not negotiable instrument, and together with mortgage expressly referred to contract requiring mortgagee to make improvements on premises, instruments were part of one agreement, and assignment of note and mortgage to plaintiff was without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing to mortgagor at time and before notice of assignment, under Civ. Code, § 1459.

Appeals from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by Marie A. Musto against Ellen S. M. Grosjean, as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of C. E. Grosjean, deceased, and others, in which defendant named and another filed a counterclaim. From the judgment, plaintiff and defendants appeal. Affirmed in part, and in part modified and affirmed.

Alexander McCulloch and C. J. Goodell, both of San Francisco, for plaintiff.

Robert H. Borland, of San Francisco, for defendants Newell.

George Clark Sargent, of San Francisco, (Aaron M. Sargent, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellants C. E. Grosjean and others.

PER CURIAM. An action to foreclose a purchase-money mortgage for $65,000 upon certain land situated in the Islais creek district, in San Francisco.

The mortgage was executed on May 7, 1919, by C. E. Grosjean, now deceased, and Ellen S. M. Grosjean, his wife, to E. W. Newell, the plaintiff's assignor, and was junior to another mortgage for a like sum executed on the same date. The mortgage was duly recorded, and secured the payment of a promissory note executed by the deceased alone; the note being payable five years after its date, with interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum, interest payable monthly.

On March 8, 1919, a contract for the sale of the property by Newell, as first party, to C. E. Grosjean, as second party, was entered into, the purchase price being $135,000, of which $15,000 was paid and the balance evidenced by the notes and mortgages mentioned above. The contract provided, among other things, that certain conditions precedent to the purchase of the property should be fulfilled or caused to be fulfilled by the first party not later than May 10, 1919. These referred to the extension of Tulare street, which the property adjoined, and the conveyance to the state of California of certain land in order to enable the state to enlarge the shipping facilities at the westerly end of Islais channel, and were performed according to the agreement.

The contract further provided that, in the event the second party purchased the property, the first party should make certain improvements thereon; these being specified therein as follows: (1) Grade or cause to be graded the streets on three sides of the property to the official grade; (2) pave these streets and construct sidewalks according to the ordinances of the city; (3) grade and fill the block (the property mortgaged) with earth and rock to a plane one foot above the city base; and (4) obtain a permit for and construct a railway spur track from the easterly line of the block to the westerly terminus of an existing spur track on the state wharf situated on the southerly side of Islais creek. All of the improvements specified in the four paragraphs above were to be made at the expense of the first party, who agreed that work thereon should commence not later than June 15, 1919, and the improvements be fully completed not later than December 15, 1919.

It was further provided that, if the first party failed to fulfill the contract in these respects, the second party should have the right to do or cause the same to be done, and to apply the cost thereof as payment on account of the indebtedness secured by the second mortgage, this being the indebtedness and mortgage involved in the present action; or otherwise to recover the cost of the work from the first party.

On December 15, 1919, none of the work specified had been commenced, and none of the work was subsequently done except that in January, 1920, the land was partially filled with rock and earth. The contract provided that reference should be made in the second mortgage to the above promises of the first party and the rights of the second party, so that, in the event the same should not be fulfilled, any owner of the mortgage and note secured thereby might be charged with knowledge thereof. This reference appears both in the mortgage, which was executed pursuant to the contract, and in the note thereby secured.

Newell, the mortgagee, assigned the note and mortgage to S. W. Newell, by whom, on the same day, the instruments were assigned to Marie A. Musto, the plaintiff, and both instruments were recorded.

As defenses to the action, the mortgagors

⚷For other cases see same topic and KEY-NUMBER in all Key-Numbered Digests and Indexes alleged that, due to the failure of the vendor to perform the contract as above, the consideration for the mortgage failed, further alleging as a counterclaim that, by reason of the vendor's default, they have suffered damage. As one of her defenses to this counterclaim, the plaintiff alleged that the same was barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The trial court entered judgment foreclosing the mortgage, with interest on the principal sum and attorneys' fees as provided in the mortgage, but deducted therefrom the sum of $21,753.63 as the damage suffered by the mortgagors by reason of the failure of the vendor to make the promised improvements.

Pending the trial, the defendant and mortgagor, C. E. Grosjean, died, and Ellen S. M. Grosjean, as administratrix with the will annexed of his estate, and on her own behalf as a defendant, has appealed from an order denying a motion to vacate the judgment entered and to enter a different judgment, and also from the judgment. Plaintiff Musto, with defendants E. W. Newell and Allene B. Newell, his wife, have appealed from that portion of the judgment allowing the counterclaim or set-off from the amount of the mortgage.

Appellant Grosjean claims that the vendor, having made default under the contract, the same was a bar to a foreclosure; that the plaintiff was not entitled to interest or attorneys' fees; that the mortgagors should have been allowed as a part of their damage the rental value of the land from the date of the vendor's default, as well as the cost of making the improvements thereon; and, further, that the court erred in its rulings that the burden of proving the damage was on the mortgagors, and that the vendor was not incompetent to testify as a witness at the trial.

As grounds for the appeal by the other appellants named, it is contended that the set-off or counterclaim pleaded by the mortgagors was barred by the statute; and that under the terms of the contract the counterclaim could not be maintained against the vendor or the assignee of the mortgagee.

As stated, the purchase price of the land was $135,000, and the title thereto was conveyed to Grosjean, the mortgagor, who paid thereon in cash the sum of $15,000. The title to the property is still retained by the estate; no offer to rescind was made, and it is not claimed that the consideration for the mortgage, other than to the extent of the damage caused by the failure of the vendor to construct the improvements, has failed. It is contended, however, that, the default of the vendor being shown, no action to foreclose the mortgage could be maintained. In support of this, reliance is placed upon the case of Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 P. 1110, and other cases in which that decision was followed; but an examination thereof shows either that there was a total failure of consideration for the mortgage sought to be foreclosed, a partial failure followed by rescission, or an allowance for such partial failure of consideration by way of set-off. It is also claimed that the contract of sale, with the notes and mortgages executed pursuant thereto, being, as found by the court, parts of one transaction, the promise to pay the note involved in this action was dependent upon the promise of the vendor to make the improvements, and that, before the vendor or the holder of the note with notice could enforce the same, it was necessary to allege and prove compliance with the contract in that respect.

[1-4] Where mutual covenants go to the entire consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions and dependent (13 Corp. Jur. "Contracts," p. 571, § 540, and cases cited); but in the present case it appears without dispute that the covenant in question was not the sole consideration for the mortgage, and the default of the vendor in this respect constituted but a partial failure of consideration, for which the mortgagors could be adequately compensated in damages. When a covenant goes only to a part of the consideration, and a breach may be compensated in damages, it is to be regarded as an independent covenant. Ernst v. Cummings, 55 Cal. 184; 13 Corp. Jur. "Contracts," p. 571, § 540, and cases cited. As the court said in Union Pacific R. Co. v. Travelers' Ins. Co. (C. C. A.) 83 F. 676, 678, "The approved test for the determination of this question is found in the rule which Lord Mansfield stated in Boone v. Eyre, 1 H. Bl. 273; [126 Eng. Rep. (reprint), 160] in these words: 'Where mutual covenants go to the whole of the consideration on both sides, they are mutual conditions, the one precedent to the other. But where they only go to a part, where a breach may be paid for in damages, there the defendant has a remedy on his covenant, and shall not plead it as a condition precedent.'"

It is claimed further that the plaintiff was not entitled to a judgment for interest on the mortgage or for attorneys' fees. On March 31, 1921, the vendor, then being in default with respect to the improvements promised, made a supplemental agreement with Grosjean, this being in the form of a letter, which was as follows:

"C. E. Grosjean, Esq., San Francisco, Cal. Dear Sir: Referring to the provision in my agreement with you dated March 8, 1919, respecting the grading and filling of the land described in that agreement, I hereby agree that the payment of the interest now unpaid and the interest accruing on your promissory note to me dated May 7, 1919, for the sum of $60,000, pending the completion of the work, shall be postponed and not be payable by you until this work is completed by me; that the nonpayment of said interest by you pending the completion of the work shall not constitute a default on your part in respect to the interest provided in said note to be paid. * * *

"Nothing herein shall be construed to deprive you of your right under the agreement dated March 8, 1919, to do or cause said work to be done at any time, and to exercise all other rights in regard thereto given to you in said agreement.

"Yours truly, E. W. Newell."

[5] According to this agreement, interest was not to be payable pending the making of the improvements, and its nonpayment was not to constitute a default under the mortgage. It may be conceded that, other things being equal, no action to collect the interest would lie before the improvements were completed; but the action to foreclose was brought after the principal sum of the debt had matured, and the mortgagors sought to recover, as against the claim for principal and interest, the cost of making the improvements, and this amount as found by the court was allowed them in the judgment. Having sought and obtained what was in effect a judgment for the cost of making the improvements, they are in no position to assert that, because the vendor was in default in this respect, the obligation to pay interest had not matured. As stated by counsel, the plaintiff should not be charged with the cost of doing the work, the equivalent of doing it, and at the same time be deprived of interest because the work was not done.

Following the death of C. E. Grosjean and the appointment of defendant Ellen S. M. Grosjean as administratrix with the will annexed of his estate, a supplemental complaint was filed by plaintiff, alleging these facts, and expressly waiving all recourse against any property of the estate except that described in the mortgage. No claim was filed by the plaintiff against the estate, but the trial court nevertheless allowed as a part of its judgment an attorneys' fee of $600, which sum, by the terms of the mortgage, was declared to be a lien upon the property therein described.

[6] No counsel fees could be allowed in the decree unless a claim based upon the mortgage had first been presented to the administratrix of the estate. Code Civ. Proc. § 1500; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Society v. Wackenreuder, 99 Cal. 503, 34 P. 219.

[7] The trial court ruled that the burden of proving the cost of making the improvements as a part of the damage claimed by the mortgagors rested upon them. In their briefs many cases are cited holding that, where the plaintiff as a condition precedent to his right to recover must prove substantial performance, the burden of showing the cost of remedying defects is upon him. The present, however, is not such a case; the making of the improvements for the reasons stated not being a condition precedent to the right of maintaining an action to foreclose the mortgage.

[8] We find no merit in the claim that Newell, the vendor, who was the assignor of plaintiff, was not competent to testify as a witness, as a claim within the meaning of subdivision 3 of section 1880, Code of Civil Procedure, has been held not to include a mortgage or other lien where no deficiency judgment is sought against the estate of a decedent. Fallon v. Butler, 21 Cal. 24, 81 Am. Dec. 140; Booth v. Pendola, 88 Cal. 36, 23 P. 200, 25 P. 1101.

[9] In addition to the cost of making the improvements, the mortgagors claimed an amount for the loss of rent which they might have received had the property been improved. This the court disallowed, and we think properly, as it is clear from the supplemental agreement that an extension of time for making the improvements was thereby granted, and that the parties intended that any loss due to the delay in this respect was to be compensated by deferring the interest payments on the mortgage.

[10] It is suggested that interest on the amount of the damage suffered by the mortgagors as found by the court should have been allowed. These damages, however, were unliquidated and uncertain and not capable of being made certain by calculation within the meaning of section 3287 of the Civil Code, and interest thereon could not be recovered prior to judgment. Ferrea v. Chabot, 121 Cal. 233, 53 P. 689, 1092; Burnett v. Glas, 154 Cal. 249, 97 P. 423; McNutt v. City of Los Angeles, 187 Cal. 245, 201 P. 592.

[11] The plaintiff and her coappellants, as grounds for their appeal, contend that, under the original contract between Newell and Grosjean, the latter, in the event of Newell's default, was bound to make the improvements, and either apply the cost as payment to that extent on the mortgage debt, or recover the same by suit. We find no merit in this; such action by the vendee under the provisions of the contract being wholly optional.

[12] It is further claimed that Newell, having obligated himself to complete the improvements by December 15, 1919, a cause of action based upon his default then arose, which was barred by statute; the present action having been brought some time before October 8, 1924, but more than four years after the default. As to this it will be sufficient to say that the supplemental agreement, dated March 31, 1921, contains a distinct and unequivocal acknowledgment by the vendor of his obligation to complete and pay for the improvements. This acknowledgment was sufficient evidence of a continuing contract to take the case out of the operation of the statute. Southern Pacific Co. v. Prosser, 122 Cal. 413, 52 P. 836, 55 P. 145.

[13] The note secured by the mortgage was not a negotiable instrument, and both it and the mortgage by express terms referred to the contract and its provisions respecting the improvements. As the trial court properly found, these instruments were parts of one agreement, and the assignment of the note and mortgage to the plaintiff was without prejudice to any set-off or other defense existing at the time and before notice of the assignment. Civ. Code, § 1459; St. Louis Nat. Bank v. Gay, 101 Cal. 286, 35 P. 876; Briggs v. Crawford, 162 Cal. 124, 121 P. 381; McKenney v. Ellsworth, 165 Cal. 326, 132 P. 75.

The findings of the court are fully supported by the evidence, and the record, with the one exception noted, contains no error which would justify this court in disturbing the judgment. The portion of the judgment appealed from by plaintiff Marie A. Musto and defendants E. W. Newell and Allene B. Newell is accordingly affirmed. The order appealed from by defendant Ellen S. M. Grosjean, individually and as administratrix with the will annexed of the estate of C. E. Grosjean, deceased, is also affirmed. The judgment entered in favor of plaintiff Marie A. Musto is modified by deducting therefrom the sum of $600 allowed by the trial court as attorneys' fees, and, as so modified, is affirmed. It is further ordered that appellant Ellen S. M. Grosjean, individually and as administratrix, recover her costs on appeal.

(Civ. 3644.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 8, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 7, 1929.

1. Pleading 🔑72—If plaintiff prays wrong form of relief, courts will nevertheless allow him to proceed, where facts stated show some right of recovery (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 307, 580).

Prayer of complaint is simply statement of relief plaintiff believes should be granted to him, so that, if plaintiff misconceives relief, courts will nevertheless, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 307 and 580, allow him to proceed, where the facts stated show some right of recovery.

2. Fraud 🔑41—Complaint purporting to be based upon right of rescission held nevertheless to state cause of action for fraud and deceit, though plaintiff was mistaken in relief asked (Const. art. 6, § 4½; Code Civ. Proc. § 580).

Complaint seeking recovery of money it alleged that defendants had fraudulently induced plaintiffs to pay defendant bank, though purporting to be based upon equitable right to rescission of contract, which action could not be maintained against defendant bank, the bank not being a party to the contract, held nevertheless to state cause of action against bank for damages based upon fraud and deceit so that judgment for plaintiff was not miscarriage of justice prohibited by Const. art. 6, § 4½, and, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 580, providing that court may grant plaintiff relief consistent with case made by complaint and embraced within issue.

3. Appeal and error 🔑1026—Error without prejudice does not afford appellant relief.

Error without prejudice does not afford appellant any relief in the Court of Appeal.

4. Fraud 🔑12—Misrepresenting terms of trust defendant bank had assumed with reference to moneys deposited with it and as to what under trust would be done with moneys, inducing plaintiffs to pay over certain sum held fraudulent.

Where statements inducing plaintiffs to pay over to defendant bank certain sum of money were made as to nature and terms of trust which defendant bank had assumed with reference to moneys deposited with it and as to what under terms of its trust would be done with moneys in future, the terms of trust being misrepresented and also duties of bank in respect thereto, the statements amounted to a fraud.

5. Fraud 🔑58(2)—Findings on misrepresentations, disclosed by record to follow almost verbatim testimony of plaintiffs, had supporting evidence.

Where the record disclosed that findings on questions of misrepresentations inducing plaintiffs to pay over money to defendant bank followed almost verbatim testimony of plaintiffs, there was evidence to support them.

6. Fraud 🔑20—Representations fraudulently inducing plaintiffs to pay money to defendant held actionable, though defendant received no benefit; liability being predicated upon fact that plaintiffs were prejudicially misled.

Where plaintiffs suing to recover money which they claimed they were fraudulently induced to pay over to defendant bank, fact that bank did not profit from transaction did not render representations inactionable, it not being essential to actionable fraud that guilty party should derive any benefit from his misrepresentation or concealment; liability being predicated upon fact that plaintiff has been misled to his prejudice and not that defendant has profited by wrong.

7. Appeal and error 🔑173(7)—Objection not raised during trial, that bank officers' representations inducing plaintiffs to pay defendants money exceeded authority, cannot be considered.

Where it was not objected to, in action to recover back moneys plaintiffs were fraudulently induced by defendants to pay over to defendant bank, that officers of bank in making representations complained of exceeded their authority, and that bank had no interest in project except to act as trustee, so that evidence upon question went in without any suggestion or intimation that bank would make objection upon appeal, such could not be raised upon appeal.

8. Corporations 🔑423—Corporation is liable for fraud and deceit of officers and agents acting in apparent employment, though acts were unauthorized or committed for personal benefit.

Corporation is liable for the fraud and deceit of its officers and agents acting in the apparent course of their employment, although it did not authorize or know of the fraud or deceit, and although it may have been committed by the officer or agent for his own benefit.

9. Pleading 🔑248(3)—Amended complaint elaborating allegations in preceding one, though adding additional misrepresentation, did not state new cause of action.

Where amended complaint was simply an elaboration of allegations in second amended complaint, though an additional misrepresentation was included as basis for plaintiffs' action to recover money which they alleged they were fraudulently induced to pay over to defendant bank, it did not state a new cause of action; the new inclusion being in connection with same cause of action for fraud and deceit, as disclosed by second amended complaint.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. E. Keeler, Judge.

Action by Alleyne Von Schrader and another against Jack Milton, the Long Beach National Bank, and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and second named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chandler, Wright & Ward, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Clay Carpenter, of Long Beach, and Norman T. Mason, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

TUTTLE, Justice pro tem. This is an action to recover $4,800 which respondents allege was obtained from them through fraud. Judgment went for plaintiffs in the sum of $2,635. Only one defendant, Long Beach National Bank, appeals from said judgment.

On February 21, 1923, Alice Welstead, assignor of plaintiffs, entered into a contract in writing to purchase from defendant Bolivar Holding Company, for a consideration of $9,300, 93 shares of its capital stock and, also, a 99-year lease upon an apartment in a building to be erected by said corporation. Said contract was thereafter assigned to plaintiffs, who assumed all the obligations thereunder. At the time of said assignment only $100 had been paid on the said stock and lease, which at all times were deposited with defendant bank, as trustee. On April 4, 1923, plaintiffs paid to defendant bank, on account of said contract, the sum of $4,800. Of this amount $1,700 was in the nature of a bonus, and this bonus was paid over at once by the bank to defendant Milton Realty Company, leaving the sum of $3,100 in the hands of defendant bank. There was also deductible from said last-named amount 15 per cent. broker's fee, making the net amount of $2,635 to be accounted for by appellant.

The promoters of the scheme proposed to build an apartment house with the proceeds from stock sales and the subscriber of each block of stock was to have a 99-year lease upon an apartment in said building.

Under a permit issued by the state corporation commissioner, defendant Bolivar Holding Company "proposed to impound the moneys received from the sale of stock to the public with the Long Beach National Bank (one of defendants herein) under an agreement whereby the first $40,000.00 raised will be used to meet the first payment on the real estate described, the next $85,000.00 to pay off the existing mortgage, and the following $150,000.00 in order to start construction of its building. In the event that building is not constructed, all moneys paid in on stock shall be returned to original subscribers."

After the said permit was issued, defendant Bolivar Holding Company (referred to herein as the holding company) and defendant bank entered into an "agreement and declaration of trust." Among the terms of this agreement were the following: The bank was to receive deposits under the terms of the permit, and to act as depositary, trustee, stock transfer agent, and stock registrar in connection with the financing and consummation of the undertaking, and no issue of stock was to be valid until registered by the bank; the bank could loan money to the trustee, and it had a prior lien upon the real property as security for such loans. Particularly pertinent are the following portions of said agreement:

"That whenever additional sums aggregating not less than one hundred and fifty thousand dollars ($150,000.00) shall have been so deposited with the depositary, the same shall be by the depositary paid to the trustee and such sums shall be by the trustee used for the uses and purposes and pursuant to the terms and conditions hereinafter set forth.

"(c) That in the event that there shall not be deposited with the depositary on or before two (2) years from date hereof additional sums aggregating not less than one hundred and fifty thousand ($150,000.00) dollars for use pursuant to the purposes mentioned in said permit, such additional deposits which may have been received by the depositary shall be by the depositary returned to the respective depositors thereof, less such portion thereof as may have been paid by the depositary to the holding company as and for a sales commission fund. * * *

"That if the title to the said real property shall be vested in the trustee, free and clear of said mortgage indebtedness, and if the said fund of one hundred fifty thousand dollars ($150,000.00) or such lesser amount as may be deemed sufficient by the trustee, shall be created and under the control of the depositary, on or before two years from date hereof, or if the trustee, in the exercise of its absolute discretion shall consider its act to be for the best interest of depositors, the trustee shall convey the title to the said real property, in the condition which it may then be, together with such net sums as may be in its hands available for the purpose, to the holding company, and that by such conveyance the depositary and trustee shall be wholly relieved and discharged from all duties, responsibilities and liabilities arising hereunder."

The sad part of the story follows: Sufficient funds to finance the proposition were not collected. The building hardly progressed to completed foundations. The bank turned over to the holding company the money collected before a sufficient amount to complete the building had been paid in. Plaintiffs notified the bank to withhold any payments to the promoters and demanded their money back. The bank did not repay the money. The promoting corporation drifted into bankruptcy. There was no salvage, and the investors lost their all. The saying that "it is an ill wind that blows no good" was never better nor more appropriately applied than to this episode of high finance. Thousands of dollars were paid out, as the evidence shows, to the promoters, under the cloak and guise of "commissions" and "bonuses." The spirit, if not the letter, of the permit issued by the corporation commissioner was openly flaunted and violated. The bank received $5,000 for acting as "trustee," $10,000 as a bonus for a loan of $100,000, besides a percentage on collections and other perquisites. After all was over and the smoke of battle cleared away, the only losers were the investors.

The pleadings of respondent and the manner in which the issues of the case were finally determined are assailed by appellant with great vigor and from many points of attack. Three amended complaints were filed. The case went to trial upon the second amended complaint, and the third amended complaint was filed after submission, and with permission of court, to conform to the proofs. It is quite apparent that, originally, respondent started out with an action to rescind the assignment agreement upon the ground of misrepresentations made by defendant holding company. The second amended complaint, however, charges all defendants with these misrepresentations. The third amended complaint contains additional matter which is merely an elaboration of the allegations of the prior complaint. In substance, the final complaint sets up that plaintiffs were induced to enter into said assignment contract through misrepresentations made upon the part of defendants; that defendants made the following representations, which were not true: The money paid in by plaintiff would be held by the bank as trustee, and that no money would be released until sufficient funds accrued from sale of leases or apartments in the proposed building to construct the same—"that plaintiffs were induced to and did purchase the interest of Alice Welstead in said stock and lease, take to themselves the assignment of said application and paid said $4,800.00 to defendant, Long Beach National Bank, by reason of the following statements and representations made to them at and immediately prior to said assignment by the defendant Long Beach National Bank, in which statements the defendant Bolivar Holding Company joined and concurred, upon which the plaintiffs relied and but for which they would not have made said purchase or paid said money, to-wit: That the defendant bank held the title as trustee to the land on which the El Bolivar Building was to be erected and that the plaintiffs need have no fear whatsoever in making their proposed investment; the defendant bank was the trustee and plaintiffs' money would be held by it in trust until the completion of the proposed building and not a cent of it would be released until sufficient funds were on hand to start construction and to finish the building; that the money paid for shares in the Bolivar Holding Company was being impounded with the defendant bank as trustee and that no money would be released until sufficient funds accrued from sale of leases or apartments in the proposed building to construct the same; that if sufficient money was not collected to insure the completion of the proposed building, the money paid in by plaintiffs on the proposed investment would be returned to them; that it would be held by the defendant bank without interest, but would be returned to the plaintiffs in case enough apartments in the proposed building were not sold to assure its completion; that the money would be kept by the defendant bank, as it were, in escrow, and that in case enough apartments were not sold to assure the completion of the proposed building the defendant bank would give their money back to plaintiffs, without interest; that more than enough apartments were sold the first week to assure the erection of the proposed building and that there were but two double apartments left unsold."

Plaintiffs also alleged that notice of rescission of the assignment contract had been duly served, and they prayed that said contract be rescinded and that the sum of $4,800, which they had paid thereon, be returned to them. There was also a prayer for general relief.

The answer denied these allegations in respect to the alleged false statements, and also set up defenses of laches and estoppel. The trial court found the said allegations of the complaint to be true, and also against the affirmative defenses. Judgment was entered that plaintiffs recover the sum of $2,635 from defendants bank and holding company.

[1-3] It is contended that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. This argument is based entirely upon the theory that the cause of action upon which the judgment is founded is one for rescission of a contract. It will be observed, however, that appellant was not a party to the contract referred to in the complaint. It must be conceded that an action for rescission, under such circumstances, cannot be maintained against appellant. We have the unusual situation of a complaint stating or purporting to state a cause of action based upon rescission against certain defendants, and a cause of action arising out of fraud and deceit against another defendant. Appellant concedes that an action for fraud and deceit might have been maintained by plaintiffs, but contends that the prayer of the complaint shows conclusively that the action is not of that character, as no damages are sought, and that there is no allegation of damages in the complaint. The prayer asks for rescission of the contract, and that plaintiffs recover the consideration of $4,800 and "for such other and further relief as to the Court shall seem just and equitable in the premises."

In determining the cause of action, the prayer of a complaint has very little controlling force. It is simply a statement of the relief plaintiff believes should be granted to him, and, if he misconceives the form of relief, the courts will nevertheless allow him to proceed where the facts stated show some right of recovery. Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, 193 P. 84. It is not necessary or essential that a complaint should state a cause of action for the relief which plaintiff seeks in his prayer. In defining the relief which may be granted to plaintiff, section 580 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "the court may grant him any relief consistent with the case made by the complaint and embraced within the issue." Many years ago our Supreme Court took a decided stand in upholding a liberal construction of pleadings, as plainly appears in the following excerpt from the opinion in the case of Walsh v. McKeen, 75 Cal. 519, 17 P. 673:

"As to the alleged change in the nature of the action, an answer is found in the fact that we have in this state but one form of civil actions for the enforcement or protection of private rights (Code Civ. Proc. § 307); and where an answer has been filed, any relief may be granted to the plaintiff which is consistent with the facts stated in the complaint. (Code Civ. Proc. § 580.) An action does not now as formerly, fail because the plaintiff has made a mistake as to the form of his remedy If the case which he states entitles him to any remedy, either legal or equitable, his complaint is not to be dismissed because he has prayed for a judgment to which he is not entitled. 'Legal and equitable relief are administered in the same forum, and according to the same general plan. A party cannot be sent out of court merely because his facts do not entitle him to relief at law, or merely because he is not entitled to relief in equity, as the case may be. He can be sent out of court only when, upon his facts, he is entitled to no relief, either at law or in equity.' (Grain v. Aldrich, 38 Cal. 520, 99 Am. Dec. 423; Emery v. Pease, 20 N. Y. 64; Pomeroy's Remedies, sec. 71.)"

In the instant case, it is alleged that plaintiff was induced, through fraudulent representations made by appellant, to pay over to it the sum of $4,800, and judgment is asked for that amount. While the word "damages" or other word of similar import was not employed in the complaint, the facts pleaded show such damage and the measure of damages would be the amount which was unlawfully taken from plaintiffs. Finally, we do not see how any prejudice resulted from the failure to specify that the money which plaintiff sought to recover was in the nature of "damages," or from the failure to allege that plaintiff had been "damaged," nor has appellant indicated in its very able presentation of the matter that any injury had resulted to it, assuming that the contention in respect to the pleadings is true. Its argument is somewhat academic in character, and failing, by practical application to the case, to show prejudice or injury. Error without prejudice does not afford appellant any relief in this court. It denied in its answer that it made any false statements to plaintiffs; denied that plaintiffs, relying upon any statements or misrepresentations it had made, paid to it the sum of $4,800, or any other sum, or otherwise, or at all. It introduced the same evidence and availed itself of the same objections which it might have urged whether the cause of action were technically one at law for damages or in equity for rescission. It is certain that no miscarriage of justice resulted from the irregularities complained of. Const. Cal. art. 6, § 4½. We are of the opinion that the complaint states a cause of action against appellant, based upon fraud and deceit.

[4] It is contended that the alleged representations were made concerning future acts only, and could not, in contemplation of law, amount to a "fraud," as they could neither be false nor true when made. We do not read the record in that light. The statements were made as to the nature and terms of the trust which the bank had assumed with reference to moneys deposited with it, as and to what, under the terms of its trust, would be done with the moneys in the future. The terms of the trust were misrepresented, and also the duties of the bank in respect thereto. "A mere promise to perform an act in the future is not, in a legal sense, a representation, nor does a failure to perform such promise convert it into a false representation; but if the promise is accompanied with statements of existing facts which show the ability of the promisor to perform his promise, and without which the promise would not be accepted or acted upon, such statements are denominated representations, and if falsely made are grounds of avoiding the contract, though the thing promised to be done lies wholly in the future." Russ Lumber & Mill Co. v. Muscupiabe Land & Water Co., 120 Cal. 521, 529, 52 P. 995, 998, 65 Am. St. Rep. 186.

As to the affirmative defenses of estoppel and ratification, the court found that the facts alleged in the answer in connection therewith were not true, and those findings are not attacked. Furthermore these defenses are urged solely against a cause of action based upon rescission. As we have indicated, the judgment is not predicated upon a rescission, but upon fraud and deceit upon the part of the bank, whereby plaintiffs were induced to invest $4,800 and lost the entire amount.

[5] It is next contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings on the question of misrepresentations. The record discloses that they follow almost verbatim the testimony of the plaintiffs. It can scarcely be urged, with any degree of seriousness, that these findings lack support. Respondent argues that the testimony of said witnesses is very improbable. He also points out that the bank officials denied the conversations mentioned. It is a waste of time to attack findings under such circumstances. If there is any substantial evidence to support the findings, further inquiry on our part is foreclosed. The argument made by appellant might well be advanced before the trial court, as it is based upon the weight and effect of the testimony, and the credibility of the witnesses—matters with which we have no concern.

[6] It is contended that the bank did not profit from the transaction in question, and hence the representations were not actionable. The question of a profit is immaterial. It is not essential to actionable fraud that the guilty party should derive any benefit from his misrepresentation or concealment. 26 C. J. 1180. Liability is predicated upon the fact that the plaintiff has been misled to his prejudice, and not that defendant has profited by his wrong.

[7, 8] Appellant takes the position that "if anyone is to be held liable for the misrepresentations by Mr. Meeker and Mr. Dutton (President and Vice President, respectively, of the bank), it must be them individually and not the bank." It is urged that the said officers, in making the representations complained of, exceeded their authority, and that the bank had no interest in the project except to act as trustee. This objection was not raised when plaintiffs testified to said representations, and evidence upon the question went in without any suggestion or intimation that appellant would take the position which it now assumes. It is an elemental rule of appellate practice that, where evidence is introduced at the trial of a cause without objection, an objection to the same cannot be raised upon appeal. We are of the opinion, however, that appellant did not play the passive role portrayed by its counsel. "As a corporation can only speak or act through its agent, there is stronger reason for holding it answerable for the acts and representations of the agent done within the ostensible scope of his authority and while transacting the business of the principal, than applies when the principal is a natural person. A corporation is liable for the fraud and deceit of its officers and agents, acting in the apparent course of their employment, although it did not authorize or know of the fraud or deceit, and although it may have been committed by the officer or agent for his own benefit. Fletcher, Cyc. Corp. vol. 5, § 3346. "In such cases the doctrine of ultra vires has no application, for it would be a travesty on justice and common honesty to permit a corporation, whether private or quasi-public, to participate in a fraud and to benefit therefrom and then escape liability on the ground that the act was not that of the corporation itself, but its officers who were in control thereof." Thompson on Corporations (2d Ed.) vol. 5, § 5474.

[9] It is urged that the third amended complaint introduced a new cause of action. We take the view that the amended complaint was simply an elaboration of allegations in the second amended complaint. An additional misrepresentation was included, but this was in connection with the same cause of action, to wit, fraud and deceit.

Other objections are raised by appellant, but we have carefully examined them, and are satisfied that they are without merit.

The judgment of the trial court is fully justified by the record before us, and accordingly it is affirmed.

YATES v. YATES. (Civ. 6531.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 12, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 11, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 11, 1929.

1. Divorce ⟹245(3)—Evidence, on application for modifications, sustained order requiring divorced husband to pay $50 per month.

Evidence, on application for modification of decree awarding alimony, held to sustain order requiring divorced husband to pay alimony to the wife in the amount of $50 per month.

2. Divorce ⟹245(3)—Divorced husband, applying for modification of decree awarding alimony, had burden of showing inability to pay any sum.

Divorced husband, applying for modification of decree awarding alimony, had burden of establishing allegation that he had no ability to pay any sum.

Appeal from Superior Court, Monterey County; Fred A. Treat, Judge.

Divorce action by Mary Beatrice Yates against Henry Newton Yates. From an order modifying the decree awarding alimony, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. Estcourt, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hudson, Martin & Jorgensen, of Monterey (Geo. Allan Smith, of Monterey, of counsel), for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. [1, 2] Application for modification of a decree awarding alimony. The parties hereto were formerly husband and wife. On November 23, 1923, in anticipation of the wife filing an action for divorce, they entered into a property settlement and maintenance agreement. This agreement provided, among other things, that the husband should pay his wife the sum of $150 per month for her support and maintenance until the death of either party or until the wife should remarry, in which event the payments were to cease. Certain real property was conveyed to the wife, which was heavily incumbered. On December 20, 1923, the wife filed a suit for divorce. The husband defaulted, and an interlocutory decree was entered declaring the wife entitled to a divorce and awarding her the sum of $150 per month for her maintenance and support. On January 5, 1925, a final decree was entered and the allowance for her support was carried into this judgment. Thereafter the husband remarried. On the 16th day of August, 1926, he filed an affidavit in the divorce action, which alleged that he had been unable to earn sufficient money to comply with the terms of the decree, and he prayed for an order releasing him entirely from its operation in this respect. On the hearing it was admitted that no payment had ever been paid by him on account of the orders. After hearing, the court rendered its decision modifying the decree awarding alimony to the wife by reducing the amount to the sum of $50 per month, which sum it was found the applicant had the ability to pay. The husband appeals from this order and claims the trial court abused its discretion in ordering such payment, as there is no evidence in the record to show that he has the ability to pay this or any other sum whatsoever. There is no merit in the contention. The evidence shows that respondent is a woman of some 57 years of age, and that she lived with her former husband for over 30 years. It further appears therefrom that she is in poor health, having suffered two operations from which she has not fully recovered, and that she is unable to earn a livelihood. Other evidence shows that appellant is a physician and has earned at his profession sums aggregating from $90 to $300 and over a month. Appellant was not present at the hearing, but his present mother-in-law testified as to his earnings and expenditures. A further review of the evidence would answer no useful purpose. The burden was upon appellant to show, as he claimed, that he had no ability to pay any sum.

The determination of questions of this character are addressed to the sound and liberal discretion of the court. There is ample evidence to sustain its conclusion.

The order is affirmed.

96 Cal. App. 289

DE GEER v. MORELAND MOTOR TRUCK CO. (Civ. 5428.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 14, 1929.

Judgment ⟹223—Addition to judgment held not erroneous as including interest on additional sum, which judgment expressly provided was not allowed.

Court's computation of additional amount due up to entry of judgment held not erroneous as including interest on such sum, where no objection was made to the calculation and judgment expressly provided that no interest was to be recovered on the additional amount provided for.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Action by J. W. De Geer against the Moreland Motor Truck Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Loyd Wright, Charles E. Millikan, and Fred Reed, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Crouch & Sanders, of San Diego, for respondent.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

YORK, J. Appellant's first contention is that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings of the court, that on or about the 8th day of May, 1923, the plaintiff subscribed and purchased from the defendant corporation 150 shares of common stock of the defendant corporation, or that the defendant and one Charles Klein agreed to receive in full payment for said 150 shares of common stock bonds of the United States, described in plaintiff's complaint; and that the evidence is insufficient to support any finding that the defendant corporation entered into any agreement whatever with the plaintiff in connection with the 150 shares of common stock alleged to have been purchased from the defendant.

The appellant also objects that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court that the plaintiff delivered to the said Charles Klein for the defendant all of the bonds of the United States, as described in plaintiff's complaint, or that the purchase price of the 150 shares of common stock, alleged to have been purchased, was paid. Appellant also objects that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court that the defendant has neglected, refused, and failed to deliver any of the said 150 shares of common stock, so purchased by plaintiff from the defendant and paid for as set out in the complaint, or that the plaintiff has failed and refused to deliver or return to the plaintiff any of the bonds of the United States received in payment of the said stock.

Appellant also objects that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding of the court that there is now due, owing, and unpaid from defendant to plaintiff the sum of $1,575, together with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent. from December 24, 1923, or to support any finding that any sum whatever is owing from defendant to plaintiff.

An examination of the evidence shows that there was sufficient evidence in the record to sustain, not only the findings objected to, but each and all of the findings made by the trial court.

There was objection made by appellant that the court erred in awarding interest on the amount found by the court to be due from the time it was made until entry of the judgment, which amounted to the sum of $220.50. As to this objection, it shows upon the face of the judgment that it is merely a calculation made by the trial court, and the trial court particularly provided that no interest was to be recovered upon the said sum of $220.50, and in the absence of any objection by the respondent, we do not see how this court can interfere with this computation made by the trial court.

The objection that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action is not well taken.

The objection that the conclusions of law are not supported by the findings of fact is not well taken, as the findings of fact fully support the conclusions of law, and the evidence, as we have heretofore stated, amply supports the findings of fact.

The eighth point made by appellant that material findings have been made without any support from the evidence has been answered by the statements heretofore made in this opinion.

The judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

I concur: CRAIL, Justice pro tem.

I concur in the judgment: HOUSER, Acting P. J.

STATE COMPENSATION INSURANCE FUND et al. v. LAMB et al.

(Civ. 6596.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 10, 1929.

1. Appeal and error ⇨1067—Refusal to instruct on presumption of care held not prejudicial, where drivers of colliding trucks testified regarding their conduct.

Where drivers fully testified regarding their conduct in action for damages by collision of trucks, instruction on presumption of care could not have helped jury, and refusal to give same was not prejudicial.

2. Trial ⇨253(9)—Requested instruction in action for injuries, confined to only part of defendant's acts, held properly refused.

In action for injuries resulting from automobile collision, requested instruction, confined to only part of acts of defendant, and not enumerating all acts, held properly refused.

3. Trial ⇨240—Requested instruction which was argumentative held properly refused.

Refusal to give requested instruction which was argumentative held proper.

4. Trial ⇨260(1)—Requested instruction, covered by instruction given, held properly refused.

Requested instruction, fully covered by instructions given, held properly refused.

5. Automobiles ⇨242(7)—Defendant, asserting inevitable accident as affirmative defense to action for injuries by automobile collision, had burden of proving inevitable accident.

Where defendants, in action for injury growing out of automobile collision, introduced question of inevitable accident in opening statement, and introduced proof thereof, asserting same as affirmative defense, burden was on defendants to prove inevitable accident.

6. Trial ⇨228(1)—Instruction on general subject of driver's duty to drive on right side of street held not objectionable for failure to state rights of driver thrown to left side of street by breaking of wheel.

Instructions, in action for injuries by automobile collision, on general subject of duty of driver to drive on right-hand side and not left-hand side of street, held not objectionable for failure to state rights of driver breaking wheel and thrown to left-hand side of street, since instructions were not addressed to that subject.

7. Trial ⇨296(9)—Instructions using words "the carelessness," "the negligence," and "the damages" held not objectionable as assuming facts for failure to use words "if any," where court further instructed it was not expressing opinion on evidence.

In action for injuries growing out of automobile collision, instructions using words "the carelessness," "the negligence," and "the damages" held not objectionable as assuming facts by failing to insert words "if any," where court further instructed jury that court was not expressing, or desiring to express, any opinion on weight of evidence, or that any alleged fact is or is not true.

8. Trial ⇨295(1)—Court's instructions are to be read as whole.

Instructions of court are to be read as a whole.

9. Trial ⇨251(8)—Instruction on subject of preponderance, using phrase "of some act of negligence," held not erroneous as not confined to negligence pleaded.

Instruction, in action for injuries by automobile collision addressed to subject of preponderance using phrase "of some act of negligence," held not erroneous as not confined to acts of negligence pleaded in complaint.

10. Evidence ⇨558(1)—Plaintiff's cross-examination of defendant's expert on same subject as examination by defendants held not objectionable as not cross-examination nor within issues.

Where defendants called witness as expert, and examined him regarding subject of crystallization of metals, defendant's cross-examination of expert on same subject was not objectionable as not cross-examination, not within issues of case, and therefore immaterial.

11. Appeal and error ⇨1047(3)—Error, if any, in refusing to strike hearsay statement, held not prejudicial, where fact was confirmed by other witnesses, and motion to strike was too uncertain.

Where witness, testifying to damage to truck, subsequently stated he was told fact and did not make examination, error, if any, in denying motion to strike, was not prejudicial, where motion was too broad and uncertain, and there was no question regarding fact, and two other witnesses testified directly to same fact confirming hearsay statement.

12. Appeal and error ⇨1047(3)—Error in refusing to strike injured party's answer containing conclusion held not prejudicial, where answer was not harmful to defendant, and conclusion was correct.

Where injured party was asked as to recollection of putting on brakes before striking parked truck, and answered in negative, and that, if he had, he would have been hit head-on, error in refusing to strike out answer was not prejudicial, where injured party's conclusion was correct, and not harmful to defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Louis H. Ward, Judge.

Action by the State Compensation Insurance Fund and another against George W. Lamb and others. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Louis V. Crowley and Cooley, Crowley & Gallagher, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Bronson, Bronson & Slaven, of San Francisco, for respondent Robbins.

Frank J. Creede, of San Francisco, for respondent State Compensation Insurance Fund.

STURTEVANT, J. On the 4th day of May, 1925, A. Robbins was injured in an automobile accident. He duly applied to the Industrial Accident Commission for relief. In due time he was awarded certain relief, and the State Compensation Insurance Fund complied with the award, and then it commenced this action against the defendants. The defendants appeared and answered, and a trial was had in the trial court before the court sitting with a jury. The jury returned a verdict in favor of the plaintiffs, and from a judgment entered thereon the defendants have appealed under section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The defendants contend that the trial court erred (1) in refusing to give certain instructions; (2) in giving certain instructions; and (3) in making certain rulings on the admission of evidence.

Before proceeding further, it will clarify the case to state that the accident happened in Townsend street between First street and Second street, about 9 o'clock in the morning. Shortly prior to the accident the Great Western Power Company had caused one of its trucks to be parked on the north side of Townsend street, near the curb. That truck was facing to the west, and the rear end of it had the tailgate down. While that truck stood there in that position, one of the trucks of the defendants approached from the west, traveling east on Townsend. There was some evidence that it was traveling 35 miles an hour, with its right-hand wheels on the left-hand side of the middle of Townsend street. A. Robbins at the same time was driving a Ford truck in a westerly direction on the north side of Townsend street—that is, on the right-hand side. About the time that the trucks were approaching the truck of the Great Western Power Company it was the theory of the plaintiffs that the left front wheel of defendants' truck came off and that truck swerved further to the left and, to avoid a collision, Robbins turned further to his right, but, as the two trucks passed each other, the defendants' truck side-swiped the Ford truck, hitting the left rear wheel thereof, and that before the Ford truck came to a stop it ran against and underneath the tailgate of the truck of the Great Western Power Company, thus injuring the driver Robbins. On the other hand, it was the contention of the defendants that their truck was not traveling faster than 16 to 18 miles per hour; that the left front wheel came off by reason of a break at the shoulder of the spindle; and that the break was caused by a latent defect that could not be ascertained by the exercise of ordinary care. It was further contended by the defendants that their truck did not touch the Ford truck, and that, whether the driver Robbins was injured, such injuries were not referable to any act of the defendants.

The trial court gave 57 instructions. They are not numbered, and therefore we have numbered them. The defendants proposed and asked the trial court to give 42 instructions. They are not numbered, and therefore we have numbered them. The trial court gave 17 of the instructions so requested. The defendants earnestly contend throughout their brief that the trial court, in its instructions, instructed on the theory of the plaintiffs, but did not instruct on the theory of the defendants. They quote their requested instruction 39, and vigorously contend that the trial court erred in not giving it. The contention is entirely without merit. Of the instructions given, Nos. 24 and 34 should be read together, and the two constitute an instruction on the theory of the defendants, and the same may be said of instructions 51 and 52. These four instructions very fully and completely instruct on the theory of the defendants.

[1] The defendants requested an instruction to the effect that one lawfully in the street is presumed to act lawfully and in the proper manner. The trial court refused the instruction, but gave another on the same subject. It is contended that the trial court erred in refusing the defendants' instruction, and also erred in giving the instruction which it did give. In so far as the subject-matter of both instructions is concerned, it was covered by the sworn testimony of the driver of the Ford truck and the driver of the defendant's truck. Conceding, for the purpose of this decision, and solely for that purpose, that either ruling was erroneous, it is quite impossible to see how the ruling could have been prejudicial. When each of the witnesses had fully testified regarding what he did or did not do, it is impossible to see how the jury could have been helped by an instruction on the presumption of care.

[2] The defendants complain because the trial court refused their instruction No. 28. We think it was properly refused. It was confined to only a part of the acts of the defendants, and did not enumerate all of them. In so far as it was sound law, it was covered by one of the instructions given, No. 47.

[3, 4] They also complain because the trial court did not give their instruction No. 17. The instruction was argumentative, and should not have been given. Furthermore, the subject-matter was fully covered by instructions 49 and 51, which were given.

[5] The defendants complain of an instruction given by the trial court, No. 46. That instruction was addressed to the question as to who should prove an inevitable accident. It is difficult, under the issues made by the pleadings, to see just what was the pertinency of the subject-matter. Be that as it may, the defendants introduced it in the opening statement made by their attorney, and thereafter followed up the subject and introduced proof thereon. There is nothing in the case showing that there was any duty on the part of the plaintiffs to introduce evidence in support of the existence of the theory of inevitable accident, and, if the subject-matter be asserted as an affirmative defense, then the burden was on the defendants to make the showing.

The trial court gave instruction No. 42, which was addressed to the subject-matter of the reciprocal rights of those lawfully in the streets. Taking up the subject-matter of duty in the presence of imminent danger, the defendants argue that the instruction was erroneous. It did not treat, nor purport to treat, on that subject. Elsewhere the trial court instructed on that subject, and did so properly.

[6] In instructions 38 and 39 the trial court instructed on the general subject of the duty of a driver to drive on the right-hand side, and not on the left-hand side of the street. It is not claimed they are incorrect. It is claimed that they do not state what would be the rights of the defendants if the breaking of a wheel should throw the driver on the left-hand side when otherwise he was on the right-hand side. The instructions were not addressed to that subject. Other instructions covered the dilemmas, rights and liabilities arising from a wheel breaking by reason of a latent defect.

As to instruction No. 48, given by the trial court, the defendants contend that it was misleading, in view of the plaintiffs' contention regarding defendants' alleged negligence which preceded and caused the breaking of the spindle. It was not misleading on that subject. It was pertinent to that subject.

Instruction 51, given by the trial court, was an attempt to state that, if all of plaintiffs' allegations had been proved, and, if A. Robbins was not guilty of contributory negligence, then the plaintiffs could recover. It is claimed that by its wording it is an assertion that, if A. Robbins did not participate in or cause the negligence charged against the defendants, then the plaintiffs could recover. This claim is not well founded. The instruction is so worded that it is not reasonably susceptible of any other interpretation than that it was addressed to the negligence of the defendants and the contributory negligence, if any, of A. Robbins.

[7, 8] Each of the last two instructions used the words "the carelessness," "the negligence," without inserting immediately thereafter "if any." It is claimed that both instructions were erroneous in assuming facts. It has been held that, when the trial court expressly assumes a certain fact and at the same time purports to submit the question to the jury, then there is a conflict, and the case must be reversed. Cahoon v. Marshall, 25 Cal. 197, 200; 24 Cal. Jur. 841, 842. However, in the instant case there was no express assumption, but merely an ambiguous expression, which is susceptible of the charge of assuming facts. Furthermore, in the first instruction given by the court, it was stated: "Our provinces are entirely distinct and separate, and you will understand that in this charge the court in no manner or form is expressing or desiring to express any opinion on the weight of the evidence or any part of it, * * * or that any alleged fact in the case is or is not true." Instruction No. 22, as given, used the words "the damages" without following it with the expression "if any." The same attack is made. However, the damages suffered by A. Robbins were not a disputed fact in the case. Whatever they might be, it was the theory of the defense that these defendants were not liable. As the instructions of the court are to be read as a whole, we find no fault with the instructions given.

[9] Instruction No. 24, given by the trial court, was addressed to the subject of preponderance. It used the phrase "of some act of negligence." The defendants say it was not confined to acts of negligence pleaded in the complaint. The evidence introduced did not even purport to drag in any act of negligence not pleaded. Most assuredly the instruction as given did not purport to do so; therefore it was not erroneous.

Instruction No. 5, as given by the trial court, treated of the subject of the number of witnesses requisite to prove a fact. The defendants attack it as to the weight of the evidence. It was not addressed to that subject. As to the proper rule concerning the weight of the evidence, the instructions, when read as a whole, contain no error.

[10] During the trial the defendants called a witness as an expert, and examined him regarding the subject of the crystallization of metals. On cross-examination the plaintiffs addressed certain questions to the witness on the same subject. The defendants objected that the questions were not cross-examination, not within the issues of the case, and were therefore immaterial. The objections were overruled. We think that the ruling was quite proper.

[11] While one of the witnesses was being examined, he stated that the left-hand hub cap of the Ford truck was damaged. Later he stated that he did not make the examination, but was told that fact. A motion to strike out was made. The motion was denied. It is not clear from the record that there was any error in the ruling. The motion was made in language that was too broad and too uncertain. Moreover, there was no question regarding the fact. Two different witnesses testified directly to the fact and confirmed the alleged hearsay statement of the witness under examination. It is therefore patent that, even though the ruling may be said to be erroneous, it was not prejudicial error.

[12] When the witness Robbins was testifying, he was asked on recross-examination: "Have you any recollection of putting on your brake at all just before you crashed into that parked truck? A. No; if I had I would have been hit, head-on." Defendants moved to strike out; the motion was denied. Apparently the ruling was erroneous. However, it is equally apparent that the latter part of the answer, even though it did state a conclusion, was, under the facts, a true and correct conclusion, and, furthermore, that the ruling did not prejudice the defendants.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

RAY v. SUPERIOR COURT WITHIN AND FOR SAN DIEGO COUNTY. (Civ. 5986.)★

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 8, 1929.

As Modified Feb. 7, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court March 7, 1929.

Criminal law 🔑576(1)—Prosecution must be dismissed where trial was not commenced for thirty days after plea of not guilty without application for continuance (Pen. Code, § 1382, and § 1050, as added by St. 1927, p. 1036).

Where trial was commenced over objection more than thirty days after accused pleaded not guilty, and not within 30 days as required by Pen. Code, § 1050, as added by St. 1927, p. 1036, and accused made no application for continuance under section 1383, upon accused's motion for dismissal no cause being shown by state to contrary, under direct provision of section 1382, court had no alternative other than to grant motion.

Application by Estella M. Ray for a writ of mandate to compel the Superior Court of the State of California, within and for the County of San Diego, to dismiss a criminal proceeding. Writ granted.

M. W. Conkling, of El Centro, and Arthur Dorn and Edgar B. Hervey, both of San Diego, for petitioner.

Stephen Connell, Dist. Atty., and E. N. Clark, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of San Diego, for respondent.

CRAIG, J. The petitioner in this proceeding was indicted by a grand jury in the county of San Diego, on November 10, 1927, was arraigned and pleaded not guilty on the 16th day of said month, and her trial was set for December 12, 1927. No continuances were applied for or granted at the request of either party, and the record is silent as to what may have occurred on the date last mentioned. On December 27, 1927, however, the case was reset by the court for January 16, 1928, without objection, and, while it was not then called, it was on the following day announced ready by the people, at which time the defendant, petitioner herein, moved that the prosecution be dismissed. The motion was denied, and the defendant was forced to trial. She now prays by petition for a writ of mandamus from this court that the charges upon which she was indicted be ordered dismissed upon the grounds that she was not afforded a trial within 30 days after the entry of her plea, nor within 60 days after the return and filing of the indictment, and that no continuance was requested or ordered upon sufficient or any reason being first shown therefor.

A referee was appointed by this court to take evidence and report his findings of fact upon the issues presented by the petition and the answer thereto, and, the referee having complied with the requirements of his delegation, reported findings of the facts herein recited, and, further, that affidavits were filed by the petitioner upon the motion for dismissal, which embodied the entire proceedings therein, and that the averments thereof were not denied by the people.

Section 1050 of the Penal Code (as added by St. 1927, p. 1036) provides as follows: "The court shall set all criminal cases for trial for a date not later than thirty days after the date of entry of the plea of the defendant. No continuance of the trial shall be granted except upon affirmative proof in open court, upon reasonable notice, that the ends of justice require a continuance. No continuance shall be granted for any longer time than it is affirmatively proved the ends of justice require. Whenever any continuance is granted, the court shall enter in its minutes the facts proved which require the continuance. Criminal cases shall be given precedence over civil matters and proceedings. If any court is unable to hear all criminal cases pending before it within thirty days after the respective defendants have entered their pleas, it must immediately notify the chairman of the judicial council."

Section 1383 of the Penal Code directs that if the defendant be not charged or tried as provided in section 1382, the court may order the action to be continued from time to time, and in the meantime may discharge the defendant from custody on his own undertaking of bail for his appearance to answer the charge at the time to which the action is continued.

Section 1382 of the Penal Code requires that: "The court, unless good cause to the contrary is shown, must order the prosecution to be dismissed in the following cases: * * * 2. If the defendant whose trial has not been postponed upon his application, is not brought to trial within sixty days after the finding of the indictment, or filing of the information."

The trial of the instant case was commenced more than 30 days after the plea of the defendant was entered. This was done over the objection of the defendant, after repeated continuances without any showing as to the necessity, or length of time required, for a continuance; it was prosecuted more than 60 days after the indictment was found against her, although at least one civil case was tried in the same court in the meantime. As we have observed, upon her motion for dismissal no good cause was attempted to be shown by the people to the contrary. Section 1382 of the Penal Code is mandatory (People v. Perea, 273 P. 836), and under the conditions presented by the record herein it is obvious that a trial court has no alternative than to grant a motion for dismissal of the prosecution. Other propositions argued by the parties need not be discussed since the foregoing is determinative and conclusive of the right contended for by petitioner.

In re FIRST NAT. BANK IN OAKLAND et al.

FIRST NAT. BANK IN OAKLAND v. FOSS, County Treasurer et al.

(Civ. 6603.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 31, 1928.

Depositaries ⚷7—Acquisition and improvement district bond held good security for county deposit, though statute amending one so providing designated other bonds as security (St. 1925, p. 849; St. 1927, p. 1389).

Acquisition and improvement district bond held good as security, as provided by St. 1925, p. 849, for deposit by county treasurer of county's funds, though St. 1927, p. 1389, amended St. 1925, by designating another class of bonds as security for such deposits, the two statutes not being inconsistent, and hence there was no repeal by implication.

Mandamus by the First National Bank in Oakland against F. W. Foss, as County Treasurer of the County of Alameda, and Earle Warren, as District Attorney thereof to compel respondents to accept a certain bond as security for the deposit of public money. Writ granted.

Orrick, Palmer & Dahlquist, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

Earle Warren, Dist. Atty., and Agnes R. Polsdorfer, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Oakland, for respondents.

NOURSE, J. This is a controversy without action in the form of a petition for a writ of mandate, submitted upon an agreed statement of facts under the provisions of sections 1138 and 1140 of the Code of Civil Procedure. In accordance with the terms of the Public Moneys Deposit Act of 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 1389) the respondent Foss, as county Treasurer of the county of Alameda, duly deposited with the petitioner herein as an inactive deposit the sum of $200,000, belonging to or in the custody of the county of Alameda, taking as security therefor certain treasury notes or bonds of the United States and of the state of California. Thereafter said respondent notified petitioner that the security so deposited was inadequate, and requested petitioner to deposit additional security of the value of $1,000. Petitioner tendered to said respondent, as such additional security, a valid and outstanding bond of acquisition and improvement district No. 28 of the county of Los Angeles which had been duly issued under the provisions of the Act of May 23, 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 849). Said respondent accepted said bond as sufficient security for the purposes, subject, however, to the approval of the district attorney of said county of Alameda, as required by the Public Moneys Deposit Act. Said district attorney, the respondent Warren, refused to approve said bond, upon the ground that it was not a bond authorized by law to be received by public officers as security for the deposit of public moneys.

This is the single question at issue in this proceeding, which prays for a writ of mandamus to require the respondent Foss to accept, and the respondent Warren to approve, the bond referred to. The Public Moneys Deposit Act of 1923 (Stats. 1923, p. 25) authorized the deposit in banks of the funds of counties and municipalities only. As security for such deposits the treasurer was authorized to accept "treasury notes or bonds of the United States, or of this state or of any county, municipality, school district or irrigation district within this state" (section 4). This act was repealed by a new enactment of 1927 (Stats. 1927, p. 1389), which was made applicable to the deposit of the funds of counties, municipalities and other political subdivisions. Section 4 of the act of 1927 enumerated the kinds of bonds acceptable as security for such deposits. This section reads: "For the security of inactive deposits there shall be deposited with such treasurer treasury notes or bonds of the United States, or of this state or of any county, city and county, city, town, municipal utility district, flood control district, school district or irrigation district within this state, which bonds shall be approved by the treasurer and attorney of the county, city and county, city, town, municipality or other political subdivision."

Acquisition and improvement districts are organized and maintained under the act of 1925 (Stats. 1925, p. 849). This act provides a complete scheme for the creation and management of such districts, including the raising of funds for the purposes of the districts, the issuance of bonds evidencing the indebtedness, and the payment of the expenses of operation including the principal and interest on the bonds so issued. Section 45 of this act, having particular reference to such bonds, reads: "Any bonds which shall be issued under the provisions of this act shall be legal investments for all trust funds, and for the funds of insurance companies, banks, both commercial and savings, and trust companies, and for state school funds, and whenever any money or funds may by any law now or hereafter enacted be invested in bonds of cities, cities and counties, counties, school districts or irrigation districts within the state of California, such money or funds may be invested in the said bonds issued under this act and in accordance with its provisions, and whenever bonds of cities, cities and counties, counties, school districts or irrigation districts within this state may by any law now or hereafter enacted be used as security for the performance of any act or the deposit of any public moneys, the said bonds issued under this act and in pursuance of its provisions may be so used."

While this act was in full force and effect, and while districts were organized and bonds were issued in accordance with its terms, the Legislature, in 1927, amended the Public Moneys Deposit Act as above noted, and added to section 13 thereof an express repeal of the act of 1923, "and all acts amending said act and all acts and parts of acts in conflict with this act." Does this section repeal, expressly or by implication, the provisions of section 45 of the Acquisition and Improvement Act of 1925, relating to the use of bonds of such districts as security for public deposits? Manifestly there is no express repeal as the Improvement Act is not mentioned, either in the title or in the body of the Deposit Act, and the latter only purports to repeal such acts or parts of acts as are in conflict with it. Now there is nothing in either act which is in conflict with the other. The Deposit Act prescribes the procedure for the deposit of public moneys of certain public agencies and enumerates the kinds of bonds which may be accepted as security. It does not purport to make this enumeration exclusive of all others—that is to say, it does not provide that such bonds, and no others, may be received as such security. When, therefore, the Legislature, by other enactment, expressly makes other bonds acceptable for these purposes, it merely adds to the enumeration herein; but there is not the conflict between the two enactments which makes the one repugnant to the other, but both may be read together as one enactment.

To hold that the provisions of the Improvement Act were repealed by implication it would be necessary to find that the two acts are so inconsistent that effect cannot be given to both. The rule to be followed in such cases is found in Hilton v. Curry, 124 Cal. 84, 87, 56 P. 784, 785, where it is said: "Repeals by implication are not favored in the law, and whenever there are two statutes upon the same subject courts will endeavor to harmonize them so that, if possible, effect may be given to the provisions of each. It is only when there is a repugnancy or inconsistency between the two that the later act will be held to repeal the prior one." The same rule is differently expressed in Railroad Comm. v. Riley, 192 Cal. 54, 57, 218 P. 415, 417: "Repeals by implication are not favored and are recognized only when there is an irreconcilable conflict between two or more existing legislative enactments," and in Chicago, M. & St. P. Ry. Co. v. United States, 127 U. S. 406, 409, 8 S. Ct. 1194, 1196 (32 L. Ed. 180): "When there are two acts or provisions of law relating to the same subject, effect is to be given to both, if that be practicable. If the two are repugnant, the latter will operate as a repeal of the former to the extent of the repugnancy. But the second act will not operate as such repeal merely because it may repeat some of the provisions of the first one, and omit others, or add new provisions. In such cases the later act will operate as a repeal only where it plainly appears that it was intended as a substitute for the first act. As Mr. Justice Story says [Wood v. United States, 16 Pet. 342, 10 L. Ed. 987], it 'may be merely affirmative, or cumulative, or auxiliary.'"

Here we have a statute of 1923 which provides that county, municipal, school, and irrigation district bonds may be used as security for certain public deposits. In 1925 the Legislature, without expressly amending this act, but in an entirely separate enactment, provided that improvement bonds could be used as such security whenever county, municipal, school or irrigation district bonds are authorized to be so used "by any law now or hereafter enacted." There is certainly no "irreconcilable conflict" between the act of 1923 and that of 1925. The later act merely adds to the list of securities which are available for the purposes of the earlier act. By the amendment of 1927 additional bonds were added to this list, but without reference to the Improvement Act of 1925 or to the bonds issued under it. Though new bonds were added, the bonds of counties, cities, school and irrigation districts were retained. Thus the provisions of the improvement act that the bonds issued under it should be available whenever the bonds of counties, cities, school or irrigation districts should be made available are wholly consistent with the provisions of the act of 1927, particularly as the Legislature did not use any language in the act of 1927 which indicated an intention to limit the security to the bonds enumerated therein.

We find no conflict between the two enactments but we are satisfied that the one is merely cumulative of or auxiliary to the other. We therefore follow the rule, so well expressed in Cohn v. Isensee, 45 Cal. App. 531, 537, 188 P. 279, 282, "that all consistent statutes which can stand together, if related to the same subject, shall be construed together, and with reference to the whole system of which they form a part, and shall be harmonized, and effect given to all, if this can consistently be done, so as to make the law consistent in all its parts and uniform in its application and results."

Let a peremptory writ issue as prayed.

PEOPLE v. WILLIAMS et al. (Cr. 1723.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 9, 1929.

1. Criminal law 🔑1159(4)—Appellate court cannot consider credibility of witnesses.

On appeal from conviction based on conflicting evidence, appellate court cannot consider whether jury should have believed witnesses for defense and not those for the prosecution.

2. Criminal law 🔑491(1)—Questions to handwriting expert whether characteristics of personality shown by examples of defendant's handwriting showed defendant was not person making forged check held properly excluded.

In prosecution for forgery, questions to handwriting expert whether writings of defendant showed certain characteristics of understanding, frankness, and belief in ultimate good of things not indicated in forged check, and whether person who wrote check was wholly unlike defendant as shown by his handwriting, held properly excluded.

3. Criminal law 🔑448(2)—Question to minor implicated with defendant in forging check, proceeds of which were used to buy grapefruit, whether he bought grapefruit himself, held properly excluded as calling for conclusion.

Where minor alleged to have committed forgery with defendant for purpose of procuring funds to purchase grapefruit detailed transaction and purchase, question to minor whether he bought all the grapefruit himself held properly excluded as calling for conclusion of witness.

4. Criminal law 🔑824(4)—Requested instructions on proof of guilt beyond every reasonable doubt held properly excluded as unintelligible.

Requested instruction in prosecution for forgery that circumstances or suspicion no matter how strong are not proof of guilt, and, unless fact of defendant's guilt is proved beyond reasonable doubt, "actual exclusion of every reasonable hypothesis of their innocence consistent with facts proven," held properly refused as unintelligible.

5. Criminal law 🔑823(9, 15)—Requested instruction on presumption of innocence and question of reasonable doubt held properly refused, in view of instruction given (Pen. Code, § 1096, as amended, and § 1096a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039).

Where court instructed jury in accordance with Pen. Code, § 1096, as amended, and section 1096a, as added by St. 1927, p. 1039, on presumption of innocence and question of reasonable doubt, refusal of requested instruction thereon was not error.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; Frank Lamberson, Judge.

Elmer Williams and another were convicted of forgery, and they appeal. Affirmed.

J. C. Thomas, of Visalia, for appellants.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Leroy McCormick, Dist. Atty., and Leslie A. Cleary, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Visalia, for the People.

WORKS, P. J. The defendants were convicted of the crime of forgery. They appeal from the judgment.

[1] One of the points made by appellants is that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, but an examination of their brief shows that nothing more can be asserted than that there was a conflict in the evidence. Indeed, the argument proceeds principally upon the theory that the jury should have believed the witnesses for the defense and not those for the prosecution. With such a consideration, of course, courts of appeal have nothing to do. The evidence was sufficient.

[2] Appellants assign as error certain rulings of the trial judge in sustaining objections to questions put to a handwriting expert on cross-examination. These questions were: "Do you not know that in Elmer Williams' writing, in these examplars furnished you, there is a versatile mental agility and a humorous blending of understanding, personality and imagination not indicated in the written check upon which this action is based? * * * Is it not a fact that the examples which the defendants, the Williams brothers, have given you, show in their writing frankness and candor, the opposite to concealment, dissimulation, falsehood, cunning and finesse? * * * Is it not a fact that in the writing of the Williams brothers, the defendants, there is shown therein a buoyance of mind in the ultimate good of things and in the justice of Providence as shown by their writings, not indicated in the alleged forged check? * * * Is it not a fact that the person who wrote this check is a person wholly unlike Elmer Williams, and is a person who is a garrulous person? * * * Is it not a fact that the writing furnished you by Elmer Williams does not exhibit any crudities and is free from ostentation? * * * Do you not know that men like Eldon Williams and Elmer Williams have more sense than to furnish you with exemplars of their handwriting if they were guilty of forging that check?" The objections were properly sustained.

[3] It was the theory of the prosecution that appellants and a third person, who was a minor, and was made a ward of the juvenile court because of his complicity in the acts out of which the charge against appellants grew, committed the forgery for the purpose of procuring funds for the purchase of certain grapefruit. It was upon the testimony of the juvenile, together with ample corroborating evidence and circumstances, that appellants were convicted. The testimony of the juvenile contained a complete story of the consummation of the forgery, and showed that he and appellants, after realizing the proceeds of the forged check, went to the owner of the grapefruit, and, apparently, after some negotiations with him, themselves picked the fruit. The minor then, in the presence of appellants, made payment to the seller for it, and appellants and he carried it away. On the cross-examination of the witness appellants' counsel asked him the question: "Well, you bought all the grapefruit yourself, did you not?" The witness answered: "Well, that is according to the way you would consider the transaction." A direct answer to the question was then insisted upon, and the objection was interposed that it called for a conclusion of the witness. The objection was sustained, and it is contended that the ruling was error. We think not. The entire circumstances surrounding the purchase having been detailed, it was for the jury, and not for the witness, to say whether appellants and the juvenile, or he alone, had "bought" the grapefruit. The witness, by his answer to the question as first propounded, showed that he correctly appraised the situation, even if appellants' counsel did not.

[4, 5] Appellants claim that the trial judge erred in refusing to instruct the jury "that circumstances of suspicion, no matter how grave or strong, are not proof of guilt, and, unless the fact of the defendants' guilt is proved beyond every reasonable doubt, the actual exclusion of every reasonable hypothesis of their innocence consistent with the facts proven." This proposed instruction is unintelligible, and it was properly refused for that reason. Moreover, the judge gave to the jury, in accordance with the provisions of sections 1096 and 1096a of the Penal Code (St. 1927, p. 1039), an instruction concerning the presumption of innocence and on the question of reasonable doubt. Section 1096a is to the effect that "the court may read to the jury section 1096 of this Code, and no further instruction on the subject of the presumption of innocence or defining reasonable doubt need be given."

[6] Appellants state two other points, but, as they are not argued, and as no authority is cited in support of them, we deem it unnecessary, under a familiar rule, to consider them.

Judgment affirmed.

F. L. Richardson, of San Diego, for appellants.

HOUSER, J. This appeal is from a judgment rendered in pursuance of an order of nonsuit in a will contest.

At the time the will was drawn, the testatrix was 82 years of age. She left no surviving husband, children, father, mother, brother, or sister. Her property was devised and bequeathed unto her "good friend George E. Bell * * * for the term of his natural life, and at his death in fee simple to my (her) friend W. Jefferson Davis. * * *" The contestants of the will are either surviving nieces or nephews of the testatrix. Although other grounds were alleged in the contest, the ground upon which reliance was finally placed by the contestants was that of undue influence.

The only point made by appellants herein is that "the court erred in sustaining the proponents' motion for nonsuit and taking the case from the jury."

[1] On a motion for nonsuit, it is a well-established rule that all contradictions, conflicts, and inconsistencies which may appear in the evidence adduced by the plaintiff shall be disregarded, to the end that the evidence as a whole may be viewed in its most favorable light as it affects the theory of the complaint. For the sole purpose of ruling on the motion, without any question being permissible as to the falsity of such facts, for the moment they are assumed to be true and necessarily must be so accepted by the trial court. With so much in mind, in brief it may be stated that from the evidence presented by the contestants herein, it was made to appear that Davis, to whom the remainder of the estate was bequeathed and devised, was, and for a considerable length of time preceding the date of the execution of the will had been, the attorney for the testatrix; that at that time she was indebted to Davis for legal services rendered by him in her behalf in the sum of $250; that the testatrix was a frequent caller at the law office of Davis, and that he also was more than an occasional visitor at the home of the testatrix; that both at the home of the testatrix and in public places as well, Davis bestowed unusual attentions upon the testatrix; that on several occasions he presented her with flowers and potted plants; that together they went to dinner or automobile riding, from which they sometimes returned to the home of the testatrix at a late hour, when the testatrix appeared to be under the influence of intoxicating liquor.

From the testimony of one of the witnesses introduced by contestants, it appeared that on the day before the will was executed the testatrix went to Davis' law office, and there in the presence of such witness stated to Davis that she wished to change a will theretofore executed by her, so that in case of the death of Mr. Bell (who was the beneficiary both in the will which she desired to have changed and in the will in question) neither his relatives nor her relatives would receive any portion of her estate; but that "she desired to substitute Mr. Davis as a beneficiary under her will in place of any of Mr. Bell's relatives. That Mr. Davis laughed, * * * threw up his hands and said, 'You aren't talking to me, Mrs. Bleil; of course, you can make your will any way you want, but under the circumstances I could not draw it for you, or have anything to do with it; you will have to find another attorney to do it for you.'" Accordingly, the testatrix procured the services of a Mr. Butler, an attorney who theretofore had "handled a case" for her. The next day, in the absence of Mr. Davis therefrom, the testatrix went to his office, at which time she made the statement to his secretary "that she stopped at Mr. Butler's office, but that he was out; that he was drawing up a new will for her, and later she asked her (the secretary) to telephone Mr. Butler to see if her will was ready for her to sign; that she had him draw it up the day before, and it was ready for her that day. * * * She (the secretary) telephoned Mr. Butler at Mrs. Bleil's request; he stated the will was ready, and asked if Mrs. Bleil would come down and execute it, to which Mrs. Bleil replied that she was in a hurry, and said he could bring it to her quicker, and asked that he bring it to her at Davis' office. Mr. Butler brought the will up to Davis' office at Mrs. Bleil's request, and she signed it and declared it to be her will, in the presence of Mr. Butler and herself in Davis' office; there being no other person present, and requested that Mr. Butler and herself sign as witnesses which they did."

Mr. Davis, called as a witness by contestants, corroborated the fact that when the testatrix asked him to draw the will by which he would be made a beneficiary, he declined to do so, but told her that "she would have to get another attorney. That he never advised with Mrs. Bleil about the making of her will in 1926, and made no attempt of any kind to suggest any of the terms of her will; that he was not present when the same was executed and had only casual knowledge of its contents until long after the same was executed; that Charles E. Butler, who drew the will, was an attorney with offices in the same building, but with no professional relationship then existing between them."

The question of law presented to this court is whether from the foregoing facts it was error on the part of the trial judge to refuse to submit the issue of undue influence to the jury for its determination.

[2] A consideration of the evidence hereinbefore outlined discloses the situation that, aside from the presumption arising from the confidential relation sustained by the attorney to his client generally, no positive fact was presented from which the conclusion could be reached that undue influence was exerted to procure the execution of the will in question. Nor was the evidence such that an inference rightfully could be deduced that the normal mind of the testatrix had been subjugated to that of the attorney. At most, nothing more than a conjecture that such was the case could properly be indulged. The presumption of undue influence which attached to the attorney solely because he was the attorney for the testatrix was not positive in character. In order that the presumption become absolute, evidence of activity, persuasion, or instigation on the part of the attorney, directed toward the execution of the will in his favor, is an indispensable prerequisite. Unless some such act of inducement be discernible from the evidence, the foundational presumption becomes negligible in importance as a factor in determining the issue of undue influence. In other words, the relationship of attorney and client when appearing respectively as between the beneficiary and the testatrix, although carrying a presumption of confidence and trust from which would naturally flow a simple influence on the part of the attorney toward the client to follow a specified suggested action, nevertheless (in the absence of either direct or circumstantial evidence of some act by the attorney from which an inference, at least, might be legally deduced that pressure was brought to bear directly upon the testamentary act, to the end that the free agency of the testatrix was thereby destroyed), such presumption, as against evidence of nonactivity or nonparticipation by the attorney either in suggesting, counseling or advising with reference to the preparation or the execution of the will, is not sufficient in itself to sustain a charge of undue influence. Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 257, 104 P. 6; Estate of Lavinburg, 161 Cal. 536, 119 P. 915; Estate of Ricks, 160 Cal. 450, 117 P. 532; Estate of McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 30 P. 101; Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 82 P. 57.

In Estate of Baird, 176 Cal. 381, 384, 168 P. 561, 563, it is said that: "A 'presumption of undue influence' arises from proof of the existence of a confidential relation between the testator and such a beneficiary, 'coupled with activity on the part of the latter in the preparation of the will.' The confidential relation alone is not sufficient. There must be activity on the part of the beneficiary in the matter of the preparation of the will"—citing authorities.

The evidence in the instant case introduced by the contestants, far from showing any act on the part of the attorney from which it might be inferred that the mind of the testatrix had been subjugated and that her free agency in the matter of the preparation and the execution of her will had been destroyed, to the contrary, disclosed a state of facts, positive in character, which indicated with conclusiveness that in the preparation and the execution of the will the testatrix acted freely, voluntarily, and without pressure of any sort so far as the attorney was concerned.

In Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 257, 262, 104 P. 6, 8, where a situation somewhat similar to that here involved was under consideration, among other things, the court said: "* * * Giving to contestants the full force of the presumption of undue influence arising from the confidential relations between the testator and the proponent, coupled with activity on the part of the latter in the preparation of the will (In re McDevitt, 95 Cal. 17, 33 [30 P. 101]; Coghill v. Kennedy, 119 Ala. 641 [24 So. 459]), this presumption was fully met and overthrown by the uncontradicted evidence showing the actual circumstances surrounding the preparation and execution of the will. (Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495 [82 P. 57].) It was shown that the testator, before executing his will, had consulted with an attorney, who visited him for that purpose. At this interview no member of his family, except his wife, was present. * * *"

[3, 4] Although it is true that ordinarily in a case where by the will of a client his attorney has been made a beneficiary therein, on a contest of such will the burden is cast on the attorney to overcome the presumption of fraud and unfair dealing which the law attaches to an attorney in such a situation (Estate of Witt, 198 Cal. 407, 245 P. 197), nevertheless, where, on an issue of undue influence, the evidence introduced by the contestant is such that, assuming that thereon a verdict should be rendered in favor of the contestant, the trial court would be bound to set it aside, no error is committed by the trial court in refusing to submit such issue to the jury; but in such circumstances an order of nonsuit is justified. Estate of Higgins, 156 Cal. 257, 104 P. 6; Estate of Morey, 147 Cal. 495, 82 P. 57.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Victor R. McLucas, Judge.

Action by J. W. Fuqua against Richard Thomas. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. Stice, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Leland J. Allen, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. [1] Plaintiff was employed by defendant as a camera man at a salary of $150 per week. The controversy arose from a difference of opinion between plaintiff and defendant as to the length of time covered by the employment. Plaintiff and his witnesses testified to a definite period. Defendant denied such certainty of time with reference to the employment, and, although no custom was specially pleaded by defendant, on the trial he endeavored to establish a custom to the effect that employment of the nature of that rendered by plaintiff was limited to time actually consumed in photographing the picture being produced. Appellant complains that the trial court restricted defendant in the evidence relating to custom; but, as the findings of fact made by the trial court (which were supported by the evidence) were to the effect that by agreement of the parties the employment commenced and ended, respectively, at a date certain, the question of whether custom prevailed in the premises became immaterial. It follows that no error was committed by the trial court in refusing to admit certain evidence offered by defendant with relation to such claimed custom. Moreover, as against appellant's contention, it appeared that, although each of the parties was permitted to introduce some evidence relating to the custom in question, the trial court was positive in its declaration that the contract of employment of plaintiff covered a fixed period, and that "I am not going to decide this case on the custom, because the court knows that it is very uncertain. Sometimes they do and sometimes they don't."

[2] We find no merit in appellant's contention that the time book kept by the manager of the defendant, showing dates on which plaintiff performed service for defendant, was improperly received in evidence. Although the time book was furnished by the manager at his own instance, and not in pursuance of any special direction therefor by his employer, it clearly appeared that the time book was a part of the bookkeeping system employed by the manager in the conduct of the business of defendant.

writ of review to annul district tax levies by the board of supervisors of San Diego county for high school purposes. It appears from the pleadings that the petitioners reside, the one in the San Diego high school district and the other in the Sweetwater union high school district, and that they each pay taxes in their respective districts. On the 4th day of June, 1928, the boards of education of these two districts submitted to and filed with the county superintendent of schools school budgets showing the purposes for which and the amount of money needed by each of the districts, together with the total estimated receipts, and the remainder necessary to be raised by a tax levy. On June 20, the county superintendent approved the budget of the Sweetwater union high school district and submitted it to the board of supervisors. On June 26, she followed a like procedure with the budget of San Diego high school district. Both of these budgets indicated that it would be necessary to fix a rate in excess of 75 cents on each $100 of assessed valuation in order to raise the requisite funds. On September 1, 1928, the respondent board fixed the rate of San Diego high school district at 85 cents and of Sweetwater union high school district at 94 cents, and it is the resolution of the board fixing these rates which the petitioners claim is beyond its jurisdiction.

Their contention in this behalf is based upon section 1755 of the Political Code, which section makes it "the duty of every high school board to make and file with the Board of Supervisors of each county in which any part of their high school district is situated, on or before the first Monday of September next succeeding the formation of said district, an estimate of the cost of purchasing a suitable lot, of procuring plans and specifications and of erecting a suitable building, of supplying the same with furniture and necessary apparatus, and of fencing and ornamenting the grounds, for the accommodation of the school," unless the board shall have secured temporary quarters or a bond issue has been voted. (Italics ours.) The section further provides that, if the board has leased temporary quarters, they shall either secure a renewal of the lease before the first Monday in September, or submit the estimate mentioned above, and, in the event of their failure to submit such a budget to the board of supervisors, makes it the duty of the county superintendent of schools to supply the omission before the second Monday in September. In 1913 there was added to the section this sentence: "Provided, the total tax for high school purposes shall not exceed seventy-five cents on each one hundred dollars assessed valuation, exclusive of bond and interest rate." It is this concluding language which petitioners say prohibits a levy for the maintenance and support of high schools in excess of 75 cents. Section 1756 of the Political Code, enacted at the same time as section 1755 (i. e., 1909), provides that the board of education of each high school district shall file with the county superintendent of schools an estimate of the total amount necessary to support the high schools of the district, including the amounts necessary for "(a) Teachers' salaries; (b) current expenses; (c) books, magazines and apparatus; (d) sites, buildings and furniture; (e) other miscellaneous expenses." There is no limit designated by this section. In 1921 a new section was added to the Political Code, numbered 1612a, by which it is made the duty of all boards of education both elementary and high school, to prepare a budget showing all the purposes for which they will need money during the next ensuing school year, the amount of which shall be submitted to the county superintendent of schools for approval. When he has approved it and determined the amount of money (by subtracting from the total estimate the income to be received from other sources) which must be provided by a district school tax, he is required to file it with the board of supervisors, whose duty it then becomes "to fix such a rate for such district tax as will produce at least the amount of district tax money requested by the particular district." No limitation of rate is fixed by this section. It does, however, say that "all acts and parts of acts not in harmony with this section are hereby repealed."

Assuming, solely for the purposes of this opinion, that review will lie to test the validity of a resolution such as the one here in question, we are convinced that the levy must be sustained. The usual office of a proviso is to "except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify or to restrain its generality." 25 R. C. L. 984. The United States Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Story in the case of Minis v. U. S., 15 Pet. 423, 10 L. Ed. 791, states the rule in this manner: "It would be somewhat unusual to find engrafted upon an act making special and temporary appropriation, any provision which was to have a general and permanent application to all future appropriations. Nor ought such an intention on the part of the legislature to be presumed, unless it is expressed in the most clear and positive terms, and where the language admits of no other reasonable interpretation. The office of a proviso, generally, is either to except something from the enacting clause, or to qualify or restrain its generality, or to exclude some possible ground of misinterpretation of it, as extending to cases not intended by the legislature to be brought within its purview. A general rule, applicable to all future cases, would most naturally be expected to find its proper place in some distinct and independent enactment." The concluding sentence of this quotation is especially apt in its application to our problem. The learned jurist, in speaking for the same tribunal in U. S. v. Dickson, 15 Pet. 141, 10 L. Ed. 689, throws still further light upon the functions of a proviso by the use of these words: "* * * We are led to the general rule of law which has always prevailed, and become consecrated almost as a maxim in the interpretation of statutes, that where the enacting clause is general in its language and objects, and a proviso is afterwards introduced, that proviso is construed strictly, and takes no case out of the enacting clause which does not fall fairly within its terms. In short, a proviso carves special exceptions only out of the enacting clause; and those who set up any such exception, must establish it as being within the words as well as within the reason thereof." (Italics ours.) Our own Supreme Court, in considering the interpretation to be given to a proviso in the case of People v. Morrill, 26 Cal. 336–355, says: "This proviso is to be read in the light of the subject-matter," using the expression "subject-matter" as synonymous with the legislative field occupied by the enacting clause.

No doubt this general rule of construction is from time to time modified by other rules of construction when necessity arises. But is there such necessity in the present instance? We think not. Section 1755 in its enacting clause gives general power to raise any sum necessary or advisable for a limited purpose, to wit: To supply new buildings and equipment for a newly formed district. Without the limitation expressed in the proviso a general tax for maintenance might be levied and another unlimited tax for the acquisition of ground, structure, furniture and apparatus. Assuming that the proviso has a more far-reaching effect than to say that a rate for the latter purposes shall not exceed 75 cents on each assessed value of $100, we think a fair construction of its terms, according to the announced rule is that, if the rate for example, for maintenance shall be fixed at 50 cents, the rate for the acquisition of new buildings for a new district shall not exceed 25 cents, and, if the rate for maintenance amounts to 75 cents or more, no tax shall be levied to secure land, build, and equip a building. If it were intended that the proviso should have a general effect, the Legislature would undoubtedly have enacted it as a general and independent section rather than to have tied it to a section adopted for very limited purposes. Inferentially, at least, the views we have expressed find support in the case of Esberg v. Badaracco, 202 Cal. 110, 259 P. 730, wherein it was said that the provisions of 1612a, made it mandatory that the board of supervisors raise the amount of money found to be necessary by the estimate prepared under its provisions, and the board was required by the decision to fix a rate of $.97338 on each $100 valuation, instead of that previously determined by the board of supervisors to be sufficient, to wit, $.84729. It is stated in the case just cited that "the law prescribes a tax limit for school purposes," and this is undoubtedly true, but it seems impossible to escape the conclusion that section 1755 does not restrict the kind of a tax here levied.

These conclusions render it unnecessary to determine whether the writ of review will lie.

Resolution affirmed.

MARDEROSIAN v. NATIONAL CASUALTY CO. (Civ. 6465.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 15, 1929.

1. Insurance 🔑73—Newspaper, not its circulation manager, held general agent for insurance company under contract for sale by newspaper of insurance company's policies.

Where contract between insurance company and newspaper recited that newspaper was desirous of securing agency for sale of insurance policies in connection with sale of paper, and that insurance company was to supervise all advertising in newspaper in connection with sale of its policies, and insurance company delivered policies to newspaper for sale, newspaper, and not its circulation manager, was constituted general agent for insurance company.

2. Insurance 🔑130(7)—Insurance company's managers, supervising newspaper's sale of its accident policies, are assumed to have approved circular delivered by newspaper solicitor to insured.

Where contract for sale by newspaper of insurance company's accident policies provided that insurance company's managers should supervise all advertising in connection with sale of policies, it is assumed that managers performed duty in passing on advertising matter, and approved circular delivered by newspaper solicitor to insured, and found such circular complied with state insurance laws.

3. Insurance 🔑665(8)—Evidence that newspaper, selling defendant's policies, and defendant, ignored provision that policy was to become effective on day following indorsement, showed waiver of such provision.

In suit on accident policy, sold by newspaper under contract with insurance company, provision that policies should become effective at noon of day following date schedule was received and indorsed by registrar agent held waived, under evidence showing both newspaper and insurer ignored provision in dealing with over 11,000 policies.

4. Insurance 🔑138(1)—Newspaper's failure to procure license to sell insurer's policies held no defense to action by insured against insurer.

In action by insured against insurance company on insurance contract, fact that newspaper selling insurance company's policies had no license from insurance commissioner is no defense.

5. Insurance ⚷92—Evidence showed newspaper was vested with ostensible authority to do everything that insurer and its employees did in making insurance contract sufficient to fix insurer's liability (Civ. Code, §§ 2317, 2334).

Evidence that newspaper and insurance company entered into contract for sale of policies by newspaper, and that policies were sold pursuant thereto, showed insurance company vested newspaper with ostensible authority to do everything that it and its employees did in making contract of insurance with insured, under Civ. Code, §§ 2317, 2334, and such ostensible authority was sufficient to fix insurer's liability on policy.

6. Insurance ⚷78—Newspaper, authorized to take risks without consulting insurer, held insurer's general agent.

Where newspaper was authorized to take risks and enter into contracts of insurance without consulting insurance company, newspaper was general agent of insurance company.

7. Insurance ⚷130(7)—Signing of insurance contract, not stating date when effective, and delivery thereof to general agent, with premium, created contract binding on insurer.

Where solicitor for newspaper, which was general agent for sale of defendant's accident policies, took insured's subscription to newspaper and solicited insurance, handing insured form of insurance policy contract there was offer of insurance by general agent, and signing of contract, containing no notice when policy would become effective, nor provision for physical examination, and delivery thereof to newspaper with full first year's premium, constituted acceptance, and created binding contract between insured and insurer.

8. Insurance ⚷175—Policy issued on valid parol contract of insurance, though not delivered until after loss, is effective from time agreed on in parol agreement, irrespective of delivery.

Where valid parol contract of insurance has been entered into, policy to be issued thereon is simply memorial of prior parol contract, and, even though policy be not delivered until after loss occurs, insurance is deemed effective from time agreed on in oral agreement, irrespective of delivery of policy.

9. Insurance ⚷91—Act of general agent within scope of insurance business is binding on insurer, though in violation of agent's authority, when insured has no notice of limitation on authority.

Where insured has no notice of any limitation on powers of general agent, any act within scope of insurance business is binding on insurance company, although it is in fact in violation of agent's authority.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Denver S. Church, Judge.

Action by Mary Marderosian, as administratrix of the estate of Parsiag Marderosian, against the National Casualty Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gallaher & Jertberg, of Fresno, for appellant.

Theodore M. Stuart, of Fresno, for respondent.

CAMPBELL, Justice pro tem. This appeal is from a judgment in the sum of $1,250, found to be due to plaintiff on a policy of insurance issued by defendant to Parsiag Marderosian, who died as the result of an accident, and of whose estate plaintiff is administratrix. The action was submitted to the trial court upon an agreed statement of facts, and is based upon a contract for accident insurance entered into between P. Marderosian in his lifetime and the defendant. Appellant contends that the judgment in favor of plaintiff is contrary to the stipulated facts and contrary to the law applicable to such facts.

The stipulated facts, summarized as briefly as they may be to an understanding of the issues presented, are that in the month of December, 1925, the defendant and the Fresno Bee, a newspaper published and circulated in the county of Fresno, entered into a written contract containing the following provisions: "Said party of the second part (Casualty Company) agrees to issue to said newspaper 'Travel Only' policies to all those certain readers or subscribers of the newspaper published by said party of the first part (Fresno Bee), whose names and addresses are listed upon blank schedules furnished by said party of the second part for that purpose. Such schedules are to be delivered to a registrar agent to be named by said party of the second part; upon receipt of such schedules said registrar agent shall immediately issue and forward to each person listed upon such schedule a policy to be known hereafter as the 'Fresno Bee Travel and Pedestrian Accident Policy.' * * * Said party of the second part agrees upon receipt of such schedules to have its registrar agent stamp the hour of receipt by him of such schedules and to indorse an acceptance for said party of the second part upon one copy of each quadruplicate set of schedules and to immediately return such indorsed copy to said party of the first part. * * * It is further understood and agreed that the insurance under all such policies shall become effective as of 12 o'clock noon, standard time of the day following the date that the schedule bearing the name of each insured is received and indorsed by said registrar agent and shall continue in force for one year subject to cancellation as hereinafter set out."

Pursuant to such contract entered into between the Fresno Bee and the National Casualty Company, which is the only insurance company that issues insurance through the

Fresno Bee, appellant appointed J. V. Hollett, the circulation manager of the Bee, its registrar agent, and an insurance agent's license to represent appellant was issued to J. V. Hollett by the insurance commissioner of the state of California. On or about January 8, 1927, the solicitor for the Bee called at Marderosian's home, three miles from the city of Fresno, and solicited his subscription to the Bee, and as an inducement explained the insurance to Marderosian and delivered him a circular reading on the first page: "Through arrangement with the National Casualty Company of Detroit, Michigan, one of the oldest and most reliable accident insurance companies in the world, the Fresno Bee now offers all subscribers (new or old) a $7,500 travel accident insurance policy for only $1 a year—over $12,000 already paid Bee subscribers—no medical examination necessary—four policies ranging in price from 50c to $1.25—full particulars contained in this issue." On the inside of the circular there is a description of the four policies, numbered 1, 2, 3, and 4, the amounts payable for various injuries under the policies, and the premiums charged. The prospective insured is cautioned to "examine the coverage in above policies, then select the one you prefer—mention number of policy selected in the coupon when making your application. If you wish to secure additional policies for other members of your family, write for additional application blanks to the Fresno Bee Insurance Department, Fresno, California." Then appears the warning: "Do not wait until the accident happens. Do it to-day! Avail yourself of the opportunity to protect yourself before and not after." There is then printed on the circular that subscribers "may take advantage of any of the travel accident policies by filling out the coupon below and mail with the price of the policy to the Fresno Bee."

After explaining this circular to Marderosian, the solicitor handed him a blank form of the "insurance policy contract" and advised Marderosian that, if he became a subscriber to the Bee, he could take out such insurance whenever he desired. Following such conversation Marderosian gave the solicitor his subscription for the Bee and remained a regular subscriber at the time of his injury and death. On the afternoon of January 17, 1927, Marderosian filled out and signed the "insurance policy contract" and delivered it, together with the sum of $1.25—the specified premium—to the carrier, and notified him it was "for the purpose of accepting insurance under said policy No. 2," which contract and money was accepted by the carrier, who told Marderosian his policy would be mailed to him. The carrier did not return to the Bee office until the morning of January 18th, when he took Marderosian's contract and money to the office of the auto route manager, as he was instructed to do; but, as the manager was away the carrier left the contract and money on the manager's desk, as he had customarily done. The manager was away from his office, and did not return until the morning of January 19th, when he found the Marderosian contract and money, and thereupon, in accordance with the usual business custom of the Bee, the manager delivered the Marderosian contract and money to the insurance department of the Bee, and thereupon Marderosian's name was listed upon the "schedule" (mentioned in the contract between the Bee and the defendant), which "schedule" was thereupon signed by Hollett and the policy No. 2 of the defendant company was about noon of the 19th issued to P. Marderosian and mailed to him.

On January 18th, about 6:15 p. m., while Marderosian was walking on a public highway, he was accidentally struck by an automobile, and received injuries from which he died at about 4 o'clock on the afternoon of January 19th. The Bee, in the usual course of business, remitted to the defendant the premium on the Marderosian policy; but the defendant, on February 21, 1927, denied all liability and returned the premium, but the plaintiff administratrix refused to accept the check, and it was sent back to defendant. Neither the solicitor of the Bee, who sought and procured Marderosian's subscription, nor Marderosian, ever knew of or had ever heard of the contract between the Bee and the defendant, or knew anything concerning its terms, provisions, or conditions, or ever knew of any contract between the Bee and defendant. Marderosian was in every way qualified to procure insurance under "policy No. 2," and no physical examination was required. The general course of business in the issuance by said Bee of policies of insurance in the defendant company is that, following the execution of the contract between the Bee and the defendant, the defendant delivered to the Bee a large number of blank forms of its insurance policies, including "policy No. 2," upon which the signatures of defendant's president and secretary were engraved, and the "said Bee in issuing one of said policies simply filled in the name, age, and address of the insured on page 1 of the policy, and filled in the date at the end of the policy, and said Hollett, or a clerk designated by him, then signed the same with Hollett's name as 'resident agent,' and the policy was then mailed to the insured." By this method, which had always been followed by the Bee, it had, up to January 17, 1927, issued and delivered 11,000 of defendant's policies on which defendant had paid losses aggregating over $12,000. Each of these policies was dated on the date it was countersigned. The method followed by the employees of the Bee concerning the subscription and insurance of Marderosian "was the usual and general course of business of said Bee in said matters, and but for the fact that the said Sehers (said auto route manager) was away from Fresno when the carrier of the Bee delivered Marderosian's 'signed insurance contract' and money to Seher's desk, the schedule bearing Marderosian's name would have been signed by Hollett, and the policy for Marderosian would have been completed, countersigned by Hollett, and mailed to Marderosian on or about noon of January 18, 1927," six hours before his injury.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that under the provisions of the contract the company constituted Hollett, the circulation manager of the Bee, and not the Bee, its agent. In this we do not agree with appellant. On the contrary, the contract clearly discloses that the Bee was made appellant's general agent under the authorities cited. The recitals or the inducement for the execution of the contract declares that the Bee "is desirous of securing an agency for the sale" of certain insurance policies of a kind the defendant is duly licensed to write in California. In other words, the Bee became a sales agent of the defendant. The defendant, not only gave the Bee a large number of its policies to sell, but made the Bee agree to sell not less than 2,000 during the first year. We also find that the contract contains the usual clause found in such contracts, by which the Bee agrees to forward all information relative to claims, and the company on its part agrees to promptly investigate and dispose of all claims on the merits. Furthermore, the "United States Managers" of the defendant were given power to supervise all advertising matter the Bee used in its campaign to sell defendant's policies. Under this provision, in the absence of any contention or showing to the contrary, we must assume that the "United States managers" performed their duty in passing upon the advertising matter used by the Bee, and approved of the particular form of circular that was delivered by the Bee solicitor to Marderosian, and found such circular complied with the state insurance laws. The contract also obligates the Bee not to sell such insurance issued by any other company, and in return defendant obligates itself not to issue such insurance through any other newspaper in Fresno. When the contract containing the foregoing excerpts is read in connection with the stipulated facts, no conclusion can be reached, other than that the Bee was constituted a general agent for the defendant company.

[3] Appellant calls attention to the provision in the contract which recites that the policies to be issued should become effective at noon "of the day following the date" the schedule is received and indorsed by the registrar agent. The stipulated facts show that both parties totally ignored this provision. The facts show that up to January 17th the Bee had issued and delivered over 11,000 policies, and "each and all of these policies was dated on the date it was countersigned." According to Marderosian's policy, Exhibit E, it became effective at noon of the day it is dated. So that in dealing with over 11,000 applicants for policies "the day following" clause was waived by both the insurer and the general agent. It appears that the Bee had even greater powers than are ordinarily vested in a "general agent," as that term is defined in the authorities cited.

[4] As to the fact that the Bee had no license from the insurance commissioner, it may be said that the failure to secure such license is no defense in an action by an insured against an insurance company upon an insurance contract (Goldstone v. Columbia Life & Trust Co., 33 Cal. App. 119, 164 P. 416).

[5] Under the agreed facts the defendant fully vested the Bee with ostensible authority to do everything that it and its employees did in making the contract of insurance with Marderosian. Civ. Code, §§ 2317, 2334. Such ostensible authority alone is sufficient to fix defendant's liability. 1 Cal. Jur. 737.

[6] The Fresno Bee was authorized to take risks and enter into contracts of insurance without consulting the defendant company, and was, therefore, a general agent of defendant.

[7] Again, this is not a case where a person seeks insurance by going to the insurance company, signing an application, and submitting to the usual physical examination. On the contrary, the insurance sought the person, and no application or physical examination was required. When the solicitor of the Bee took Marderosian's subscription to the paper and solicited him to take the insurance, explained and handed him the pamphlet describing the same, together with the form of "insurance policy contract" for him to sign, it constituted the offer of insurance by a general agent, and when Marderosian completed and signed the "insurance policy contract," which contained no notice when the policy would become effective, and delivered it to the carrier of the Bee, together with $1.25 as the full first year's premium, it constituted an acceptance, and a binding contract came into existence between Marderosian, as the insured, and the defendant company as the insurer.

[8-10] Where a valid parol contract of insurance has been entered into, the policy to be issued thereon is simply the memorial of the prior parol contract, and, even though the policy be not delivered until after the loss occurs, the insurance is deemed effective from the time agreed upon in the parol agreement, irrespective of any delivery of the policy. Crawford v. Insurance Co., 125 Cal. 609, 58 P. 177. "If an agent, authorized to accept risks, accepts a risk by parol, promising to deliver the policy, the insurance begins with the acceptance, and the contract in parol continues until the policy is delivered, when it is superseded by the policy." Ferrar v. Western Assurance Co., 30 Cal. App. 491, 159 P. 609, 611. Where the assured has no notice of any limitation on the powers of the general agent, any act within the scope of the insurance business is binding on the insurance company, although it is in fact in violation of the agent's authority. Wheaton v. Insurance Co., 76 Cal. 415, 18 P. 758, 9 Am. St. Rep. 216, Farnum v. Insurance Co., 83 Cal. 246, 23 P. 869, 17 Am. St. Rep. 233. "Every indulgence not inconsistent with the plain meaning of the contract must be shown to the assured." Raulet v. Insurance Co., 157 Cal. 213, 107 P. 292.

The authorities cited by appellant are not inconsistent with the views here expressed, as the facts in these cases are not analogous to the stipulated facts in the present case.

The judgment is affirmed.

In re MALVASI'S ESTATE.

SPINGOLA v. DONA.

(Civ. 6506.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 9, 1929.

1. Wills 🔑400—Finding on conflicting evidence that testator was of sound mind and competent when executing will is conclusive on appeal.

Determination by jury upon conflicting evidence that testator, at time of executing will, was of sound mind and competent, is conclusive on appeal.

2. Wills 🔑55(1)—Evidence held to sustain finding that testator was competent and of sound mind when executing will.

Evidence in will contest held to sustain finding that testator at time of executing will was competent and of sound mind.

3. Wills 🔑324(4)—Evidence held insufficient for jury on issue of due execution of will.

Evidence in will contest relative to due execution of will held insufficient for jury.

4. Trial 🔑267(3)—Instructions were properly modified to eliminate issues as to which nonsuit was properly granted.

Where motion for nonsuit on issues relating to due execution of will and undue influence was properly granted, a modification of instruction so as to eliminate such issues from the consideration of the jury was also proper.

5. New trial 🔑159—Deciding motion for new trial without argument was not error, where counsel stated that he did not desire to argue motion.

The fact that court decided motion for new trial without argument thereon at the time the motion was made was not error, where counsel stated at time of making motion that he did not desire to argue it.

6. New trial 🔑44(1)—Failure of juror, in will contest involving unsoundness of mind, to volunteer information that she was Christian Scientist, was not misconduct authorizing new trial.

Failure of juror, in will contest involving incapacity or unsoundness of mind of testator, to volunteer information that she was a Christian Scientist, in order to permit of exercising peremptory challenge, held not to constitute misconduct authorizing new trial as depriving contestant of a fair and impartial jury, particularly in view of fact that juror stated on affidavit that she recognized the existence of disease, including mental incompetency.

7. Jury 🔑44—Ordinarily religious belief of prospective juror is immaterial (Const. art. 1, § 4).

Ordinarily the religious belief of a prospective juror is immaterial in accordance with Const. art. 1, § 4, and no duty is imposed on prospective juror to volunteer information on that subject.

8. Jury 🔑44—Juror was not disqualified to try issues in will contest involving unsoundness of mind because she was Christian Scientist (Code Civ. Proc. § 602).

Juror was not disqualified, under Code Civ. Proc. § 602, to try issues in will contest involving incapacity or unsoundness of mind of testator by reason of fact that she was a Christian Scientist.

9. Statutes 🔑253—Law precluding judge from passing on his own disqualification did not take effect until 90 days after final adjournment of Legislature (Const. art. 4, § 1; Pol. Code, § 325; Code Civ. Proc. § 170, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1403).

Under the 1911 amendment to Const. art. 4, § 1, superseding the provisions of Pol. Code, § 325, in so far as in conflict therewith, the amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 170, by St. 1927, p. 1403, precluding a judge from passing upon his own disqualification, did not take effect until 90 days after final adjournment of Legislature which passed the act.

10. Judges 🔑49(2)—That judge decided former will contest and after subsequent trial expressed opinion as to merits did not disqualify him from passing on motion for new trial.

Neither the fact that the trial judge decided a former will contest without a jury nor the fact that he expressed his opinion relative to the merits after trial of subsequent contest disqualified him from passing upon motion for new trial, in that the expression of opinion prior to hearing of motion for new trial is merely evidence of the fact that judge entertained such opinion, and is not evidence of bias or prejudice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; P. F. Gosbey, Judge.

Proceeding by Filomena Dona for the probate of the will of Pasquale Malvasi, deceased, wherein John Spingola instituted a contest after probate. Judgment for proponent, and the contestant appeals. Affirmed.

J. J. Dunne, of San Francisco, Richard V. Bressani, of San Jose, and M. H. Farrar, of San Francisco, for appellant.

O. H. Speciale and Owen D. Richardson, both of San Jose, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice pro tem. This is an appeal from a judgment confirming the probate of a will upon a contest instituted after probate. The will was executed by the testator on March 20, 1925, and left all of his property to the proponent, Filomena Dona, a sister. The deceased was unmarried and left surviving as his heirs a brother, three sisters, and the daughter and sons of a deceased sister. A previous contest before probate, tried before the court without a jury, had been unsuccessful. The present contest was instituted by the appellant, John Spingola, a nephew, and involved the issues of due execution of the will, undue influence, and unsoundness of mind.

On the trial, the court granted a nonsuit as to all grounds of contest except that of unsoundness of mind, and upon this issue the verdict of the jury was against the contestant.

On this appeal there are several specifications of error, which will be discussed in the order in which they are presented by appellant.

[1] It is first urged that the evidence was insufficient to justify the finding by the jury that the deceased was of sound mind. A review of the transcript leads to the conclusion that there was abundant evidence of the soundness of mind of the testator. The most that may be said is that the evidence produced by the appellant created a conflict and was sufficient to justify the action of the trial court in submitting this issue to the jury. The jury determined upon conflicting evidence that the deceased was of sound mind and competent at the time of the execution of the will, and it is well settled that such determination is conclusive on appeal. Estate of Clark, 170 Cal. 418, 149 P. 828; Estate of Nelson, 132 Cal. 182, 64 P. 294.

[2] Without reviewing all of the testimony on this subject, it may be pointed out that the proponent produced the day nurse and the night nurse who were attending the deceased, one of whom was a subscribing witness to the will, the priest who attended the deceased shortly before the making of the will, and the attorney who drew the will, and was also subscribing witness. All these were of the opinion that the deceased was of sound mind, and gave ample reasons to justify their opinions. It is true, as pointed out by appellant, that the will was drawn on the morning of the day upon which the deceased passed away at 5:40 p. m., as a result of lobar pneumonia. He was 63 years of age, had been confined to his bed for 10 days, and was a very sick man. The substance of the testimony of both nurses was that the deceased spoke rationally, answered questions in a lucid manner, and was not delirious, and did not talk incoherently. The priest testified that "he talked rationally, his mind was not wandering; he did not rave; he was a very sick man, but I could understand him and he could understand me and he did not rave;—Pasquale Malvasi on this occasion made to me an actual confession; he told me his state of sins by answering the questions that I asked of him and he received the Sacrament;—if I had been of the opinion that the sick man was not of sound mind, I would not have given confession and communion. I would not have given him absolution if he had not given his confession and if I were of the opinion he was of unsound mind." Mr. Speciale, the attorney who was called to draw the will, testified that the deceased told him that he wanted to make a will. Upon inquiry, the deceased gave him a list of his relatives, and then said, "I want to give everything to my sister Filomena Dona." The attorney asked him whether he desired the other relatives to receive anything, mentioning the names as given him by the deceased, and the deceased said, "No, nothing to the other relatives, everything to my sister Filomena Dona." He requested that the sister be named as executrix, and advised the attorney that his property consisted of the house where he was, some cash, and some Bank of Italy stock. After the execution of the will, he asked the attorney to take the will to his office and hold it for him.

Only a brief review of some of the testimony is here set forth, but such testimony was ample to sustain the finding of competency and soundness of mind. Counsel for appellant points to some similar features in the testimony in this case and that in Estate of Doolittle, 153 Cal. 29, 94 P. 240. There are points of similarity, but there are also many phases in which the testimony in the two cases differs. There the trial court decided on conflicting testimony that the deceased was of unsound mind. Here the jury decided upon conflicting testimony that the deceased was of sound mind. In either event, under the authority of that case, the determination made on conflicting evidence in the trial court cannot be disturbed on appeal.

[3] Appellant next urges that the trial court erred in granting a nonsuit on the issue of due execution of the will. The evidence offered by proponent showed that the will had been duly executed in all particulars. It is contended, however, that the testimony of Mrs. Mary De Marco raised a conflict on the issue of due execution which should have been submitted to the jury. This witness and the other relatives were asked to leave the room when the attorney arrived. They did so and remained in the kitchen for about an hour during the time that the attorney conversed with deceased and while the will was drawn and executed. There was an open doorway but no door between the dining room and the bedroom in which the will was executed. There was a door between the dining room and kitchen, which was closed most of the time. At some time while the attorney was in the bedroom with the deceased, the nurse went to the kitchen and returned to the bedroom leaving the door open between the kitchen and dining room. The witness Mrs. De Marco testified to seeing and hearing certain things after the door was left open. The witness then testified, "After Speciale had said 'ferma qui' and the nurse had asked the sick man to 'sign here' and Speciale took the paper away, I did not hear anything else said in that room; I was where I could hear and I heard nothing more said." The testimony of this witness could only tend to prove what happened in the bedroom after the door was opened and during the time she was looking and listening through the dining room from her position in the kitchen. It would not tend to prove that there were no acts or statements on the part of the deceased, the attorney, and the nurse connected with the executing of the will, other than those to which this witness testified, and such testimony was not sufficient to raise a conflict of the issue of due execution. The motion for nonsuit was therefore properly granted as to this issue.

[4] Appellant next takes exception to the charge to the jury. It is contended that the trial court erred in giving, refusing, and modifying various instructions. Certain proposed instructions were modified by eliminating therefrom all reference to the issues of due execution of the will and undue influence, as to which issues a motion for nonsuit had been granted. As the motion for nonsuit was properly granted, the modification of the instructions so as to eliminate these issues from the consideration of the jury was also proper. It may be noted that it is not urged that there was error in granting the motion for nonsuit on the ground of undue influence. The remaining errors claimed in connection with the charge to the jury involved instructions relating to testamentary capacity. This was the only issue submitted to the jury, and the charge dealt at length with this subject. From a reading of the entire charge, we conclude that the jury was fully and fairly instructed upon this issue, and that there was no prejudicial error in the giving, refusing, or modification of any of the several instructions referred to by appellant.

[5, 6] It is next claimed that the trial court erred in refusing to grant a new trial. Counsel seems to complain of the fact that the motion for new trial was not given the consideration to which counsel believes the motion was entitled, but was decided without argument at the time the motion was made. There can be no merit in counsel's position in this regard, for the record shows that two motions were presented at the same time, the motion for new trial and a motion for an order to secure the services of some other judge to determine the motion for new trial, and that, at the time of making these motions, counsel for appellant stated that he did not desire to argue either of said motions. Counsel further contends that the court erred in refusing to grant a new trial, on the ground of alleged misconduct of Mrs. Mary G. Post, a juror, in failing to disclose that she was a Christian Scientist on voir dire. Mrs. Post was examined and accepted as a juror by counsel on both sides. She was asked many of the usual questions propounded to prospective jurors and answered them to the apparent satisfaction of all. No questions were asked concerning her religious belief nor concerning her views upon disease or its relation to mental capacity. She was asked, "And in the event that you should find that the testator was of unsound mind at the time that he executed the will, you would not hesitate to render a verdict against the document purporting to be his will, and to set it aside?" To this question she replied "No." Mrs. Post joined in the verdict upholding the will. After the conclusion of the trial, counsel for appellant learned that Mrs. Post was a Christian Scientist. On the motion for new trial, affidavits were filed alleging that Mrs. Post was a Christian Scientist and believer in the doctrines of Christian Science. The affidavits contain numerous passages from "Science and Health," by Mary Baker Eddy. Briefly, counsel takes the position that the followers of this faith deny the reality of disease, and are therefore not qualified to act as jurors in a case in which it is claimed that incapacity or unsoundness of mind is the result of disease, that the juror should have volunteered the information that she was a Christian Scientist on voir dire, and that her failure to disclose her alleged disqualification resulted in depriving appellant of a fair and unpartial jury. Counsel states in his affidavits: "* * * And this affiant respectfully insists that it is not to be doubted that said Mary G. Post would have been challenged peremptorily as a juror by said contestant if the fact had been disclosed that she was a believer in the doctrines of the aforesaid Christian Science." In a counter affidavit of Mrs. Post, she stated that for some years she had been a believer in the doctrines of Christian Science. Among other things, her affidavit stated, "I further depose that the fundamental doctrine or idea of Christian Science regarding sickness or disease is that sickness or disease can be healed thereby and that Christian Science at all times in the past has recognized and does now recognize the existence of disease, including mental incompetency."

[7, 8] Ordinarily the religious belief of a prospective juror is immaterial and no duty is imposed upon a prospective juror to volunteer information on that subject. Article 1, § 4, of the Constitution of California, provides: "* * * And no person shall be rendered incompetent to be a witness or juror on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief." It is not to be doubted that the state of mind of a prospective juror, resulting from religious belief, or any other cause, might disqualify such person from acting as a juror in a particular case, regardless of the question of general competency to act as a juror. People v. Rollins, 179 Cal. 793, 179 P. 209; People v. Galloway, 202 Cal. 81, 259 P. 332. But in such cases it is the state of mind which is material and which disqualifies and such state of mind is material only in the event that it entitles a party to a challenge for cause. In the present case appellant does not claim that by reason of the state of mind of Mrs. Post he would have been entitled to challenge for cause under any of the provisions of section 602 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is only claimed that the juror should have volunteered the information concerning her religious belief in order that appellant might have exercised a peremptory challenge. This position is untenable. In any event, it is to be noted that appellant's contention respecting alleged disqualification of the juror was based solely upon the theory that the state of mind of the juror, as a result of her religious belief, was such that the juror did not recognize the existence of disease or mental incompetency. The actual state of mind of the juror was not set forth, except in so far as that state of mind might be implied from her affiliation with the Christian Science Church. The juror's affidavit shows that according to her conception of its doctrines "Christian Science at all times in the past has recognized and does now recognize the existence of disease, including mental incompetency." It is therefore apparent that there was no showing that the juror did not recognize the existence of disease or mental incompetency. We conclude that the juror was not disqualified, and was not chargeable with any misconduct for failure to volunteer information concerning her religious belief, and that appellant was not deprived of a fair and impartial jury.

There is a further appeal by contestant from the order denying the motion of contestant for an order to secure the services of some other judge to preside at the hearing and determination of the motion for new trial. This motion was in its nature a motion to disqualify Judge P. F. Gosbey under the provisions of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure on the grounds of alleged bias and prejudice. The motion was presented upon affidavits and counter affidavits, and was heard and determined by Judge Gosbey.

Counsel first contends that, at the time of the hearing of that motion, a judge could not pass upon his own disqualification. Reference is made to chapter 744 of the Statutes of 1927, p. 1403. This act amended section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure and the amendment provided that "No judge of a court of record, who shall deny his disqualification, shall hear or pass upon the question of his own disqualification. * * *" The bill was approved by the Governor May 24, 1927. The Legislature had adjourned on April 29, 1927. The motion in the present case was heard and determined on May 27, 1927, three days after the approval of the bill by the Governor.

[9] The power of a judge to pass upon his own disqualification prior to the time that the 1927 amendment took effect is not questioned. It is claimed, however, that, under the provisions of section 325 of the Political Code, the amendment was in effect at the time of the hearing of the motion on May 27, 1927. It is unnecessary to pass upon the proper construction of section 325, for the sections of the Political Code relating to the time when a statute takes effect were superseded by the amendment in 1911 of article 4, § 1, of the Constitution, at least in so far as such sections are in conflict therewith. That article provides: "No act passed by the legislature shall go into effect until ninety days after the final adjournment of the * * * legislature which passed such act * * *" with certain exceptions which are of no concern here. By virtue of the foregoing constitutional provisions, the amendment to section 170, as passed by the Legislature in 1927, did not take effect until July 29, 1927, and at the time of the hearing of the motion in this case, on May 27, 1927, a judge had the power to pass on the question of his own disqualification.

[10] With respect to the motion to disqualify, it is further urged that said motion should have been granted on the ground of bias and prejudice. The affidavits and counter affidavits used in connection with this motion are substantially in accord except that the general allegations of bias and prejudice were denied in the affidavit of Judge Gosbey. These affidavits and counter affidavits showed that Judge Gosbey had heard a prior contest of the same will, sitting without a jury, and that his decision had been against the contestants in that proceeding; that in the present contest, after the jury had retired, the judge had an informal discussion with counsel in the courtroom; that in this discussion the judge commented upon the course pursued in the drawing of the will by Mr. Speciale, one of the attorneys and a witness for proponent, and commended Mr. Speciale on the manner in which he had handled the situation at the time he was called in to draw the will; that, after the verdict was rendered and the jury dicharged, one of the jurors asked the judge what he thought about the verdict, and he replied that he did not see how the juror could have done differently. The conclusion to be drawn from these affidavits is that prior to the hearing of the motion for new trial, the trial judge was convinced that the will had been properly executed and believed that the verdict of the jury sustaining the will was correct.

It is the duty and the practice of trial judges to closely follow the evidence that is presented before a jury. It is but natural and entirely proper that at the conclusion of the trial, the judge should form an opinion with respect to the weight and sufficiency of the evidence and the merits of the controversy. If the holding of such opinion should constitute grounds for disqualification, the judge who tried the cause would be disqualified on the motion for new trial in practically all cases. Although it is no doubt better practice for the trial judge to refrain from expressing any opinion prior to the hearing of the motion for new trial, such expression is merely evidence of the fact that the judge entertains such opinion, and is not evidence of bias or prejudice. Taken singly or collectively, we conclude that neither the fact that the judge decided a former contest without a jury, nor the fact that he expressed his opinion to counsel or the juror as set forth, shows bias or prejudice disqualifying him from passing upon the motion for new trial.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and the order denying the motion to disqualify are affirmed.

McKELLEY v. TURNER, County Auditor.
(Civ. 3619.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 14, 1929.

1. Attorney and client 🔑76(1)—Where attorney's authority was withdrawn, his delivery of sheriff's resignation did not effect "resignation" (Pol. Code, § 995, subd. 4).

Where sheriff signed resignation and delivered it to attorney for delivery the following day, and specifically instructed him that the resignation was not to be delivered until such time, and on the same day informed attorney in writing that he withdrew and canceled such resignation, the unauthorized transmission of such resignation by attorney to the clerk of the board of supervisors did not make it effective as a resignation within Pol. Code, § 995, subd. 4.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Resignation.]

2. Principal and agent 🔑33—Agent's authority can be terminated before performance.

Authority of agent, not coupled with an interest to do a particular thing, can be terminated by the principal at any time before authorized act is performed.

3. Mandamus 🔑190—County auditor, refusing to issue warrant for salary to either of two persons purporting to act as sheriff, held to have acted in good faith (Code Civ. Proc. § 1095).

Where county board of supervisors, after purported resignation of sheriff, adopted motion purporting to appoint another as sheriff, and both parties thereafter assumed to act as sheriff of the county, the auditor of the county properly refused to issue warrants to either for salary and appearance, and defense in mandamus proceeding was in good faith, as respects liability for costs, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1095.

Original application for writ of mandate by L. O. McKelley against B. J. Turner, as Auditor of the County of Lake. Peremptory writ granted.

Charles Kasch and M. H. Iverson, both of Ukiah, for petitioner.

H. B. Churchill, of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

FINCH, P. J. This is an original application for a writ of mandate, requiring the respondent, as auditor of Lake county, to issue his warrant in favor of petitioner for his salary as sheriff of that county for the month of June, 1928. The only issue of fact raised by the pleadings is whether the petitioner resigned his office as such sheriff on May 17, 1928. A reference was ordered, and the referee took evidence and found therefrom that the petitioner did not so resign. Respondent contends that the evidence does not support the finding of the referee.

[1] It appears from the evidence that during the forenoon of May 17, 1928, the board of supervisors of the county made demand upon the petitioner that he resign the office. He refused to do so, and engaged an attorney to represent him in the controversy. Later in the day the attorney went to the petitioner's home, and, after much persuasion, induced him to sign a form of resignation which the attorney, of his own volition, had prepared in advance. The attorney thereupon proceeded to the courthouse and filed the paper so signed. Petitioner contends that it was filed without his consent and contrary to his express direction. Relative to what occurred at the time he signed the paper, the petitioner testified: "I said, 'I am sick but I will sign it. * * * Don't turn it over until tomorrow,' and he went. I said this, repeating it again, 'Don't turn it over until tomorrow,' and I got to the door just a few minutes after, * * * and I called to Mr. Spurr, he was in the yard, I said, 'Mr. Spurr, hurry down and tell Howard (the attorney) not to put my resignation in this evening because I don't want it to go in until tomorrow and see how I feel.' * * * I said, 'Mr. Spurr, tell Howard not to put it in, I told him not to put it in until tomorrow. I am afraid he will, he seemed to be in an awful hurry. I can't go any further than this door, rush down and tell him for goodness sake not to put it in today.'" The attorney testified that, within a few minutes after the written resignation was signed and delivered to him, Mr. Spurr, who is his uncle and an old friend of petitioner and who had accompanied the attorney to petitioner's residence for the purpose of inducing him to resign, met him at the courthouse and said, "I just came from Lon's (petitioner's) house, and Lon * * * told me to tell you, or ask you not to present the resignation until in the morning;" that the witness and Mr. Spurr then "talked the matter over and concluded the best thing to do was to present it now, and we both went in the board of supervisors' room * * * and we were both there when it was presented"; that at the time the resignation was handed to him by petitioner, the latter said, "I wish you wouldn't present the resignation until in the morning." The attorney further testified: "That was the conversation had before the resignation was signed. * * * After I got the resignation Mr. McKelley, as I remember it, best of my recollection, he never instructed me or said anything about presenting the resignation until I got the message from uncle Al in the hall. * * * After thinking it over, I don't believe, to the best of my recollection, there was anything said about presenting the resignation; what was said was with reference to the signing of the resignation. * * * That conversation was never talked over with anyone by me and it is hazy in my mind." In view of the uncertainty of this witness, the referee could not well have found against petitioner's contention that he instructed his attorney not to file the resignation on the day it was signed.

After the attorney had filed the resignation in violation of such oral instruction, the petitioner, on the same day, May 17, 1928, caused to be delivered to the attorney a written communication, in which he stated: "I now withdraw and cancel such resignation and request and instruct you to deliver same forthwith to F. R. Minkler, the bearer of this letter."

[2] The writing signed by the petitioner could have become effective as a resignation only upon its delivery to the clerk of the board of supervisors. Pol. Code, § 995, subd. 4; Meeker v. Reed, 70 Cal. App. 119, 123, 232 P. 760; People v. Marsh, 30 Cal. App. 424, 427, 159 P. 191. The mere manual transmission of the writing to the clerk, without authority and contrary to the express direction of the petitioner, was of no effect. The authority of an agent, not coupled with an interest, to do a particular thing, can be terminated by the principal at any time before the authorized act is performed. McGorray v. Stockton Savings & Loan Society, 131 Cal. 321, 63 P. 479. In this case the attorney was not authorized to file the petitioner's resignation until May 18th, and, prior to that time, his authority to file it was terminated.

The findings of the referee are amply supported by the evidence, and the petitioner is entitled to a peremptory writ of mandate as prayed for in his petition.

[3] May 31, 1928, the board of supervisors adopted a motion purporting to appoint John H. Brinkerhoff sheriff of the county. Brinkerhoff took the oath of office June 9, 1928, and thereafter both he and the petitioner have assumed to act as sheriff of the county. The respondent has refused to issue warrants to either of such claimants for salary as sheriff. This was the proper course for the respondent to pursue, and it is hereby found and determined that the respondent appeared and made defense in this proceeding in good faith.

Respondent's motion to set aside the findings of the referee is denied.

It is ordered and adjudged that a peremptory writ of mandate issue out of this court as prayed for in the petition, and that the petitioner recover his costs incurred in this proceeding, to be paid by the county of Lake, as provided by section 1095 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

LISLE v. SHIPP et al. (Civ. 5548.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 11, 1929.

1. Mandamus 🔑129—Stockholder of corporation, purchasing stock of another corporation, held not entitled to mandamus to inspect books of other corporation (Const. art. 12, § 14; Civ. Code, §§ 305, 377, 378).

Where director in control of corporation used funds thereof to purchase stock in another corporation for first corporation, stockholder in first corporation, in absence of any equitable considerations arising out of willful or fraudulent mismanagement of his corporation, was not entitled to mandamus to compel inspection of books of corporation whose stock was purchased, under Const. art. 12, § 14, and Civ. Code, §§ 377, 378, but such right belonged to directors of first corporation, under Civ. Code, § 305.

2. Mandamus 🔑129—Identity of management and relationship between corporation and corporation whose stock it owns must be considered, in determining whether books of both may be examined (Const. art. 12, § 14; Civ. Code, §§ 377, 378).

In determining whether authority to compel production of books and papers of corporation and of corporation whose stock it owns shall be exercised, under Const. art. 12, § 14, and Civ. Code, §§ 377, 378, court takes into consideration character of court as court of equity, and close relationship existing between corporations, their identity of management and control, but right will not be exercised, where two corporations are in fact separate and distinct entities.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Hartley Shaw, Judge.

Mandamus by W. H. Lisle against E. S. Shipp, as president of the Metropolitan Finance Corporation, and another. From a judgment denying an application for writ of mandamus, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Everts, Ewing, Wild & Everts and Kemp, Partridge & Kemp, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Fickeisen & Richardson and J. E. Haley, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. According to the petition of complaint filed in the court below, the following facts appear: Haden Securities Company, Inc., is a California corporation having 10,000 shares, of which petitioner is owner of 200 shares. E. S. Shipp is the owner of more than 5,000 shares, and is president of the corporation. His wife, E. H. Shipp, is the owner of 100 shares, and is the secretary and treasurer of the corporation. Shipp and his wife are two of the three directors, and are, therefore, in practical control of the business of the corporation.

Metropolitan Finance Corporation is a California corporation, wherein Shipp is the owner of a majority of the issued capital stock, and is its president. Defendant Hemphill is the secretary of that corporation. It is alleged that Shipp, being general manager of the Haden Company, sold some of its properties, and invested the proceeds thereof, with other money of the company, amounting in all to the sum of $69,000, by using it for the purchase of stock of the Metropolitan Corporation.

The petition does not allege any facts showing misconduct or want of good faith on the part of the officers of the Haden Company in the above-mentioned transactions. Nevertheless, basing his claim upon his status as a stockholder in the Haden Company, petitioner demanded that he be permitted to inspect the books, files, and properties of the Metropolitan Corporation. That demand having been refused, he made application in the superior court for a writ of mandate requiring that he be allowed to make said inspection. An alternative writ of mandate was issued, and a hearing was had on the merits on the return date. This hearing appears to have occurred in open court, with argument by counsel for the respective parties, and without any return or pleading filed on the behalf of the defendants. It must be presumed, therefore, that the application for the peremptory writ was denied upon the ground that the facts stated by petitioner were insufficient to establish his right to the writ. It is from this judgment that the plaintiff appeals.

It is provided by the Constitution of California (article 12, § 14) that every corporation (with certain exceptions which have no application here) shall keep certain books and records which shall be subject to inspection by "every person having an interest therein." Under the provisions of sections 377 and 378 of the Civil Code, the records of all corporations for profit shall be open to inspection of any bona fide stockholder thereof. There is one exception which we need not discuss, as it does not present any question under this record.

[1] It is manifest that appellant did not come before the superior court claiming any right as a stockholder of the Metropolitan Corporation, in the legal sense of the word "stockholder." So far as the last-named corporation is concerned, his only interest is that indirect interest belonging to him as a stockholder in the Haden Company, which, in turn, is the owner of stock in the Metropolitan Corporation. In the absence of any equitable considerations arising out of willful or fraudulent mismanagement of the Haden Company, which might authorize a stockholder to apply for relief on behalf of the Haden Company and its stockholders, appellant was not in any position entitling him to exercise on behalf of the Haden Company its right of inspection of the books or other properties of the Metropolitan Corporation. The corporate powers, business, and property of a corporation must be exercised, conducted, and controlled by its board of directors. Civ. Code, § 305. The Haden Company's right to inspect the books and properties of the Metropolitan Corporation is a part of the rights and powers which, at least under ordinary circumstances, are vested exclusively in the board of directors. If there be any possible circumstances which would constitute an exception to this rule, they do not appear in the statement of facts contained in the petition in this case.

[2] So far as appears, there is no California decision where any direct expression of opinion has been made upon the point involved here. In National Bank v. Western Pacific R. Co., 157 Cal. 573, 581, 108 P. 676 [27 L. R. A. (N. S.) 987, 21 Ann. Cas. 1391], the Supreme Court said that stockholders and creditors of a corporation are the only persons who have a right to inspect its books, citing Civ. Code, § 387. But no reference was made to the provisions of the Constitution above mentioned. We are not referred to, and we have not found, any case which throws any light upon the contention of appellant that a stockholder of one corporation is a person having an interest in another corporation merely by virtue of the first corporation's ownership of stock in a separate and independent corporation. We have examined the three decisions of other states, cited by appellant. These are Martin v. D. B. Martin Co., 10 Del. Ch. 211, 88 A. 612, 102 A. 373, State ex rel. Rogers v. Sherman Oil Co., 1 W. W. Harr. (Del.) 570, 117 A. 122, and Woodworth v. Old Second National Bank, 154 Mich. 459, 117 N. W. 893, 118 N. W. 581. These decisions go no further than to hold that, where company A is the owner of all the stock in company B, and in practical control thereof, so that they are in effect operated as one business, and where a stockholder in company A has made some showing to the effect that the officers in control of the plaintiff's own corporation are misusing their powers for fraudulent or otherwise illegal purposes, and the second company is merely an agency and tool through which the first company operates, the right of inspection will be extended to the books of both corporations. As stated in State v. Sherman Oil Co., supra, this rule is based upon the power of a court of equity to disregard mere forms for the purpose of discovering and revealing fraud. In aid of that purpose the court will, under appropriate circumstances, exercise the right to compel the production of the books and papers of both corporations. In determining whether this authority shall be exercised, the court takes into consideration, not only the character of the court as a court of equity, but the close relationship shown to exist between the corporations, and their identity of management and control. But the right will not be so exercised under ordinary circumstances, and where the two corporations are in fact separate and distinct entities. In the case at bar, no facts were presented which entitle the petitioner to act on behalf of the Haden Company, or to assert on his own behalf any right of inspection of the books and properties of the Metropolitan Corporation.

The judgment is affirmed.

McINDOE et al. v. COOLEY et al.

(Civ. 6532.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 31, 1928.

1. Vendor and purchaser 🔑334(7)—Makers not paying sum payee agreed to credit on purchase note because land was not as warranted could not recover it.

Purchasers of land in payment of purchase price executing and delivering to seller notes secured by mortgage on property purchased, discovering that deed contained less number of acres of arable land than called for, whereupon seller agreed that she would give plaintiffs credit for certain sum and indorse such credit on note, could not, after seller's death, without indorsing credit on note in action demanding payment of sum, recover money judgment; they not having paid the same.

2. Vendor and purchaser 🔑341(2)—Makers could not recover sum payee agreed to credit on note on oral promise to pay; complaint not showing promise.

Purchasers of land, suing to recover money judgment for credit which seller had agreed to indorse on note given for purchase price when purchasers discovered tract bought did not contain number of acres of arable land deed called for, could not recover on an independent oral promise to pay sum, where the affirmative allegations of complaint did not show that promise was ever made.

3. Evidence 🔑441(11)—Under complaint seeking recovery of sum payee orally agreed to credit on note, enforcement could not be ordered, since it would vary note by parol (Code Civ. Proc. § 1698).

Complaint alleging that plaintiffs purchased certain lands from defendant's decedent for which note secured by mortgage was given, that seller had subsequently agreed to indorse credit on note because lands did not contain arable acreage that the deed called for, and demanding payment of sum from defendants as executors, which was rejected, could not be sustained to compel executors to allow credit on note and to indorse same thereon as orally agreed by seller, since, when complaint is construed as seeking such enforcement, cause of action pleaded constitutes attempt to alter terms of note which is written contract by an executory parol agreement prohibited by Code Civ. Proc. § 1698.

Appeal from Superior Court, Del Norte County; Stanley Murray, Judge.

Action by W. H. McIndoe and another against Will Cooley and another, as executors of the will and estate of Nettie C. Scott, deceased. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

George W. Howe, of Crescent City, for appellants.

Childs, Dodd & Carroll and John L. Childs, all of Crescent City, for respondents.

KNIGHT, J. This is an appeal by plaintiffs from a judgment of dismissal entered after a demurrer to an amended complaint had been sustained without leave to amend, in an action to recover upon a rejected claim presented against the estate of Nettie C. Scott, deceased.

The amended complaint sets forth the following facts: On April 29, 1920, plaintiffs purchased certain lands from the deceased, and in payment of the purchase price executed and delivered to her their promissory note for $26,250, secured by a mortgage on the property so purchased. The sale was made on the basis of $250 an acre for all arable land. In October, 1921, plaintiffs discovered that the tract contained a somewhat less number of acres of arable land than the deed called for, and thereupon, the complaint alleges, the deceased agreed that she would give plaintiffs credit for the sum of $3,112.50, and indorse such credit on the note. Mrs. Scott died on May 31, 1924, and in July, 1924, plaintiffs ascertained that she had failed to make the indorsement on the note as agreed; whereupon plaintiffs presented a claim against Mrs. Scott's estate demanding payment of the sum of $3,112.50; and, upon rejection of the claim, commenced this suit. The prayer of the complaint is for a money judgment in the sum of $3,112.50, and for costs and general relief.

[1, 2] The complaint does not allege nor do plaintiffs claim that the sum they seek to recover in the present action, or any part of it or the promissory note or any part of it, have ever been paid to Mrs. Scott or to her estate. All that is alleged and claimed is that, upon the discovery of the fact that there was a shortage in the acreage, Mrs. Scott orally agreed to allow credit therefor on the note. Under such circumstances, it would seem apparent that plaintiffs are not entitled to a money judgment. If the promissory note, or even the amount sued for herein, had been paid, so that it would be made to appear that such payment constituted an overpayment resulting either through mistake or from fraudulent practices, a different situation would be presented; but, as stated, plaintiffs make no claim either in their complaint or in their briefs that the amount that they are now suing for was ever paid to Mrs. Scott or to her estate. Obviously, therefore, they cannot recover that which they have not paid, nor can they recover on an independent oral promise to pay said sum because the affirmative allegations of the complaint show that no such promise was ever made.

[3] On the other hand, if it be assumed that we may treat the allegations of the complaint relating to the presentation and rejection of the claim as surplusage, and totally ignore the prayer of the complaint, and, as the complaint is thus emasculated, construe the same as one to compel the executors to allow the credit on the note and to indorse the same thereon, as orally agreed by Mrs. Scott, the cause of action pleaded would then constitute an attempt to alter the terms of a written contract by an executory parol agreement, which, of course, may not be done. Section 1698, Code Civ. Proc.; Bennett v. Potter, 180 Cal. 736, 183 P. 156. As held, a promissory note is a written contract within the meaning of the foregoing Code section (Molera v. Cooper, 173 Cal. 259, 160 P. 231) and any parol agreement made between the maker and payee to change its terms is ineffectual as being in violation of said Code section (Henehan v. Hart, 127 Cal. 656, 60 P. 426). In the latter case the parties agreed to extend the time of payment of the note; and in our opinion there can be no difference in principle between a parol agreement to extend the time of payment of a note and a parol agreement to reduce the amount of its principal.

The questions of whether or not an action may be maintained for the reformation of the terms of the note, or whether the credit agreed to be given by Mrs. Scott could be successfully pleaded and urged as a payment in case suit on the note were instituted by the payee for its collection, are matters with which we are not here concerned, and therefore need not be considered nor decided.

In further support of the order sustaining the demurrer, defendants contend that in any event the cause of action attempted to be stated is barred by the statute of limitations (subdivision 4, § 338, Code Civ. Proc.), but in view of the conclusions we have reached on the other points involved, this latter question becomes immaterial.

The judgment is affirmed.

CITY OF FRESNO v. DILLON et al.
(Civ. 6391.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 29, 1928.

Rehearing Denied Jan. 28, 1929. Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1929.

1. Municipal corporations ⚷173(2)—Duty of commissioner of finance to collect license fees in city of Fresno held within his official bond; "official duties required of him by law" (Const. art. 11, § 8; Fresno City Charter).

Under Const. art. 11, § 8, an ordinance of the city of Fresno, imposing on the license collector the duty of collecting license fees, was superseded by the adoption of a new city charter (St. 1921, p. 1821), creating a department of finance, and imposing on the commissioner of finance the duty of collecting such fees, notwithstanding such duty was not transferred by ordinance, and hence the commissioner's duty of making such collection was among the "official duties required of him by law" within his official bond.

2. Municipal corporations ⚷173(2)—Approval by commissioner of finance of municipal bonds for payment which had already been made rendered commissioner and surety liable on official bond; "official duties required of him by law" (Fresno City Charter).

Although Fresno City Charter (St. 1921, p. 1821) did not impose on commissioner of finance duty of approving municipal bonds for payment by city treasurer, but commissioner had nevertheless approved bonds according to a custom which had developed, where such bonds were presented to him for approval a second time, the duty of withholding his approval as of an unauthorized claim against the city was among the "official duties required of him by law" under his official bond, and therefore a second approval of bonds which had already been paid rendered him and his surety liable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Charles R. Barnard, Judge.

Action by the City of Fresno against Charles F. Dillon and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Lindsay & Gearhart, of Fresno, and Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellants.

W. E. Simpson, City Atty., of Fresno, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice pro tem. The city of Fresno, plaintiff and respondent herein, brought this action against Charles F. Dillon and the bonding company, his surety, upon Dillon's official bond as commissioner of finance of that city.

The complaint contained nine counts relating to shortages in license fees collected, and unauthorized approval of double payments on certain municipal bonds by Dillon during his term of office. Judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff and respondent, from which judgment the defendants and appellants appeal.

Dillon was elected to the office of commissioner of finance of the city of Fresno under the new charter which became operative in 1921. His official bond provided: "Now, if the said Charles F. Dillon shall well, truly and faithfully perform all official duties required of him by law, and all such additional duties as may hereafter be imposed on him as such officer by any law hereafter enacted, then the above obligation to be void, otherwise to remain in full force and virtue."

There was a shortage of $5,533.32 in the license fees collected. Dillon approved claims or demands and caused warrants to be drawn for the payment of certain municipal bonds totaling $6,000, and thereafter, when these bonds in some manner were again presented, Dillon approved claims or demands and caused warrants to be drawn for a second payment of the same bonds.

The liability of Dillon individually for his irregularities is not questioned, but counsel for appellants contends that neither Dillon nor his surety is liable on his official bond as it was not the official duty of Dillon to collect the license fees nor to pay municipal bonds involved. No other question is raised on this appeal.

[1] We will first consider the situation with respect to the license fees above referred to. These license fees were collected under the provisions of Ordinance No. 846, which ordinance became effective several years prior to the adoption of the new charter. At that time Fresno was functioning under its previous charter, which created the office of license collector. The ordinance by its terms made it the duty of the license collector to collect the license fees imposed upon various trades, professions, and businesses. The new charter of 1921 (Stats. 1921, p. 1821) made no mention of the office of license collector. It created a department of finance headed by a commissioner of finance. Section 1 expressly authorized the city to "license for purposes of revenue and regulation, * * * all businesses, occupations, trades, professions, enterprises and projects and persons engaged therein, and for said purposes to assess, levy and collect license fees. * * *" By section 145 it provided that "All * * * city ordinances, * * * now in force and not inconsistent herewith, shall be and remain in force after this charter takes effect until changed or repealed by the proper authority. * * *" Section 38 provided that "the Commissioner of Finance shall have control and jurisdiction over the keeping of accounts and financial records; the auditing of accounts and claims; the levy, assessment and collection of taxes, special assessments, license fees and other revenues. * * *" In section 55 it provided that "All taxes, special assessments and license fees accruing to the city shall be collected by officers and ex-officio officers of the Department of Finance. All moneys received by any officer or employee of the city for or in connection with the business of the city shall be paid promptly into the treasury."

Prior to the adoption of the charter of 1921, a certain Harry Erickson was serving as license collector. Upon the adoption of the charter and the qualification of Dillon, Erickson was appointed by Dillon as a deputy commissioner of finance. The license fees were thereafter paid into the office of the commissioner of finance; it appearing that Erickson was actually placed in charge of the collection of these fees.

Counsel for appellants takes the position that Ordinance 846 remained in force and effect in its entirety after the adoption of the charter of 1921, and that, as the duty of collecting these fees was never transferred by ordinance from the license collector to the commissioner of finance, it was not the official duty of the latter to collect and account for the fees.

With these conclusions we cannot agree. By article 11, § 8, of the Constitution, it is provided that, upon the approval of a charter, by the Legislature, "it shall become the organic law of such city or city and county, and supersede any existing charter and all laws inconsistent therewith." The general provisions of Ordinance 846 imposing the license fees were entirely consistent with the new charter, and the provisions thereof imposing the duty of collecting the license fees were inconsistent but separable. The new charter of 1921 by express terms gave the "control and jurisdiction over * * * the collection of * * * license fees" to the commissioner of finance. Section 38. The effect of this provision was to transfer to the commissioner of finance all duties with respect to the collection of license fees previously imposed by charter or ordinance upon the license collector. It thereupon became the official duty of the commissioner of finance to collect the license fees in question, and further legislation by ordinance was unnecessary for this purpose.

[2] With respect to the unauthorized approval by Dillon of double payments on certain municipal bonds, counsel urges that no liability exists on Dillon's official bond, as Dillon could not legally make payment of these bonds. The bonds in question were issued in 1916 and were "payable at the office of City Treasurer. * * *" Under section 58 of the charter of 1921 it was provided that "Payment by the city shall be made only upon vouchers certified by the commissioner of the appropriate department, or by the presiding officer of the appropriate board or other division of the city government, and by means of warrants on the city treasury, issued by the Commissioner of Finance. The Commissioner of Finance shall examine all payrolls, bills and other claims and demands against the city; and shall issue no warrant for payment unless he finds that the claim is in proper form, correctly computed and duly certified that it is justly and legally due and payable, that an appropriation has been made therefor which has not been exhausted or that the payment has been otherwise legally authorized, and that there is money in the city treasury to make payment. He may require any claimant to make oath to the validity of a claim. He may investigate any claim and for such purposes may examine witnesses under oath, and if he finds it is fraudulent, erroneous or otherwise invalid, shall not issue a warrant therefor, and, if the situation warrants, shall call the matter to the attention of the City Commission for appropriate action."

By virtue of the broad powers and duties of the commissioner of finance under this section and of section 38 of the charter, a custom developed whereby all claims and demands, including those for payments on bonds, were presented to the commissioner of finance for allowance and approval, and the commissioner would then in the case of bonds retain the bonds and issue warrants in favor of the bondholders upon the city treasurer. That this procedure was unnecessary with respect to city bonds, and that the bondholder was entitled to payment by the treasurer without the approval, allowance, or the issuing of a warrant by the commissioner of finance was ultimately determined in a case involving one of these same bonds of the City of Fresno. Commercial & Savings Bank v. Ewing, 66 Cal. App. 231, 225 P. 476. However, during the time the above-mentioned custom was in vogue, Dillon did approve, allow and cause his deputy to issue a warrant for the payment of a group of these bonds to the Pacific Southwest Trust & Savings Bank, which warrant was paid by the treasurer. The face of the warrant did not show what bond payments were covered thereby, but the records in the office of the commissioner of finance did so show. The above bonds mysteriously disappeared from the office of the commissioner of finance, and several of them were again presented to the commissioner by various persons for approval and allowance within 30 days after their original presentation. In each instance Dillon again approved, allowed, and caused his deputy to issue warrants for a second payment of these identical bonds. These warrants were also paid by the treasurer, resulting in the double payment by the city of the bonds in question.

There is no doubt, under the authority of Commercial Savings Bank v. Ewing, supra, that it was the duty of the treasurer to pay these municipal bonds upon presentation without the approval, allowing, or drawing of a warrant by the commissioner of finance, and that it was no part of the official duty of the commissioner of finance to pay said bonds or authorize their payment. This does not, however, foreclose the inquiry in the present case regarding the nature and extent of the official duties of the commissioner of finance.

Sections 38 and 58 of the charter of 1921 gave to the commissioner of finance very broad and general powers with respect to the finances of the city, including the auditing and approving of claims and demands and the issuing of warrants therefor upon the city treasury. Upon the issuing of a warrant by the commissioner of finance, payment by the treasurer apparently followed as a matter of course. Section 130 of the charter of 1921 provided: "Every officer who shall approve, allow or pay any demand on the treasury not authorized by law, ordinance or this charter, shall be liable to the city individually and on his official bond for the amount of the demand so illegally approved, allowed or paid." It is from the above-mentioned sections that the nature and extent of the official duties of the commissioner of finance must be here determined. No case construing similar provisions has been called to our attention. A reading of these sections leads to the conclusion that it was the official duty of the commissioner generally to approve and issue warrants for the payment of authorized claims, and that it was likewise his official duty to withhold approval of and refrain from issuing warrants for the payment of unauthorized claims. The fact that it was not his official duty to pay or approve the payment of these municipal bonds in the first instance does not change the situation in the present case so far as the subsequent unauthorized approval is concerned. These bonds and a record of their approval were retained in Dillon's office. Dillon knew, and the records of his office disclosed, that these bonds had been covered by the warrant previously issued by him. When these bonds disappeared from the office and were presented with new demands shortly thereafter, his action in approving their payment a second time and issuing warrants therefor constituted the approval by Dillon of unauthorized demands against the city in violation of his official duty, for which he and his surety are liable on his official bond as provided in section 130 of the charter.

In the case of County of San Luis Obispo v. Farnum, 108 Cal. 562, 41 P. 445, which case is relied upon by appellants, the court, on page 564 (41 P. 446), in discussing whether it was the official duty of the auditor to pay over to the county certain county funds received by him and which it admittedly was no part of his official duty to receive, pointed out that such duty as existed to pay over these funds "did not arise out of his office, nor was it at all different from the duty which would have rested upon him to pay it over had he been a plain citizen not holding any county office." In the present case the duty of withholding approval of any unauthorized claim or demand was a duty imposed upon Dillon officially and not as a private citizen. Dillon's actions here in approving these unauthorized claims and demands and issuing warrants for their payment constituted the wrongful exercise of the general powers conferred upon him in his official capacity as commissioner of finance by the charter.

Counsel also quotes at length from City of San Jose v. Welch, 65 Cal. 358, 4 P. 207, contending that the situation there is analogous to the present case so far as the collection of license fees is concerned. In that case, however, the bond was conditioned upon the faithful performance of the duties of "city assessor and city clerk, according to the laws and ordinances and regulations passed and approved by the mayor and common council of the city of San Jose." By ordinance the duty to collect the taxes was not placed upon this official but upon the collector, and it was there held that the bond was limited in its terms to the duties cast upon the principal by the mayor and common council, and that the liability of the sureties could not be extended. Here the duty to collect the license fees was imposed by charter upon the commissioner of finance, and no further legislation was necessary to create the liability upon the principal and sureties under the terms of the bond, which covered all duties required by law.

The authorities cited by counsel on the general proposition that the liabilities of sureties are to be strictly construed are entirely in accord with our conclusions here.

We conclude that the charter which created the office of commissioner of finance imposed upon that official, as part of his official duties, the duty of collecting license fees, and the duty of withholding approval of and refraining from issuing warrants upon unauthorized claims or demands against the city, and that these duties were "official duties required of him by law" as provided in his official bond.

The judgment is affirmed.

WARWICK v. MACCHIAROLI et al.*
(Civ. 5312.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 4, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 2, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant ⚷161(2) — Landlord taking possession of apartment house after tenant's default in paying rent became involuntary bailee of tenant's personal property therein.

Landlord taking possession of leased apartment house owned by him after tenant's default in payment of rent, where house contained furnishings which were personal property of tenant, became involuntary bailee of the property.

2. Landlord and tenant ⚷161(2)—Tenant taking possession of apartment house with notice of prior tenant's ownership of personal property therein became involuntary bailee thereof.

Where landlord had taken possession of apartment house after tenant's default in payment of rent, another tenant, who went into possession thereof with notice of defaulting tenant's ownership of personal property therein, became involuntary bailee of defaulting tenant's property.

3. Appeal and error ⚷910—It may be assumed that defendant not appealing from judgment in action for conversion of personal property was guilty.

There not being any appeal by certain defendant from judgment in action to recover damages for conversion of certain personal property, it may be assumed without question that such defendant was guilty of conversion of plaintiff's property when she sold it to other parties.

4. Landlord and tenant ⚷161(3)—Finding that landlord retaking possession on tenant's default converted tenant's personalty left therein held not sustained, where he took no part in conversion by another tenant going into possession.

Where landlord, who had retaken possession of house upon tenant's default in payment of rent, made no claim against personal property owned by her and remaining in house and did not by any word or act take part in any act of conversion of property by another tenant, who went into possession of the house, finding that he interfered with dominion of defaulting tenant over her property or her possession thereof held not sustained; landlord's act having relation to the realty alone, and not being capable of being extended so as to include the personal property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Elliot Craig, Judge.

Action by Helen Warwick against Cono Macchiaroli and others. Judgment adverse to named defendant, and he appeals. Reversed, with directions.

Andrew J. Copp, Jr., of Los Angeles, for appellant.

E. O. Leake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. The plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for conversion of certain personal property of plaintiff by the defendants Macchiaroli and Mrs. Brooke. The appeal from the judgment is by Macchiaroli alone.

The facts hereinafter set forth are either established without conflict, or, where the evidence is conflicting, are stated most strongly in favor of respondent. In June, 1924, respondent was in possession of an apartment house in the city of Los Angeles under a lease which had been made by appellant, who owned the real property only. This lease had been made by appellant to one Tolleson, and had passed by various transfers to the respondent Warwick. Defendant Mrs. Brooke had been one of the intermediate owners of the lease. At the time of the transactions now in question, respondent owned the furnishings of the house, subject to a mortgage owned by defendant Mrs. Brooke, and on the mortgage indebtedness there was money due and unpaid. The terms of the lease are not in the record. The lease was offered in evidence, but was excluded upon the ground, as stated in the objections of respondent's counsel, that the leasehold interest in the premises was not in controversy in this action. All parties are in agreement, however, that respondent was in possession of the premises, and of the furnishings as hereinbefore stated, and that respondent was in default both on the rent and on account of the mortgage indebtedness. On June 14th appellant served upon respondent a notice which we may properly assume was the usual three days' notice to pay rent or vacate the rented premises. Respondent in her testimony admitted that the notice was served, and no question has been raised about its sufficiency.

Respondent neither paid the rent nor vacated the premises. On the morning of June 19th appellant came to the premises. As to what occurred then, respondent says that she "just spoke to him; not a conversation." Soon after noon she went away and did not return until evening. At the time of her departure appellant was watering the lawn. During the afternoon, and in the absence of respondent, appellant accepted from Mrs. Brooke the amount of the rent due, and left her in possession of the premises. Nothing was said or done about the personal property of respondent, except that a trunk and suitcase and some clothing of respondent were put outside of the house by appellant. Those articles were not part of the property involved in the alleged conversion. In the course of the evening, respondent came back to the house and found the door locked, and Mrs. Brooke spoke to the respondent through the window and stated that she could not let respondent in. Respondent called again once or twice at those premises. She testified: "I went back the following Friday for all my goods—the next Friday night I went back for the rest of them. I took the first portion on the Friday night and they put out the rest on Saturday." Evidently the word "goods" in the foregoing answer does not include the furniture or furnishings of the house, as respondent testified that those never were turned over to her.

It appears that subsequently Mrs. Brooke sold to a third party the personal property, conversion of which is the subject of this action. There is no evidence that appellant had anything to do with Mrs. Brooke's continued possession of the personal property, or with her sale thereof, unless it can be maintained that he had no right to deliver the premises into the possession of Mrs. Brooke without first removing the said personal property. In this connection it must be remembered that Mrs. Brooke knew and understood the interest of respondent in the furniture of the house, and that appellant did not undertake to transfer to Mrs. Brooke any interest in any personal property. Therefore, as to appellant, the case is not one in which a party is to be held liable as for a conversion, because he unlawfully sold and conveyed to a third person the property of another.

It must be conceded that appellant as landlord of the defaulting tenant, after service of the three days' notice and after expiration of that time, had acquired the right of possession of the leased premises. On the other hand, it may be that he was guilty of forcible entry in taking possession thereof in the manner that he did, and that by taking the proper steps Mrs. Warwick might have recovered possession in an action of forcible entry or forcible detainer. California Products Inc. v. Mitchell, 52 Cal. App. 312, 198 P. 646. This, however, she did not elect to do, but seems to have confined herself to an action relating to the personal property. In this action, as indicated above, respondent insisted, and the court held that the subject of the leasehold interest was not involved. Therefore the judgment against appellant, if sustained at all, must rest entirely upon his conduct in relation to the personal property, and in determining the legal results of that conduct we must follow respondent and the trial court in excluding from consideration all questions affecting appellant's right of possession of the real property.

[1-4] We find, then, that appellant was in actual possession of leased property owned by him, after default by his tenant in the payment of rent, and after appellant by proper steps had acquired the right of possession. In the house there were the "furnishings," which were personal property of respondent. By these circumstances appellant became an involuntary bailee of respondent's property. When Mrs. Brooke went into possession of the house, she likewise, with equal notice of respondent's rights in relation to the personal property, became involuntary bailee thereof. Since there is no appeal by defendants Brooke, it may be assumed without question that Mrs. Brooke was guilty of conversion of respondent's property, when she sold it to other parties. But there is no evidence that appellant had anything to do with that sale, or that he did anything to interfere with any interest of respondent in that property. We think, therefore, that the evidence does not sustain the finding of the court that appellant interfered with the dominion of respondent over her property, or with her possession thereof. Appellant was making no claim against respondent concerning respondent's rights in that property, and appellant did not, by any word or act, take part in any act of conversion of the property by Mrs. Brooke. His acts had relation to the realty alone, and under the record before us they cannot be extended so as to include the personal property.

The judgment against appellant is reversed. Finding III is amended by striking therefrom all reference to appellant, and this court now finds that the defendant Macchiaroli did not do or perform any of the acts of conversion described in said Finding III. Finding VII is amended by striking therefrom the following: "The court further finds that it is true that defendant Cono Macchiaroli on or about the said 19th day of June, 1924, made demand upon plaintiff for the payment of the rental of said premises," and by substituting for the words so stricken out the following: "The court further finds that on the 14th day of June, 1924, the plaintiff being then in default by nonpayment of rent due to defendant Macchiaroli on account of the lease of said apartment house premises, the defendant Macchiaroli duly served upon plaintiff a three days' notice in writing requiring payment of the rent, stating the amount due, or possession of the property; but plaintiff did not pay the rent or surrender possession of the premises, but, on the contrary, plaintiff on said 19th day of June, 1924, continued in possession of said premises without the owner's consent and without payment of the rent."

It is directed that, upon the findings as thus amended, judgment be entered in favor of appellant.

RAUCH et al. v. SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA GAS CO. et al. (two cases). (Civ. 3579, 3580.)★

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 10, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 9, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 11, 1929.

1. Negligence 🔑6—Generally, violation of statute or ordinance, directly causing injury, constitutes negligence as matter of law.

It is a general rule that violation of a statute or county or municipal ordinance, directly causing injury to another, constitutes negligence as matter of law.

2. Gas 🔑18—Gas company's noncompliance with city ordinance in not filing map showing location of service pipe disconnected by street excavator's blow, held continuing negligence proximately causing explosion.

Gas company, failing to comply with city ordinance in placing and maintaining service pipe beneath street, without filing map showing location thereof, up to time of explosion resulting from disconnection of pipe when struck by one excavating trench for city along side of street, held guilty of continuing negligence proximately causing explosion, as against contention that independent act of third person intervened.

3. Negligence 🔑61(2)—Original wrongful act may be so continuous that another's act will be regarded as conjoining therewith to produce accident.

Original wrongful act may be so continuous that act of third person precipitating disaster will be regarded in law, not as independent, but as conjoining with original act to produce accident.

4. Evidence 🔑25(2)—That excavations are constantly being made in and under city streets is matter of common knowledge.

It is a matter of common knowledge that trenches are constantly being dug and excavations being made in and under public streets of cities.

5. Gas 🔑18—Street excavator's failure to notify gas company that he had struck service pipe did not relieve it from liability for explosion in consequence of its negligence in not filing map showing location of pipe.

Failure of one excavating trench for city along side of street to notify gas company that he had struck service pipe some three hours before explosion resulting from disconnection thereof under or near dwelling would not relieve gas company from consequence of its continuing negligence in not filing map showing location of service pipe as required by city ordinance.

6. Gas 🔑18—Ordinance requirement that map showing location of gas service pipes be filed cannot be waived by city's passive acquiescence.

Requirement of city ordinance that map or plan, showing exact location of gas company's service pipes, be filed with city engineer, being a salutary police regulation tending to protect public, public policy forbids its waiver by city's passive acquiescence, though with knowledge of infraction of law.

Appeals from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John E. Carson, Judge.

Two actions by Albert Rauch and others against the Southern California Gas Company and another. Judgments for plaintiffs, and named defendant appeals. Judgment in one case affirmed, and judgment in the other case modified and affirmed as modified.

Thomas J. Reynolds, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

George M. Pierson, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

H. F. Bridges and A. J. Sherer, both of Los Angeles, for defendant William Huth.

JAMISON, Justice pro tem. By stipulation of the parties, the above cases were consolidated on appeal. The facts in each case, except as to the damages, being the same.

Respondents brought these actions for damages resulting to their property from the explosion of gas, which they claim was caused by the negligence of the appellant gas company. Judgments were rendered in their favor in each of said cases, from which judgments appellant gas company has appealed.

On October 24, 1924, respondents Albert Rauch and Marie Rauch were the owners of a one-story frame dwelling, situated in the city of Glendale, the same being furnished and equipped for housekeeping and being known as 600 South street. Respondents H. V. Zechiel, C. H. Zechiel, and Title Guarantee & Trust Company were beneficiaries and trustee under a deed of trust covering said dwelling. Daniel Stuart held a mortgage against said dwelling, and respondent Niagara Fire Insurance Company was joined as a plaintiff by reason of having paid the loss occasioned by the burning of said premises. On the said 24th day of October, 1924, gas from the mains of appellant accumulated in and under said dwelling and in some unaccounted manner ignited and exploded, wrecking the dwelling and injuring and destroying the furniture and house furnishings therein contained.

It is contended by respondents that the explosion was caused by the negligence of appellant. Appellant was, at the time of said explosion, engaged in the business of supplying gas for heating and lighting purposes in various sections of the city of Glendale, and at said date was supplying gas to said dwelling, and for that purpose appellant had installed a gas meter under said dwelling and connected same by means of a service pipe with its main on South street.

The ordinances of the said city of Glendale provided, in substance, that every corporation owning or having an interest in conduits, tunnels, etc., under the surface of a public street or alley used for supplying gas should file in the office of the city engineer a map showing the exact location of all mains and service pipes installed beneath such streets or alleys, and that no service pipes should be installed at a depth of less than 2 feet below the established grade.

Said ordinance also provided that the corporation desiring to install any pipe for any purpose in or under the surface of any public street should first obtain written permission from the street superintendent so to do; that a written application for such permit should be filed with said street superintendent; that a duplicate plat showing the proposed location of each excavation for such installation should be furnished said street superintendent; that legal authority should be shown to occupy or use said street; and that such duplicate plats shall first be approved by the city engineer.

It appears that on the said 24th day of October, 1924, defendant Huth was engaged in excavating a trench for the city along the west side of Kennelworth avenue, and for that purpose was using what is known as a mechanical excavator; that, when at a point a few feet south of the intersection of Kennelworth avenue and South street, the excavator came in contact with the service pipe leading from appellant's main on South street to said dwelling; that the contact did not break or fracture the service pipe, but dented and bent it; that, prior to starting upon said excavation, defendant Huth requested Smith, the foreman of said city, to locate the mains and service pipes on said avenue and street. Smith referred him to Vertefeuille, an employee of the city. Vertefeuille called up the office of appellant and inquired about the location of the service pipes on said avenue and was informed by Hampton, the dispatcher of appellant, that he would have the information sent to him. Huth testified that thereafter Harry Walters, who was appellant's service foreman, gave him a map or plat showing the locations of the mains on South street, but that it did not show any service pipes, either on Kennelworth avenue, or on South street, and he further testified that Walters told him there were no service pipes on said avenue. Walters denied giving any map or plat to Huth or telling him there were no service pipes on said avenue. Huth also testified that the service pipe was located less than 2 feet below the established grade; that is to say, from 18 to 20 inches below said grade.

The trial court, after quoting the provisions of the said ordinance, relating to the provisions thereof for obtaining a permit for the installation of said service pipe and the requirements that a plat showing the exact location of the service pipe should be filed with the city engineer and that said service pipe should be installed at a distance of less than 2 feet below the established grade, made the following findings with reference to the negligence of the appellant:

"That South Street and Kennelworth Avenue are each and severally public streets of the City of Glendale, California, and that defendant Southern California Gas Company, unlawfully, negligently and carelessly failed to comply with the provisions of said ordinance in this that it caused said service pipe connecting the main with the premises at 600 South Street to be installed without having first filed a plat in duplicate, or otherwise, showing the proposed location thereof; that it showed no legal authority to said superintendent for the installation of said service pipe, that no plats, as therein provided, were approved by the city engineer of the City of Glendale and that said service pipe was installed at a distance of less than two feet below the service of said Kennelworth Avenue and South Street."

The court further found that appellant failed to file with the city engineer, or to keep a record, or make any notation of the exact location of the said service pipe, and that, due to such negligence, the defendant Huth had no notice or knowledge of the location or existence of said service pipe until after he had run into it while digging the ditch aforesaid, that, by reason of said negligence on the part of appellant, gas flowing from said service pipe collected and accumulated in and through said dwelling, and through some unknown means, became ignited and exploded.

It appears from the evidence that, while the excavator did not break the service pipe so as to cause any gas to escape at that point, it did bend the pipe, and that the force of the impact caused a disconnection of the said pipe under or near the said dwelling, from which the gas escaped that caused the explosion.

Appellant, in its brief, filed in this case, admits that it failed to perform the duty imposed upon it by the said ordinance requiring it to file a map or plat showing the location of service pipes in the streets and alleys of the said city of Glendale.

[1] It is a general rule of the law of negligence that a violation of a statute, or a county or municipal ordinance which directly causes injury to another, constitutes negligence as a matter of law. Cal. Jur. vol. 19, p. 632. But, it is claimed by the appellant, and it appears to be the contention mainly relied on by it for a reversal, that the act of the defendant Huth, in striking the service pipe, thereby causing its disconnection and consequent escape of the gas therefrom, was the independent, intervening act of a third person. Thompson, in his Commentaries on the Law of Negligence, vol. 8, p. 21, says: "An efficient intervening cause within the meaning of the principles here involved is a new proximate cause which breaks the connection with the original cause and becomes itself solely responsible for the result. One of the most valuable tests to apply to determine this question is to determine whether a responsible human agency has intervened sufficient of itself to stand as the cause." And, at page 20, same volume, he further says: "An intervening agency which merely concurs with the cause counted on as a proximate cause of the accident does not prevent the latter from becoming the proximate cause for the purposes of the action."

[2] By the failure of appellant to comply with the ordinances of the said city of Glendale in placing and maintaining its said service pipe beneath said streets, it was guilty of a continuing negligence, and such negligence continued to exist up to the time of the accident. Had the negligent act of appellant ceased to exist prior to the striking of said service pipe by Huth, there would be foundation for the claim of appellant that the act of Huth in striking said pipe was the independent intervening act of a third person.

The testimony of both Huth and Vertefeuille was to the effect that Huth had done all that a reasonably prudent man could have done to ascertain, before beginning said excavation, whether or not he would come in contact with said service pipe, and was led to believe by appellant's employees that there were no service pipes on said Kennelworth avenue.

[3] It is the well-established law that the original wrongful act may be so continuous that the act of a third person precipitating the disaster will, in law be regarded, not as independent, but as conjoining with the original act to produce the accident. Carroll v. Central Counties Gas Co., 74 Cal. App. 303, 240 P. 53; Merrill v. L. A. Gas & Elec. Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 P. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134; Marton v. Jones, 44 Cal. App. 299, 186 P. 410; Sawyer v. Hooper, 79 Cal. App. 395, 249 P. 530.

[4] It is a matter of common knowledge that trenches are constantly being dug and excavations made in and under the public streets of cities. Therefore, where, as in this case, no record is kept or plat or map made or filed, showing the exact location of appellant's service pipes, it should have anticipated in the ordinary and usual course of human conduct the very thing that happened in this case was likely to happen. Bearing on this question is the case of Sawyer v. Hooper, supra, which was a case for injuries suffered by the explosion of illuminating gas, which flowed into an uncapped gas pipe, through the negligent or careless act of strangers, in turning a device or valve on a gas meter, by means of which gas from the main was permitted to flow into said uncapped gas pipe. The court said:

"The underlying legal proposition here submitted is whether the uncapped gas pipe, together with the conditions present as hereinbefore set forth, can be considered as the proximate cause of the injuries; in other words, the inducing or immediate cause. Abstract statements of the law apparently applicable to the general facts herein might seem to indicate that if no direct negligent act of the defendant was the cause of the injuries to plaintiff, but that such injuries arose from the negligent act of a third person, no liability will attach to defendant. One of the exceptions to such rule is that, where it appears that one has committed a negligent act, which is continuing in its nature, and from which it is or should be anticipated that in the ordinary or natural course of human conduct a succeeding act of negligence directly connected with the first negligent act is likely to be committed by any person and which will result in injury the proximate cause of said injury will include the first negligent act."

[5] Appellant next contends that, admitting that it was negligent, by reason of its failure to comply with the ordinances of the city of Glendale, as aforesaid, that, if it had been notified of the fact that Huth had struck the said service pipe, it would have immediately investigated the condition of the pipe, and that, as the explosion did not occur until some three hours after Huth struck the pipe, appellant could and would have prevented the explosion. Huth testified that no gas escaped from the service pipe at the place where his excavator struck it; that he did not know whether or not the service pipe connected with the said dwelling; that after he struck said pipe he went to said dwelling, but that no one was at home; that there were no indications of escaping gas around the dwelling. It appears that respondents Albert Rauch and Marie Rauch occupied the dwelling, but were away from it during the afternoon and evening and did not return until after the explosion. Huth testified that he notified employees of the city of Glendale that he had struck the said service pipe, but did not notify appellant.

Admitting that it was the duty of Huth to have notified appellant of the fact that he had struck the service pipe, his failure to do so would not have relieved appellant from the consequence of its negligence. Keiper v. Pac. Gas & Electric Co., 36 Cal. App. 362, 172 P. 180; Kimic v. San Jose, etc., Ry. Co., 156 Cal. 379, 104 P. 986; Tompkins v. City Street Ry. Co., 66 Cal. 163, 4 P. 1165. In the case of Keiper v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., supra, the court said that, where the injury complained of was produced by two separate, distinct, and independent acts of negligence on the part of two separate and different persons, and where the injury could not and would not have been produced by the act of one alone, they were joint tort-feasors, and could be sued jointly or separately, and quoted with approval the following from Wharton

Negligence, page 395: "Where both are sued, the plaintiff may ordinarily dismiss as to either, and if it turn out at the trial that one was not guilty of negligence, he may, on sufficient evidence take a verdict against the other."

[6] Finally, appellant contends that its action in failing to comply with the said ordinances of the said city of Glendale was waived by said city; that it has never filed with the city engineer, as required by said ordinances, a plat or map showing the exact location, or any location of its service pipes; and that this has been acquiesced in by the city.

It is evident that the requirement of said ordinance that a map or plat showing the exact location of appellant's service pipes was a salutary police regulation, tending to assist the protection of the public from the dangers attendant upon the transmission throughout the city of dangerous and highly inflammable substances such as gas. Such being the case, public policy forbids its waiver by passive acquiescence, even though with knowledge of the infraction of the law. Cal. Jur. vol. 19, p. 639; Fresno T. Co. v. Atchison, etc., Ry. Co., 175 Cal. 358, 165 P. 1013; Martello v. Beletich, 59 Cal. App. 533, 211 P. 20; Reinders v. Olsen, 60 Cal. App. 764, 214 P. 268. The facts in the case of Schwartz v. Cal. Gas & Elec. Corporation et al., 163 Cal. 398, 125 P. 1044, relied on by appellant to sustain its contention, that the act of Huth, in running his excavator against the service pipe, was the independent intervening act of a third person are not similar to the facts of this case. In the Schwartz Case, an employee of defendant had dropped a glass insulator from one of the poles and left it there. The accident to the horse in that case would not have happened had the insulator remained where it had been dropped. Some third person, or independent agency, removed it from where it had been dropped, and the accident happened at the point to which it had been removed. In that case, the court held that, had the insulator remained where it had been dropped and had the accident to the horse occurred at that point, the defendant would have been liable for the injuries sustained by the horse. In the case under consideration, there is no evidence that the service pipe was removed from the exact spot where it was originally placed by appellant.

We are of the opinion that the findings of the court that appellant's negligence was the proximate cause of said explosion and damage consequent thereon is supported by the evidence.

The trial court, as part of its judgment in case No. 3579, awarded respondents the sum of $900 as rental value of said dwelling during its reconstruction. It appears that no evidence was offered in the trial of this case regarding said rental value. After the appeal had been perfected, plaintiff moved in the appellate court, under the provisions of section 956a of the Code of Civil Procedure (added by St. 1927, p. 583), for permission to produce such evidence. It was thereupon stipulated by the parties to said action that the rental value of said dwelling was the sum of $450.

The judgment in the aforesaid case No. 3580 is affirmed. The judgment in case No. 3579 is modified by deducting from the amount therein awarded to respondents Albert Rauch, Marie Rauch, H. V. Zechiel, C. H. Zechiel, and David Stuart the said $450, the stipulated rental value of said dwelling, and, as so modified, is affirmed, respondents to recover costs on appeal.

MOORE v. BORGFELDT. (Civ. 6519.)★

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 16, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 13, 1929. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 14, 1929.

1. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Written memorandum, showing authorization of real estate agent to find purchaser for property, is sufficient within statute (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Mere note or memorandum which shows that real estate agent is authorized to find purchaser for property is sufficient to take contract of employment of real estate broker out of statute of frauds (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

2. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Memorandum signed by defendant, containing offer to take trust deed and cash for specified property with commission "in excess of the above amount," held sufficient memorandum of employment of broker within statute (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Memorandum delivered by defendant to broker and signed by defendant, stating that he would take deed of trust for specific amount with designated amount of cash for particular property, subject to loan, and that offer was good for 24 hours, with "commission all over and in excess of the above amount," held sufficient memorandum of agreement for employment of real estate broker to take case out of statute of frauds, under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6.

3. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Where memorandum showing authorization of broker is in writing, other terms of contract may be shown by parol (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

When requirement of note or memorandum of agreement authorizing real estate broker to sell property, under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, is complied with in connection with a specific piece of property, the amount of the broker's compensation and agreement to pay compensation, together with other terms of contract of employment, may be shown by parol.

★Rehearing denied. Hearing denied by Supreme Court.

4. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Where broker has written authorization, subsequent changes in terms of employment contract may be shown by parol (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, § 1698).

Where there is a written note or memorandum showing broker's authorization to sell particular property within requirements of Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, subsequent oral changes in terms of employment are valid under Civ. Code, § 1698, and may be proved by parol.

5. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Broker having written authorization may collect commission, though selling price is changed by oral agreement, if agreement is acted on and deal completed (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Where broker has written authority to act under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, and selling price is changed by oral agreement, which is acted on and deal completed, broker may collect his commission, notwithstanding the modification of the contract by parol.

6. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Parol evidence of agreement for change in selling price held admissible in broker's action for commission, where original authorization of broker was in writing (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

In broker's action for commission, where broker's authorization to sell specific property for defendant was shown by memorandum in writing under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, containing terms of offer, parol evidence was admissible to show change in original agreement whereby alteration was made in selling price.

7. Brokers 🔑50—Time limit in defendant's written memorandum of employment of broker was waived by defendant's continuing with deal through broker after time expired (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Twenty-four hour limitation on time of offer of property for sale under written memorandum of contract for employment of broker, under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, held waived, where defendant continued with the deal through the same broker after the time expired.

8. Brokers 🔑71—Broker was properly allowed reasonable value of services rendered in selling defendant's property, where original contract, calling for commission of excess over minimum price, was altered by changing form of purchase price (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Where original memorandum of employment of real estate broker under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, contained statement of offer of purchase with provision for commission to broker of any excess contained over the minimum requirements, and form of purchase price was subsequently changed so that defendant was to receive title to other property in exchange, instead of deed of trust as previously provided, broker, in action for commissions, was properly allowed reasonable value of services rendered, since it became almost impossible to determine under the altered contract how much more was actually received by defendant for his property than his asking price.

9. Contracts 🔑324(2)—Recovery for work and labor under special contract, modified by agreement, should be in indebitatus assumpsit.

Where terms of special contract have been varied or modified by agreement of the parties action for the amount due for work and labor should be in the form of indebitatus assumpsit for reasonable value of services rendered.

10. Work and labor 🔑24(1)—Plaintiff may recover reasonable value of services based on common count, though proof shows written agreement.

Recovery may be had for reasonable value of services in action based on common count, though proof shows written agreement.

11. Appeal and error 🔑1033(9)—Appellant cannot complain that jury might legally have awarded larger verdict in respondent's favor.

Appellant cannot complain that amount of the verdict in respondent's favor is less than that which jury might legally have awarded.

12. Brokers 🔑43(3)—Defendant, who signed sufficient memorandum for employment of broker, obtaining changes in terms thereof under promise to sign further agreement, and accepting broker's services, could not avoid liability for commissions (Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6).

Defendant, who signed sufficient authorization for employment of broker, under Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 6, and thereafter obtained changes in terms of purchase price, accepting services of broker's under unfulfilled promise to sign further agreement, held not entitled to escape payment of commission by showing variance in terms of contract, which did not go to fact of employment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Daniel C. Deasy, Judge.

Action by A. Moore against C. J. Borgfeldt. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Edward J. O'Brien, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Gerald C. Halsey and Frederick T. Leo, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

BARNARD, Justice pro tem. This action was brought to recover for services claimed to have been rendered to defendant by plaintiff's assignor, one Edward R. Hayden, as a real estate broker. The following facts appear from the evidence: The defendant owned an apartment house at 510 Stockton street, San Francisco, incumbered by a mortgage for $40,000. Early in 1925 he stated to plaintiff's assignor, that he was desirous of selling this property. Although the agent had several prospects, he did not succeed in selling the property, and in October there was another conversation in which the defendant said, "Hayden, I will tell you frankly I am very anxious to sell this property." He priced the property at $90,000, and the agent replied that he would specialize on selling it, and then suggested the possibility of making a trade for what was known as the Lee Garage on Eddy street, in the same city, a property known to the defendant. This Lee Garage was subject to a first mortgage for $45,000 and a second deed of trust for $39,800.

After considerable negotiation, the defendant finally stated what he would do, a memorandum of which was written by the broker, signed by the defendant with his initials, and delivered by him to the broker. This memorandum was as follows: "I will take Lee Garage deed of trust for $39,800.00 and $3,200.00 cash, for 510 Stockton Street, subject to $40,000.00 loan. Offer good for twenty-four hours. Commission all over and in excess of the above amount. Dated December 17, 1925. C. J. B."

Within the period named, the broker secured an acceptance of this proposition from the owner of the deed of trust, and so informed defendant. Thereupon the defendant, desiring to procure better terms, suggested that, instead of the second deed of trust and the $3,200 cash aforesaid, he preferred to obtain, in exchange for his property, the legal title to the Lee Garage itself, subject only to the first mortgage for $45,000. Accordingly, with the knowledge and consent of defendant, the broker proceeded along that line. After about two weeks' further work, the broker secured the consent of all parties concerned, the desired result was accomplished, and the deal put through on that basis, deeds being exchanged on December 31, 1925. As to the broker's part in the deal, the defendant himself testified as follows: "Q. He closed the deal for you didn't he? A. Yes, he closed it." It also appears from the evidence that this broker had acted as agent for the owner of the Lee Garage, and at some time prior to this deal had attempted to sell to the defendant both the Lee Garage and the above-mentioned second deed of trust thereon. The defendant refusing to pay a commission, this action was brought. The complaint contains two counts; the first alleging an agreement to pay a commission of $7,000, and the second for the reasonable value of the services rendered, which is alleged to be $7,000. A trial by jury resulted in a verdict for $2,375 in favor of plaintiff, and this appeal is from such verdict and the judgment based thereon.

[1, 2] Appellant's principal contention is that the memorandum above set forth is not sufficient written authority under subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code, and therefore the same should have been excluded from evidence. The claim is that the memorandum is a mere offer to sell, that it is not addressed to any one, does not employ any one to sell the property, and does not agree to pay any commission, merely providing that in a certain event, an excess amount could be collected as a commission from the purchaser of the property. On this point appellant mainly relies on the following cases: Kleinsorge & Heilbron v. Liness, 17 Cal. App. 534, 120 P. 444, Toomey v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 639, 25 P. 130, and Patterson v. Torrey, 18 Cal. App. 346, 123 P. 224. The argument is made that these authorities fix the law to the effect that a writing authorizing a certain named person to sell one's property is binding without mention of the payment of a commission, and also that such a writing addressed to a certain named person, quoting terms and an agreement to pay a commission, binds the signer, without an express statement of employment, but that this is as far as these cases or any other cases, do or can go. And that, under the statute, no written memorandum is sufficient unless the person claiming the commission is specifically named therein.

In our opinion the above cases and the other cases cited do not support this position. In the case of Kleinsorge & Heilbron v. Liness, and in the case of Patterson v. Torrey, it was held that the respective writings relied upon showed only an offer, and failed to show any employment or authority to act. In the case of Toomey v. Dunphy, on the other hand, it was held that the writing, though silent as to compensation, did authorize the agent to sell the property. However, all these cases, and many others, hold that the chief element in the requirement of this statute is that there be some written evidence of the fact of employment, in other words, the authority to act, and that unless some written memorandum exists sufficient to show such authorization, a claim for a commission cannot be maintained.

In Kennedy v. Merickel, 8 Cal. App. 378, at 381, 97 P. 81, 83, the court says: "A writing signed by the owner and addressed to the broker expressly or impliedly acknowledging his authority to act as agent for the purposes of the sale is a sufficient compliance with the statute. * * * It is sufficient if it be shown that the party to be charged has recognized the broker as his agent by a writing subscribed by him." The statute does not require a complete written contract, but a mere note or memorandum showing authorization is enough. It is sufficient if it shows that the agent is authorized to find a purchaser ready, willing, and able to buy or exchange, or one with whom a sale or exchange is actually made. The writing in question here provides for the payment of a commission to be paid by the seller, not some one else, though limited to any excess obtained over a given price. If not expressly, it certainly impliedly gives authority to make the sale. It does not mention the name of the agent, but, while we have found no case holding this is not necessary, none has been cited holding it to be essential. The cases relied on do not go that far. On the contrary, these cases hold that the agreement to pay a commission, and the express or implied authority to act, satisfy the requirements of the statute. And the agreement to pay a commission, in itself, certainly implies authority to act. Under the circumstances surrounding the written memorandum in this case, the authority to act is clear, and there is "some note or memorandum signed by the party to be charged." In the instant case the owner has, in writing, recognized some one as his agent. He delivered the authorization to plaintiff's assignor, in connection with a deal then pending, and then continued with the deal and accepted the results of the broker's labor. The written memorandum being, in our opinion, sufficient to meet the requirements of the statute, it was properly admitted in evidence. And the identity of the agent was properly shown by parol.

[3, 4] A second contention, closely related to the first, is that the memorandum relied upon must be complete in itself, and that it cannot be enlarged or modified by parol. And, further, that, to admit testimony of the other facts above set forth constitutes an attempt to so enlarge and modify the writing as to be, in effect, the substitution of an entirely new oral contract. As we have pointed out, the writing need not be a complete contract, but only a note or memorandum, provided it shows authority to act. When this requirement is met in connection with a definite piece of property, the other terms may be shown by parol. The amount of compensation, and even the agreement to pay a commission, may be so shown. Toomey v. Dunphy, supra. When such other terms may be thus proved, after written authority shown, it follows that changes in the terms may also be so proved, and, where such oral changes have been made and executed, they are valid. Civ. Code, § 1698; Anderson v. Adler, 42 Cal. App. 776, 184 P. 42.

[5-7] Appellant cites Boyd v. Big Three Ranch Co., 22 Cal. App. 108, 133 P. 623, as authority for the proposition that there may not be an oral modification of the memorandum in such a case as this. That case held only that a writing showing authority to sell land could not be orally modified, by making it apply to a different parcel of land. That is very far from holding that, where written authority to act exists, the terms may not be orally modified. For instance, if the selling price be changed by oral agreement, and this is acted upon and the deal completed, it cannot be doubted that a commission may be collected. Twogood v. Monnette, 191 Cal. 103, 215 P. 542. In the case before us we have, in effect, not a substituted agreement, but a change in the selling price; that is, the appellant took as the purchase price of his property, not the property (the deed of trust and the cash) mentioned in the memorandum, but another property (the Lee Garage) closely connected with the original offer. It was the same property being sold, under the same employment, the same original buyer was a necessary party to the sale as consummated, and even the property received by appellant, though different in form, was, in all probability, essentially the same as he had proposed to accept; the changed terms being considered by him as more advantageous to himself. Parol was then properly received to show these changed terms. The evidence shows this was one continuing transaction. The limitation of time mentioned in the writing was waived by appellant's continuing with the deal, through the same broker, after the expiration thereof. Umphray v. Hufschmidt, 73 Cal. App. 140, 238 P. 749; Estes v. Hotchkiss, 63 Cal. App. 284, 218 P. 605.

[8-11] Appellant further contends that the amount fixed by the jury, being apparently the reasonable value of the services rendered, and not the amount alleged to have been agreed upon, shows that the jury really found no agreement as to commission existed, otherwise they would have followed the agreement. There was evidence that the value of appellant's apartment house, which was sold, was $90,000. And that the reasonable value of the services rendered by plaintiff's assignor was the real estate board's rate of five per cent. on the first $5,000 and 2½ per cent. on the balance. This totals $2,375, the amount of the verdict. As we have seen, the terms of this agreement were modified, changing the form of the purchase price received in such a way as to make it almost impossible to tell how much more was actually received by appellant for his property than his asking price. As the court said in Naylor v. Adams, 15 Cal. App., at page 555, 115 P. 338: "It is a settled rule in this state that where the terms of a special contract have been varied or modified by the agreement of the parties, the action for the amount due for work and labor should be in the form of indebitatus assumpsit, and not upon the contract." The proper measure of recovery in this case was the reasonable value of the services rendered. This is especially true, since it is the rule in this state that "a recovery may be had for reasonable value in an action based on a common count although the proof shows a written agreement." Umphray v. Hufschmidt, supra; Naylor v. Adams, supra. The justice of the application of this rule to the instant case is apparent; the appellant having agreed to pay a commission, contingent though it was, and having later, at his own request, and for his own benefit, changed the terms so that the original rate of commission is of most difficult, if not impossible, application. Strictly speaking, however, the result would be the same were this not the rule properly applicable here. While, as a practical matter, it is difficult to tell how much more than his written asking price, appellant actually received, there is some evidence on this point. There was testimony that the property he received was of the value of $90,000, and in his written memorandum he values his own property at $83,000, assuming the trust deed to be worth its face. While a verdict for the difference, or $7,000, might not have approximated justice as closely as the verdict actually rendered, it would have been sustained by the evidence, and appellant cannot complain that the amount of the verdict is less than might legally have been awarded by the jury.

[12] If, as claimed by appellant, it was actually understood between himself and the agent that no commission should be paid on the deal as finally put through, it would have been an easy matter for him to protect himself by a few written words. Having signed the memorandum for the apparent purpose of complying with the statute, and being evidently a man of affairs, he should have seen to it that so unusual a situation was covered. The purpose of this statute is to protect the owner of real property, not from every claim of a commission for selling the same, but from claims from persons never by him employed or authorized to act. It is equally the policy of the law to protect a broker who has been so employed or authorized, and who, in good faith, has acted. And where an owner signs a sufficient authorization, asks for and obtains particular changes in terms, keeps the agent at work, promises to sign a further agreement, but neglects to do so, and accepts both the services of the broker and the results thereof (all of which facts are shown by the evidence in this case), he may not escape the payment of a commission by showing variations in the terms not going to the fact of employment. And this must have been within the intention of the Legislature, or they would have provided that the entire contract must be in writing, and not merely "the same, or some note or memorandum thereof."

As conceded by appellant, the verdict of the jury has settled all conflicts in the evidence. For the reasons given, the grounds urged for reversal are without merit.

The judgment is affirmed.

GRIFFIN et ux. v. KENT. (L. A. 10882.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1929.

Appeal and error 🔑607(1)—Appeal will not be dismissed for delay in giving notice of intention and requesting transcript, without notice of order denying new trial (Code Civ. Proc. § 953a and § 953d, as added by St. 1927, p. 86.

In absence of written notice of order denying motion for new trial or waiver thereof, under Code Civ. Proc. § 953d, as added by St. 1927, p. 86, motion to dismiss appeal for failure to comply with provisions of section 953a, as to time for notice of intention to appeal and request for transcript, and court rules as to filing transcript, will be denied.

In Bank.

Action by C. W. Griffin and wife against A. H. Kent. From a judgment for plaintiffs and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. On motion to dismiss the appeal. Motion denied.

Carl V. Hawkins and D. L. Strickler, both of Long Beach, John B. Haas, of Los Angeles, and John D. Hume, of Long Beach, for appellant.

Knight & Goddard, of Long Beach, for respondents.

WASTE, C. J. Judgment for the plaintiffs was entered in this action on January 23, 1928. A motion for new trial, made and brought on for hearing on February 27, was denied by the court on March 1, 1928. Notice of appeal from the judgment and from the denial of a new trial was filed on March 5, and the defendant filed a bond to stay execution pending appeal.

Notice to the clerk of intention to appeal and requesting that a transcript be made up and prepared was not given until October 5, 1928, seven months after the notice of appeal was filed; but the court reporter completed a transcript of the proceedings and filed it with the clerk of the trial court on the 15th day of June. The clerk at once mailed to the attorneys for each of the parties a notice stating that the transcript had been filed and would be presented to the judge who conducted the trial on the 22d day of June. On that day, no objections being offered, the judge settled and approved the transcript. On September 5, 1928, the plaintiffs, as respondents, filed in this court a notice of motion to dismiss the appeal on various grounds, the substance of which was that the defendant and appellant had failed and neglected to comply with the provisions of section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the transcript was not filed with the clerk of the Supreme Court, as prescribed by the rules. The motion came on regularly for hearing in this court on October 8. On that day the appellant offiered, and there were filed in this court, a clerk's transcript which had been prepared by the clerk of the lower court two days before, and the reporter's transcript already referred to. The certificate of the clerk of the trial court discloses that no steps were taken by the respondents in the court below to terminate proceedings for the preparation of a record on appeal.

In making the motion to dismiss, the respondents have entirely overlooked the recent amendment to the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the notice of entry of judgment or of order denying a motion for a new trial, required by the provisions of section 953a of the same Code, "must be given in writing, unless written notice thereof be waived in writing or by oral stipulation made in open court and entered in the minutes." Code Civ. Proc. § 953d, added by Stats. 1927, p. 86. Notice of the order denying the motion for a new trial was not given in this case, and there is nothing to show that such notice was waived in the manner required by the statute. The precise situation here presented, and the application of the new section, was before the District Court of Appeal when this motion to dismiss was made, and the decision was rendered just before the submission of the question here. It disposes of the motion to our entire satisfaction.

On the authority of Attkisson v. Reynolds (Cal. App.) 270 P. 686, the motion to dismiss is denied.

4. Insurance 🔑138(1)—Parties to insurance contract may make any agreements they see fit, and courts will enforce terms thereof, if not against public policy or specific law.

Subject to rule that provisions of insurance policy must not be against public policy or in contravention of specific provisions of law, parties to contract may make such agreements as they see fit, and courts will enforce terms mutually agreed upon.

5. Insurance 🔑151(2)—Life policy and application constitute contract.

Life insurance policy and the application therefor constitute the contract.

6. Insurance 🔑298—Words "Relationship Brother," in application for life policy, held "statement" within agreement that any false statement with intent to deceive would bar recovery.

In woman's application for life insurance policy, naming man as beneficiary, words "Relationship Brother," first of which was printed and second typewritten, held a "statement" within preceding agreement that recovery would be barred "if any one of the following statements * * * is false and made with intent to deceive."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First, Second, and Third Series, Statement.]

7. Contracts 🔑143—Court can enforce only agreements made by parties.

Court can enforce only such agreements as were made by the parties to the contract.

8. Insurance 🔑298—False statement in woman's application for life policy that male beneficiary was her brother held made with intent to deceive, within agreement barring recovery in such case (Civ. Code, § 1709).

Statement in woman's application for life insurance policy that male beneficiary, who was only a friend, was her brother, held not a mere mistake, but made "with intent to deceive," within preceding agreement that recovery would be barred if any of following statements were false and made with such intent, though not made with intent to injure insurer; latter's position being altered to its risk within Civ. Code, § 1709.

9. Insurance 🔑298—Materiality of false statement intended to deceive is immaterial, where policy bars recovery if false statement is material to acceptance of risk "or" made with intent to deceive.

Where woman's application for life insurance policy provided that any false statement would bar recovery if material to acceptance of risk "or" made with intent to deceive, materiality of false statement that male beneficiary was applicant's brother is immaterial, if made with such intent.

10. Evidence 🔑28—It is common knowledge that one cannot obtain policy on life of another, in whom applicant has no insurable interest, but not that rule is otherwise where applicant obtains policy on his own life.

It is a matter of common knowledge that one may not obtain an insurance policy on the life of another, in whom applicant has no insurable interest, but not that rule is otherwise where applicant obtains policy on his own life.

11. Trial 🔑136(3)—It is court's duty to construe written instruments.

It is the duty of the court to construe written instruments as a matter of law.

12. Insurance 🔑256(1)—One inducing issuance of void policy by deceitfully false statement cannot compel insurer to accept risk and revive policy by changing beneficiary (Civ. Code, § 2612).

One practicing deceit on insurance company by making false statement in application, thereby inducing issuance of policy, which is void from beginning under Civ. Code, § 2612, cannot thereafter compel company to accept risk and revive policy by merely changing beneficiary.

13. Insurance 🔑256(1)—Provision of life insurance application that any false statement, if material to risk, or if made with intent to deceive, bars recovery on policy, held valid (St. 1917, p. 957, § 6).

Provision of application for life insurance policy that right to recover under policy issued on basis of application should be barred if any statement material to acceptance of risk or hazard assumed by company is false, or is false and made with intent to deceive, held valid, under St. 1917, p. 957, § 6.

Appeals from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. P. Cary, Judge.

Actions by G. M. Boyer, as administrator of the estate of Dora Mockabee Rose, also known as Dora M. Rose, deceased, against the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company, which actions were consolidated for purposes of trial and appeal. Judgments for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed. Superseding opinion of District Court of Appeal in 266 P. 307.

Joe Crider, Jr., of Los Angeles, and Horace W. B. Smith, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Wright & McKee, C. M. Monroe and L. N. Turrentine, all of San Diego, and Perry F. Backus, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. These causes, consolidated for purposes of trial and appeal, were, upon petition of the plaintiff and respondent, taken over after decision by the District Court of Appeal, Second Appellate District, Division 1, Wood, J. pro tem., writing the opinion, in order that we might more fully examine into and consider the questions of law presented. Further consideration has served only to impress us with the correctness of that court's conclusion, and we therefore adopt as and for the decision of this court, with such additional observations as will hereinafter appear, the following portions of the opinion of the District Court of Appeal:

"Defendant issued to Dora M. Rose an accident insurance policy on August 16, 1920, in the principal sum of $15,000. Dr. C. E. Calm was named as beneficiary in the policy. On August 19, 1920, Charles Emil Calm, the same Calm named as beneficiary in the Rose policy, applied for and obtained from the defendant an accident policy in the principal sum of $15,000; the beneficiary being Dora M. Rose. At the expiration of one year from the receipt of her policy, Dora M. Rose, by rider attached thereto, changed the beneficiary to her estate. On May 22, 1923, Dora M. Rose and Dr. C. E. Calm were killed in an automobile accident, Dora M. Rose surviving Dr. Calm by two hours. The administrator of the estate of Dora M. Rose filed two actions to recover the policies. By stipulation, the actions were tried together before the court without a jury, and the same evidence was received in both cases. Appeals by defendant in both actions are now before us. The determination of the cases depends upon the construction to be given to the written applications for the policies signed by the insured in view of the stipulated facts and uncontradicted testimony. At the head of each of the applications, we find these words: 'I hereby apply to the United States Fidelity & Guaranty Company for a Policy to be based upon the following representation of facts: I understand and agree that the right to recovery under any policy which may be issued upon the basis of this application shall be barred in the event that any one of the following statements, material either to the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by the Company is false, or in the event that any one of the following statements is false and made with intent to deceive. I agree that this application shall not be binding upon the Company until accepted either by the Secretary at the Home Office or by an agent duly authorized to issue policies.' Then follow fifteen items, all in narrative form except the eighth. In these items the applicants set forth personal data such as is usually found in applications for insurance policies, the first giving the name of the insured, the second, the residence, etc. Item 8 of the Rose application is as follows: 'Policy to be paid in case of death by accident under its provisions to Dr. C. E. Calm, Resident California Club. Relationship, Brother. Age 55.' After the fifteenth item, the date appears, followed by the signature of the applicant. In the application signed by Dr. Calm three days later, the same words are found, except for the variations occasioned by supplying the personal data of the applicant. In item 8, Dr. Calm named Dora M. Rose as the beneficiary, and gave the relationship as that of sister. It was stipulated at the trial that Dr. Calm and Dora M. Rose were not brother and sister. By the testimony of Ruby Aikman, the driver of the automobile at the time of the accident, it was shown that the witness knew Dr. Calm and Dora M. Rose for some time before either of them made application to the defendant; that they introduced themselves to her, and represented to her that they were friends and not brother and sister. It was further shown that, at the time the applications were presented to defendant, Dr. Calm was a married man. The administrator of the estate of Dora M. Rose promptly furnished defendant with written proof of the accidental deaths; whereupon defendant investigated the facts and learned that Dr. C. E. Calm and Dora M. Rose were not brother and sister. Defendant then tendered to the administrator the amount of the premiums paid, and served written notice that the policies were void. The tender was refused.

[1] "At the trial defendant produced two witnesses, Warren Griffith and George A. Calkins, who qualified as experts in matters of insurance, and testified that, according to the usage and custom of insurance companies, in August, 1920, applications for insurance would not be accepted if made under the circumstances shown in evidence. They further testified that they were of the opinion that the statements contained in the applications to the effect that Dr. Calm was a brother of Dora M. Rose were material to the acceptance of the risk and to the hazard assumed by the defendant. At the close of the evidence, that part of their testimony giving their opinion on the subject of the materiality of the statements was stricken out by the court upon motion of plaintiff. The court did not err in so doing. 25 Cyc. 937. In Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mechanic's Savings Bank & Trust Co., C. C. A., 72 F. 413, 38 L. R. A. 33, 70, it is said: 'The great weight of authority in this country, however, is against the view that an insurance expert may be asked his own opinion whether the undisclosed or misrepresented facts were material to the risk. * * * The better authorities, however, seem to sustain the rule that the insurance experts may testify concerning the usage of insurance companies generally in charging higher rates of premium or in rejecting risks, when made aware of the fact claimed to be material.'

[2-5] "Insurance policies are governed by the same general rules which pertain to all contracts. There must be a meeting of the minds. Subject to the rule that their provisions must not be against public policy or in contravention of specific provisions of law, parties to the contract may make such agreements as they see fit, and the courts will enforce the terms mutually agreed upon. The policy and the application therefore constitute the contract. In McKenzie v. Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co., 112 Cal. 556, 44 P. 922, the court said: 'Parties may contract as they please. When a condition precedent is adopted by them in their contract, the courts will not inquire as to its wisdom or folly. * * * In Wood v. Hartford Ins. Co., 13 Conn. 533, 35 Am. Dec. 92, a leading case on the subject of warranty, Sherman, J., said: "If a house be insured against fire, and the language of the policy is 'warranted, during the policy, to be covered with thatch,' the insurer will be discharged if, during the insurance, the house be covered with wood or metal, although his risk is diminished; for a warranty excludes all argument in regard to its reasonableness, or the probable intent of the parties."' In Jeffries v. Life Ins. Co., 22 Wall. 47, 22 L. Ed. 833, this language is found: 'It is the distinct agreement of the parties, that the company shall not be deceived to its injury or to its benefit. The right of an individual or a corporation to make an unwise bargain is as complete as that to make a wise bargain. The right to make contracts carries with it the right to determine what is prudent and wise, what is unwise and imprudent, and upon that point the judgment of the individual is subject to that of no other tribunal.'

[6] "In her application for the policy, Dora M. Rose agreed that recovery would be barred 'if any one of the following statements * * * is false and made with intent to deceive.' If the words 'Relationship Brother' constitute a 'statement,' and were made 'with intent to deceive,' plaintiff cannot, in view of the rule just set forth and the stipulation of the parties, prevail in the action. It is not necessary to decide whether the words amount to a warranty or representation, since the contract uses the word 'statement.' The entire application consists of fifteen items, preceded by the agreement hereinabove set forth and followed by the signature of the applicant. Item 8 appears in the midst of the others, all of which contain statements of fact. If it were in narrative form there could be no doubt but that a statement was made. For instance, if the language used were 'The relationship is that of brother,' it could not possibly be contended that a statement was not made. Manifestly the two words 'Relationship Brother' were used for the sake of brevity. Plaintiff has attached to his brief an exact copy of the application. It appears therefrom that the word 'Relationship' is printed and the word 'Brother' is in typewriting. By filling in the space following the word 'Relationship' as she did, the applicant doubtless meant to state to defendant that Dr. Calm bore the relation of brother to her. It was clearly the intention of the defendant to obtain, and of the applicant to impart, information on the subject of the relationship between the insured and the beneficiary. Considering the application as a whole, we are of the opinion that the applicant intended that all of the matter set forth over her signature was given to the defendant as information and as such was to be treated as statements.

[7-11] "Next is presented the question whether the statement concerning the relationship of the beneficiary was made 'with intent to deceive.' Plaintiff argues that, in order to bar a recovery, there must be shown an intent to injure defendant. It was not so provided in the contract, and as has been seen, the court can enforce such agreements only as were made by the parties. If the parties had agreed that the intent referred to in the application was an intent to deceive the company to its injury, it would have been a simple matter to add to the application appropriate language to that effect after the word 'deceive.' Such language, embracing a different idea and an additional condition, cannot be supplied by the court. Doubtless the parties meant to agree that if the false statement were made knowingly and intentionally, the recovery would be barred. If, on the other hand, the statement were made inadvertently, it would not bar recovery, even though false, because there would be no intent to deceive. An example of such a false statement could be found in an error on the point of the age or the residence of the beneficiary. Erroneous statements by Dora M. Rose in her application that Dr. Calm was 54 rather than 55 years of age, and that he lived at a club other than the California Club, would doubtless be false statements, but not necessarily made with intent to deceive. They might be mistakes resulting from incorrect information on the part of the applicant. The statement on her part, however, that Dr. Calm, a married man and only a friend, bore the relation of brother to her could not possibly have been a mere mistake. There could be no inadvertence here. She must have intentionally stated as true that which she knew to be untrue. Section 1709 of the Civil Code provides: 'One who wilfully deceives another with intent to induce him to alter his position to his injury or risk, is liable. * * *' Here the position of defendant was altered to its risk, and this was brought about by the false statement of the applicant, which must have been intentionally and wilfully made. Plaintiff cannot escape the result of the provision of the application by claiming that the false statement was not material, if indeed it be held that the statement in question was immaterial, since the contract provided that a false statement would void the policy in either of two events, if the false statement should be material to the acceptance of the risk, or if made with intent to deceive. By the plain agreement of the parties, the materiality of the false statement is of no consequence if it was made with the intent to deceive. It is a matter of common knowledge that one may not obtain an insurance policy upon the life of another in whom the applicant has no insurable interest. It is not so generally known, however, that the rule is otherwise where the applicant obtains the policy on his own life. 14 Cal. Jur. 468; 14 R. C. L. 920. It can be well argued that the applicant in the case at bar made the false statement in question in the fear that the application would be refused if the truth were known. Such action on her part would certainly be taken with intent to deceive. Our conclusion on this point will necessitate a reversal of the judgment, notwithstanding the finding of the trial court: 'That the description of the beneficiary Dr. C. E. Calm as a brother of the insured, Dora M. Rose, when he was not a brother was not a statement material either to the acceptance of the risk or to the hazard assumed by the defendant, or a false statement made with intent to deceive the defendant.' It is the duty of the court to construe written instruments as a matter of law. The facts, which are extremely simple, were established by stipulation or by undisputed testimony. There was nothing for the trial judge to do as a trier of fact. His duty was to draw a legal conclusion from the instrument before him and the stipulation as to the relationship between the insured and the beneficiary. That a false statement was made with intent to deceive is the only reasonable conclusion that can be drawn therefrom. What has been said with reference to the application for the Rose policy applies with equal force to the application of Dr. Calm. * * *

[12] "It cannot be successfully argued that the situation of the parties was changed by the act of Dora M. Rose in changing beneficiaries a year after the policy was issued. Section 2612 of the Civil Code is as follows: 'A breach of warranty, without fraud, merely exonerates an insurer from the time that it occurs, or where it is broken in its inception prevents the policy from attaching to the risk.' In Wolverine Brass Works v. Pacific Coast Casualty Co., 26 Cal. App. 183, 146 P. 184, it is said: 'The above-mentioned warranties being false, the policy issued in reliance upon them was in our opinion, void ab initio.' One who has practiced deceit upon an insurance company by making a false statement and thus has induced the issuance of a void policy cannot thereafter, by merely changing the beneficiary compel the company to accept her as a risk and give life to the void policy. * * *"

[13] As indicated in that portion of the opinion hereinabove adopted, the application upon which the respective policies sued on were issued contained an introductory clause which provided in part that the applicant understood and agreed "that the right to recovery under any policy which may be issued upon the basis of this application shall be barred in the event that any one of the following statements, material either to the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by the company is false, or in the event that any one of the following statements is false and made with intent to deceive." (Italics ours.) That such an agreement might reasonably be exacted of an applicant for accident insurance is set at rest by section 6 of an act (Stats. 1917, p. 957) having to do with the provisions of policies of accident and health insurance. The section reads: "The falsity of any statement in the application for any policy covered by this act shall not bar the right to recovery thereunder unless such false statement was made with actual intent to deceive or unless it materially affected either the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed by the insurer." The similarity between the statutory provision and the introductory clause of the form of application employed by the appellant is immediately apparent. Said clause, reading in the disjunctive, constitutes an express agreement between the parties that any false statement as to a material matter, whether intentionally falsified or not, shall bar recovery on the policy; or, in the alternative, that any false statement, whether material or not, made with intent to deceive shall likewise bar recovery. The authorities cited by the District Court of Appeal amply support its conclusion that the parties to an insurance contract may, with certain well-defined exceptions not here involved, "make such agreements as they see fit and the courts will enforce the terms mutually agreed upon." In this regard the case of Wilkinson v. Standard Accident Insurance Co., 180 Cal. 252, 260, 180 P. 607, recognizes the right of parties to insurance contracts to provide that the intentional falsification of an immaterial matter shall preclude recovery on the policy. It is there stated: "It is undoubtedly true * * * that an agreement between insurer and insured that the falsity of any statement in an application for insurance will avoid the policy, is binding; and that in such case the question of its materiality is of no consequence." The case of Van Cleave v. Union Cas. & S. Co., 82 Mo. App. 668, 680, tends strongly to substantiate the further conclusion of the District Court of Appeal that an intentional false statement of a matter well within the knowledge of the applicant must be held to have been made "with intent to deceive."

Inasmuch as the judgments, for the reasons above stated, must be reversed, we have not found it necessary to definitely decide whether a representation or statement of relationship of the designated beneficiary to an assured is "material either to the acceptance of the risk or the hazard assumed." However, we are not thereby to be understood as having found appellant's contention in this regard to be entirely without merit. In our opinion the contention presents a subject upon which reasonably prudent men might well differ. We can readily perceive of circumstances under which such a representation as to the relation sustained between the beneficiary and assured might be a consideration of considerable moment to the insurer.

The judgments are, and each is, reversed.

PEOPLE v. POKRAJAC. (Cr. 3171.)†

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1929.

Rehearing and Modification of Opinion Denied Feb. 21, 1929.

1. Jury 🔑31(11)—Statute regulating trial of issue of insanity held not unconstitutional as denying jury trial (Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, regulating procedure when plea of not guilty by reason of insanity is interposed, held constitutional as against contention that it prevents a trial by a fair and impartial jury.

2. Criminal law 🔑656(8)—Commendation of jury after verdict of guilty but before trial by same jury on plea of insanity held ground for new trial (Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

Action of court in commending jury on rendition of verdict of guilty in homicide prosecution before trial of issue of insanity by same jury, under Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, held prejudicial and ground for new trial.

3. Criminal law 🔑624—Defendant has burden of proving insanity by preponderance of evidence on trial of issue after verdict of guilty in homicide prosecution (Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149).

Defendant who has interposed plea of insanity, under Pen. Code, § 1026, as added by St. 1927, p. 1149, has burden of proving insanity at time of homicide by a preponderance of evidence on trial of issue after verdict of guilty.

Ilija Pokrajac was convicted of murder and of assault with intent to commit murder. From the judgment of conviction, and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, he appeals. Reversed.

PER CURIAM. The defendant was charged by an information in three counts with the murder of Elmer L. Gustafson, and with assaults on Neal Hultslander and Lorenzo F. Luckie with intent to commit murder. He entered a plea of not guilty and a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, but, during the selection of the jury, made no attempt to examine the jurors touching their qualifications to try the issue of his sanity. The immediate circumstances connected with, and the events leading up to, the various offenses charged were fully shown, and the jury returned a verdict finding the defendant guilty of the charges contained in the first two counts of the information. Over the objection of the defendant, the court thereupon ordered the question of the state of mind of the defendant at the time he committed the offenses to be forthwith submitted to the same jury. The defendant's counsel then, for the first time, demanded the right to examine the jurors on a voir dire as to their qualifications to try the defendant on the issue as to his sanity at the time the offenses were alleged to have been committed, and the privilege of exercising peremptory challenges and challenges for cause, which were denied. On submission of the issue raised by the insanity plea, the jury returned its verdict that the defendant was sane at the time he committed the acts. Defendant made a motion for a new trial on various statutory grounds, which was denied, and judgment on the first count of the information was entered imposing the death penalty on the defendant for the murder of Gustafson.

On this appeal two points are urged. The first is that the law (Pen. Code, § 1026, added by St. 1927, p. 1149, regulating the procedure when a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity is interposed) under which the defendant was tried and convicted is unconstitutional in that it prevents a trial by a fair and impartial jury. The second is that the trial court committed reversible error by commending the jury in open court for rendering its verdict of guilty at the conclusion of the first phase of the trial and before submitting to it the issue of defendant's state of mind at the time he committed the acts complained of.

[1] At the time this case was argued, counsel for the appellant, in submitting it, asked that the court consider as made and advanced by him all the points to be made in the arguments in other capital cases then awaiting argument and submission in which the constitutionality of the law, supra, relating to pleas of not guilty by reason of insanity, was involved. We have done so. The decisions in those cases have been handed down. People v. Coen (Cal. Sup.) 271 P. 1074; People v. Troche (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 767; People v. Leong Fook (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 779. They hold the law valid in all respects, and specifically and conclusively answer every contention raised by appellant's first point. We deem it unnecessary, therefore to further consider that phase of the case. See, also, People v. Hickman (Cal. Sup.) 268 P. 909.

The jury returned its verdict finding the defendant guilty of the killing of Gustafson and of the assault on Hultslander, but not guilty of the assault on Luckie. Although there remained the necessity of the further trial of the defendant on his insanity plea, the trial judge immediately proceeded to fix the time for pronouncing judgment. He then thanked the counsel for the defense, appointed by him, for the able manner in which he had guarded the rights of the defendant, and, turning to the jury, he said: "And you, gentlemen of the jury, I wish, on behalf of the People of the State of California, to commend you for your courageous and faithful work in this case in rendering a verdict which, undoubtedly, is the correct one." Counsel for the defense then called the attention of the court to the matter of the further trial of the defendant, and the court promptly designated the same jury to try that issue. He also told the jury to disregard his remarks as having no bearing on the question of the defendant's insanity about to be submitted to them. Although the defendant and his counsel were present in court at the time, no exceptions were taken to the remarks of the court, but, on the following day, before proceeding with the trial of the insanity plea, counsel for the defendant, "for the purpose of the record," cited the remarks "as prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant." The court thereupon, and at considerable length, stated to the jury that what had been said on the previous day should not "bear in any way directly, or indirectly, upon whether the defendant in this case was sane or insane at the time" of the commission of the offenses.

[2, 3] The consensus of opinion of the majority of the members of this court is that the remarks of the trial judge in thus commending the jury were highly prejudicial to the rights of the defendant, and were of such a nature that their effect could not be erased and was not removed by the subsequent statement of the court. While there is substantial evidence tending to support the findings of the jury that the defendant was not so insane at the time of the commission of the offenses as to fail to know the distinction between right and wrong, there is a material conflict in the testimony on that point. The appearance and demeanor of the defendant during the days of the trial were no doubt observed by the jurors, and the immediate circumstances and the events leading up to the homicide were such as to indicate that the defendant might have been insane at the time he committed the acts charged. While it is true that, under the present procedure, all question of the insanity of the defendant at the time of the commission of the offenses charged was removed from the consideration of the jury during the trial of the issue raised by the plea of not guilty, the minds of the jurors should not have been subjected to the influence of the opinion of the trial judge. It is common knowledge that jurors are most anxious to ascertain, if possible, the ideas of the judge upon the bench during the trial of causes. The trial court's statement to the jury of his approval of the rendition of the verdict of guilty brought satisfaction to the jurors with their action, and they thus entered upon the trial of the second issue of the defendant's case knowing that the trial judge was satisfied of the guilt of the defendant. Under such circumstances, but one conclusion can be drawn, and that is that the remarks of the trial court were highly prejudicial and cast an undue burden on the defendant, who was compelled to prove, by a preponderance of the evidence, that he was insane at the time of the homicide.

The order denying defendant's motion for a new trial and the judgment of the court are, and each is, reversed, and a new trial is ordered.

PRESTON, J. I concur in the judgment but not in the reasoning pursued to reach this result. The opinion treats merely a symptom, overlooking the disease itself. It is not at all likely that the remarks of the court had anything to do with the verdict. The fact is that the plea of insanity has been destroyed. The first trial is the effective proceeding. The second hearing is colorless and may as well be omitted altogether. The defendant is convicted irrevocably by the first trial where the evidence of insanity so far as possible is excluded. I said in my dissent in People v. Leong Fook (Cal. Sup.) 273 P. 779, that innocent people would be convicted under this procedure. The case before us is confirmation of that statement. A demented man has been convicted and sentenced to suffer the extreme penalty.

CALPETRO PRODUCERS' SYNDICATE et al. v. CHARLES M. WOODS CO.
(L. A. 9069.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 22, 1929.

1. Evidence ⚷397(1)—Matters implied in written contract cannot be contradicted by parol evidence (Civ. Code, § 1625).

That which is implied by law becomes as much a part of contract as that which is written therein, and matters imported into written contract by legal implication therefore cannot be contradicted by parol evidence, under Civ. Code, § 1625.

2. Evidence ⚷441(9)—Parol testimony held inadmissible to vary or contradict implied warranty of title in written contract for sale of personal property (Civ. Code, §§ 1625, 1765, 1927).

Parol testimony, to the effect that buyer took personal property solely at his own risk, held inadmissible to vary or contradict implied warranty of title in written contract for sale of personal property, under Civ. Code, §§ 1625, 1765, 1927, especially where contract expressly excluded verbal understanding.

3. Appeal and error ⚷1177(1)—Buyer's action on implied warranty of title should be remanded on reversal of judgment for defendant, where it did not clearly appear that judgment of bankruptcy court adjudging interest in third party bound defendant.

Buyer, maintaining action on implied warranty of title on sale of personal property, held not entitled to have judgment rendered in his favor on appeal on reversal of judgment for defendant, where judgment of federal court, adjudicating interest of bankrupt third party in the property sold, was not clearly shown to be binding on defendant; but case should be remanded for new trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John L. Fleming, Judge.

Action by the Calpetro Producers' Syndicate, a partnership, and others, as individual partners, against the Charles M. Woods Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiffs appeal. Reversed and remanded.

Superseding opinion in 267 P. 359.

F. G. Athearn, Athearn, Chandler & Farmer, Frank R. Devlin, Walter Hoffman, Haven, Athearn, Chandler & Farmer, Milton T. Farmer, and Philip H. Angell, all of San Francisco, for appellants.

Hyams & Himrod, of Los Angeles, and Frank English, of San Francisco, for respondent.

PRESTON, J. This is an action upon an implied guaranty of title upon the sale of personal property. Defendant had judgment. Plaintiffs have appealed.

The appeal is determined by the proper application of a rule of evidence. Plaintiffs purchased from the defendant, upon April 6, 1923, under a written conditional sales contract, certain oil-drilling machinery, which contract not only on its face shows that the writing contained all the terms and conditions of sale and purchase, but in it is found a clause making this fact certain, which reads as follows: "It is expressly understood this proposal made in duplicate contains all agreements pertaining to property herein specified, there being no verbal understanding whatsoever, and when signed by purchaser and approved by an executive officer or local manager of the Charles M. Woods Company becomes a binding contract between the parties hereto."

It appears, however, that prior thereto, and on or about January 3, 1923, defendant herein had, under a like contract, agreed to sell this identical personal property to one J. E. O'Hea. However, on the said 6th day of April, 1923, said O'Hea was, by the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, declared a bankrupt. Soon thereafter the trustee of said bankrupt made claim to the personal property involved in this action by reporting it as a part of the assets of said estate and posting notices upon the property itself.

Thereafter, and on or about April 16, 1923, appellants herein, acting presumably under a provision of the said sales contract with respondent, requiring them to protect respondent's title thereto, filed in the said bankruptcy proceedings a petition styled, "Petition for Order of Reclamation from Trustee," in which petition they sought to have the claims of said bankrupt estate adjudged groundless and respondent's and their own rights to said property confirmed. At the time this petition was filed appellants had not made all the payments called for under said sales contract, although they later made them according to the terms of their covenant, so the title to said property, as between the parties hereto, was at said time in respondent. The trustee answered and a hearing was had on this issue before the referee, in which J. A. Smith, the secretary and treasurer of respondent, testified as a witness at the instance of appellants. The result of this hearing was an order and decree of said referee in bankruptcy, dated June 29, 1923, that the bankrupt's interest in said property had not been forfeited by respondent, and that, subject to the unpaid portions of the purchase price due from O'Hea to respondent, the beneficial interest in said property was vested in the said bankrupt, and that appellants here had no interest therein except as assignees of respondent by virtue of their contract of sale.

A review of this order of the referee was sought and obtained in the District Court, and on January 15, 1924, the findings and order of the referee in said matter were in all respects confirmed. A judicial sale of said property thereafter occurred in said bankruptcy proceedings, at which appellants became the purchasers, buying in the property, the subject of this action, in connection with other property and property rights, for the sum of $25,000, which said sale was confirmed on May 25, 1925.

On April 5, 1924, appellants brought the present action, setting up said written contract of sale, the bankruptcy of said O'Hea, the action of the trustee of his estate, and the order and judgment of the referee respecting said property, the confirmation of said order by the District Court, and the further fact that respondent had full notice of the proceedings taken in said bankruptcy proceedings and should be bound by the judgment entered therein, and prayed for judgment against respondent in the sum of $25,000, plus interest and costs, to which respondent filed its answer and amended answer, denying liability and basing its principal defense upon the ground that appellants took the title to said property subject to any claim or claims that might be made thereto by said O'Hea and his representatives, and expressly, but orally, waived a guaranty of title thereto.

The court sustained the defenses made by respondent, and, among other things, found that appellants knew of the previous sale of said personal property to O'Hea under a conditional sales contract and were familiar with all the terms and conditions of said sale and knew that respondent had retaken possession of said personal property and had attempted to foreclose or terminate all rights of O'Hea under said contract, and at all times knew all the facts concerning the retaking of possession of said personal property by respondent, and the foreclosure proceedings in connection therewith, and further found that it was understood and agreed between respondent and appellants that the appellants should take possession of said personal property subject to any claims or infirmities in the said proceedings had against said O'Hea, and that they would be satisfied with the title of respondent so secured by said proceedings, and waived any express or implied warranty of title to said personal property on the part of respondent. The court further found that, while it was true that J. A. Smith, the secretary and treasurer of respondent, was called as a witness and asked certain questions as to the steps taken to forfeit the rights of said O'Hea, yet said witness was not allowed to answer the questions so propounded, and found still further that respondent did not at any time during the pendency of said proceedings in the bankruptcy court receive notice from appellants that the trustee in bankruptcy was asserting any title or right to the possession of said property, nor was it informed of the nature of said proceedings in bankruptcy with relation to said property, nor did it at any time receive a request or demand from appellants to appear in said proceedings, nor did it at any time receive from appellants an opportunity to so defend, nor did it at any time receive notice that it would be held responsible for any damages or detriment suffered by appellants. Judgment upon these findings passed for respondent.

Parol evidence was the sole resort for the testimony upon which the court predicated its findings that respondent refused to warrant the title to said property, and that appellants expressly waived the implied guaranty of title given by section 1765 of the Civil Code. The important question, then, is: Was it proper under this written contract for the court to permit an excursion into the domain of parol evidence to establish a waiver of the implied warranty of title above mentioned?

To justify this position taken by the court, respondent depends upon the case of Miller v. Van Tassel, 24 Cal. 459, 464–465. This decision was followed in this respect in Johnson v. Powers, 65 Cal. 179, 3 P. 625, and referred to approvingly in Hull v. Ray, 80 Cal. App. 284, 292, 251 P. 810. Said case of Miller v. Van Tassel must therefore receive consideration at our hands. It must be admitted that language found therein upholds the action of the court. Said action was brought by the vendee of an American jack to recover back from the vendor the purchase money, on the ground that the vendor had no title at the time of the sale. The whole writing with respect to the transaction read as follows: "This is to certify that I have sold to William Miller my brown Maltese Jack, for $1,000. N. Van Tassel." The contention was made that, inasmuch as the bill of sale or memorandum above quoted was a part of the contract of sale, its terms could not be varied by parol; hence it was not competent for the vendor to show by parol that the vendee expressly waived a warranty of title and agreed to take the animal at his own risk. The court rejected this contention, and held that a warranty of title was presumed by the law to exist whether the contract was in writing or verbal, and such warranty had its existence independent of the contract of sale, and was imputed because of possession by the vendor; being independent of the contract of sale, its existence could be shown by parol whether the contract of sale was in writing or verbal. The general conclusion, that parol evidence was admissible, reached in that case was correct, and could have been based alone upon the evident fact that the writing did not contain all the terms and conditions of the contract of sale. Kreuzberger v. Wingfield, 96 Cal. 251, 255, 31 P. 109; Williams v. Ashurst Oil, etc., Co., 144 Cal. 619, 624, 78 P. 28; United Iron Works v. Outer Harbor, etc., Co., 168 Cal. 81, 84, 141 P. 917. But the main reasoning upon which the conclusion was actually based is not in harmony with later expressions of this court.

[1] That a warranty is as much one of the elements of sale and as much a part of the contract of sale as any other portion of the contract, and is not a mere collateral undertaking, was held in Germain Fruit Co. v. Armsby Co., 153 Cal. 585, 594, 96 P. 319. We cannot give the holding in that case full credit and at the same time uphold the pronouncement of the court as to the nature of the warranty in Miller v. Van Tassel, supra. See, also, to the same effect, United Iron Works v. Outer H., etc., Co., supra, at page 85 of 168 Cal. (141 P. 920), where the court quotes from 2 Mechem on Sales, § 1254, as follows: "The rule is well settled that where the parties have reduced to writing what appears to be a complete and certain agreement, importing a legal obligation, it will, in the absence of fraud, accident or mistake, be conclusively presumed that the writing contains the whole of the agreement between the parties, and parol evidence of prior, contemporaneous or subsequent conversations, representations or statements will not be received for the purpose of adding to or varying the written instrument. If, therefore, such a writing exists between the parties, and it contains no warranty at all, no warranty can be added by parol; if it contains a warranty of some kind or to some extent, parol evidence will not be admitted to extend, enlarge or modify that which the writing specifies."

The holding in the two last-mentioned cases was approved in the recent case of Nimmo v. Fitzgerald, 202 Cal. 565, 568, 261 P. 1015, 1016, where an attempt was made to introduce parol evidence to vary a written contract so as to show an express warranty, the court using the following language: "Exclusion of the testimony on the ground that defendants were attempting to vary the terms of the written contract by parol evidence was likewise proper. Defendants contend that where, as here, the written contract is silent, evidence is admissible to prove a parol warranty, said warranty being collateral to the written contract. Such is not the law of this state."

From this line of cases it will be seen that this court has repeatedly held that a warranty not contained in a written instrument cannot be inserted therein by parol. Neither can a warranty that is found within the writing be varied in that manner. But this does not exclude from the contract the warranty the law writes therein. On the contrary, the pronouncement of these cases is but the converse of the question we have before us, and foreshadows a departure from the reasoning in Miller v. Van Tassel, supra.

But other decisions of our courts have spoken directly upon the question before us. For example, in the case of Standard Box Co. v. Mutual Biscuit Co., 10 Cal. App. 746, 750, 103 P. 938, 939, it is said: "It is a well-settled principle that that which is implied by law becomes as much a part of the contract as that which is therein written, and if the contract is clear and complete when aided by that which is imported into it by legal implication, it cannot be contradicted by parol in respect of that which is implied any more than in respect of that which is written."

In Peterson v. Chaix, 5 Cal. App. 525, 527, 90 P. 948, 954, it is said: "There is another principle to be observed, namely, that whatever the law implies from a contract in writing is as much a part of the contract as that which is therein expressed; and to the extent that the contract, with that which the law implies, is clear, definite and complete, it cannot be added to, varied or contradicted by extrinsic evidence. * * *"

In Kullman, Salz & Co. v. Sugar Apparatus Mfg. Co., 153 Cal. 725, 731, 96 P. 369, 371, it is said: "But the general principle of law, well settled, is that where a complete written contract is made, oral representations or warranties, and implied warranties, and all oral negotiations are merged in the written contract, and by its terms the parties must be bound. (Civ. Code, § 1625, etc.)" The above statement is quoted with approval in Monahan v. Watson, 61 Cal. App. 417, 421, 214 P. 1001. See, to the same effect, California D. & M. Co. v. Crowder, 58 Cal. App. 529, 531, 533, 209 P. 68; 17 Cyc. 570; also the recent case of LaFrance v. Kashishian (Cal. Sup.) 269 P. 655.

Thus the cases of Miller v. Van Tassel, supra, and Johnson v. Powers, supra, on this point have been practically receded from by this court. In the LaFrance Case, above cited, plaintiff, a lessee, was suing the lessor for a violation of the implied warranty of title to the premises. The lease was silent as to any guaranty of ownership of the premises by the lessor, but the plaintiff relied upon the implied warranty of title given by section 1927 of the Civil Code. Defendant sought to show by parol testimony that plaintiff agreed to accept such title as the defendant had, and to take possession of the premises subject to all infirmities therein, and had been conceded a reduced rental in view of that fact, well knowing his title rested merely upon tax proceedings. But this court upheld the lower court in the rejection of such parol testimony, saying: "But the weight of authority, especially as bearing upon a matter such as is here presented, is to the effect that an implied stipulation in a contract is of as great force as though it were fully set forth therein, and such implied stipulation may no more be contradicted or varied by parol evidence than may be that which is clearly expressed." This we conceive to be the doctrine that must be applied here.

The case of Johnson v. Powers, supra, in so far as it upholds the case of Miller v. Van Tassel, supra, is subject to the same misconception of the nature of the implied warranty above pointed out. The same is true of the case of Hull v. Ray, supra.

[2, 3] We therefore conclude that parol testimony, to vary the terms of the written contract, the subject of this action, was inadmissible; hence the findings of the court below, to the effect that appellants waived the implied warranty of title given by the statute, are without legitimate support in the record. This conclusion makes necessary a reversal of the cause. We have been asked, however, not only to reverse the judgment of the court below, but also to direct a judgment in favor of appellants and against respondent. This we feel disinclined to do. The binding character of the judgment of the federal court upon respondent is not absolutely certain, in view of the nature of the proceedings and of the findings of the court. This fact, and other reasons not necessary to dwell upon, render the amount of damage suffered by appellants uncertain. Neither party should, therefore, be denied a full opportunity to present its position on these questions upon a second trial.

The judgment is reversed.

NOYES v. BANK OF ITALY. (L. A. 8152.)

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 25, 1929.

1. Bankruptcy 🔑184(2⅛)—Chattel mortgages 🔑61—Unacknowledged chattel mortgage is void as against mortgagor's creditors, and hence inadmissible against his trustee in bankruptcy (Civ. Code, § 2957).

Chattel mortgage, not acknowledged as required by Civ. Code, § 2957, is void as against mortgagor's creditors, and hence inadmissible in evidence against mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy in latter's action to recover mortgaged property.

2. Bankruptcy 🔑185—Bankruptcy Act safeguards general creditors' rights against one seizing property under unacknowledged chattel mortgage before commencement of bankruptcy proceedings by giving trustee status of lien creditor (Bankr. Act, § 47(a) (2), amended by Act June 25, 1910, § 8; 11 USCA § 75; Civ. Code, § 2957).

Bankruptcy Act, § 47(a) (2), amended by Act June 25, 1910, § 8 (11 USCA § 75), safeguards rights of bankrupt's general creditors as against one seizing property under chattel mortgage, not acknowledged as required by Civ. Code, § 2957, before commencement of bankruptcy proceedings, by giving trustee status of lien creditor.

3. Chattel mortgages 🔑61—Unacknowledged chattel mortgage is void as to mortgagor's prior, as well as subsequent, creditors (Civ. Code, § 2957).

A chattel mortgage, not acknowledged as required by Civ. Code, § 2957, is void as against persons extending credit to mortgagor before, as well as after, execution of mortgage.

4. Bankruptcy 🔑303(2)—Unacknowledged chattel mortgage is inadmissible to show mortgagee's good faith in bankrupt trustee's action to recover mortgaged property (Civ. Code, § 2957).

Chattel mortgage, not acknowledged as required by Civ. Code, § 2957, is inadmissible, in action by mortgagor's trustee in bankruptcy to recover mortgaged property, to show mortgagee's good faith; such mortgage being void as to mortgagor's creditors, regardless of mortgagee's good or bad faith.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by C. W. Noyes, trustee in bankruptcy of the estate of Paul Petrich, doing business as the Coronado Fish Company, against the Bank of Italy, a corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

Superseding opinion 259 P. 60.

Ward, Ward & Ward, of San Diego, and Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Morris Binnard, of San Diego, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is an appeal from a judgment on a verdict in favor of the plaintiff for the sum of $10,000 in an action for conversion.

The facts essential to a proper disposition of the appeal are undisputed. Paul Petrich, plaintiff's bankrupt, conducted a wholesale and retail fresh fish and fish-canning business at San Diego under the name of Coronado Fish Company. On August 10, 1923, an involuntary petition in bankruptcy was filed against him by his creditors. He was adjudicated a bankrupt, and on October 22, 1923, the plaintiff was appointed the trustee of the bankrupt's estate. On November 3, 1923, as such trustee, the plaintiff demanded possession of the property described in the complaint. Upon a refusal of the defendant to surrender the same, this action was brought.

[1] During the canning season of 1921 and 1922, the defendant advanced to Petrich about $22,000 with which to conduct his business. On March 23, 1923, there remained due to the defendant the sum of $8,705.65, on which day the defendant obtained from Petrich a promissory note for the unpaid balance and a chattel mortgage securing the same covering the personal property involved in this action. This chattel mortgage was filed for record on March 26, 1923, but it lacked the formality of an acknowledgment as required by section 2957 of the Civil Code. On July 28, 1923, the defendant took possession of said personal property assuming to act under the terms of said chattel mortgage. Thereafter, on August 28, 1923, the defendant caused a sale to be conducted as provided by law for the sale of mortgaged chattels, as a pledge, at which sale the personal property was bought in by the defendant for the sum of $3,000; there being no other substantial bids. In the trial court the defendant sought, and now seeks, to justify the taking, retention, and sale of said personal property by reason of the terms of said chattel mortgage. To that end the defendant, under appropriate allegations in its answer, offered said chattel mortgage in evidence, to which offer the plaintiff objected on the ground that said mortgage was void as to the bankrupt's creditors whom the plaintiff represented, and therefore inadmissible in evidence against him as trustee. The court excluded the proffered mortgage, sustained the objection and instructed the jury that there was no issue under the proof on the question of conversion and that the only question for the determination of the jury was the value of the property converted. The pivotal point in the case is whether the trial court committed error in so instructing the jury, for it is conceded by the plaintiff that, if the court committed error in this respect, the judgment should be reversed. It is insisted by him, however, that the ruling of the court in excluding the chattel mortgage was proper under the provisions of section 2957 of the Civil Code and decisions of this court interpreting the same and that, since there was therefore no evidence in the record justifying the withholding and sale of said personal property by the defendant, the instruction was proper.

We think the position of the plaintiff is well taken. Section 2957 of the Civil Code provides: "A mortgage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers of the property in good faith and for value, unless: * * * 2. It is acknowledged or proved, certified, and recorded in like manner as grants of real property." It is a conceded fact in this case that said chattel mortgage was not acknowledged as required by the Code section, and was void to the extent therein provided. As applied to the facts in the present case, the said mortgage under the plain intent of the statute was "void as against creditors of the mortgagor," Petrich, and must be so declared unless some one of the considerations urged by the defendant would require a contrary conclusion.

[2] It is conceded by the parties that no question is involved herein as to whether the chattel mortgage or the act of the defendant in taking possession of the property created a voidable preference under the Bankruptcy Act. Nor is it claimed by the defendant that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict fixing the value of the property at the sum of $10,000. It is insisted, however, that it was not shown that any of the creditors of the bankrupt were in position to attack the mortgage in that it did not appear that any of them were creditors who had acquired a lien upon the mortgaged property by virtue of some legal proceeding or who had come armed with some process authorizing seizure of the property and that a mere creditor at large may not attack the mortgage. It is urged that the case of Loosemore v. Baker, 175 Cal. 420, 166 P. 26, citing Ruggles v. Cannedy, 127 Cal. 290, 53 P. 911, 59 P. 827, 46 L. R. A. 371, is directly in point and is controlling here. We think a sufficient answer to the contention lies in the fact that whatever the status of the creditors may be in this case, the Bankruptcy Act has supplied the deficiency which the defendant claims to have existed and has vested the trustee in bankruptcy with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a judgment creditor holding an execution duly returned unsatisfied. Section 47 (a) 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, amended by Act June 25, 1910 (chapter 412, § 8, 36 Stats. at L. 838, 840; Comp. Stats. 1913, §§ 9586, 9631; U. S. Code [USCA] tit. 11, § 75), provides: "And such trustees, as to all property in the custody or coming into the custody of the bankruptcy court, shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a creditor holding a lien by legal or equitable proceedings thereon; and also, as to all property not in the custody of the bankruptcy court; shall be deemed vested with all the rights, remedies, and powers of a judgment creditor holding an execution duly returned unsatisfied."

Interpreting said section 47 (a) 2 of the Bankruptcy Act, the Supreme Court of the United States has held that the trustee acquired a lien status as of the time when the petition in bankruptcy was filed. Bailey v. Baker Ice Machine Co., 239 U. S. 268, 36 S. Ct. 50, 60 L. Ed. 275. See, also, Martin v. Commercial National Bank (C. C. A. 5th Circuit) 245 U. S. 513, 38 S. Ct. 176, 62 L. Ed. 441; 4 Cal. Jur. pp. 59, 60, 62, 63, and cases cited.

Even if it be assumed that a mortgage void as to creditors pursuant to the plain terms of the statute could be transformed into a valid mortgage by the mortgagee's seizing the mortgaged property or by otherwise taking possession of the same with the consent of the mortgagor and thus shut out general creditors or creditors not possessing a lien or armed with process, yet we are satisfied that it was the intention of the Bankruptcy Act to safeguard the rights of such general creditors by giving the trustee the status of a lien creditor and also to prevent the mortgagee from defeating the rights of the creditors of the bankrupt by contending that such creditors were general creditors only. It seems reasonable to conclude, also, that the purpose of the Bankruptcy Act in vesting power in the trustee to attack a chattel mortgage void under the statute was to render ineffectual as to creditors the act of the mortgagee in taking possession of the property before the commencement of the bankruptcy proceedings. In other words, the trustee was intended to be placed in the position of a lien creditor who would, but for the bankruptcy proceeding, be entitled to attack the alleged void mortgage and to enable him to protect the interests of general creditors against invalid liens, unlawful transfers, etc. Collier on Bankruptcy (12th Ed.) vol. 1, p. 728, et seq. Therefore, since it was competent for the plaintiff to commence the present action for conversion and since the proffered chattel mortgage was void as to creditors under the statute, there was no error in excluding the mortgage and as matter of law instructing the jury that there was no issue for the jury to determine on the question of conversion.

[3] It is next contended by the defendant that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that the verdict should be limited to the amount of the claims which arose from credit being extended to Petrich after the mortgage was executed. The schedule of claims shows that some of the claims arose prior to the execution of the mortgage. The position of the defendant in this connection is stated by its counsel as follows: "But, conceding for the purpose of this argument, that the trustee does stand in a position to challenge this mortgage; i. e., conceding that general creditors, without first having obtained a lien on the chattels, can attack and question the validity of this mortgage, nevertheless, it is our contention that the mortgage would be void, if at all, only as to creditors whose claims arose after the mortgage was given and before possession was taken. For that reason, if for no other reason, appellant should have been permitted by the trial court to introduce in evidence the mortgage and the proceedings thereunder." Counsel then call attention to the fact that in Ruggles v. Cannedy, supra, at page 299 of 127 Cal. (53 P. 915) the court left this question open in the following language: "Whether it [the chattel mortgage] is void against a creditor who extended credit before the making of the mortgage does not here call for decision"—also that in the case of Loosemore v. Baker, supra, the point was not decided, and the inference is drawn that the question is an open one in this state. But such is not really the case. Commenting on the scope of the term "creditors" as used in section 2957 of the Civil Code, this court said, in Cardenas v. Miller, 108 Cal. 250, at page 258, 39 P. 783, 785 (49 Am. St. Rep. 84): "The term creditors is general, and applies to creditors existing prior to the mortgage, as well as subsequent." In Old Settlers Investment Co. v. White, 158 Cal. 236, 110 P. 922, the question of the application of section 2973 of the Civil Code to a prior creditor was involved. The sheriff, representing a prior creditor, levied an execution and had judgment in the trial court. Although the case was reversed for other reasons, it was stated that a creditor who became such prior to the execution of the void mortgage necessarily parted with consideration without notice of the mortgage and could cause a levy on the personal property involved without paying the mortgage debt. In the Matter of Hansen, 268 F. 904, the District Court of the United States, in and for the Southern District of California, in a bankruptcy proceeding involving the question of the validity of a chattel mortgage, noted that in the case of Ruggles v. Cannedy this court had declined to determine the question. The court in the Hansen matter reviewed numerous authorities, and came to the conclusion that the term applied to prior as well as to subsequent creditors. The reasoning for this conclusion is well stated in Pierson v. Hickey, 16 S. D. 46, 91 N. W. 339. Section 4379 of the Compiled Laws of South Dakota, in the identical language of our statute, provided: "A mortgage of personal property is void as against creditors of the mortgagor, and subsequent purchasers and incumbrancers of the property in good faith for value, unless, * * * " etc. In that case the court reversed a judgment which gave priority to the lien of an unrecorded chattel mortgage as against the lien of an execution levied by an antecedent creditor. At page 47 of 16 S. D. (91 N. W. 340), it is stated: "By the use of the word 'subsequent' it is clear that the legislature intended to qualify only the words 'purchasers and incumbrancers,' and, as no restriction is placed upon the word 'creditors,' all persons of that class are included, whether antecedent or subsequent to the execution of the mortgage. Section 4652 of the Compiled Laws defines the meaning of the word 'creditor' to be 'one in whose favor an obligation exists, by reason of which he is, or may become, entitled to the payment of money,' and to exclude from the protection of the statute all whose debts were in existence when the mortgage was executed would restrict the legislative policy, and require an unwarranted qualification of the word 'creditors.' The injury that an unfiled chattel mortgage may occasion an antecedent creditor is likely to arise from the apparent unincumbered ownership of the property in the possession of his debtor, justifying the inference of perfect security, and inducing delay in the enforcement of his claim. Were none but subsequent creditors within the purview of the statute, the judgment creditor may also be injured by the levying of an execution on property described in a secret mortgage, instead of the unincumbered property of the judgment debtor; and to protect such, as well as subsequent creditors, is the plain purpose of the enactment. * * * The great weight of authority is to the effect that such statutes apply not only to creditors who become such subsequently to the execution of the mortgage, but also to those whose debts existed before that time. [Citing many cases.]"

[4] It is further contended by the defendant that the chattel mortgage should have been received in evidence to show the good faith of the mortgagee. Good faith is not an element bearing on its admissibility. The Code section makes the mortgage void as to those mentioned, regardless of the good or bad faith of the mortgagee.

Furthermore, we discover no error in the order of the trial court overruling the demurrer to the complaint.

The judgment is affirmed.

DEAN v. MIDLAND FARMS CO. et al.

(Civ. 6509.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 9, 1929.

Appeal and error 🔑110—Order granting new trial in action to declare trust tried by court without jury held not appealable (Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended in 1915).

Order granting new trial from judgment for plaintiffs in action to declare a trust and for an accounting, tried by the court without a jury, was not appealable under Code Civ. Proc. § 963, as amended in 1915.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by W. E. Dean against Midland Farms Company and another. From an order granting a new trial after judgment for plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Appeal dismissed.

John Anthony McGee, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robt. H. Schwab, of Sacramento, for respondents.

SPENCE, Justice pro tem. This is an action to declare a trust and for an accounting. The cause was tried by the court without a jury, and judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiff and against defendants. Upon motion by defendants, the court made its order granting a new trial, from which order plaintiff appeals.

Since the amendment in 1915 of section 963 of the Code of Civil Procedure, an order granting a new trial is no longer an appealable order, except "in an action or proceeding tried by a jury where such trial by jury is a matter of right." McGoldrick v. Visalia Midway Oil Co., 58 Cal. App. 280, 208 P. 334. See, also, Diamond v. Superior Court, 189 Cal. 732, 739, 210 P. 36; Furlow Pressed Brick Co. v. Balboa Land & Water Co., 186 Cal. 754, 760, 200 P. 625; Nason v. Shinjo, 72 Cal. App. 530, 237 P. 559.

This cause does not fall within the class of cases in which an appeal from an order granting a new trial is permitted.

The appeal is dismissed.

McGUFFIN v. SAME.

(Civ. No. 3647.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 17, 1929.

Hearing Granted by Supreme Court Feb. 14, 1929.

1. Railroads ⟹348(1)—In action for death in crossing accident, evidence justified conclusion that night was dark.

In action against railroad for death in accident at crossing, evidence held sufficient to justify jury in concluding that night was dark.

2. Railroads ⟹350(5)—It cannot be said as matter of law that "railroad crossing" sign located within few feet of rails was of any significance in protecting users of highway.

Where post bearing cross-arms on which are written words "railroad crossing" was located within very few feet of rails and partly behind telephone or telegraph pole, court cannot say as matter of law that it was of any significance whatever in affording protection to users of highway.

3. Evidence ⟹595—From fact that motorist turned left to avoid red light at railroad crossing inference may be drawn that he mistook light for automobile tail-light.

From facts showing that automobile driver turned to left to avoid striking red light, swung from gate at railroad crossing, inference may be drawn that light was mistaken for tail-light of another automobile, since inference which may be drawn from facts does not fall within terms of cases having to do with conjectures.

4. Railroads ⟹348(6)—Evidence held insufficient to show that deceased was familiar with railroad crossing.

In action for death of motorist at railroad crossing, evidence held sufficient to show familiarity of deceased with crossing, where it was shown that he had been over it a few times, but not often.

On petition for rehearing. Application denied.

For former opinion, see 273 P. 155.

Bertrand J. Wellman, of Los Angeles, and Norval N. Edwards, of Orange, for appellants.

E. E. Morris and Frank Karr, both of Los Angeles, and S. M. Reinhaus, of Santa Ana, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. [1] The statement in the petitioner's application for a rehearing herein that there is other testimony in the record that there was a full moon on the night of May 18, 1924, other than that shown by the World's Almanac, is correct. But what we have said in our main opinion, that there was sufficient testimony in the record to justify the jury in coming to the conclusion that the night was dark, as well as the conclusion that the night was light, is a matter which we think cannot be reasonably questioned. However, as petitioners have set forth the testimony introduced by the defendants to show that the night was light, and that the conditions were such that the railroad crossing and gates should have been perceived by the occupants of the automobile that came in collision with the electric car, we are under the necessity of calling attention to the testimony of other witnesses from which the contrary conclusion might be drawn. The witness McKarley testified that the weather was "rather dark"; that the weather was "misty"; that the crossing was "dark." The witness Charles Bates testified that the weather was "dark and gloomy"; that the crossing was "dark"; that he heard no whistle. McKarley also testified that he heard no whistle. Bates testified that the light in the tower did not illuminate the crossing. The witness Handley testified that he heard neither bell nor whistle. The witness Meade testified: "I should say it was a dark night." This witness, however, further testified that as to conditions he paid little attention. The witness Bessie Handley, who was driving an automobile a short distance in the rear of the one coming in collision with the electric car, testified: "The weather was extremely dark." The witness Albert A. Parker, after testifying as to the sobriety and industry of the deceased, said: "It was rather dark all along the road; there were places it was foggy, and some fog just this side of where the accident occurred." The testimony of these witnesses, whether correct or incorrect, does not appear to have been shaken upon cross-examination, and is sufficient to support a finding that it was dark at the crossing, and even foggy, just as stated by the witness Parker. Whether it was, in fact, light at the crossing or dark, was a matter for the jury, and therefore what we have said as to the court's instructions relative to the maintenance of gates, and the law which we have cited relative to the maintenance of gates across a highway at nighttime, unquestionably applies. In the case of the testimony which we have cited the court could not assume that the conditions were such as to reveal the presence of the gate in time for an automobile to stop, without the gate being properly lighted. These are questions of fact, and presented conditions which render a giving of instruction No. 29 prejudicially erroneous, for the simple reason that the jury might, and we think would ordinarily, infer therefrom that no obligation whatever rested upon the defendants to have the crossing gate properly lighted.

---

[2, 3] Petitioners also call our attention to the existence of a post bearing two cross-arms on which is written the words "Railroad Crossing," and that this is shown by a photograph introduced in evidence. If the perspective of the photograph is correct, this post with the cross-arms was located within a very few feet of the rails of the electric road, and partly behind a telephone or telegraph pole. The location of this post and cross-arms is so close to the electric railroad that the jury might very readily conclude that it would give no adequate warning to an approaching automobile driver in time to stop before reaching the track. Instead of being placed some distance from the track where the sign might serve some useful purpose, it appears to be so close that we cannot say, as a matter of law, it is of any significance whatever in affording protection to users of the highway. Again, it is argued that it is only conjecture that the one red light, swung from the gate in the position which we have heretofore stated, might readily have been mistaken for the tail-light of another automobile, and so misled the deceased. The physical facts show that the driver of the fatal car turned to the left to avoid striking the red light. That is just exactly what an automobile driver always does in attempting to pass a machine traveling in front of him. And the testimony is to the effect that the fatal car was on the left side of the improved portion of the highway, or what is sometimes called the concrete slab. As pointed out in our main opinion, the red light was in a position very similar to that which the red tail-light of a car would be if the red light is over the left fender of the machine—the place where it is very commonly located. From these facts the inference might very readily be drawn which we have stated. An inference which may be drawn from facts does not fall within the terms of cases having to do with conjectures.

[4] Again, petitioners argue that the testimony shows the deceased familiar with the crossing. We stated in our opinion that there was no testimony showing such fact. That there was no such testimony as to justify the conclusion of the court that the deceased was familiar with the crossing, we will set it forth. Testimony of Mrs. McGuffin: "Q. Had you ever been over that road before, Mrs. McGuffin? A. Well, we wasn't regular travelers over it but had been over it sometimes. Q. You and your husband had been over this road? A. Occasionally; not very often. Q. Over this crossing before? A. Once in a while; not very often." We submit that this testimony does not show familiarity with the crossing; much less is it sufficient to warrant the court in giving an instruction which assumes such knowledge.

In the case of Record v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 75 N. J. Law, 311, 67 A. 1040, and Id., 76 N. J. Law, 800, 72 A. 62, the testimony of the plaintiff himself was: "That he had been over this road only once or twice before, and that he did not remember this crossing, which was not upon an embankment, but flush with the street." These cases were cited in our main opinion and show that the testimony relied upon by petitioners is wholly inadequate to justify the conclusion that the deceased was familiar with the crossing, and so instruct as a matter of law.

In the case of Christman v. Southern Pacific Co., 38 Cal. App. 196, 175 P. 808, referred to in our main opinion, where the court gave an instruction as to the duty to stop, look, and listen, and uses the language, where one has complete knowledge that he was approaching a railroad crossing, it also appears from the opinion that "prior to the day in question the plaintiff had driven over this crossing eight or ten times and knew that the railroad track was there." The distinction between the circumstances is so apparent as to render comment unnecessary.

The petition for rehearing is denied.

EVANS v. BANK OF ITALY. (Civ. 6481.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Jan. 11, 1929.

1. Banks and banking ⚷299—Savings bank is bound to exercise only ordinary care and diligence.

Savings bank, having in some respects different duties and liabilities than a commercial bank, is bound only to exercise ordinary care and diligence.

2. Banks and banking ⚷301(3)—Savings bank, charging customer's account and notifying him of attachment, was not liable because of subsequent payment on writ of execution.

Where savings bank, after garnishment in attachment suit was served on it, charged its customer's account with amount named in the writ and notified him in writing as to service of writ of attachment, it exercised ordinary care sufficient to relieve it from liability because of subsequent payment on writ of execution.

3. Banks and banking ⚷301(6)—Depositor failing for more than 70 days after notification of attachment to inform bank that he was not person named therein was estopped to question court's jurisdiction (Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3).

Where depositor in savings bank, after being notified that writ of attachment had been served on bank, failed for a period of 70 days to advise bank that he was not the person named as defendant in the attachment suit, he was estopped, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3, from thereafter questioning jurisdiction of court in attachment suit at time final judgment was ordered and execution issued.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Walter Perry Johnson, Judge.

Action by Henry Evans against the Bank of Italy. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. E. White, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Louis Ferrari and J. J. Posner, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

STURTEVANT, J. The plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant to recover a sum of money theretofore deposited with the defendant. The defendant appeared and answered, and a trial was had before the trial court sitting without a jury. The trial court made findings in favor of the defendant and, from a judgment entered thereon, the plaintiff has appealed, and has brought up the judgment roll.

The plaintiff makes the contention that, on the findings as written, the trial court should have ordered judgment for him as prayed. This contention is made because the findings show the following facts: On March 26, 1927, the plaintiff deposited with the defendant in its savings department the sum of $300; on June 30, 1927, interest accrued in the sum of $3; on December 29, 1927, the plaintiff applied to the bank to withdraw therefrom $303, but his application was refused. In reply, the defendant calls to our attention that the findings also show the following facts: On the 5th day of August, 1927, an attachment was served on the defendant attaching all moneys due from the defendant to Henry Evans; that thereupon the defendant notified the plaintiff in writing of said service of said writ of attachment and that defendant had debited the plaintiff's account with the amount of said attachment, to wit, the sum of $302, that being the amount of the attachment, interest, and costs; that the plaintiff received said notice in writing and failed and neglected to communicate with the defendant or notify this defendant that plaintiff was not the said Henry Evans mentioned in said writ of attachment. On the 5th day of October, 1927, the defendant was served with a writ of execution in the attachment suit. On that date the plaintiff had not notified the defendant that he was not the Henry Evans mentioned in the attachment suit, and thereupon defendant paid to the sheriff so levying the writ of execution $302. On the 15th day of December, 1927, for the first time, the plaintiff notified the defendant that he was not the Henry Evans defendant in the attachment suit. The trial court also found as a fact that Henry Evans, this plaintiff, is not the Henry Evans named as defendant in the attachment suit. The defendant further calls to our attention that the trial court made a finding to the effect that the defendant was not negligent in doing what it did, and that the plaintiff is estopped.

The plaintiff contends that the reply so made by the defendant is insufficient, and he cites and relies on Janin v. London & S. F. Bank, 92 Cal. 14, 27 P. 1100, 14 L. R. A. 320, 27 Am. St. Rep. 82; Hatton v. Holmes, 97 Cal. 208, 31 P. 1131; Los Angeles Inv. Co. v. Home Sav. Bank, 180 Cal. 601, 182 P. 293, 5 A. L. R. 1193; Union Tool Co. v. Farmers', etc., Nat. Bank, 192 Cal. 40, 218 P. 424, 28 A. L. R. 1417. Those cases are not in point. Each involved a forged instrument. Moreover, in no one of those cases did it appear that when the forged instrument was presented the bank stayed its hand as to payment, personally notified the depositor in writing, and retained the moneys 60 days after the presentation of the forged instrument and before payment. Those authorities, standing alone, are not decisive of the instant case.

[1-3] The duties and liabilities of a commercial bank and a savings bank are not necessarily the same, and in some respects are different. Kelley v. Buffalo Savings Bank, 180 N. Y. 171, 72 N. E. 995, 69 L. R. A. 317, 105 Am. St. Rep. 720. A savings bank is bound to exercise ordinary care and diligence only. 7 C. J. 871; Krishkan v. New York Savings Bank, 93 Misc. Rep. 52, 156 N. Y. S. 298; Langdale v. Citizens' Bank of Savannah, 121 Ga. 105, 48 S. E. 708, 69 L. R. A. 341, 344, 104 Am. St. Rep. 94, 2 Ann. Cas. 257. When the garnishment in the attachment suit was served on the defendant, it exercised ordinary care in charging the plaintiff's account with the amount named in the writ, and it exercised ordinary care when immediately thereafter it notified the plaintiff in writing of the service of the writ of attachment. The defendant was not bound to appear in the attachment suit on behalf of this plaintiff. 28 C. J. 275, § 386; Morrison v. New Bedford Institution for Savings, 7 Gray (73 Mass.) 269; Webster v. City, 2 Allen (84 Mass.) 123; Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Meyer, 117 Ind. 563, 19 N. E. 320; Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Adams, 159 Ind. 688, 66 N. E. 43, 60 L. R. A. 396. In the latter case, at page 398 (159 Ind. 691, 66 N. E. 44), the court said: "We need not here undertake to state the measure of the garnishee's duty in all cases, but it may be said, so far as the main action is concerned, that, where the principal defendant has personal knowledge of the suit, the former is not bound to go further than to look to the jurisdiction, act fairly, and make a full disclosure. In Wigwall v. Union Coal & Min. Co., 37 Iowa, 130—a case much like this—it was said: 'The defendant in this case has once paid the amount due plaintiff to a creditor of his, whereby plaintiff has had the full benefit of it. The defendant ought not to be required to pay the amount a second time, unless guilty of some negligence or wrong toward the plaintiff. The finding of facts shows that the defendant answered truly and fully every known fact, and also stated that the plaintiff herein, its creditor, claimed to be the head of a family, whereby the debt sought to be garnished would be exempt. The plaintiff herein was a party to the case, and was fully notified of the garnishment proceedings. It was his duty to furnish defendant the information and means to prove the fact, or himself to prove it.'"

In the instant case there is no question whatever but what the defendant acted fairly and made a full disclosure. At the time the writ of attachment was served, it was not required that the attachment creditor should contemporaneously cause to be served a summons. Therefore there is no question involved, at that stage of the proceedings, of jurisdiction of the persons or jurisdiction of the subject-matter. However, the question still remains whether the court in the attachment suit had jurisdiction of the person of the defendant at the time that a final judgment was ordered and execution issued. As to that question, the defendant contends that the plaintiff is estopped. The trial court so held. We think it did not err. After the writ of attachment was served and this plaintiff was notified of the service, he stood by in silence for the period of 70 days without advising this defendant that he was not the Henry Evans named as defendant in the attachment suit. In the foregoing facts are found all of the elements of a complete estoppel. Code Civ. Proc. § 1962, subd. 3; Biddle Boggs v. Merced Mining Co., 14 Cal. 279. The plaintiff's attempt to distinguish the facts in the instant case from the rule in the case cited is not sound. He assumes facts not found. He places a duty on the defendant which rested on the plaintiff, as we have shown above.

We find no error in the record. The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: KOFORD, P. J.; NOURSE, J.

Amelia LENCIONI, Administratrix, Plaintiff and Appellant, v. FIDELITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK OF FRESNO, Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Respondent, and Minnie Helene Setchel, Cross-Defendant, Cross-Complainant and Appellant, and Amelia Lencioni et al., Interveners, Cross-Complainants and Respondents. (Civ. 6261.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 12, 1929.

Appeal by cross-complainant from a judgment of the Superior Court of Fresno County, Charles R. Barnard, Judge, in an action for an accounting. Reversed.

F. de Journel and Conley, Conley & Conley, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Cosgrave & Barstow, of Fresno, for respondent Fidelity Trust & Savings Bank of Fresno.

Harris & Hayhurst, of Fresno, for interveners, cross-complainants, and respondents Amelia Lencioni et al.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing is denied. It is true the opinion ([Cal. App.] 273 P. 103) quotes from the opinion on the former appeal (69 Cal. App. 325, 231 P. 366) in which the judgment for nonsuit was reversed and the cause remanded for trial to permit the defendant and cross-complainant bank to establish, if it could, the allegations regarding estoppel, and to disprove the evidence offered in support of the claim of cross-complainant Minnie Helene Setchel. While the fact that the final trial was had before a different judge was not called to our attention, it will be noted that the opinion states: "The same facts summarized in the quotation from the opinion on the former appeal as given by Mrs.

Setchel in her deposition were again testified to by her on the issues raised by reason of the appearance in the action of the interveners;" and, further, "we have not only considered the testimony set out in the briefs of appellant, respondent bank, and the interveners and cross-complainants, but have read the entire record"; it follows therefore that the evidence adduced at the trial of the case originally, from which we have quoted, is not given the character res adjudicata.

In re CLARK'S ESTATE.

CLARK v. CLARK et al.

(Civ. 6338.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 10, 1929.

1. Executors and administrators 🔑194(1, 7)—Order for family allowance rests within trial court's discretion, which will not be reversed on appeal unless abused.

Generally order for family allowance rests within sound discretion of trial court, and, unless abuse of discretion be clearly apparent, order will not be disturbed on appeal.

2. Executors and administrators 🔑176—Discontinuance after distribution of estate of family allowance to widow receiving substantial income held discretionary and not error because of widow's appeal from order in course of distribution "during progress of settlement of estate" (Code Civ. Proc. § 1466).

Where practically all assets of estate had been distributed and widow was awarded property from which she would receive income between $300 and $400 per month and owned home worth $25,000, order discontinuing family allowance was within trial court's discretion, and was not error as made "during progress of settlement of estate," under Code Civ. Proc. § 1466, by widow's appeal from order made in course of distribution of estate to prevent final distribution for purpose of having family allowance continue.

3. Executors and administrators 🔑176—Claim to family allowance during settlement of estate should be determined in light of circumstances when discontinuance was made (Code Civ. Proc. § 1466).

Claim by widow to family allowance "during progress of settlement of estate," under Code Civ. Proc. § 1466, should be determined in light of facts and circumstances existing as of time order discontinuing allowance was made.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; Charles C. Haines, Judge.

Proceeding by Eliza S. Winn Clark against Dillard H. Clark, Jr., and others. From an order discontinuing allowance to plaintiff, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Crouch & Sanders and John W. Willmott, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Wright & McKee, of San Diego, for respondents.

HOUSER, J. The question involved in this appeal relates to the legality of a judgment or order by which a former order of allowance made to the widow of the deceased was reduced in amount and later altogether discontinued.

It is conceded that the parties to the appeal are bound by the findings of fact which were made by the trial court, and which, so far as are here material, may be briefly stated as follows: Besides the widow, the decedent left surviving him two children by a former wife. His estate in California was valued at approximately $300,000. By his will decedent left the widow a life interest in $40,000—the bulk of the remainder of his estate to his children. After all claims against the estate had either been "allowed or provided for," there remained a value of $200,000 for distribution among the heirs. In addition to the estate in California, decedent left an estate in Oklahoma, consisting of surface rights in 160 acres of land, unproductive mineral rights in other lands, and approximately 10 per cent. of the mineral rights in the said 160 acres, which at that time were producing oil and gas. The widow waived her rights under the provisions of the will of deceased and elected to claim such interest in the entire estate of the testator as by law she might be entitled to receive. In Oklahoma she laid claim to and was awarded an undivided one-third interest in the estate left by the testator therein; from which at the time the order here in question was made she had received the sum of $7,000 in advancements upon her distributive interest, and within a short time would be in receipt of an income from the remainder of the estate in Oklahoma amounting to between $300 and $400 per month. Of the estate in California, up to the time the order in question was made, the widow had received as family allowance a total of $14,600, which had been paid to her at the rate of $750 per month for one year, and thereafter at the rate of $500 per month. A claim interposed by the widow in this state, that $200,000 of the California estate of the decedent was community property and that she was entitled to an undivided one-half thereof, was by the court denied. At that time it was shown that the widow was the owner and in possession of the home, of the value of $25,000, formerly held in joint tenancy and occupied by her and the deceased. It also appeared that the home was very expensive to maintain; that the deceased was a retired officer of the United States Army with the rank of major, and that he and his wife "moved in good circles of society"; that the widow was "far advanced in age, feeble and somewhat crippled, a woman of culture and refinement * * * not capable of earning a livelihood." It further appeared that the petition of the children of decedent to distribute the estate and the petition by them to reduce and discontinue the family allowance were heard together by the trial court, and that, upon the hearing of such petitions, it was determined by said court that all the estate of the decedent was his separate property and passed under his will; that no part of same was community property; that the respondent had no interest therein; and distribution was accordingly ordered of practically the entire estate to the children of decedent, except such thereof as was necessary to pay claims, taxes, and expenses of administration; that such sums as theretofore had been paid to the widow as "family allowance" were reasonably necessary and proper.

From such facts the trial court drew the following conclusions of law:

"That in view of the practical total distribution of this estate being ordered at this time to persons other than the respondent, the family allowance to the widow should be discontinued, but in a reasonable way, so as to allow her a reasonable time in which to make adjustments and provide for her future maintenance.

"That the respondent should receive the $500 monthly allowance which will accrue to her on the 28th day of October, 1927, under the former order by this court; that she shall thereafter receive further sums as follows, and no more: The sum of $250 on the 28th day of November, 1927, and on the 31st day of December, 1927, the sum of $158.33; and that from and after January 1st, 1928, the family allowance be discontinued."

The point presented by appellant is that the trial court erred in reducing and finally discontinuing the family allowance, for the reason that distribution of the estate had been ordered to others than the widow.

Section 1466 of the Code of Civil Procedure contains the provision that: "If the property set apart is insufficient for the support of the widow and children, or either, the court or a judge thereof must take such reasonable allowance out of the estate as shall be necessary for the maintenance of the family, according to their circumstances, during the progress of the settlement of the estate. * * *"

What is meant by the expression, "during the progress of the settlement of the estate," has heretofore received consideration from courts of appellate jurisdiction. In the matter entitled In re Dougherty's Estate, 34 Mont. 336, 86 P. 38, in effect it was held primarily that the facts and circumstances surrounding a petition relating to the granting of a family allowance to the widow of the deceased should control, that the widow was entitled to a family allowance for such time only as was reasonably necessary to settle the estate, and that the trial court was justified in refusing any such allowance after the estate should have been reasonably ready for distribution. And those principles of law in substance were affirmed in the later case of In re Eakins' Estate, 64 Mont. 84, 208 P. 956. See, also, Estate of Treat, 162 Cal. 250, 256, 121 P. 1003.

[1] It is a general rule, attested by many authorities, that, at least so far as the amount is concerned, an order for family allowance rests within the sound discretion of the trial judge; and, in consequence, unless an abuse of discretion be clearly apparent, the order will not be disturbed on appeal. In re Lux, 100 Cal. 593, 605, 35 P. 341; Estate of Bump, 152 Cal. 274, 92 P. 643; Estate of Cowell, 164 Cal. 636, 130 P. 209; Estate of Nelson, 167 Cal. 321, 139 P. 692.

In the case last cited, the original family allowance was $500 per month. Upon partial distribution, but $7,600 remained in the estate, of which amount $1,600 was then due the widow for accrued allowance. Held, not an abuse of discretion for the court to reduce the family allowance to the sum of $50 per month.

[2, 3] Considering the facts hereinbefore outlined, together with the authorities to which attention has been directed, it would seem clear that the trial court was acting within its discretion herein. With the exception of certain claims pending against the estate, all the assets of the estate had been distributed. Although the legality of the order of distribution was subject to inquiry by appeal, all intendments favored the judgment, and the trial court was justified in assuming that its judgment was sound and would be upheld by the appellate court, as in fact it has been, and that judgment is now final. The contention on the part of the appellant that the widow was entitled to a family allowance "during the progress of the settlement of the estate," or until the estate was finally settled, should be determined in the light of the facts and circumstances existing as of the time the order in question was made. In the Montana case (In re Dougherty's Estate, 34 Mont. 336, 86 P. 38) it was apparent that the widow, who was the administratrix of the estate, was preventing a final distribution of the estate solely for the purpose of having the family allowance (theretofore ordered by the court) paid to her, to the end that the assets of the small estate would be exhausted exclusively in her favor and that the other heirs of the deceased would receive no part of the estate. As hereinbefore indicated, the ruling was a denial of such assumed right—in other words, the language of the statute should receive an interpretation consonant with right and justice. If in all cases were the words of the statute to be literally construed, it would always be possible for the widow, upon one pretext or another, to prevent the closing of the estate, and thus exhaust its resources to the injury of the other heirs. For example, if it be assumed that, as is here urged by appellant, an appeal from an order made in the course of the distribution of an estate would have the effect of tolling the statute in favor of the payment of the family allowance "during the progress of the settlement of the estate," it is apparent that for the refusal by the trial court to make any imaginable order requested by the widow of the testator, an appeal might be attempted or taken which would have the effect of delaying the final distribution of the estate and result in a continuance of the payment of monthly amounts to the widow as "family allowance"; and that sort of thing might be many times repeated, and so long as any funds or assets remained in the estate.

This court is of the opinion that the judgment and orders should be affirmed. It is so ordered.

LAVERS v. JONES. (Civ. 5537.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 10, 1929.

1. Bills and notes 🔑448—Maker, compelled to pay note on comaker's refusal, could not recover on note from comaker, but had remedy for money paid.

Where one of two makers was compelled to pay note on comaker's refusal to pay it, obligation was discharged, and no recovery on note could be had by maker who paid it, or his assignee, as against comaker, but he had a cause of action for money paid out for the use and benefit of comaker.

2. Bills and notes 🔑534—Maker compelled to pay note on comaker's refusal held not entitled to recover attorney's fees from latter.

One of two makers compelled to pay note on comaker's refusal to pay it could not recover attorney's fees from comaker in judgment against latter for money paid out and received for latter's use and benefit.

3. Assignments 🔑31—Maker's general assignment of title and interest in note held sufficient assignment of his cause of action against comaker for money paid out.

General assignment, by one of two makers compelled to pay note on comaker's refusal to do so, of all his right, title, and interest in and to the note, held sufficient assignment of said maker's cause of action against comaker for money paid out and received for latter's benefit, in view of maker's testimony that parties intended to transfer all of maker's rights in transaction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Erwin W. Owen, Judge.

Action by F. Lavers against Guy Jones. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Emmons & Aldrich, of Bakersfield, for appellant.

Brittan & Brittan, of Bakersfield, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. The facts are that defendant and one Brown executed a promissory note in favor of a bank. On maturity, and after the refusal of defendant Jones to pay the note, it was paid by Brown. Thereupon the bank assigned to Brown all its interest in the note, which in turn Brown assigned to plaintiff. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

The complaint contained two causes of action. By the first, in substance, the facts hereinbefore set forth were alleged. By the second, in addition to such facts, plaintiff alleged that on the date when Brown paid the note defendant became indebted to him "for money paid out and received for the use and benefit of the defendant at his special instance and request in the sum of $1027.79 and for which amount said defendant agreed to pay."

[1, 2] As to the first cause of action, appellant's contention that as the note was paid by Brown, the obligation was discharged, and consequently that no recovery on the note could be had by Brown or his assignee as against the comaker of the note, finds support in the cases of Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 P. 68, 65 P. 1094, and McDonough v. Nowlin, 17 Cal. App. 45, 118 P. 463. However, in each of those authorities a pleading such as is stated by plaintiff in the second cause of action is directly authorized and recognized as proper in a case of the nature of that here under consideration. For its legality, therefore, the judgment must rest on the second cause of action. As drawn, the judgment includes an item of $150 for attorney's fees. No authority has been produced by which the recovery of attorney's fees has been authorized in a situation such as is here presented.

[3] Appellant also contends that the record does not disclose that the second cause of action was ever directly and in express terms assigned to plaintiff. We think, however, that the general assignment of all the right, title, and interest of Brown in and to the note in question, together with the testimony of Brown on the subject, sufficiently sustains the position of plaintiff to the effect that the parties to such assignment contemplated the transfer to plaintiff of all the rights of Brown in the transaction. 3 Cal. Jur. 261; Goldman v. Murray, 164 Cal. 419, 129 P. 462.

Appellant's other objections are covered by the fact that on examination of the transcript of the record made in the lower court it satisfactorily appears that the evidence supports the findings, and that the conclusions of law thereon are in accordance with the law as indicated in the authorities to which reference has been had.

It is the conclusion of this court that the judgment should be modified by striking therefrom the item of $150 allowed as attorney's fees. As thus modified, it is ordered that the judgment be and it is affirmed; neither party to recover his costs on appeal.

HUTCHINGS v. SOUTHWESTERN AUTOMOBILE INS. CO. OF LOS ANGELES.

(Civ. 5439.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 17, 1929.

1. Insurance 🔑389(2)—Policy covering automobile against embezzlement held not avoided by assured's noncompliance with provision requiring registration, where no inquiry concerning registration was made.

Right of recovery on policy covering embezzlement of automobile held not defeated by fact that automobile was not registered in plaintiff's name at time insurance policy was issued, as required by policy making registration in owner's name at time of issuance of indorsement condition precedent, since insurer waived provision by failure to inquire of assured as to the registration or to investigate records in office of motor vehicle department, where assured was actually the owner of the car.

2. Insurance 🔑372—Provisions of policy as to acts required of assured may be waived.

Though it is the duty of the assured to comply promptly with provisions of policy as to acts required of him, law is well established that such requirements may be waived.

3. Insurance 🔑558(1), 559(1)—Delay of assured in giving notice and failure to swear to written statement of loss held waived by answer admitting notice; letter acknowledging receipt and denial of liability.

Delay of assured in giving notice of loss under embezzlement policy covering automobile and failure to swear to written statement of loss held waived by insurance company by answer admitting receipt of due notice of loss and by letter acknowledging receipt of claim and subsequent letter refusing claim on ground that car was not properly registered.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Harry R. Archbald, Judge.

Action by William R. Hutchings against the Southwestern Automobile Insurance Company of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Clark & Law, Law & Overholt, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

L. J. Styskal, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

HOUSER, J. This appeal is from a judgment in favor of the defendant.

Plaintiff was the owner of an automobile which he sold to one Brown on an installment contract. Nine days thereafter the defendant issued to plaintiff an insurance policy, which, among other things, purported to insure plaintiff against the embezzlement of the automobile by Brown. One of the covenants contained in the insurance policy was the following:

"It is a condition precedent to any right of recovery hereunder or under the policy to which this endorsement is attached, that the automobile hereby insured has, at the time of issuance of this endorsement and the attached policy, been lawfully registered with the Motor Vehicle Department of the State of California in the name of the said vendor as the legal owner, and the name of the said vendee as the registered owner thereof."

[1] It is urged by respondent that the fact that, at the time the insurance policy was issued, the automobile was not registered in the name of plaintiff had the effect of voiding the policy. With reference to the situation covered by such "condition precedent" in the policy, the case of Raulet v. Northwestern National Insurance Co., 57 Cal. 213, 107 P. 292, would appear to be controlling in principle. In that case the insurance policy, which covered certain furniture, contained a clause in substance that, if the insured property either was, or should become, "encumbered with a chattel mortgage," the policy should be void. It appeared that, at the time the policy was issued, there was in fact a chattel mortgage upon the property to secure the payment of rent for the building in which the furniture was located. Although primarily it was held that such a mortgage did not come within the spirit of the provision of the insurance policy to which attention has been directed, it was also held in effect that such a provision was in the nature of a "veritable trap for the unwary," and, before it could be binding upon the assured, "the company should be required to call specifically to the attention of the policy holder" the provision in question. Among other things, the court said:

"The courts, while zealous to uphold legal contracts, should not sacrifice the spirit to the letter nor should they be slow to aid the confiding and innocent. The defendant should either have made inquiries in reference to the chattel mortgage, required a written application covering by question and answer all the material provisions of the policy, or have consulted the records in the recorder's office where it would have been apprised of the encumbrance."

See, also, Coniglio v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 180 Cal. 596, 599, 182 P. 275 (5 A. L. R. 805); Sharp v. Scottish Union, etc., Co., 136 Cal. 542, 545, 69 P. 253, 615; 14 Cal. Jur. 522.

In the case of Coniglio v. Connecticut Fire Ins. Co., 180 Cal. 596, 599, 182 P. 275, 276 (5 A. L. R. 805), among other things, it is said: "* * * It is to be remembered that contracts of this sort are to be interpreted in the light of the fact that they are drawn by the insurance companies and are rarely, if ever, understood by the people who pay the premiums. Every rational indulgence must be shown the assured."

In the instant case it was stipulated that plaintiff was actually the owner of the automobile. At the time the policy was issued it did not appear that any inquiry, either oral or in writing, was made of plaintiff as to whether the automobile had been registered in the name of plaintiff. Nor was any evidence introduced on the trial which would tend to show that the records in the office of the motor vehicle department were consulted by the defendant for the purpose of determining the facts affecting the registration of the automobile. In such circumstances, adopting the language of the court in the case of Raulet v. Northwestern National Ins. Co., 157 Cal. 213, 107 P. 292, to which reference has been had, "considering the nature of the contract and the relation of the parties, there should be no difficulty in reaching the conclusion that this provision was waived and it therefore constitutes no bar to recovery."

[2, 3] The insurance policy in question contained a further provision in substance that, "in the event of loss" of the automobile, the assured should "forthwith give written notice" thereof to the defendant, and within ten days after the giving of such notice file with the defendant a "signed and sworn statement, showing the items and dates," etc. It is now the contention of the respondent that, because plaintiff failed to comply literally with such requirements, the defendant was relieved from liability under the terms of the contract between the parties. It appears that the loss of the automobile was discovered on or about April 30, 1924. With reference to the required notice of such loss to the defendant, the allegation of plaintiff's complaint was:

"That on or about the 8th day of May, 1924, the plaintiff herein duly notified said defendant of said fraudulent concealment and embezzlement of said automobile, and furnished said defendant satisfactory proof thereof."

The answer of the defendant to such allegation was that defendant "admits that on or about the 8th day of May, 1924, plaintiff herein duly notified said defendant of said fraudulent concealment and embezzlement of said automobile, but denies that at that time, or at any time, or at all, the plaintiff has ever furnished the defendant with any proof of such fraudulent concealment and embezzlement, or has furnished said defendant with any satisfactory proof of said fraudulent concealment and embezzlement."

In addition to such admission that the defendant was "duly notified" of the loss of the automobile, it appears that on May 12, 1924, the defendant wrote a letter to plaintiff as follows:

"Acknowledging copy of contract of Frank Brown for which you wish to enter claim under the embezzlement clause of our policy—

"Please be advised we have entered this claim on our records.

"We are enclosing herewith Proof of Loss which we will ask you to kindly fill in, sign and return to us in order to complete our file."

On May 18, 1924, in response to such letter, plaintiff did "fill in, sign and return" to the defendant the "Proof of Loss" required by the defendant and referred to in its communication to plaintiff, but failed to swear to such statement. In addition thereto, at the time when the defendant finally refused to allow the claim of plaintiff for loss of the automobile, defendant formally notified plaintiff in writing that, "in view of the fact that this car was not properly registered at the time of sale, * * * we cannot assume liability for the payment of this claim."

Although, as urged by respondent, on the happening of a loss, as a general rule it is the duty of the assured to promptly comply with the requirements of the policy on his part to be performed, it is just as well established law that such requirements may be waived. This court is of the opinion that the admissions in the answer by the defendant, together with the facts hereinbefore set forth, constituted a waiver by the defendant of its right to an immediate notice by plaintiff of the loss of the automobile as well as to a "signed and sworn written statement showing items and dates," etc.

The judgment is reversed.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA EDISON CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 6139.)

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 18, 1929.

Master and servant 🔑405(6)—Commission held under evidence to have no basis for award to injured employee of additional living expenses while being treated (Workmen's Compensation Insurance, and Safety Act, §§ 1, 12(4) (b).

In view of Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831), §§ 1, 12(4) (b), as to treatment of injured employee, and as to including "market value" of board, lodgings, and other advantages received by him as part of his remuneration in determining his average weekly earnings, it is not within the province of the Commission to award him excess living expenses while being treated outside a hospital at places other than where he was employed; there being no showing that such expenses were reasonable, and no basis being furnished from which may be computed the market value of the accommodations furnished him when working at his employer's camp.

Proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Robert Jansen, employee, opposed by the Southern California Edison Company, employer. To review an award by the Industrial Accident Commission for extra living expenses while being treated outside a hospital, the employer applies for certiorari. Award annulled.

Roy V. Reppy and E. W. Cunningham, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

G. C. Faulkner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

CRAIG, J. The respondent Robert Jansen was employed by the petitioner herein as a rigger and boiler maker on February 19, 1925, on which date he was injured in the course of and arising out of his employment. Prior to his injury he resided at one of the petitioner's mountain camps at Big Creek, where he was furnished board and lodging. When so injured the respondent Jansen was removed to and confined for treatment at petitioner's hospital at Big Creek until August 8, 1925, when he was placed in a hospital at Los Angeles for further hospital and medical treatment by petitioner's chief surgeon, and there remained until May 11, 1926. On June 12, 1926, Jansen filed an application with the Industrial Accident Commission for adjustment of claim, and, after hearing therein, was awarded $20.83 per week, with interest, and hospital and surgical treatment to cure and relieve him from the effects of his injury. Said claim was numbered 6205. On October 28, 1926, the applicant again returned to the Los Angeles hospital, where he remained until May 6, 1927. On September 21, 1927, he filed a second application for adjustment of claim, which was numbered 23538, wherein it was recited that: "A question has arisen with respect to the liability of the employer or insurance carrier, and the general nature of the claim in controversy is, question of liability for extra living expenses on account of medical treatment." At the hearing of this latter application it appeared that payments previously ordered, totaling $2,814.36, had been made, and were still being made. The applicant then testified, and it was found by the Commission that Jansen was treated "but not in the hospital" on August 10, 1926, May 12 to October 27, 1926, inclusive, and May 6 to August 2, 1927, inclusive, a total of 259 days; that, while so receiving treatment and residing outside of a hospital, he incurred expenses at Los Angeles for two rooms at 75 cents per day, meals at $1.50 per day, and that his daily expenses for laundry, car fare to the hospital, and for a man to help him bathe, were 35 cents, 10 cents, and 25 cents, respectively. It further appeared that during a portion of the 259 days the applicant resided at San Francisco, where two rooms cost him $26.25 per month, and that he there expended $1.85 per day for meals, and $1 per week for laundry. On December 13, 1927, the respondent Commission rendered findings consolidating the claims numbered 6205 and 23538, reciting that: "Said applicant was under medical treatment and observance for a period of 259 days in the city of Los Angeles, California, * * * and during said period of 259 days the applicant was not confined in any hospital. * * *" A "supplemental award for excess living expenses" was rendered in the sum of $427.35, upon the basis of a difference in living expenses of $1.05 at the labor camp, and $2.70 at Los Angeles, per day. Upon application of petitioner for a rehearing upon this latter award, which was granted, it was contended that the applicant was entitled to board and lodging at the camp only when working, that there was no showing as to what would have been the cost of maintenance while being treated at Big Creek outside of the camp, or that such expense was, or would have been, higher at Los Angeles; that the Commission was without authority to assume and make an award upon the theory that the applicant might select and enjoy expensive quarters according to his personal taste. At the rehearing it was admitted that the "applicant demands the difference between his living expenses at Big Creek, at the time of his injury, and his living expenses while under treatment for said injury at Los Angeles, during 259 days spent outside of the hospitals." The second award was modified, allowing a total of $401.45, upon a basis of the difference between $1.15 daily expense at Big Creek, and $2.70 at Los Angeles.

The petitioner contends that these excess living expenses during 259 days outside of any hospital constituted no part of the medical, surgical, and hospital treament contemplated by the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act (St. 1917, p. 831, as amended), and were not allowable; that there is no evidence of the applicant having resided at the labor camp on the date of the injury; that none but men actually at work for the petitioner at Big Creek were permitted to live at the camp, and that Jansen lived there temporarily only, when so employed.

It appears that the Commission consolidated the two applications and based its supplemental award of excess living expenses upon the whole record, notwithstanding the fact that it had previously finally rendered findings and awarded compensation, with which petitioner herein fully complied, upon the evidence first introduced concerning the question of injury and disability. The respondent Commission in its briefs dwells entirely upon the severity of Jansen's injuries, and a general history of the case, but cites no authorities, and we find no evidence in the record, tending to support an award of any excess over the market value of maintenance at the labor camp. Nor do we observe any finding tending to sustain respondent's assertion that: "The giving of this same medical treatment at Big Creek would not have necessitated this additional expense to the employee." What the expense to an injured employee might have been at Big Creek does not appear by evidence nor finding. As provided by section 1 of the act, the injured employee was entitled only to "full provision for such medical, surgical, hospital and other remedial treatment as is requisite to cure and relieve from the effects of such injury"; and subdivision 4 (b) of section 12 provides that: "In determining such average weekly earnings, there shall be included overtime and the market value of board, lodging, fuel, and other advantages received by the injured employee, as part of his remuneration, which can be estimated in money." That the applicant received full medical, surgical, hospital, and other remedial treatment, appropriate to his necessities, is not denied. The part of his remuneration to which he was entitled, when not residing at a hospital, at petitioner's expense, would be the market value of his board, lodging, and other advantages, when his employment ceased by reason of the injury. The allowance to the applicant, therefore, would be the difference if any between the labor camp charges of $1.15 per day when actually at work, and the cost of like advantages elsewhere, if employed. Yet, while there is abundance of evidence as to amounts actually expended by the injured employee for rooms, board, etc., at Los Angeles, we are able to find no scintilla of evidence as to whether or not his accommodations in said city were in any way similar to those furnished by petitioner, or were more luxurious, nor is there any evidence as to their general market value. "Market value" has been defined as "the price or sum for which an equivalent could be reasonably and fairly purchased at or near the place where the property should have been delivered," at or about the time. Redhead Bros. v. Wyoming Cattle Inv. Co., 126 Iowa, 410, 102 N. W. 144. This same rule was adopted by our Supreme Court in Bullard v. Stone, 67 Cal. 477, 480, 8 P. 17. Since there is no showing that the items expended by the employee and attempted to be incurred for the account of his former employer were reasonable, and no basis is furnished from which the market value of his accommodations may be computed, we think it was not within the province of the Industrial Accident Commission to make the award of which complaint is made.

The award of excess expenses is annulled.

Judgment on pleadings cannot be taken, where material issue is presented by the answer.

2. Pleading ⚷345(2)—In action by lessee against lessors and sublessee, sublessee's denial of allegations of complaint as to execution and performance of original lease held not to raise material issue, precluding judgment on pleadings.

Entry of judgment on pleadings in action for declaratory judgment by lessee against his lessors and sublessee held not erroneous as to sublessee by virtue of his denial of the execution of the original lease and of plaintiff's performance of the terms thereof, as alleged in the complaint, since such allegations were immaterial as to the sublessee and his denial of the same did not raise an issue of fact.

3. Pleading ⚷84—One defendant, answering separately, need not answer allegations relating solely to the other defendant.

Where complaint is directed against two persons, and the liability of one involves facts which are not material to the liability of the other, and the parties plead separately, neither is required to answer those allegations which relate solely to the other.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by William George Harkins against J. H. Bruns, Frank Granucci, and others.

From an adverse judgment, defendant last named appeals. Affirmed.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto and Anthony S. Devoto, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Max Mayer, of San Francisco, for respondent.

TYLER, P. J. Action for declaratory relief based upon certain written leases. The complaint alleges, in substance, that plaintiff and defendant J. H. Bruns entered into a lease for the term of ten years, commencing on the 26th day of December, 1916, and ending December 26, 1926, covering certain premises located at Nos. 2011 and 2015 Mission street, and known as McKinley Market; that in the said lease an option was reserved in favor of the plaintiff, providing that, in the event all the terms and conditions were faithfully and satisfactorily performed, the lessee should have the first option or right of a lease for another term of ten years upon the expiration of the lease, the rent, if not agreed upon, to be fixed by arbitration, said option to be exercised by the lessee 15 days before the expiration of the lease. At the time of the execution of this instrument, defendant Bruns was the owner of said premises, but he subsequently sold the same to defendant Lachman Bros. Investment Company, a corporation, which is the present owner thereof. The complaint, proceeding, alleges that plaintiff has faithfully and satisfactorily performed and carried out all the terms and conditions of the lease so as to entitle him to exercise the option contained therein, but that defendant Lachman Bros. now refuses and neglects to agree with plaintiff concerning the rent covered by said option, and has neglected and refused to refer the said matter to arbitration. The allegations of the complaint, so far as defendant Frank Granucci is concerned, allege that plaintiff entered into a lease with him for the premises above described for a term of five years, commencing November 21, 1921. This lease contained a renewal option for five years, similar in substance to that contained in plaintiff's lease. Judgment was prayed for declaratory relief, to determine what the rights of plaintiff herein are under and by virtue of the said option contained in the lease executed with defendant Bruns, and also for declaratory relief to determine the rights and obligations of plaintiff under and by virtue of the option contained in the lease executed between plaintiff and defendant Granucci, said option being given in reliance of the option contained in the lease of plaintiff. Defendants Bruns and Lachman Bros. interposed a demurrer to the complaint upon various grounds. Their demurrers were sustained, and, plaintiff failing to amend, the default of plaintiff as against them was entered, and the action was by stipulation subsequently dismissed as to these defendants. Defendant Granucci filed an answer in which he denied, upon information and belief, the execution of a lease between plaintiff and defendant Bruns, and he likewise denied that the lease contained the option of renewal as above set forth, or that plaintiff had faithfully performed the terms of his lease entitling him to the exercise of the renewal option. He admitted the execution of the lease between himself and plaintiff, and that such lease contained the option of renewal above referred to.

He further alleged that he had exercised the right given under the option, but that plaintiff has refused and neglected to give him a further lease of said premises for five years, as contained and agreed in his lease. Under this condition of the record plaintiff moved for judgment against Granucci on the pleadings. The motion was granted, and judgment was rendered construing the option contained in his lease as prayed for in the complaint. The court adjudged and decreed that the words "first right or option" appearing in the option clause in such lease did not create an absolute obligation on the part of plaintiff to lease the premises in question, but that said words, "first right or option," signified and meant the defendant Granucci had merely a first or preferential right to lease said premises from plaintiff upon complying with all the conditions in the lease and the option clause, in the event only that plaintiff again desired to lease the premises. Appellant does not here complain of the correctness of this construction of the option clause, contenting himself merely with the claim that the court erred in granting the motion for judgment on the pleadings, it being his contention that his denial raised a material issue of fact which he was entitled to have tried, and which precluded the court from rendering judgment on the pleadings.

[1-3] It is true that such a judgment cannot be taken where a single material issue is presented by the answer. Summerville v. Stockton Milling Co., 142 Cal. 529, 544, 76 P. 243; Norris v. Lilly, 147 Cal. 754, 82 P. 425, 109 Am. St. Rep. 188. The present case, however, does not present such a situation. The complaint contained separate allegations concerning the different defendants. Appellant's denials were directed solely to allegations concerning the lease existing between his codefendants and plaintiff, which in no manner, so far as the record shows, concerned his rights. Appellant was not required in his answer to deny such allegations, as they were immaterial as to him, and the fact that he did so did not constitute them material allegations, or raise an issue of a material fact. The allegations which he denied might well be stricken from the pleadings without leaving them insufficient as to him. There was no denial by appellant of any fact material to him. The allegations in the complaint which related to appellant's lease with plaintiff and the declaratory relief sought by plaintiff based thereon were separate and distinct from those relating to the lease with the other defendants. Under such circumstances, there was no denial by appellant of any matter in the complaint which was material to him, and, he having admitted by his pleading all the allegations which concerned him, the court properly granted the motion. Where a complaint is directed against two persons, and the liability of one involves some facts which are not material to the liability of the other, and the parties plead separately, neither is required to answer those allegations which relate solely to the other. Hibernia Sav. Soc. v. Dickinson, 167 Cal. 616, 140 P. 265.

This being the sole question presented on the appeal, from what we have said it follows that the judgment should be, and it is hereby, affirmed.

We concur: KNIGHT, J.; CASHIN, J.

SAN JOAQUIN LIGHT & POWER CORPORATION v. COSTALOUPES et al.

(Civ. 5868.)

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 18, 1929.

1. Electricity 🔑11—Customers held not excused from performance of contract to use and pay for electrical energy for operation of motor on premises by fact that their manufacturing plant was destroyed by fire during contract period.

Customers, who entered into written agreement with power company to take, use, and pay for electrical energy for specified period at minimum rate for operation of motor located on specified premises, held not excused from performance by fact that factory buildings and machinery composing the defendant's manufacturing plant, for the operation of which the electrical energy was used, were destroyed by fire and were not rebuilt, since the subject-matter of the contract was the sale and delivery of electrical energy to the customer, irrespective of its use.

2. Electricity 🔑11—Damages for customer's breach of contract to take and pay for electricity held not difference between contract and resale price (Civ. Code, § 3311).

Measure of damages for customer's breach of contract to take and use power company's electricity for three year period, to be paid for at minimum rate, held not determined by difference between contract price and proceeds of resale of electrical energy, under Civ. Code, § 3311, applicable to damages for breach of contract for sale of personal property.

3. Partnership 🔑55—Nonexistence of partnership is not conclusively shown by debtor and creditor relation, or provision of contract denying partnership.

That relation of debtor and creditor exists between parties, and that contract between themselves expressly declares that they are not partners, does not of itself establish that no partnership was created.

4. Partnership 🔑17—Parties whose intent to act as partners appears from contract are partners in fact.

Partnership relation between parties to contract exists, if intent of parties appears to do those things which constitute partnership, though they did not intend their relationship to be called that of partners.

5. Partnership 🔑9(2)—Contract of debtors to deliver cheese products to creditor, who was to sell them, paying salaries, deducting advances, and dividing profits, held to make creditor partner in business.

Contract between creditor and debtors, whereby debtors were to ship cheese to creditor's warehouse to be sold by creditor, with provision for advances, payment of creditor's agent, and division of profits remaining over salaries, subject to prior liquidation of advancements, held to make creditor a partner of the debtors.

6. Partnership 🔑5—Right to participate in profits is evidence that business is carried on in behalf of person asserting claim thereto, and may indicate partnership.

Right to participate in profits of business affords urgent evidence that trade, in which profits have been made, was carried on for or in behalf of person asserting the claim to the profits, and may indicate partnership.

7. Partnership 🔑5—Agreement to divide profits implies agreement for division of losses, unless contrary is stipulated (Civ. Code, § 2404).

Agreement to divide the profits of a business implies an agreement for corresponding division of losses, under Civ. Code, § 2404.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; H. L. Preston, Judge.

Action by the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation against John Costaloupes and others, doing business under the firm name and style of the Costaloupes Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Frank W. Taft, of Willits, for appellants.
F. H. Pearson, of Fresno, for respondent.

PARKER, Justice pro tem. In this action plaintiff corporation sought to recover from defendants a certain sum of money alleged to be due under contracts for the furnishing of light and power by plaintiff, a public service corporation, to defendants. At the trial the action was dismissed as against all of the defendants, excepting the defendant John E.

Tsarnas. The case as tried by the court, sitting without a jury, and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff as prayed. A recital of the facts, upon which there is no conflict, will better illustrate the nature of the case and the contentions here made.

On May 13, 1921, a written agreement was entered into by and between plaintiff and Costaloupes Company, the terms of which may be summarized. The Costaloupes Company is called the consumer and the San Joaquin Light & Power Corporation is called the company. The company agrees to furnish, and the consumer agrees to take, use, and pay for, electrical energy from the company's system for the term of three years from June 28, 1921, to June 28, 1924, during the continuous period from January 1st to December 31st as it occurs in said period, for the operation of a 15 horse-power motor located on premises described as south end quarter of a certain section, provided, however, that the consumer shall guarantee $394 per annum, as per schedule of rates effective; provided that the consumer may, upon notice prior to the expiration of the term, discontinue the service, and unless such notice is given the contract shall continue from year to year, subject to cancellation by notice of 30 days prior to the expiration of each year. Any notice the company may give to consumer to be addressed to 720 Harrison street, San Francisco, and notice so addressed and deposited, with postage prepaid, shall be deemed sufficient notice. The contract to bind successors of the parties and the word "consumer" to include all purchasers of power by whom this agreement is executed and bind them jointly and severally. The contract was executed by one Henry B. Davidson, in behalf of Costaloupes Company, as manager thereof.

On June 11, 1921, another contract was entered into between the same parties, in writing, covering the same period of time. This contract permitted the purchase of electrical energy for the operation of lights located upon southeast quarter of the section referred to in the previous contract. This contract provided that the consumer shall guarantee $39 per annum. The contract contained all of the provisions of the earlier contract, and was likewise executed by Henry B. Davidson, as manager, on behalf of the consumer. It is a stipulated fact that, before the 28th day of June, 1921, the power corporation expended the sum of $1,299 in building and constructing an electrical and transmission line for the service of electrical energy to the premises of Costaloupes Company, and that said money was expended and said line built pursuant to the contracts hereinafter referred to, and further it is stipulated that the service of electrical energy by plaintiff was actually commenced upon the premises in June 28, 1921. It was further stipulated that the line had been maintained at all times up to June 28, 1924, and up to the date of trial, and that the power corporation had received no payment. It is also stipulated that the total amount guaranteed in the contracts equals the sum expended, namely, $1,299.

It was alleged in the complaint, not denied by defendant, and found by the court to be a fact, that on or about July 8, 1921, the factory, buildings, and machinery composing the manufacturing plant of defendants, for the operation of which plant electrical energy, power, and lights were to be provided, was destroyed by fire, and that defendants have not rebuilt, nor do they intend to rebuild, and that since May 13, 1921, defendants have failed, neglected, and refused to take delivery of or use electrical energy from plaintiff's system. It was also found that the plaintiff has fully performed its obligations under the contracts, and was at all times ready, able, and willing, to perform. The complaint was filed January 26, 1923, and the action brought to trial in December, 1926.

Appellant urges three reasons why the judgment of the lower court should be reversed. We arrange these in a different order than appellant presents them. Appellant contends: First, that the defendants were excused from performance by the destruction of the subject-matter; second, that the court erred in applying the measure of damages in that the contracts were for the sale of personal property, wherein delivery was not made and the title still remained in the vendor; third, that the court erred in finding that defendant John E. Tsarnas was a member of the firm of Costaloupes Company.

[1] On the first ground appellant urges that the contract was to deliver power and light to defendants for the purpose of electrifying the cheese factory building and plant owned and conducted by the latter. It may be here noted that, while the pleadings admit and the court finds that the contract was entered into for the furnishing of light and power for a manufacturing plant, yet the contract itself merely provides for the delivery of electrical energy to a certain described quarter section of land. The allegations and findings do not alter or in any way affect the contract. At the most it would simply determine the fact to be that, when the contract for power and lights was made, it was the intention of the consumer to use the energy in and about the premises used as a manufacturing plant. It is obvious that the subject-matter of the contract was the sale and delivery of electrical energy to the consumer, irrespective of its use. In many respects it parallels the situation where a manufacturer contracts to buy raw material, and subsequent to the contract the factory is destroyed. It would not be contended, in the absence of a specific provision covering, that the buyer would be discharged of his obligation under the contract.

Appellant cites many cases in support of his contention, but these cases simply repeat the familiar rule as set forth in California Jurisprudence, volume 6, at page 443, which is as follows: "Where from the nature of the agreement it is evident that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the person or thing to which it relates, the subsequent perishing of the person or thing will excuse performance. Thus where the contract relates to the use or possession in any dealing with specific things and performance necessarily depends on the existence of the particular thing, the condition is implied that the impossibility arising from the perishing or destruction of the thing, without default in the party, will excuse performance, because, from the nature of the contract, it is apparent that the parties contracted on the basis of the continued existence of the subject thereof."

We think the facts here do not warrant the application of the rule, nor does the contract. All that appears here is that by reason of the premises the defendants could not use any more power or light in these particular buildings, but if, at any time, they chose to rebuild or make other use or application of the light and power, they could have enforced their right of delivery of electrical energy. See Law v. San Francisco Gas Co., 168 Cal. 112, 142 P. 52, Ann. Cas. 1915D, 842; Field Co. v. Haven, 36 Cal. App. 669, 173 P. 108. The gist of the allegation in the complaint and the essential finding is that defendants failed and neglected to take delivery of or use electrical energy from plaintiff's system under the said contracts. The effect of the finding of the destruction of the premises and factory on the land described whereon delivery was to be made was merely to demonstrate the lack of any substantial or legal reason justifying such failure or to excuse performance. There is nothing in the contract to indicate that the parties contemplated that no amount should become due from consumer in the event that the manufacturing establishment ceased to exist; the contracts with plaintiff plainly imposed an obligation on the consumer to pay the amounts specified whether or not electrical energy was used. We find no merit in this, the appellants' first ground of appeal.

[2] The next point urged is that, whatever construction may be placed upon the contract, it must be held that the entire transaction was nothing more than an agreement of sale of personal property. In this view of the contract appellant urges that the measure of damages ensuing from a breach is set out in section 3311, Civil Code. Without quoting the section here, the appellant, relying on the provisions thereof, argues that the trial court should have inquired and found whether or not there had been a resale of the electrical energy contracted for, and that the difference between the net moneys obtained in case of a resale and the contract price would be the measure of damages, or, in case of no resale, then the damage as set forth in subdivision 2 of section 3311, Civil Code, would apply.

We do not think this point merits the detailed discussion accorded. Quoting from the brief of respondent, we would be interested to know how appellant herein could determine the amount of electrical energy which defendant refused to take, and which, therefore, under his contention, respondent should have sold to others—in other words, how the facts in this case could be determined according to the measure contended for upon which to compute the damages. It is a fact, agreed upon, that in pursuance of the contract the power corporation did expend in the construction of its line the exact amount of money guaranteed as a minimum for electrical energy which defendants would take during the period of the contract. When the corporation agreed to deliver light and power to the consumer, the latter guaranteed to the company the sum of $433 each year.

The case of Marin Water Co. v. Town of Sausalito, 168 Cal. at page 603, 143 P. 774, discusses the identical question here presented. In that case it was said "Respondent assigns as a reason why its demurrer was properly sustained, the failure of the complaint to set forth the damage suffered by appellant which, according to respondent's theory, should be measured by section 3311 of the Civil Code as the difference between the contract price and the value to the water company of the water which the town of Sausalito did not take. The contract with which we are here concerned, however, is not the usual agreement to accept and pay for personal property. It is, as we have shown, one of that class of agreements in which one of the parties promises to pay a minimum sum for a commodity at a fixed rate, such amount to become due whether enough of the commodity to equal such minimum price at the agreed rate is required or not. Such agreements have been upheld and the minimum rate has been sustained as the true measure of recovery, the promise to pay such sum being a part of the direct obligation of the contract and in no sense a covenant for liquidated damages in case of breach." The quoted case cites, in support of the holding, the following cases: Beck v. Indianapolis Light & Power Co., 36 Ind. App. 600, 76 N. E. 313; Klosterman v. United Electric, etc., Co., 101 Md. 29, 33, 60 A. 252.

In the case of Field Co. v. Haven, 36 Cal. App. 669, 173 P. 108, admittedly dictum, the court says (paraphrasing): Appellant contends "that the guarantee clause in the contract was void as providing for liquidated damages. As this point was neither raised in the court * * * for the first time upon the oral argument, we are not required to discuss or decide it. We may state, however, that in our opinion the clause * * * provides not for liquidated damages, but for a minimum compensation to defendant for the services to be rendered by him during the year for which he was employed." In Curtis on the Law of Electricity, § 116, it is said: "A valid contract may be entered into between an electric company and a consumer requiring the payment of a minimum charge. Under such a contract the customer is bound to pay such minimum though he consumes no current at all. The provision requiring the payment of the minimum charge is a part of the direct obligation of the contract and cannot be construed as an agreement for liquidated damages."

Appellant cites with much assurance the earlier case of Terrace Water Co. v. San Antonio Co., 1 Cal. App. 511, 82 P. 562. This case adopts the resuming of the Civil Code sections, thus: Anything that may be owned is called property (section 654) and there may be ownership of all inanimate things which are capable of appropriation or manual delivery (section 655). Every kind of property that is not real is personal (section 663). From these sections the court concluded that electrical energy was personal property. The action was one wherein the consumer was denied power agreed to be furnished and he was required to purchase power elsewhere and was allowed as damages the extra cost over and above the contract price in the original agreement. The court points out that this was the minimum of damage, inasmuch as the injured party did not permit special damage to his lands by reason of lack of water, but secured power for pumping elsewhere, thus mitigating his damage, as was within his power to do. This review of the case demonstrates its inapplicability to the case at bar. A careful reading of the Terrace Water Company Case will show that the court had no intention of establishing a doctrine such as contended for here but merely allowed the plaintiff therein the exact loss to plaintiff. Under the authorities previously cited we see no reason to disturb the judgment.

The third point raised by appellant goes to the liability of defendant John E. Tsarnas. Appellant, for this branch of the case, is willing to concede the correctness of the court's finding and judgment in all other features of the case. But, he claims, the liability thereunder rests in the other defendants, contending that he (Tsarnas) was not a partner or at all connected with the others, save as a general creditor. The question thus presented hinges upon the construction of a written contract before us. No point is made on ostensible partnership, nor is claim made that Tsarnas, by his acts or conduct, led plaintiff or third parties generally to believe that a partnership existed. It may be stated that both parties concede that the determination of whether or not a partnership existed must result from a construction of the contract itself and the recitals therein contained. The contract referred to is a contract entered into on April 1, 1921, being at a time previous to the executions of the contracts between plaintiff and Costaloupes Company. This contract may be summarized as follows:

The parties to the contract are John Costaloupes and Zetelia Costaloupes, described as doing business under the firm name of "Costaloupes Company," the parties of the first part, and John E. Tsarnas, party of the second part. The agreement recites that the Costaloupes are indebted to Tsarnas on a note and mortgage in the sum of $20,500 and other sums in an open account, the total of the latter sums being not known; recites further that the parties of the first part desire to secure $15,000 more, in addition to the present indebtedness, for the purpose of purchasing milk, supplies, and operating expenses, and that Tsarnas is willing to loan and advance the desired sum upon the terms thereafter set out in the contract. In consideration of the premises the parties agree as follows: The Costaloupes are to ship and consign to Tsarnas, and in his name, all of the cheese manufactured by them at their plant to Tsarnas' warehouse in San Francisco, being located at 720 Harrison street, San Francisco. Tsarnas is to sell the cheese at the market price, in as large quantities as consistent with market conditions, and is to properly keep and care for the cheese, without, however, being an insurer, and will make account as and when the cheese is sold. The Costaloupes will continuously manufacture cheese, unless it be agreed between the parties to the contract that market conditions do not justify further manufacture. The Costaloupes, on the 1st day of each month, will render an account to Tsarnas or his representative at San Francisco, or such other place as may be designated by him, showing all purchases made and debts incurred for the purchase of milk supplies, labor, etc., in the manufacture of the cheese. Tsarnas shall collect for all the cheese sold and deposit the money in the bank, together with the $15,000 herein agreed to be loaned, or as much thereof as shall be necessary to pay the operating expenses, and Tsarnas shall, on the 1st day of each month, render account of his sales and receipt of the expenses of storage, sale, etc. All of the expenses connected with the manufacture and the storage and sale shall be paid by check drawn on the funds deposited, which checks shall be signed by John Costaloupes, representing the parties of the first part, and by H. B. Davidson, representing Tsarnas. After the payment of all expenses then the Costaloupes family, three in number, shall receive a total wage of $5,000 per year and Davidson or other person selected as representative for Tsarnas as shall be paid $3,000 per year. After all of these expenses and wage allowances have been paid, the surplus shall be divided equally between the Costaloupes on one side and Tsarnas on the other. The agreement was to continue for one year. All bills were to be paid monthly and the surplus to be divided monthly. During the life of the contract the Costaloupes shall not be required to pay any interest on this money owing to Tsarnas, either on the note or mortgage or on the amounts advanced under the contract or upon the sum previously due under the open account. The contract is not to affect, in any manner, the note and mortgage, save that no interest shall be paid thereon, and no foreclosure shall be sought during the term of the contract unless Tsarnas should deem foreclosure necessary to protect his rights against the claim of a third person. Neither party to be liable for debts contracted for by the other. It is agreed further that all of the moneys advanced to the Costaloupes is advanced as a loan and not as a contribution to the business and the receipt of one-half of the net profits of said business is in lieu of payment of interest upon said indebtedness. It is expressly stated in the agreement that the parties thereto are not copartners. It may also be noted that the contract provided that, in case of its termination before the expiration of the year, then Tsarnas might sell whatever stock he had on hand and apply the funds on the unsecured debt and have the right to proceed with the foreclosure of his mortgage.

From this contract the issue as to the relationship between Tsarnas and the Costaloupes Company arises. There is no evidence of any acts or declaration on the part of Tsarnas, nor is there any question of an ostensible partnership created by such acts or conduct. There may be one exception to the statement and that is the fact of the representative of Tsarnas having executed, on behalf of Costaloupes Company, the contract for power and light out of which the controversy arises. Neither side makes comment on the fact, and in so far as it may go on the present issue of partnership it is passed.

[3, 4] It is the contention of appellant that the contract with Tsarnas establishes the fact of relationship of debtor and creditor and nothing further. It is likewise contended that the contract itself expressly negatives any idea of a partnership and expressly discloses the intent of the parties that the relationship should not be that of partners. We may concede that a relationship of debtor and creditor is shown and also that the contract expressly declares that the parties thereto are not partners. However, this does not establish the fact that the parties did not intend to create a partnership between themselves or as to a third person. The parties did intend to create exactly the relationship as shown by the contract, but did not intend that relationship to be called that of partners. Their intention in this respect is immaterial. Appellant and respondent here concede that if the contract by its terms establishes a partnership between the parties, the expressed intent that it should not be so classed would be of no avail. It is the intent to do these things which constitute a partnership that usually determines whether or not that relation exists between the parties. Chapman v. Hughes, 104 Cal. 302, 37 P. 1048, 38 P. 109.

[5] Let us look again to the contract as a whole. The parties prior to the agreement stood in the position of debtor and creditor. A portion of the debt was secured and another portion, amount not stated, stood unsecured or in open account. As the parties stood nothing is disclosed that prevented Tsarnas from foreclosing his mortgage or enforcing collection of the debt not secured. These things, however, he did not choose to do. Tsarnas agreed to finance the continuation of the cheese factory. It is evident from the contract itself that the transaction was quite distinct from a mere loan. Without again detailing the promise of the contract, it may be summed up as though Tsarnas and the Costaloupes met and Tsarnas thus addressed them: "I have a mortgage for some $20,000 on your cheese factory and plant, and you owe me other sums of money unsecured. Go on and operate your factory, and I will place $15,000 in the bank, if that much is needed. Send all of your cheese to me, and I will market it as conditions warrant, and put the moneys thus obtained in the bank, with whatever of the $15,000 it may require in addition thereto. If, after operating the plant, it appears to me it will not pay, we may cancel this agreement. Any time I think it best to protect myself, I can foreclose the mortgage, but no interest will accrue on it during the time the cheese factory is running. I will put my agent there to manage the business with you, and he shall receive $2,000 a year. All the bills shall be paid out of the moneys derived from the factory, and, if that is not sufficient, then I shall advance the balance up to $15,000. Each month we will have an accounting and we will divide the profits equally between ourselves. It may be that I will not have to put up any money at all. Whether I do or not the one-half of the profits will be considered as being received by me as interest. In other words, for my financing or agreeing to finance the business, if we make it succeed, I am to get half of the profits."

Having thus summarized the agreement, we conclude that Tsarnas was not obligating himself to advance anything beyond one month's operation, and that, if the business paid, he was not obligated in any sum, for the reason that, if the moneys advanced for labor and material exceeded the amount, the relationship might be terminated. While, on the other hand, if the moneys exceeded the advancement, then the advancement was first to be liquidated before any profit could result or the monthly division made. We characterize the relationship, as did the court below, as that of partners. The contract created an association of these persons for the purpose of carrying on the business of manufacturing cheese and dividing the profits of that business between them. It contemplated united action in manufacturing cheese and in promoting sales thereof and the joint expense to be incurred thereby. This was sufficient to constitute the relationship of partnership. Chapman v. Hughes, 104 Cal. 304, 37 P. 1048, 38 P. 109, supra.

[6, 7] A right to participate in profits affords urgent, often conclusive, evidence, that the trade in which the profits have been made was carried on in part for or in behalf of the person setting up such claim. It has also been held that the sharing of profits is prima facie evidence of the existence of a partnership. An agreement to divide the profits of a business implies an agreement for corresponding division of its losses, unless otherwise expressly stipulated. Civ. Code, § 2404; Welch v. Alcott, 185 Cal. 761, 198 P. 626. The courts will not countenance contrivances for giving persons the whole of the advantage of a partnership, without subjecting them to the liabilities, and an agreement which attempts to carry out a joint venture for the mutual profit of the adventurers and evade their responsibility for losses may be enforced and construed as creating a partnership. 20 Ruling Case Law, 833, and cases cited; 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1084. 20 Ruling Case Law, 828, with cases to support the text, declares the rule as follows: The distinction is drawn between lending money to the prospects of a business and contributing money and investing it as capital in the business. If the party investing the money is to be repaid out of the profits as profits and the amount to depend upon the business there is such a community as will create a partnership. The right of control or any voice in the control is considered an incident of proprietorship and the presence or absence may be of controlling weight. To frame a definition of any legal term, which shall be both positively and negatively accurate, is possible only to those who, having legislative authority, can adapt the law to their own definition. Lindley on Partnership (2d Am. Ed.) 1. Since, therefore, the definition of a legal term, such as partnership, would be a legislative function, we may accept the definition of our Code. Section 2395, Civil Code, defines a partnership as the association of two or more persons for the purpose of carrying on business together and dividing the profits between them. In Westcott v. Gilman, 170 Cal. 568, 150 P. 779, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 437, the court says: "In truth, the existence or nonexistence of a partnership in any case cannot be determined by * * * dissecting the whole relationship into broken parts and members, and studying each disjointed fragment as though it were the complete whole."

Further, in passing upon the question of partnership in the same case, we find this significant language: "It is plain from the very terms of the agreement between these defendants that it measures up to the definition of a partnership as declared by section 2395 of the Civil Code. It was an association of two persons to carry on a definite business and to divide the profits and losses of that business." In Wise v. Radis, 74 Cal. App. 772, 242 P. 93, it is said, in speaking of a situation there presented: "Their joint venture was an association of two persons to carry on a definite joint enterprise and to divide the profits and losses. This, in general, constitutes a partnership." Almost the exact language appears in Becker v. Turpin, 61 Cal. App. 20, 214 P. 255.

Applying these authorities to the case at bar, we find that the letter and spirit of the contract combined to manifest that its purpose was to carry on the business, rather than enforce a past indebtedness. The dominant characteristics of the contract was to carry on, and every provision of the contract was to this purpose. That it was to be carried on jointly is likewise clear. In the business venture involved there were two branches, as is necessary in all like undertakings, namely, manufacture and sale. In each of these branches the association and control of Tsarnas was provided for. The selling end was exclusively under his control and discretion, and the manufacturing end was under the joint control of the Costaloupes and the representation of Tsarnas which representative was to be paid a salary greater than the proportionate salary of either of the others. The scope of the control and interest of Tsarnas can better be understood from the fact that the agreement between the Power Company and the Costaloupes Company was executed on behalf of the consumer by the said representative, acting in the capacity of manager. If the transaction were, as claimed, merely a naked loan, why do we not find some provision in the contract concerning the repayment thereof, or the rate of interest chargeable thereon?

Whatever may have been the relationship of the parties before the contract was entered into was immaterial. That there may have been a mortgage in favor of Tsarnas can be disregarded, because none of his rights as mortgagee were affected, unless perhaps the meaningless provision that he would forbear foreclosure only as long as he felt safe to do so. The anticipation of third party claims compelling or making expedient a foreclosure indicated the intention of carrying on the business as a thing separate from previous indebtedness or previous relations. Out of the profits there was to be no lessening of any debt or of any pre-existing debt. As far as the contract went, the profits derived from the venture by Tsarnas were to be exactly as stated, namely, profits. The statement that these profits were to stand in lieu of interest would raise a question, namely, interest in what sum. The only answer is found in the contract provision that all the moneys advanced is as a loan, and the receipt of one-half of the net profits is in lieu of payment of interest upon said indebtedness. As a matter of fact, if there were profits, then there would be no indebtedness by reason of advances, as hereinbefore pointed out.

Further, it might be noted that, under the very plain provision of the contract, the Costaloupes were absolved from payment of any interest either on the mortgage note, or in the previous advances, or in advances made during the life contract. Therefore, if there was a specific waiver of interest as a part consideration of the agreement, then the general provision, in a separate paragraph of the contract, that profits received should be in lieu of interest, becomes purposeless, other than as a scheme in attempted evasion of partnership liability.

The judgment is affirmed.

ALLERTON v. KING et al. (Civ. 3652.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 9, 1929.

1. Attachment 🔑351—Measure of damages in chattel mortgagee's action on attachment bond was property's value (Civ. Code, §§ 2969, 3338).

Measure of damages in action on indemnity bond, indemnifying chattel mortgagee and constable against loss from levying writ of attachment on steam shovel, subject-matter of the chattel mortgage, as provided by Civ. Code, § 2969, under section 3338, was the value of the property converted.

2. Attachment 🔑349—Complaint in chattel mortgagee's action on attachment bond, alleging amount due on mortgage, was sufficient to tender issue of property's value.

Complaint in mortgagee's action on bond indemnifying her against loss because of attachment of the mortgaged property by the defendant, alleging amount due her on mortgage, was sufficient to tender issue of the value of the property converted.

3. Pleading 🔑362(1)—Striking out portions of answer which were at most only uncertain held error, since motion to strike out cannot serve purpose of special demurrer, the proper remedy (Code Civ. Proc. § 430).

Striking out portions of answer for reason that they were irrelevant and irresponsive to the complaint, which were at most only uncertain, held error, since, in view of Code Civ. Proc. § 430, providing that remedy is by demurrer on ground that complaint is ambiguous, unintelligible, or uncertain, motion to strike out cannot be made to serve the purpose of a special demurrer.

4. Pleading 🔑354(1)—Pleading susceptible of amendment by statement of facts known to exist constituting cause of action should not be struck out except in extreme cases.

To strike out pleading which is susceptible of being amended by statement of facts known to exist and which constitute cause of action is harsh proceeding, and should only be resorted to in extreme cases.

5. Pleading 🔑365(1)—Motion to strike out statements in answer so broad as to include relevant matter should have been denied in its entirety.

Where motion to strike out statements in answer was so broad as to include relevant matter, the motion should have been denied in its entirety, as the court should never strike out matter which will leave the complaint defective and thus lead to dismissal of action.

6. Pleading 🔑192(2)—General demurrer to answer stating value of property as defense to action, though inaccurate, ambiguous or appearing by necessary implication, should not be sustained.

General demurrer to answer in action on bond indemnifying plaintiff as mortgagee of personal property from loss by reason of defendant's attachment of property, where answer contained statements of value of the property, though they were inaccurate, ambiguous, or appearing by necessary implication, should not be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; F. C. Valentine, Judge.

Action by Fannie Allerton against John F. King and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant named appeals. Reversed, with directions.

R. W. Richardson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Irvin C. Taplin and Ivan Miller, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

Lawler & Degnan, of Los Angeles, for defendants.

SHIELDS, Justice pro tem. [1] This is an action on a bond of indemnity given under the following circumstances: The defendant, John F. King, was employed as a fireman and laborer in the operation of a steam shovel, owned and operated by the brothers H. D. Allerton and D. F. Allerton. The Allertons failed to pay King for his labor, and on or about July 8, 1925, King began an action against them in the justice's court in the county of Los Angeles, for the sum of $296. In this action he procured a writ of attachment which was duly levied upon the steam shovel owned by the defendants therein. The writ was levied by Walter Hanby, the constable of the township in which the action was pending. About the 15th of July, 1925, Fannie Allerton, the plaintiff in the case now before us, presented her verified claim to the constable, Hanby, showing that she was the holder of a promissory note for $6,500, secured by a chattel mortgage on the steam shovel, and demanding that the constable deliver up the property to her, or that her claim against the property be satisfied. About August 13, 1925, upon the demand of the constable, under section 2969, Civil Code, the defendant in this action, the plaintiff there, gave the bond therein provided for, with the defendants W. P. Cunningham and Fannie R. Cunningham as sureties, conditioned as in such cases. The brothers Allerton defaulted in the action in the justice's court, and judgment was rendered therein in favor of King. The steam shovel was thereafter sold under execution on this judgment; the price realized for it being $550. Thereafter Fannie Allerton began an action against the brothers Allerton to foreclose her chattel mortgage. The defendant herein, John F. King, intervened in that action. In that action, Fannie Allerton prevailed and was given a judgment for $7,258.20, the judgment reciting that the Allerton brothers and the intervener King, and all persons claiming under them, be forever barred from any interest in the shovel property. Execution issued upon this judgment, which later was, by the sheriff, returned unsatisfied. This action was thereupon brought by Fannie Allerton upon the indemnity bond above mentioned against King, the principal therein, the Cunninghams, sureties thereon, and against the constable, Hanby. In this action she asked for an attorney fee of $2,500. For some reason which is not disclosed the Cunninghams and Hanby do not further appear in the record. Defendant King answered the complaint. Plaintiff thereupon filed a motion to strike out considerable portions of this answer, and at the same time filed a general demurrer thereto. The motion to strike was granted in its entirety. To the answer as it then stood the general demurrer was sustained. Defendant failed to amend his answer, and his default was entered, and later judgment was rendered against him for $10,058.44, and $36.25 costs. It is from this judgment, which is the somewhat startling result of defendant King's adventure in litigation, that this appeal is taken. He resorted to a justice's court to collect a small labor claim, admittedly due, and emerges with this heavy judgment against him. We think that the judgment was mistakenly arrived at.

In this action on defendant's bond by Fannie Allerton, her measure of damages was the value of the property converted. Respondent very plausibly contends otherwise, but the law in California seems settled to the contrary. In Irwin v. McDowell, 91 Cal. 119, 27 P. 601, the court thoroughly considers this matter. After reciting the provisions of section 3338, Civil Code, to the effect that "one having a mere lien on personal property, cannot recover greater damages for its conversion, from one having a right thereto superior to his, after his lien is discharged, than the amount secured by the lien," proceed to say: "What is the amount secured by the lien? The answer must be, the full amount of the mortgage debt, if the property is worth enough to pay it; and if not, then such sum or amount only as it is worth. It would seem absurd to say, if the mortgage debt was a thousand dollars and the mortgaged property was worth only a hundred dollars, that the full amount of the debt was secured. As the court found that the total value of the property attached did not exceed the sum of $650, it follows, in our opinion, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover from the defendant the full amount of the debt." See, also, Troxler v. Buckner, 126 Cal. 288, 58 P. 691.

[2] The very terms of the section under which the bond herein sued upon was given (section 2969, Civil Code) clearly implies the law to be so. It gives the attaching officer discretion to require the bond to be given in twice the amount of the mortgage debt or double the value of the mortgaged property. Plaintiff, Allerton, in this action, alleged in her complaint the amount due her upon her chattel mortgage, and this was enough to tender the issue of the value of the property converted. Troxler v. Buckner, 126 Cal. 288, 58 P. 691. "If the property in fact was of less value it was matter of defense." Id. This defense the defendant King clearly endeavored to make. His answer was involved, and filled with recitals, legal conclusions, and other irrelevant matter. He endeavored to relitigate the validity of the chattel mortgage of the plaintiff. Most of this matter was properly stricken out. Defendant strangely failed to make a direct and positive allegation, unconnected with irrelevant matter, of the value of the steam shovel when taken. But his contention that it was of no greater value than $600 appears in many parts of his answer. At the conclusion of paragraph 2 of his answer he says: "And the value of same did not exceed the sum of six hundred dollars ($600)." Paragraph 3 recites that the property was sold for $550, "which was the reasonable, fair value of said property." Paragraph 4 makes a further indirect contention of the smaller value of the property. Paragraph 7 does likewise. Paragraph 10 refers to the mortgage "on property of the value of not to exceed the sum of six hundred dollars ($600)." Paragraph 11, after irrelevantly reciting that the action was for conversion, concluded: "The damage in any event cannot exceed the value of said property, to wit, a sum not in excess of six hundred dollars."

[3, 4] With the exception of the unimportant statement made in paragraph 4 of defendant's answer, all of the matters above referred to were stricken out. We think that this was clearly erroneous. A motion to strike out cannot be made to serve the purpose of a special demurrer. "A motion to strike out is not the proper method of attacking a pleading which is merely insufficient to state a cause of action, or defense, or which is defective in form, where the objection may be reached upon demurrer." 21 California Jurisprudence, 242. The concluding words of paragraph 2 of defendants' answer, referring to the property, that "the real value of same did not exceed the sum of six hundred dollars ($600)" were not irrelevant, nor irresponsive to the complaint. Yet that is the ground upon which they were requested to be stricken out. Read in connection with the irregular and irrelevant matter which preceded them, they were at most uncertain. To strike out an allegation on that ground "is not proper practice in this State. The only proper remedy is by demurrer on the ground that the complaint is ambiguous, unintelligible, or uncertain under section 430 of the Code of Civil Procedure." Mattson v. Mattson, 181 Cal. 44, 183 P. 443. Defendant's repeated references to the property and to its value made it clear that a contention that it was not worth to exceed $600 was one of the defenses upon which he wished to rely. "To strike out a pleading, which is susceptible of being amended by a statement of facts known to exist, and which constitutes a cause of action or defense to an action, is a harsh proceeding, and should only be resorted to in extreme cases." Burns v. Scooffy, 98 Cal. 271, 33 P. 86. The proper practice on such motions is well stated in Pacific Factor Co. v. Adler, 90 Cal. 110, at page 116, 27 P. 36, 37 (25 Am. St. Rep. 102), where the court says: "The affirmative defense of the answer is defectively pleaded, and should not have been allowed to stand if attacked by demurrer. * * * But it is quite apparent from the pleading, taken as a whole, that the defendant intended, by this defense, to claim that the contract embraced in the complaint formed part of this 'scheme or plan,' and was therefore void, as being against public policy. A defective pleading cannot be stricken out by reason of its defects upon the ground of surplusage."

[5, 6] The language above referred to at the end of paragraph 2, and the words in paragraph 11 in reference to the converted property, and its value was "to-wit, a sum not in excess of six hundred dollars ($600)," should not have been stricken out. These words appear in connection with other matter clearly irrelevant, but as the motion to strike out was so broad as to include relevant matter, the motion should have been denied in its entirety. The court should never strike out matter which will leave the complaint defective, and thus lead to a dismissal of the action. Stewart v. Newton, 63 Colo. 137, 165 P. 255. With these allegations in the answer, even in the inartificial form in which they appear, the general demurrer should not have been sustained. "A general demurrer—that is, a demurrer upon the ground that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action—does not reach defects made grounds of special demurrer, such as * * * unintelligibility, ambiguity or uncertainty. It does not reach mere defects in allegations, defects in matter of form—as that the essential facts appear only inferentially, or as conclusions of law, or by way of recital." 21 Cal. Jur. 108. In considering the sufficiency of a general demurrer, the "courts have always discriminated between insufficient facts and an insufficient statement of facts; and where the necessary facts are shown by the complaint to exist, although inaccurately or ambiguously stated, or appearing by necessary implication," the demurrer will be overruled. Amestoy v. Electric Rapid Transit Co., 95 Cal. 311, 314, 30 P. 550, 551; Cyr v. Cyr (Cal. Sup.) 272 P. 751. The attorney fee asked by plaintiff in her complaint was $2,500. What sum was allowed by the court is not separately stated in the judgment, but calculation indicates that it probably was the entire sum prayed for. Appellant, with much emphasis, protests that the allowance of such a sum was improper. The exact state of facts upon which this allowance was made does not appear. On its face the allowance seems grossly excessive, but as the cause must be retried, we do no more than to call the matter to the attention of the court which will so rehear the case.

The judgment is reversed, with directions to the trial court to deny the motion of plaintiff to strike out portions of the answer in so far as they relate to paragraph 2 and paragraph 11 of defendant's answer. The court is further directed to overrule plaintiff's demurrer to defendant's answer.

THORNLEY v. JONES et al. (Civ. No. 3651.)

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 9, 1929.

1. Fraud 🔑58(2)—In executrix's action to recover property alleged belonging to decedent's estate, evidence held to support findings that corporation and agent did not misrepresent stock decedent purchased.

In action by executrix to recover property alleged to belong to estate of her decedent and for an accounting thereof, evidence held fully sufficient to support findings that defendant mortgage company and its agent had not made any false or untrue representation to decedent inducing her to buy stock in such company.

2. Appeal and error 🔑994(3)—Credibility of defendant's testimony held exclusively for trial court.

Where one of defendants, sued by executrix to recover property alleged to belong to estate of her decedent and for accounting thereof, testified that there was no agreement, understanding, or concert of action between him and another in connection with the acquisition of property which decedent had conveyed to him, credibility of such testimony was exclusively for trial court.

3. Attorney and client 🔑143—Attorney may make enforceable contract with one about to become client for payment for services not subject to court's particular scrutiny.

An attorney may make an enforceable contract with one about to become his client for the payment of compensation for services to be rendered to the client, and such contract is not subject to particular scrutiny of the court.

4. Attorney and client 🔑143—Contract between attorney and client for former's compensation, entered into during relation, is not void, although presumptively invalid; attorney having burden of showing fairness.

Contract between an attorney and client for the former's compensation, entered into during the existence of the relation, is not void, although presumptively invalid, the burden of showing fairness resting on the attorney to prove the transaction between himself and client was fair and equitable, and that he took no advantage of client, and also that client was fully informed of all matters relative to transaction and was so placed as to be able to act understandingly and to deal with attorney at arm's length.

5. Attorney and client 🔑143—Client uninformed by attorney that compensation she tendered was greatly excessive, it cannot be held that client was not taken advantage of.

Where client of attorney was not informed by the attorney that compensation she was tendering was several times the amount his professional services were worth and several times the amount usually charged for similar services, it cannot be held that client was fully informed of all matters relative to transaction and was so placed to be able to act understandingly and to deal with the attorney at arm's length, and that client, who was over 80 years of age and of trusting and confiding disposition, in failing health, and with little business experience, was not taken advantage of by attorney.

6. Attorney and client 🔑143—Attorney's negative conduct in dealing with client paying him excessive fee held insufficient to overcome presumption of fraud and unfair dealing.

Attorney's proof of mere negative conduct in dealing with his client, who paid him several times the amount his professional services were worth, held not sufficient to overcome presumption of fraud and unfair dealing which is automatically raised by law as protection to client; it being necessary that attorney must go further and show that client was given information which, under similar circumstances, a disinterested legal adviser would have given.

7. Trial 🔑395(5)—Judge's remark that he did not know why client and daughter executrix did not know each other's business, even if a finding, held immaterial in suit to recover excessive fee decedent paid attorney.

In action by executrix to recover from defendants, one of which was decedent's attorney, money alleged to belong to decedent's estate and for an accounting thereof, remarks by judge in announcing decision that he did not know why executrix, who was decedent's daughter, and decedent did not live together happily and did not know each other's business and pleasures, but that they did not, even if it had been made as a finding, would be wholly immaterial as bearing upon reasonableness of the compensation given the attorney for his services.

8. Appeal and error 🔑1010(1)—Finding that two defendants sued to recover property alleged belonging to plaintiff's decedent had not conspired, supported by evidence, must be accepted as true.

Court's finding that there was no conspiracy between two of defendants in action by executrix to recover property alleged to belong to decedent and for an accounting thereof, having sufficient support in evidence, must be accepted as true on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; P. Walter Hanby, Judge.

Action by Carrie L. Thornley, as executrix of the will of Alfreda Smith, deceased, against Lewis S. Jones and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Thomas J. Pitts, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. S. Clewett and Farrand & Slosson, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINCH, P. J. The plaintiff, as executrix of the last will of Alfreda Smith, deceased, brought this action against the defendants to recover property alleged to belong to the estate of decedent and for an accounting thereof. The defendant Nelson was not served with summons and did not appear in the action. Judgment was entered in favor of the other defendants denying plaintiff any relief. She has appealed from the judgment.

In appellant's opening brief it is said: "Two important issues were litigated. 1. Did the defendants, or any of them, obtain any of the money or property of Alfreda Smith during her lifetime without consideration or through fraud or undue influence? 2. Did a conspiracy exist among the defendants, or any of them, to accomplish such purpose?"

[1, 2] The findings of the trial court are against the plaintiff on both of these issues. The evidence is fully sufficient to support the findings in favor of the defendants Kirby and California Mortgage Company. Jones testified that there was no agreement, understanding, or concert of action between him and Nelson in connection with the acquisition of the property in question. The credibility of this testimony was exclusively for the trial court. The only question left to be determined, the judgment not running against Nelson, is whether Jones obtained any of the property of Mrs. Smith without consideration or through fraud or undue influence.

The plaintiff is the daughter of Mrs. Smith, who was also known as Miss Smith. She came from Ohio to California in the year 1916 and thereafter resided in the plaintiff's home in Los Angeles until 1920, when she went to live with a family of the name of Bailey; none of the family being related to her. She left the Baileys in June, 1923, and for the next 18 months lived with other strangers in blood named Davis. She returned to plaintiff's home November 15, 1924, and remained there until her death January 9, 1925.

It may be gathered from the evidence that Mrs. Smith owned no property until the year 1915, when there was distributed to her, from the estate of a deceased brother, property of the value of about $20,000. In 1916 she furnished the money with which to buy a home for the plaintiff. She loaned $900 to the plaintiff and $800 to Nelson. While living with the Baileys, Mrs. Smith advanced $1,500 to them for the purchase of a lot in Los Angeles. They applied the money so advanced in payment on the purchase price of the lot, and April 20, 1923, she commenced an action against them to establish her interest in the property purchased, Jones acting as her attorney. The case was not brought to trial during Mrs. Smith's lifetime, but after her death it was successfully prosecuted by another attorney, who recovered judgment in favor of her estate. December 28, 1923, Mrs. Smith, through Nelson, who was an agent of Kirby, engaged at the time in selling capital stock of the California Mortgage Company, purchased 48 shares of the preferred stock of that corporation and 12 shares of its common stock, in payment for which she delivered to the corporation $1,951.23 in cash, a certificate of deposit for $600, and a promissory note for $2,500, secured by a mortgage on real estate, both executed by Fred Hessler, March 13, 1923. The trial court found that "said stock was worth at the time she received it the price she paid for it." Certificates for all of the stock were issued to and in the name of Nelson. Three days later he surrendered the stock and caused two certificates for 24 shares each of preferred stock and one certificate for 12 shares common stock to be issued to Mrs. Smith. January 11, 1924, Mrs. Smith assigned half of the preferred stock and half of the common stock to Jones and the remainder thereof to Nelson. New certificates were thereupon issued to each of them for 24 shares of preferred stock and 6 shares of common stock. Both Jones and Nelson left the respective certificates so issued to them in custody of the corporation, with instructions to pay all accruing dividends on the stock to Mrs. Smith during her lifetime. Within a few days after her death they transferred the stock to persons who are not parties to this action. The court found:

"Alfreda Smith * * * during the year 1923 was of the age of about 80 years; she was of a trusting and confiding disposition and for several years prior to her death was gradually but not noticeably in failing health due to her advanced age, and her vision and hearing were impaired during the several years immediately prior to her death; she had some knowledge and experience in business transactions but such knowledge and experience were very limited, and due to her failing health and impaired senses and her disposition she was, during the years 1923 and 1924, likely to be influenced or deceived or imposed upon by designing persons.

"From and about the year 1920 to a time shortly prior to the death of said decedent, defendant Jones acted as her attorney. * * * On or about January 11, 1924, the said Alfreda Smith voluntarily transferred and assigned to the said defendant Jones 24 shares of said preferred and 6 shares of said common capital stock, and a like amount to the said defendant Albert O. Nelson.

"The defendants Jones, Kirby and the California Mortgage Company did not nor did any of them ever make any false or untrue representations to the said Alfreda Smith."

The court did not find whether the transaction between Jones and his client, by which she gave him property of the value of $2,500 in payment for his professional services, was fair and equitable, or whether she was informed of all matters relative to the transaction so as to enable her to act understandingly. Jones knew of her inexperience in business transactions, because in the complaint drafted by him in her action against the Baileys, after the allegation that she had furnished the sum of $1,500 which was used by the defendants in the purchase of the lot hereinbefore mentioned, with the understanding that she was to have a corresponding interest in the lot, it is alleged: "That this plaintiff is over eighty years of age, and * * * at all times placed great confidence and trust in the defendants, and relied solely upon them to look after her interests, she having no knowledge of business transactions or making of deeds, mortgages or other title papers, and believed that the same was all properly attended to and taken care of for her by the defendants. That * * * the defendants made and delivered to this plaintiff a promissory note in the principal sum of $1,800, which they stated to this plaintiff secured and represented her interest and ownership in said real property, and this plaintiff believed that the same gave her an interest in the title to said property as a part owner thereof."

Relative to his services for Mrs. Smith, commencing in September, 1920, Jones, as a witness in his own behalf, testified as follows:

"I was called out there to her residence in Hollywood to prepare a will for her. * * * She was ill at the time and perhaps it was two or three weeks after that before I saw her, and she came down to my office. * * * I saw her at least twice a week during my acquaintance with her. * * * She usually came around in the morning; she was usually at the office when I arrived. * * * She would spend from half to three-quarters of an hour, sometimes perhaps an hour. * * * Outside of discussing her eastern affairs, from time to time, most of it concerned her relations and transactions with Mrs. Thornley. * * * She told me that she had bought that property, bought the Thornley home, I believe she stated that she had paid off the mortgage on it, * * * I think four or five thousand dollars. * * * And she said that she had let them have money from time to time, she had bought, paid for, I believe, a camera for Mr. Thornley. He was either a photographer or motion picture cameraman. * * * And likewise she had paid off some furniture that was in the house and sort of complaining about the amount of money she had paid and now was going to be deprived of a home. * * * I had a note signed by Mrs. Thornley for $900 that I had in my possession for quite sometime. And Miss Smith had requested several times that I bring suit on the note and I told her that I didn't see that there was very much use of bringing suit as long as what she had told me was true, that they did not have anything except this place they lived in. * * * Several times throughout her transactions she had told me that she had mortgages and notes in the east which were in the possession of her attorney, Mr. Barton Griffith. * * * And she discussed several times about selling those mortgages and investing the money here. * * * But nothing was ever done about it. I didn't tell her to do it or tell her not to do it. I let her use her own judgment on that, until she requested me to send for these securities. * * * The only money that she ever paid me was $10 that she paid me for drawing this first will. * * * I said to her one day, * * * perhaps a couple of months after I had met her, 'What about compensation or paying me? * * * It is rather difficult to make a definite charge. * * * You come in here and you are here a half an hour or three-quarters of an hour. * * * You come back time and again. * * * What do you think about it?' She said, 'Well, you know that I only have about $70 or $75 a month coming from my investments. * * * Some day it will be different, and * * * you will never lose anything by taking care of my business. * * * I will compensate you when my affairs are put in such a condition that I can. I will dispose of some of that property or make a change in it, then I will compensate you for all you have done; and try and remember the best you can what you do for me, as I know I come down here a lot of times when really there is no reason, but * * * I feel much better when I come down and discuss these different matters with you.' * * * I didn't make any entry or any charge for the time that I put in for her, because that would be a regular occurrence that * * * I could always bet that I would see Mrs. Smith once or twice a week. * * * A great many times * * * she would volunteer the information. * * * It got to be quite a common occurrence; she said, 'You will never lose anything by taking care of my business.' * * *

"Q. When was the first time you ever knew Miss Smith owned any stock in the California Mortgage Company? A. When she came into my office on January 11, 1924, and brought the stock certificate. * * *

"Q. Prior to that time had you ever heard of the Hessler mortgage? A. I had never heard of it. The first I heard of that was when this suit was filed.

"Q. Who was present when Miss Smith brought those certificates of stock into your office? A. Just myself, Miss Smith and Mr. Rifkind came in. * * * She came in on the usual morning trip. * * * She said, 'Well, Mr. Jones, I told you a great many times that you would not lose anything by taking care of my business for me. * * * I have some stock in the California Mortgage Company, and I am going to have it divided between you and Mr. Nelson. * * * You have worked these number of years for me and I have not paid you anything for your services, and I am getting old, I won't have use for it much longer, and Mr. Nelson has been very kind to me, and I am going to divide it between you.' Well, I was a little surprised at Nelson getting any, I didn't quite understand it, but I was not the judge of it * * * I said, 'According to what you have told me you only have about $70 or $75 a month income. * * * I will be willing, and I want to do this, that as long as you live that you will draw the interest or dividends * * * of this stock.' * * * So I filled mine in. * * * I called Mr. Rifkind in. * * * He said, 'You are signing this, Miss Smith, transferring this stock to Mr. Jones, are you, and Mr. Nelson?' She said said, 'Yes.' So he signed it as a witness and I gave the stock back to her and she said she would take it over to the Mortgage Company. * * * I have a rule that if anyone comes in for a half an hour to an hour, we will say, just a consultation, I make a charge of $5. * * * The wills were very brief. I will say they were worth not to exceed $25 apiece. As a matter of fact, I only charged $10 on the first one.

"Q. What do you consider was the reasonable value of your services that you rendered in the Bailey case? * * * A. I would say at least $150. * * * I collected a hundred dollars for Miss Smith from Mr. Dietrich. * * *

"Q. She did not really counsel or advise with you in regard to the loans she was making, did she? A. It is apparent that she did not. * * *

"Q. What was all of this talk twice a week, half an hour, in regard to this old lady about? A. Well, about half of it was concerning Mrs. Thornley. * * * No, not half of it, maybe. Mrs. Thornley half, and I think even about her matters in the east, and she has related to me many, many times about the farm that was sold back there, and about it being subdivided, a mortgage that she held, and one of these mortgages, she said that they were subdividing the farm, and if she had held onto it, it would have been worth a lot more money, something to that effect, and she would discuss those things from time to time; it wasn't so much business on every occasion but the old lady would come in and she would want to talk to me, want to sit down and discuss this and that and the other, and I gave her the time.

"Q. Really it was just more of a social call than anything else? A. Sometimes, from my viewpoint, I would say it was, but I didn't have the time to spend as a rule, yet she seemed to want to take my time, and as long as she had stated that I would never lose anything by taking care of her affairs and giving my time, why, I thought it was my duty to give it to her."

Mrs. Smith was the owner of securities, consisting of promissory notes and certificates of deposit in building and loan associations, of the value of about $6,000, which were in the possession of her attorney, Barton Griffith, of Columbus, Ohio. August 29, 1924, she signed a letter prepared by Jones, requesting Griffith to send these securities to her in care of Jones. Griffith complied with the request, and upon receipt of the securities, Mrs. Smith left them in the custody of Jones. She had an attack of illness in November, 1924, and on the 15th of that month the plaintiff took her to the plaintiff's home. December 4, 1924, Mrs. Smith employed Arthur L. Goodrick, one of the attorneys for the plaintiff in this action, and gave him her general power of attorney. Goodrick made demand upon Jones for Mrs. Smith's securities, whereupon Jones and Nelson called upon her, and she personally directed Jones to deliver the securities to Goodrick. Instead of complying with such direction, Jones, as attorney for Nelson, filed a petition for the appointment of a guardian for Mrs. Smith, alleging that "up until approximately six weeks prior to the filing of this petition, the said Alfreda Smith has been in good health and has been capable of and did attend to her business affairs; that on or about six weeks prior hereto, the said Alfreda Smith suffered a severe attack of illness accompanied by a stroke of paralysis, and that since said illness the said Alfreda Smith * * * is incapable and incapacitated from attending to or caring for her property." In the petition the Title Insurance & Trust Company was suggested as guardian. Goodrick appeared at the hearing, as attorney for Mrs. Smith, and, by stipulation, the Citizens' Trust & Savings Bank was appointed her guardian. Jones delivered the securities in his possession which he had received from Griffith to the guardian.

August 23, 1924, Mrs. Smith loaned Nelson the sum of $800, hereinbefore mentioned. Since the action, as against him, has not been tried, it is unnecessary to state the facts relating to his conduct with particularity.

The foregoing lengthy statement of facts is set forth for the purpose of accurately presenting the issue to be decided. It appears from the testimony of defendant Jones that Mrs. Smith gave him capital stock of the California Mortgage Company of the value of about $2,500 in payment for his services as her attorney, no agreement as to the amount of his compensation having theretofore been made.

[3, 4] "An attorney may make an enforceable contract with one about to become his client for the payment of compensation for services to be rendered, and such a contract is not subject to the particular scrutiny of the court." 6 C. J. 735; 3 Cal. Jur. 626; Cooley v. Miller & Lux, 156 Cal. 510, 524, 105 P. 981. "A contract between an attorney and client for the former's compensation, entered into during the existence of the relation, is not void, although presumptively invalid, the burden of showing fairness resting on the attorney." 6 C. J. 735; Reynolds v. Sorosis Fruit Co., 133 Cal. 625, 630, 66 P. 21. "All dealings between an attorney and his client for the benefit of the former are not only closely scrutinized, but are presumptively invalid on the ground of constructive fraud and such presumption can be overcome only by the clearest and most satisfactory evidence. Not only must the attorney offer clear and satisfactory evidence that the transaction between himself and his client was fair and equitable and no advantage was taken by him, but he must also offer proof that the client was fully informed of all matters relative to the transaction and was so placed as to be able to act understandingly and to deal with the attorney at arm's length." Estate of Witt, 198 Cal. 407, 419, 245 P. 197, 202; Magee v. Brenneman, 188 Cal. 562, 567, 206 P. 37.

There are cases, of course, where the knowledge and experience of the client are such as to overcome the presumption referred to; but the facts of this case are such as to require the strict application of the foregoing rule. Mrs. Smith was over 80 years of age and, as the court found, "of a trusting and confiding disposition, * * * in failing health due to her advanced age; * * * her vision and hearing were impaired"; her business experience was "very limited"; she was "likely to be influenced or deceived or imposed upon by designing persons." She was induced to believe that the Bailey promissory note gave her an interest in real estate purchased by them. When she loaned Nelson $800, August 23, 1924, and took his promissory note therefor, he delivered to her a deed from Elsie Meridith to himself for certain lots and induced her to believe that the instrument was a mortgage securing the note.

[5, 6] Jones' testimony shows that the value of the stock received from Mrs. Smith was out of all proportion to the professional services rendered by him. In announcing his decision, the trial judge said: "I find from the evidence that this old lady for some reason or other went to this office two or three times a week for four years practically. Now, I don't know what she went there for. She had some little business interest—not so much. But here is an old lady, 82 years old, that wanted to talk to somebody. She could not talk to her own daughter. She found Mr. Jones here a man that she could talk to at least, and maybe get some advice and some consolation and satisfaction. And I don't know but what even for that service he is entitled to something." Jones testified that the reasonable value of his services in the Bailey suit was $150. He drew three short wills, for which he said his services were worth not to exceed $25 each, and for the first one he charged and was paid $10. He collected $100 for Mrs. Smith. He advised her of the futility of suing Mrs. Thornley on her promissory note. Several months after the stock was assigned to him, he caused Mrs. Smith's securities to be transferred from Griffith's custody to his own and, for a few months thereafter, he held possession of them. He states that about half of Mrs. Smith's consultations with him were in relation to Mrs. Thornley, but he does not say that there was any intention or thought of attempting to recover anything from her, except on the $900 note. She loaned $2,500 to Hessler, purchased stock for over $5,000, and loaned Nelson $800, apparently constituting all of her principal business transactions during the time that Jones was her attorney, without consulting him. The services for which he claims he was compensated by the transfer of the stock are, in the main, too indefinite and intangible to justify any inference as to the value thereof, and the court made no finding as to the value of such services. It certainly would be out of harmony with professional ethics for an attorney, dealing with a client such as Mrs. Smith, to charge a professional fee for her social visits or for innumerable consultations to determine whether to bring suit on a $900 note against a person having no property subject to execution. It cannot be held that "the client was fully informed of all matters relative to the transaction and was so placed as to be able to act understandingly and to deal with the attorney at arm's length," when the attorney did not inform his client that the compensation she was tendering him was several times the amount his professional services were worth and several times the amount usually charged for similar services. He must have known that Mrs. Smith was in her second childhood, but he did not suggest to her the improvidence of parting with property of the value of $5,000, leaving her with no other property in excess of $6,000 in value, except the uncertain amount she might recover from the Baileys. Jones testified that he never asked Mrs. Smith "to turn over any property" to him and never made any suggestion to her that she do so, and the court found that he never made "any false or untrue representations to the said Alfreda Smith." But, in a case such as this, proof of mere negative conduct on the part of an attorney dealing with his client is not sufficient "to overcome the presumption of fraud and unfair dealing which is automatically raised by the law as a protection to a client." Estate of Witt, supra. The attorney must go further and show that his client was given the information which, under similar circumstances, a disinterested legal adviser would have given.

[7] In announcing his decision the trial judge said: "I don't know why this mother and daughter did not live together happily and did not know each other's business and each other's pleasures, but they did not." This statement, however, even if it had been made as a finding, would be wholly immaterial as bearing upon the reasonableness of the compensation given Jones for his services.

[8] The trial judge also said: "I am convinced from the testimony here that this man Nelson had an unnatural and unusual influence over this old lady for some reason. * * * In my opinion, she was influenced by Nelson." This was not said, however, in relation to the transfer of the stock to Jones, and the court's finding that there was no conspiracy between Jones and Nelson has sufficient support in the evidence, and therefore must be accepted as true.

The judgment in favor of the defendants Kirby and California Mortgage Company is affirmed, and the judgment against the plaintiff in favor of the defendant Jones is reversed.

CUTTING v. BRYAN et al. (Sac. 4074.)★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 24, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 21, 1929.

1. Action 🔑6—Appeal and error 🔑949—Dismissal of wife's petition for declaratory relief as to community property held within court's discretion, and not reviewable, where abuse of discretion was not shown (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060, 1061).

Trial court's dismissal of wife's action against husband for declaratory relief relative to community property, under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1060, 1061, held within court's discretionary power under statute, and not subject to review, where abuse of discretion was not shown.

2. Courts 🔑475(1)—Court which first undertakes to determine litigation has jurisdiction to exclusion of other tribunals to which parties or their privies apply.

Court which first takes subject-matter of litigation into its control, for the purpose of administering rights and remedies with relation to specific property, obtains jurisdiction to the exclusion of other tribunals, whose powers are sought to be invoked by parties to the original action or their privies.

3. Abatement and revival 🔑12—Pendency in federal court of suit against husband to establish trust and quiet title held to preclude wife's maintenance of suit to quiet title to her community interest.

Pendency in United States District Court of suit against husband to determine that his title to property was held in trust, and to quiet title, held to preclude wife from maintaining action in state court for purpose of having her title quieted as to her interest in community property, since husband represented both his own and his wife's interest in such property in the original suit, and wife was in privity with him, and was therefore barred from procuring another tribunal to exercise its jurisdiction over the same subject-matter.

4. Judgment 🔑693—Husband represents wife's community interest in real property in suit against him involving title.

In suit against husband involving title to real property, husband represents both his own and his wife's community interest, and wife is in privity with her husband as to such interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; Walter E. Herzinger, Judge.

★Rehearing denied.

Action by Minetta G. Cutting against Mahlon R. Bryan and others. From a judgment of dismissal, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Dunne, Dunne & Cook, of San Francisco, and Allen & McNamara, of Yreka, for appellant.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, Horace V. Ley, of Yreka, and Bert Schlesinger, Walter Loewy, A. B. Weiler, and John L. McNab, all of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff, on or about January 6, 1927, commenced this action in the superior court in and for the county of Siskiyou, alleging herself to be the wife of one Henry C. Cutting, and alleging that the property, consisting of mining claims, to which the action related, was and for some time prior to said date had been the community property of herself and her said husband. Upon such averments she sought declaratory relief, to the extent permitted under section 1060 et seq. of the Code of Civil Procedure, decreeing the extent of her community interest in said property. She further sought to have the title to said property quieted against a number of defendants, alleged to be asserting adverse claims thereto. Shortly after the commencement of the action, Mahlon R. Bryan, one of said defendants, presented and filed in said court a motion to dismiss the action, supported by the affidavit of one Lloyd L. Root, wherein it was set forth that said Root was the duly appointed, qualified, and acting receiver in an action which had been commenced several months prior to the institution of the present action in the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, wherein Mahlon R. Bryan was plaintiff, and Henry C. Cutting and a number of other persons and corporations were defendants, and wherein it was sought to have it adjudicated that whatever title said Henry C. Cutting, or any of his codefendants, had in the property in question was held in trust, and not otherwise, for the use and benefit of the plaintiff in said action, and that the title to said property should be conveyed to said plaintiff by said trustee, and quieted as against the said Henry C. Cutting and each and all of his codefendants.

The affiant further asserted that the said United States District Court had thus acquired and taken sole jurisdiction over said property for the purpose of determining and quieting the title thereto, and had proceeded to exercise said jurisdiction to the extent of appointing the affiant as the receiver of said property, and of making and entering an interlocutory decree in said action after a trial thereof had therein, determining the issues presented therein, which action and the receivership therein was still pending in said court, and that said property and the whole thereof was in the hands of said receiver, and was in the custody of and in the course of administration by said court, pursuant to its said decree, and at the time of the institution of the present action, and of the motion of said Bryan to dismiss the same. Upon the hearing of said motion, the foregoing facts being uncontested, the trial court made and entered its judgment and order dismissing the present action. It is from such judgment and order that this appeal has been taken.

[1] In so far as the plaintiff sought declaratory relief by the institution of this action against her husband, it would seem that the judgment and order of the trial court dismissing the same must be held to have been a finality, from which the plaintiff could obtain no relief upon this appeal, in view of the provisions of section 1061, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "the court may refuse to exercise the power granted by this chapter in any case where its declaration or determination is not necessary or proper at the time under all the circumstances." The order of the trial court in refusing to entertain this action, in so far as the declaratory relief sought therein is concerned, must therefore be held to have been made under the discretionary power invested in it by the foregoing provision, and hence must be held to be not reviewable upon this appeal, except for an abuse of discretion, which is not shown.

[2-4] In so far as this action has been instituted by the plaintiff for the purpose of quieting her title as against the alleged adverse claims of the defendants, it must be held, in conformity with the general rule of comity established by a long line of authority, that the court which first takes the subject-matter of a litigation into its control, for the purpose of administering the rights and remedies with relation to specific property, obtains thereby jurisdiction so to do, to the exclusion of the exercise of a like jurisdiction by other tribunals, the powers of which are sought to be invoked by parties or their privies to the original action. In re Cohen, 198 Cal. 221, 226, 244 P. 359, and cases cited; Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 4 S. Ct. 355, 28 L. Ed. 390; Farmers Loan & Trust Co. v. Lake Street El. R. Co., 177 U. S. 51, 20 S. Ct. 564, 44 L. Ed. 667; Kline v. Burke Construction Co., 260 U. S. 226, 43 S. Ct. 79, 67 L. Ed. 226, 24 A. L. R. 1077, and many other cases. The fact that the plaintiff was not expressly made a party to the action which had theretofore been commenced and was being prosecuted in the federal court does not, in our opinion, militate against the application of the foregoing principle, for the reasons set forth in certain of the cases above cited, and for the additional reason that the husband of the plaintiff was the principal party defendant in said action, and as such was representing the community interest of himself and also of his wife in said property, and that as to such interest the plaintiff herein was in privity with her husband, and was represented in said action by him as fully as though she had been expressly made a party thereto. McKay on Community Property (2d Ed.) § 1085; 13 Cal. Juris. p. 882; Estate of Clark, 190 Cal. 354, 212 P. 622; Lichty v. Lewis (C. C.) 63 F. 535; Id. (C. C. A.) 77 F. 111.

It follows from the foregoing that the judgment and order of the trial court dismissing this action, for the reasons stated therein, must be and the same is hereby affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, C. J.; SHENK, J.; SEAWELL, J.; LANGDON, J.; CURTIS, J.

PRESTON, J. I concur. I do so, however, with this explanation. As I read the opinion of Mr. Justice RICHARDS, he in effect holds that, whatever may be the rights of husband and wife inter se in and to the community real property, she was represented by him in the action in the federal court against the husband, which was made the basis for the dismissal of the action now under review. It is only upon this theory that the federal court acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, for, if her interest is not represented by him, then the subject-matter of the two actions cannot be said to be the same. Under this view the effect of the recent amendments (Stats. 1923, p. 29), giving the wife testamentary power over half of the community property, is not necessarily involved.

It is true that the Washington courts have declared the wife a necessary party in any action respecting the community real property, and that a judgment against the husband alone is void. But in view of the nature of the community estate, and the difficulty in fitting it into our system of jurisprudence; in view of the fact that exclusive management and control, with the general power of disposition, is vested in the husband; in view of the fact that the wife may not by her own acts alone charge or bind the community estate; in view of the fact that her separate estate is free from the community obligations—and for other reasons that need not be enlarged upon, I am content to approve the rule that in all ordinary situations the wife is represented by the husband in suits by or against him involving the community real estate, and this, too, notwithstanding the provisions of section 172a of the Civil Code, requiring her signature to a transfer of such property, and notwithstanding the further fact that a judgment in such an action may have the practical effect of a conveyance. Such a holding, too, removes all reason for hesitation in declaring the right of the wife in the community property acquired since the effective date of the said amendments of 1923 to be a vested one, as is intimated in the recent case of Phillips v. Phillips (Cal. Sup.) 263 P. 1017.

CITY OF OAKLAND et al. v. WILLIAMS, City Auditor. (S. F. 13079.) ★

Supreme Court of California. Jan. 30, 1929.

Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1929.

1. Landlord and tenant 🔑37—It is presumed parties will interpret lease in light of circumstances of execution and purposes.

It is presumed that parties to lease will interpret it in light of circumstances in which it is executed and purposes which lessor and lessee covenanted to promote.

2. Municipal corporations 🔑63(1)—Determination as to construction of building on lands given city for harbor will not be disturbed except for abuse of discretion (St. 1911, p. 1258; Oakland City Charter, as amended; Civ. Code, § 718, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1173).

Judgment of port commissioners of city of Oakland as to necessity for construction of warehouse in vacant tide and submerged lands granted to city under St. 1911, p. 1258, and Oakland City Charter, as amended (St. 1927, p. 1978), and Civ. Code, § 718, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1173, will not be disturbed unless it appears that the plans adopted are so inadequate as to inevitably result in waste of public funds, and thus involve abuse of discretion.

3. Municipal corporations 🔑719(5)—Contract for construction and lease of warehouse in submerged lands granted city for harbor, where it required lessee to guarantee minimum tonnage, held not void as promoting private purpose (St. 1911, p. 1258; Const. art. 1, § 14; Oakland City Charter, as amended; Civ. Code, § 718, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1173).

Contract of city to construct warehouse on vacant tide and submerged lands, granted by state for harbor purposes under St. 1911, p. 1258, and lease of warehouse so constructed to private corporation engaged in packing, processing, and shipping dried fruits, held not void as attempt to authorize use of public funds for private purposes in violation of Const. art. 1, § 14, where lease, executed pursuant to bond issues and Oakland City Charter, as amended (St. 1927, p. 1978), and Civ. Code, § 718, as amended by St. 1927, p. 1173, though it permitted using warehouse for industrial purposes of lessee, required lessee to route its goods for shipment by adjacent wharf terminal and to guarantee amount of tonnage to be shipped through such terminal.

Application by the City of Oakland, the Board of Port Commissioners of the City of Oakland, and the individual members of the Board, for a writ of mandate to be directed to Harry G. Williams, as Auditor of the City of Oakland. Writ granted.

Preston Higgins, City Atty., and Alfin N. Nelson, Chief Deputy City Atty., both of Oakland, for respondent.

SEAWELL, J. Petition for a writ of mandamus to compel Harry G. Williams, as the auditor of the city of Oakland, county of Alameda, to certify that there remained unexpended and unapplied a balance of an appropriated fund applicable to pay the estimated expense of a certain contract, according to the Freeholders' Charter of the City of Oakland, § 131, awarded by the board of port commissioners of the city of Oakland to the J. G. Wilson Corporation for furnishing rolling steel door supplies proposed to be used in the construction of a warehouse which said board of port commissioners had contracted to construct and lease to Rosenberg Bros. & Co., a private corporation extensively engaged in packing, processing, and shipping dried fruits and related products in large shipments to domestic and foreign ports. Said warehouse, according to plans, will cost approximately $400,000 and occupy about seven acres of the hundreds of acres of vacant tide and submerged lands, filled and unfilled, lying between the uplands of said city of Oakland and the low-water marks of the San Francisco Bay and the Estuary San Antonio, which lands were granted by the state to said city by an act approved May 1, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1258), in trust for the uses and purposes therein named. Said warehouse is to be constructed at the Fourteenth street wharf terminal, parallel to an existing transit shed of equal length, and separated from said shed by public spur railroad tracks.

The authority of the board of port commissioners to enter into the lease and contract with said Rosenberg Bros. & Co. was challenged by two suits instituted in the superior court of the county of Alameda, wherein an injunction was sought in each action against said board and certain officials of said city, commanding them to desist and refrain from doing any act under or incurring any liability or obligations against said city by reason of said lease and contract, which threatened acts were claimed to be in excess of the power of said board on the ground that said contract attempted to obligate said city to expend $400,000 of its funds for a private purpose. The auditor, as a measure of protection to himself and bondsmen, declined to indorse his certificate upon said lease and contract. By reason of the public importance of the matter, the suits commenced in the county of Alameda were held in abeyance, and this proceeding was instituted for the purpose of expediting the determination of the questions raised in said actions.

The main point pressed by intervener, William F. Hammer, who was the plaintiff in the actions instituted in the superior court of the county of Alameda, is that said lease attempts to authorize the use of public funds for a private purpose, in violation of article 1, § 14, State Constitution.

The importance of the development of the natural harbor and seaport advantages which the city of Oakland, situate on the easterly side of the San Francisco Bay, with direct and spacious connection with the Pacific Ocean, offers to the immense agricultural and commercial districts of Northern and Central California, is not questioned. It is admitted that said city and port is the terminus of three transcontinental railroads and one intrastate railroad. In addition to these transportation lines, an immense volume of agricultural, orchard, dairy, and general farm and ranch products of the state, and factory products from without, is also carried into said city by many public transportation companies and by private conveyances, destined for foreign shipment, but, because of the lack of reasonable harbor development and improvements, vessels of reasonable tonnage were unable to enter said harbor. It is alleged, and not denied, that the declared policy on the part of the city of Oakland, which had been the subject of long public discussion, to adopt a comprehensive and concrete program of development has attracted and is still attracting manufacturers in all industrial lines to establish large factories and plants in said city and territory adjacent thereto, because of its favorable situs for the transportation of commerce to domestic and foreign ports and countries by both land and sea. Responding to this growing demand, the city of Oakland submitted the proposition of issuing bonds in the amount of $9,960,000, to be known as the Oakland Harbor improvement bonds, to the electors of said city, which issue was duly approved May 18, 1926. Said bond issue was for the following purposes:

"The acquisition, construction and completion by the City of Oakland of a certain municipal improvement on or near the Estuary of San Antonio and on or near the western waterfront of said city, consisting of systems of wharves, docks, piers, slips, bulkheads, quays and terminal facilities, including channels, water ways, turning basins, courses and docking spaces, roadways, trackage and approaches, transit sheds, warehouses, cold storage facilities, mechanical handling appliances, construction and maintenance equipment, fire boat and house therefor, the extension of the high pressure fire system of said city to said improvement, and such works, structures and property as may be necessary or convenient for the accommodation of shipping by rail or water, and also lands, rights of way, and other easements, property and property rights, necessary or appurtenant to said municipal improvement."

In furtherance of said comprehensive scheme of harbor development and improvement, and pursuant to the recommendation made by its consulting engineers, the city amended its freeholders' charter (chapter 7, Stats. and Amdts. 1927, p. 1978) by providing for the establishment of a "port department." Said charter amendment provides for the creation of a board of port commissioners, consisting of five members, vested with the exclusive control and charge of said harbor, as the successor of all the rights and powers formerly exercised by said city, and it is charged with the performance of all the duties formerly imposed upon said city, and is given such legislative and administrative powers as were deemed necessary to enable it "to promote and more definitely insure the comprehensive and adequate development of the Port of Oakland through continuity of control, management and operation." The tide and submerged lands granted by the state to said city include an inner and an outer harbor. The inner harbor consists of a deep, navigable channel, known as the Estuary of San Antonio, which penetrates inland a distance of about six miles. The channel of this estuary is too narrow to permit the convenient turning and docking of ocean-going vessels. The outer harbor consists of basins, channels, and other waters of San Francisco Bay. The board of port commissioners, in the exercise of the powers conferred upon it by said charter amendment and also by the "Oakland Harbor Improvement Bonds" proposition, completed, in October, 1927, at a cost in excess of $500,000, the construction of a large concrete wharf and transit shed, with necessary approaches and other facilities, situate in the outer harbor near the terminus of Fourteenth street, known as the Fourteenth street wharf and terminal, which is designed for and is to be operated as a general cargo terminal. In April, 1928, a large pier, known as the Grove street pier, was completed at a cost of $920,000. Lands known as the Brooklyn Basin area, upon which said board proposes to erect a wharf and transit shed at a cost of $600,000, were acquired at a cost of $265,000. Said board of commissioners has taken over the control and management, and now operates directly or by lease, a number of terminal piers, wharfs and harbor facilities for the accommodation of shipping by rail and water. Appropriations in excess of $5,000,000 have been made by the federal government from time to time and have been expended in improving the waterways of said port, and this sum has been greatly supplemented by the city of Oakland and private interests for the dredging, deepening, and widening of the inner and outer harbors and the reclaiming of adjacent waste tide lands.

The warehouse, now in course of completion pursuant to and under the lease contract made by said board with Rosenberg Bros. & Co., is built upon reclaimed tide and submerged lands which constitute a portion of the western water front of said city, at the rear of and adjacent to said Fourteenth street wharf terminal, and parallel to an existing transit shed, and separated therefrom by a public street and spur railroad tracks, and thus, it is alleged, forms an adjunct to said Fourteenth street wharf terminal. The building is to be of the warehouse and storage type, constructed of standard concrete, and is similar in style, structure, and height to said transit shed.

The act of 1911 granting said tide and submerged lands, whether filled or unfilled, to the city of Oakland, provides:

"(a) That said lands shall be used by said city and its successors, only for the establishment, improvement and conduct of a harbor, and for the construction, maintenance and operation thereon of wharfs, docks, piers, slips, quays and other utilities, structures and appliances necessary or convenient for the promotion and accommodation of commerce and navigation, and said city, or its successors shall not, at any time, grant, convey, give or alien said lands, or any part thereof, to any individual, firm or corporation for any purposes, whatever; provided, that said city, or its successors, may grant franchises thereon for limited periods, for wharves and other public uses and purposes, and may lease said lands or any part thereof, for limited periods, for purposes consistent with the trusts upon which said lands are held by the state of California, and with the requirements of commerce or navigation at said harbor." (Italics supplied.)

Section 718, Civil Code (amended by St. 1927, p. 1173), provides that the tide and submerged lands granted to any city by the state may be leased for a period not exceeding fifty years, unless a greater term is fixed by the state's grant of the said lands. Said section further provides:

"* * * tidelands and submerged lands owned or controlled by any city, together with the wharves, docks, piers and other structures or improvements thereon, and so much of the uplands abutting thereon as may in the judgment of the city council, or other governing body of the city be necessary for the proper development and use of its water front and harbor facilities, may be leased for a period not exceeding fifty years. Said tidelands, submerged lands and uplands may be leased only for industrial uses, the purpose of improvement and development of the harbor of said city, and the construction and maintenance of wharves, docks, piers or bulkhead piers or for other public uses and purposes consistent with the requirements of commerce or navigation at said harbor." (Italics supplied.)

The act whereby said tide and submerged lands, both filled and unfilled, were granted by the state of California to said city of Oakland, the resolution or ordinance adopted upon the submission of the proposition to incur a bonded indebtedness in the sum of $9,960,000, and the amendment of the freeholders' charter of said city, constitute the several steps taken by said city of Oakland over a period of several years in the consummation of a long-considered and comprehensive plan for harbor and industrial development and improvement of its waterfront area. The powers conferred upon the board of port commissioners by the amended charter (Stats. and Amdts. 1927, p. 1978) are many, and the duty enjoined upon it to support and foster all aids to promote the commercial welfare of said port is repeated in a number of sections of said charter, a portion of which we quote:
